"In 1841 the fishery business of Gloucester had reached its lowest ebb. Only about 7,000 barrels of mackerel were packed that year, and the whole product of the fisheries of the port was only about 300,000 dollars. In 1851 the business began to revive, the Georges and Bay Chaleur fishery began to be developed, and from that time to this year, 1875, has been steadily increasing, until at the present time Gloucester's tonnage is 10,000 tons more than Salem, Newburyport, Beverly, and Marblehead united. Nearly 400 fishing schooners are owned at, and fitted from, the port of Gloucester by thirty-nine firms, and the annual sales of fish are said to be between 3,000,000 dollars and 4,000,000 dollars, all distributed from here by Gloucester houses.

The Commercial Wharves.

"The wharves once covered with molasses and sugar hogsheads, are now covered with fish flakes and the odours of the 'sweets of the tropics' have given place to 'the ancient and fish-like smells' of oil and dried cod; the few sailors of the Commercial Marine have been succeeded by five thousand fishermen drawn from all the maritime quarters of the globe, and the wharves that were the wonders of our boyhood days are actually swallowed up in the splendid and capacious piers of the present day, so much have they been lengthened and widened.

The Salt Trade.

"For many years after the decline of the Surinam trade, hardly a vessel was ever seen at Gloucester, and many persons thought that nevermore would a majestic ship be seen entering this capacious and splendid seaport. But never in the palmiest days of Gloucester's foreign trade, were such immense vessels seen as at the present day. Ships of 1,500 tons (as big as six William and Henry's) sailed into Gloucester Harbour from Liverpool and Cadiz, and came into the wharves without breaking bulk, and also laid afloat at low water. More than forty ships, barques, brigs, and schooners of from 400 to 1,400 tons laden with salt alone, have discharged at this port the present year, and also the same number last year. The old, venerable port never presented such a forest of masts as now can be seen; sometimes six ships and barques at a time, besides innumerable schooners.

The City of Gloucester of 1875, and the Town of 1825.

"What a contrast is presented as a ship enters the harbour now, with what was presented in 1825. The little rusty, weather-beaten village, with two 'meeting houses' and a few dwellings and wharves gathered around them; two or three thousand people with 500,000 dollars property, was all that Gloucester then was, as far as we can ascertain; now the central wards, without suburban districts, contain 14,000 people, with 9,000,000 dollars valuation."

The article continues in this fashion:—

"Five banks with nearly 2,000,000 dollars capital in them (including Savings); and this increase has arisen, not from foreign commerce, but from the once despised and insignificant fisheries.

"It will be seen by a review of the history of Gloucester, that a foreign commerce did not build the town up in population or wealth; that from 1825 to 1850, its increase had been very small; but from 1850 to 1875, it has grown from 8,000 to 17,000 inhabitants, and its valuation from 2,000,000 dollars to 9,000,000 dollars! It is the fisheries that have mainly caused this great change; it is the success of that branch of industry that has lined Gloucester Harbour with wharves, warehouses, and packing establishments, from the Fort to 'Oakes' Cove.' It is the fisheries that have built up Rocky Neck and Eastern Point, and caused Ward 3 (Gravel Hill and Prospect Street) to show nearly all the gain in population from 1870 to 1875."

This is the testimony of the organ of the Gloucester fishermen. I might consume a great deal of your time in similar quotations. I turn your attention now to a book which was quoted by my learned friends on the other side, this book of Mr. Adams upon "The Fisheries and the Mississippi." At page 204 this language is used under the head of fishing liberties and their values:—

"Of these ten thousand men, and of their wives and children, the cod fisheries, if I may be allowed the expression, were the daily bread—their property—their subsistence. To how many thousands more were the labours and the dangers of their lives subservient? Their game was not only food and raiment to themselves, but to millions of other human beings.

"There is something in the very occupation of fishermen, not only beneficent in itself but noble and exalted in the qualities of which it requires the habitual exercise. In common with the cultivators of the soil, their labours contribute to the subsistence of mankind, and they have the merit of continual exposure to danger, superadded to that of unceasing toil. Industry, frugality, patience, perseverance, fortitude, intrepidity, souls inured to perpetual conflict with the elements, and bodies steeled with unremitting action, ever grappling with danger, and familiar with death; these are the properties to which the fisherman of the ocean is formed by the daily labours of his life. These are the properties for which He who knew what was in man, the Saviour of mankind, sought His first and found His most faithful, ardent, and undaunted disciples among the fishermen of His country. In the deadliest rancours of national wars, the examples of latter ages have been frequent of exempting, by the common consent of the most exasperated enemies, fishermen from the operation of hostilities. In our treaties with Prussia, they are expressly included among the classes of men 'whose occupations are for the common subsistence and benefit of mankind;' with a stipulation, that in the event of war between the parties, they shall be allowed to continue their employment without molestation. Nor is their devotion to their country less conspicuous than their usefulness to their kind. While the huntsman of the ocean, far from his native land, from his family, and his fireside, pursues, at the constant hazard of life, his game upon the bosom of the deep, the desire of his heart, is by the nature of his situation ever intently turned towards his home, his children, and his country. To be lost to them gives their keenest edge to his fears; to return with the fruits of his labours to them is the object of all his hopes. By no men upon earth have these qualities and dispositions been more constantly exemplified than by the fishermen of New England. From the proceeds of their 'perilous and hardy industry,' the value of three millions of dollars a year, for five years preceding 1808, was added to the exports of the United States. This was so much of national wealth created by the fishery. With what branch of the whole body of our commerce was this interest unconnected? Into what artery or vein of our political body did it not circulate wholesome blood? To what sinew of our national arm did it not impart firmness and energy? We are told that they were 'annually decreasing in number;' Yes! they had lost their occupation by the war; and where were they during the war? They were upon the ocean and upon the lakes fighting the battles of their country. Turn back to the records of your revolution—ask Samuel Tucker himself, one of the number; a living example of the character common to them all, what were the fishermen of New England in the tug of war for independence? Appeal to the heroes of all our naval wars—ask the vanquishers of Algiers and Tripoli—ask the redeemers of your citizens from the chains of servitude, and of your nation from the humiliation of annual tribute to the barbarians of Africa—call on the champions of our last struggles with Britain—ask Hull and Bainbridge, ask Stewart, Porter, and Macdonough, what proportion of New England fishermen were the companions of their victories, and sealed the proudest of our victories with their blood; and then listen if you can, to be told that the unoffending citizens of the West were not at all benefited by the fishing privilege; and that the few fishermen in a remote quarter, were entirely exempt from the danger.

"But we are told also that, 'by far the greatest part of fish taken by our fishermen before the present war was caught in the open sea, or upon our own coasts, and cured on our own shores.' This assertion, is like the rest, erroneous.

"The shore fishery is carried on in vessels of less than twenty tons burthen, the proportion of which, as appears by 'Seybert's Statistical Annals,' is about one-seventh of the whole. With regard to the comparative value of the Bank, and Labrador fisheries, I subjoin hereto information collected from several persons, acquainted with them, as their statements will show in their minutest details."

I know of no language that can more forcibly bring home to the Commission the value of this fishery. If the eloquent language that I have quoted contains a tittle of the truth, then this fishery is the nursery of the American naval marine. The future maritime defenders of their country are to be found amongst the bold and fearless men who prosecure these fisheries, and amongst them alone. From the fishing vessels of America sprang those maritime defenders of her flag who maintained with undaunted bravery the honour of their country in the last war with England; and from the same source must be drawn those who doubtless would do so again if, unfortunately, another war should arise between the two countries. Yet, when we speak of such a fishery as this, we are calmly told by Mr. Foster "You must not look at these advantages at all, but like business men you must, pencil in hand, put down the figures and make a calculation of the values, as though it were a petty matter of bargain and sale between man and man." In the name of our common humanity, in the name of the common honour of England and America, and of the Dominion for which I am counsel this day, I repudiate such a construction being placed upon this Treaty.

There are some other passages in this book to which I may call your attention. At page 210 this language is used:—

"These fisheries, as most advantageously secured to the United States by the Treaty of 1873, and made at the time was, I have always understood, a sine quâ non of that Treaty, offer an invaluable fund of wealth and power to our country, one which has never been duly attended to, nor justly appreciated; but which, if continued and improved, was destined to grow with our growth and strengthen with our strength.

"The prosecution of these coast and bay fisheries, although it had already become extremely advantageous, had undoubtedly reached, in a very small degree, the extension and importance it was capable of attaining. The unsettled state of the commercial world for the past twenty years, and the more alluring objects of mercantile enterprise which such a state of things evolved, seemed, in point of immediate consideration and attention, to throw these fisheries into the background; but still, until first checked by the system of embargoes and restrictions, and finally stopped by a declaration of war, they were silently, but rapidly, progressing, and reaching an importance which, though generally unknown to our country and its statesmen, had become highly alarming to the Governments and more wealthy merchants of the provinces, and was beginning to attract the attention and jealousy of the Cabinet of Great Britain towards them.

"The shores, the creeks, the inlets, of the Bay of Fundy, the Bay of Chaleurs, and the Gulf of St. Lawrence, the Straits of Belleisle, and the coast of Labrador, appear to have been designed by the God of Nature as the great ovarium of fish—the inexhaustible repository of this species of food, not only for the supply of the American, but also of the European continent. At the proper season, to catch them in endless abundance, little more effort is needed than to bait the hook and pull the line, and occasionally even this is not necessary. In clear weather, near the shores, myriads are visible, and the strand is at times almost literally paved with them.

"All this was gradually making itself known to the enterprise and vigilance of the New England fishermen, and for a few seasons prior to the year 1808, the resort to this employment had become an object of attention from the Thames at New London, to the Schoodic; and boats and vessels of a small as well as a larger size, were flocking to it from all the intermediate parts of the United States. In the fishing season, at the best places for catching the cod, the New England fishermen, I am told, on a Sunday, swarmed like flies upon the shores, and that in some of these years, it probably would not make an over-estimate to rate the number of vessels employed in this fishery, belonging to the United States, at from 1,500 to 2,000 sail, reckoning a vessel for each trip or voyage, and including the larger boat fishery, and the number, if the fisheries were continued, would shortly be still further and very greatly extended.

"The nursery for seamen, the consequent increase of power, the mine of wealth, the accumulation of capital (for it has been justly observed, that he who draws a codfish from the sea, gives a piece of silver to his country), the effect upon the trade and custom of Great Britain, and the corresponding advantages to the United States, of which the enlargement of such an intercourse was susceptible (for the stock of fish appears inexhaustible), you are much better able to conceive them than I am to describe; but I with pleasure point them anew for your consideration, as on many accounts presenting one of the most interesting public objects to which it can be directed."

"Be the opinion of Mr. Russell what it may—the portion of the fisheries to which we are entitled, even within the British Territorial jurisdiction, is of great importance to this union. To New England it is among the most valuable of earthly possessions."

Now, in the course of his argument, Mr. Foster put the question as if it turned distinctly upon who paid the duty, the producer or the consumer. Whether that be absolutely necessary, for the purpose of determining this case in favour of Great Britain or not, is not for me to say. That is a question of political economy with which I am neither desirous, nor probably capable, of dealing. But I am not afraid to let our case turn upon that question. I think I shall show you by evidence of witnesses and by figures, that in every instance in this case the duty is paid by the consumer. I am speaking more particularly of the mackerel; I shall conclusively show that in the year when the Reciprocity Treaty was in force, the price of mackerel fell off; that immediately after the Reciprocity Treaty terminated, the price of mackerel rose in the American market. I shall show that immediately after that state of affairs was terminated by the Treaty of Washington the price of mackerel again fell off, and we say that these facts establish at once that the consumer must have paid the duty. Our witnesses have, one and all, or nearly all, testified that in their judgment the consumer paid the duty. In answer to the question put by the learned counsel associated with me and myself, "Would you rather have the Americans excluded from your fisheries and pay the duty?" they have said "Yes." While I am upon this subject I will remark, although I will not have time to turn attention to the document itself, that Mr. Foster, or, at all events, one of the learned counsel for the United States, read in his speech a communication from the Hon. Peter Mitchell, then Minister of Marine and Fisheries, for the purpose of showing that the repeal of the Reciprocity Treaty would be ruinous to our fishermen. Now upon reference to that communication you will find that what he did put forward was this: that if the Americans would come in without either paying a license fee or giving any other compensation at all for our fisheries, and if they fished in our territorial waters where the fish were to be taken, side by side with our own fishermen, and then carried their catch into the American market free of duty, while our fishermen, fishing on the same terms, and with no better appliances, were met there with a duty of 2 dollars a barrel on mackerel and 1 dollar on herring, it would necessarily be ruinous. And that proposition, no doubt, has a vast deal of truth in it. It is impossible, I assume, for two persons to fish upon equal terms in the same waters, and then, when they go into the American market, for one to be met by a duty while the other has no such duty to pay, without it operating to the disadvantage of the former. But that it is a totally different case from the one we have to deal with.

I shall show you, as I have said, that during the period of the Reciprocity Treaty the prices were low, and that the moment that Treaty was repealed or abrogated by notice from the American Government, the prices rose. That the moment that state of affairs was terminated by the Washington Treaty the prices fell again; and we say that is conclusive proof that the Americans have to pay the duty. There has been a consensus of testimony, American and British, upon that point.

Let us see what the American witnesses say, for I affirm that on both sides the witnesses agree in the statement that the consumers pay the duty. It is true that American witnesses, who are themselves fishermen, or those who speak the opinion of fishermen, say that they would prefer the old state of things. Why? Because, under that state of things, they could steal into our waters and carry off our fish for nothing, and then their British competitor was met in the market with a duty of 2 dollars a barrel, while they were free. But I apprehend the consumer did not want that state of affairs. These witnesses admitted that it made the fish dearer, whenever the question was put to them. I have cut out the evidence referring to this point, and I will read it:—

AMERICAN WITNESSES ON DUTIES.

"Q. If you were allowed to make your choice which would you take—exclusion from the British inshore fisheries and the imposition of a duty on colonial caught fish, or the privilege of fishing inshore in British waters and no duty?—A. I would rather have the duty.

"Q. You say you would rather have the duty paid; you think you would make more money; you are speaking as a fisherman?—A. Yes.

"Q. You would have a better market for your fish? Under the present system the consumer gets his fish cheaper, does he not? You would make the consumer pay that 2 dollars duty? You would sell your fish 2 dollars higher?—A. Yes.

Mr. Trescot.—That is political economy.
Mr. Thomson.—Why did you ask him?
Mr. Trescot.—I asked him simply which system he would prefer.
Mr. Thomson.—I am asking him why?

"Q. And you say the reason is that you would get so much money in your pocket at the expense of the people that eat fish. Is not that the whole story?—A. Certainly.

"Q. Were you among those who opposed or favoured the continuance of the Reciprocity Treaty?—A. I was among those that opposed it.

"Q. There were some that opposed it or rather required the duty to be maintained upon codfish?—A. I was one who preferred to have the duty retained upon codfish.

"Q. Upon codfish?—A. Yes.

"Q. Your people wished in fact to keep the duty on codfish?—A. Yes.

"Q. Why? Be kind enough to state why?—A. Because we felt it would be better for us as a cod-fishing town to exclude as far as possible the fish from the Provinces. It would give us a better chance, as we supposed, to dispose of our fish at higher rates.

"Q. And the effect of the Treaty you considered would be to reduce the price?—A. We supposed that the effect of the Treaty would be to bring in codfish from these Provinces into our port, and of course necessarily it was presumed that it would reduce the price of fish.

"Q. I suppose the mackerel fishermen have the same object, to keep up the price of fish?—A. I presume they have.

"Q. Then, of course, you think your views are correct. You think now, I presume that your opinion was correct?—A. Yes.

"Q. And you still continue to think that is correct, and that the effect of the provisions of the Treaty is to bring down the price of fish?—A. Yes, I think that is the tendency. I am not aware whether it has brought the prices down.

"Q. I mean to say you have not changed your opinion?—A. No.

"Q. Of course there might be other causes operating, but that is the general tendency of the Treaty?—A. Yes.

"Q. To make the fish cheaper for the consumer?—A. We have so regarded it. Well, perhaps, it would have that tendency. We have thought that it would.

"Q. That is precisely what your opinion was?—A. Yes.

"Q. You have not altered your opinion?—A. No.

"Q. Your opinion, if you will allow me to put it in my words, is that it makes fish cheaper to the consumers in the United States?—A. My opinion is that it will have that tendency.

"Q. You say that you would prefer a duty on Canadian fish entering American market to the privilege of fishing within three miles of the shore in the bay?—A. Yes, I should if I went fishing.

"Q. Why?—A. Because I do not think that the privilege amounts to as much as the duties to us.

"Q. Why do you want the duty kept on?—A. Because, in the first place, we would get more for our fish in the United States.

"Q. And when the duty is abolished the price naturally comes down?—A. The fish might then be a little cheaper.

"Q. That is your opinion?—A. I do not think that the price would come down much.

"Q. Then why do you want the duty kept on? Do you not think that you gave a rather hasty answer? You say you would prefer the duty to the privilege of fishing in the Bay of St. Lawrence, within the limits?—A. Yes.

"Q. Why? I understood you to say, it was because this would keep the price up?—A. That was a little erroneous, I think. Let me think the matter over.

"Q. Why would you rather prefer the duty to the privilege mentioned?—A. Because that would keep the price up, and we would then get more for our fish. I thought you had me a little.

"Q. I merely want your statement on the point?—A. That is my candid opinion.

"Q. You now speak as a fisherman?—A. Yes, if I was fishing that would be my idea.

"Q. All classes of men have selfish motives?—A. I want to get all I can for what I have to sell, and to buy as cheaply as possible.

"Q. And in order to get a high price for your fish, you want the duties on?—A. Yes.

"Q. You thought you would get more mackerel and get a better price for them?—A. If we had a duty on mackerel we would get a better price, and would get more mackerel if we fished off shore.

"Q. You say you would prefer a duty of 2 dollars a barrel to the liberty of fishing within the limits of the bay?—A. I do.

"Q. Why?—A. Because I think the mackerel which I take to market would then bring more.

"Q. Would the price be then higher by 2 dollars?—A. I could not say.

"Q. What is your belief?—A. I believe that would be the case.

"Q. Consumers might appreciate the matter differently?—A. I speak as a fisherman.

"Q. In regard to mackerel, leaving herring out, would you prefer a duty on mackerel?—A. Yes.

"Q. You speak as a fisherman?—A. Yes.

"Q. Why would you prefer a duty on mackerel?—A. Our mackerel would fetch that much more a barrel. We lose that, you know.

"Q. By the duty coming off?—A. Yes, the fishermen lose it. The Government does not lose it.

"Q. And the people who eat the fish gain it?—A. Yes.

"Q. And if you were to speak to a man whose business was consuming mackerel, you would get an opinion adverse to a duty?—A. Yes.

"Q. You would not object I suppose to run the duty up a little higher—how would that suit the fishermen?—A. I think that is about right.

"Q. You say you would prefer a duty being imposed on our mackerel to the right to fish inshore in British waters?—A. I should.

"Q. Why do you want a duty on?—A. It is no benefit to us to fish inshore, that I ever saw.

"Q. Why do you want it on?—A. Well, we would have a better market for our fish.

"Q. Would you get a higher price for them?—A. We should—yes.

"Q. And therefore you are speaking as a fisherman?; as such you would like to get the highest price you could for your fish?—A. Certainly.

"Q. You think that the imposition of a duty would give you a better market?—A. Yes, if Canadians had to pay the duty, it is likely they would not fetch the fish in.

"Q. What would be the result of that?—A. We would have a higher price and a quicker market.

"Q. You would have a higher price?—A. I do not know that this would be the case or anything about it; but it would be a quicker market for us.

"Q. You speak as a fisherman; you want to get the most you can. How much do you think you would get?—A. As much as the duty.

"Q. I don't know but you are right. Perhaps you would like to have a little more on. Supposing a duty of 3 dollars was put on, I suppose it would still have the effect of rising the price of fish?—A. I think it would kill us. No, let me see. I don't know anything about that. I think by keeping the English fish out, our fish would bring a better price."

"Q. Speaking as a fisherman, would you prefer to have the duty on?—A. Personally, I would rather have the duty on.

"Q. Why?—A. Because the duty is better for us, for it would have a tendency in years of good catches to prevent your people from increasing their business. It has that tendency.

"Q. Has it any tendency to better you, as well as to injure your neighbours?—A. That is what we were looking for—for better prices.

"Q. Has it a tendency to increase prices to your fishermen?—A. It would.

"Q. So, if it increases the price of the fish, it strikes me the consumer must pay the increased price?—A. Am I not clear that the duty has anything to do with it; it is the catch.".

"Q. And did not the duty on Canadian caught fish replace the bounty?—A. Yes; and the reduction of the duty on salt was granted as an offset for the removal of the duty.

"Q. And that came latter?—A. Yes, two or three years after the Ratification of the Treaty.

"Q. When it was proposed to take the duty off you remonstrated, thinking that this would reduce the price of fish, and this was the general feeling among fishermen and of the inhabitants of the coast of New England?—A. Yes."

"Q. Now, with regard to the right of carrying our fish free into the United States, I suppose you think that is of no advantage to your fishermen, that provision of the Treaty?—A. I have no idea it is any advantage to our side of the house.

"Q. It is a disadvantage, isn't it?—A. Yes, it is against us.

"Q. Be kind enough to explain how?—A. All these things seem to me to regulated by supply and demand. If there is 100,000 barrels of mackerel hove into our market on top of what we produce, the tendency is to depreciate prices.

"Q. If this provision of the Treaty increases the supply of mackerel in the United States market it will bring down the price of fish?—A. State that again.

"Question repeated?—A. I think it would have that tendency.

"Q. That is the reason you think it is no advantage to your fishermen to have the privilege of fishing inside?—A. No, putting both questions of the Treaty together, it is no advantage, because the supply is increased and the prices are depreciated.

"Q. You will admit this, that it is an advantage to the consumers by bringing down the price? You admit that?—A. Yes.

"Q. Then in point of fact it gives you cheap fish?—A. The tendency is to cheapen them.

"Q. For the people of the United States?—A. Yes."

"Q. The American fishermen want the duty back on fish, I suppose?—A. I do not know about that, I am sure; but they naturally would wish to have it back again, I suppose, in order to exclude our fish from their market.

"Q. I suppose that the consumer got his fish cheaper, owing to the removal of the duty, and the admission of your fish into the American Market?—A. The consumer would then get his fish cheaper—the more fish that are put on the market the cheaper the consumers gets them.

"Q. Is not the result of the Treaty, which admits your fish into the American market, on equal terms with the American fish, to make the price of fish lower in that market?—A. It has that tendency evidently.

"Q. Therefore the consumer gets his fish for less money?—A. Evidently he does. When herring are abundant the price is low.

"Q. It further follows that although a certain class of fishermen may lose something by this free admission of British fish into the American market the American public gain by it?—A. By getting their fish at a lower price? Of course it makes the price of fish lower in that market. That is clear.

"Q. Then the consumer gets the fish cheaper? He evidently does—the larger the quantity that is put upon the market the less the price will be."

"Q. Supposing the mackerel caught in colonial waters were excluded, would it, or would it not, have any effect upon the price you get for your fish? Supposing one-fourth of the quantity consumed in the States was excluded, would it have any any effect on the price of the other three-fourths ?—A. I think some, not much. I think it would stimulate our home production.

"Q. In what way would it stimulate it? By raising the price, is it not?—A. Well, to a small extent.

"Q. Well, then the effect of the British mackerel coming in is that the consumer is able to buy it cheaper than he otherwise would.—A. Well up to a certain point. The effect would be very small. There is not a large enough quantity. It is our home catch that affects it."

"Q. What would be the effect upon the business of your firm of putting back the former duty of 2 dollars a barrel upon mackerel sent from Prince Edward Island to the States? I would like you to explain your views in this regard, particularly?—A. Well, I suppose, since we have got our business established there, and our buildings and facilities for carrying on the fishery, it would be difficult for us to abandon it altogether; but we would then turn our attention more particularly to codfishing, until, at any rate, the mackerel season got well advanced and the mackerel became fat, and if any would bring a high price it would be those taken in the latter part of the season. We might catch some of them, but we would not undertake to catch poor mackerel to compete with those caught on the American shore.

"Q. Explain why not?—A. Well, No. 3 mackerel, which are poor mackerel, generally bring a good deal less price than fat mackerel, and men do not catch any more poor mackerel than they do fat ones; the cost of catching them, and of barreling and shipping them is the same, while the fat mackerel bring a better price. We would carry on the codfishing business irrespective of the American market; we would catch, cure, and ship codfish to other markets—to the West India markets, and we might make a fair business at that; but as to catching mackerel exclusively under such circumstances, it would not do to depend on it all."

"Q. What is it that fixes the price of mackerel in the United States market?—A. Oh, well, of course it is the supply and demand, as is the case with everything else. When there is a large catch of mackerel on the American shore, prices rule low; this is a very sensitive market. If a fleet of 500, 600, or 800 vessels are fishing for mackerel, and those interested get reports of the fleet doing anything, the market falls at once; and this is the case, particularly when prices are any way inflated."

"Q. You told Mr. Foster that if a duty was re-imposed you would consider very seriously whether you would continue in the business?—A. Yes.

"Q. You made that statement on the assumption that you paid the duty?—A. Yes.

"Q. I think it has been explained very clearly that the price of fish depends almost altogether on the catch—this is the case to a large extent?—A. To a large extent—yes. If there is a large catch of mackerel prices rule low, and if there is a small catch they rule high.

"Q. If the evidence given here on the part of British witnesses is correct, two-thirds of the fish taken by American vessels in the gulf, I may say, are caught inshore; and assuming that two-thirds of their whole catch in the gulf is taken inside of the three-mile limit, could the American fleet, if they were excluded from fishing within this limit, prosecute the gulf fishery for the other third—would this pay them?—A. I think it would be a difficult business to do so, if that proportion is correct.

"Q. If the price goes up, who pays the enhanced price? is it not the consumer?—A. Yes.

"Q. And if the catch is large, the price goes down—so it would depend in some measure on whether the catch on the American or on our own shore was large, as to who would pay this duty?—A. Yes; and on the quality of the mackerel."

These are quotations that I make from the American evidence. I do not quote from our own, as Mr. Dana admitted there was such a consensus of evidence on that point, that he almost insinuated that it was too uniform to be depended upon.

I now propose to deal at length with two questions of vital importance in this inquiry, viz. :—

1st. In favour of which country is the balance of advantages arising from reciprocal freedom of trade gained by the Treaty of Washington? and

2nd. Upon whom is the incidence of duties levied upon fish exported by Canada into the United States, the producer or the consumer?

I again (if I may do so without giving offence to my learned friends on the other side) express my obligations to Mr. Miall for the valuable assistance he has afforded in preparing my argument on these points.

Article XXI of the Treaty of Washington is as follows :—

"It is agreed that for the term of years mentioned in Art. XXIII of this Treaty, fish and fish oil of all kinds (except fish of the inland lakes and of the rivers falling into them and except fish preserved in oil), being the products of the fisheries of the United States or of the Dominion of Canada, or of Prince Edward Island, shall be admitted into each country respectively, free of duty."

Article XXII. "Inasmuch as it is asserted by the Government of Her Britannic Majesty that the privileges accorded to the citizens of the United States under Article XVIII of this Treaty are of greater value than those accorded by Articles XIX and XXI of this Treaty to the subjects of Her Britannic Majesty, and this assertion is not admitted by the Government of the United States, it is further agreed that Commissioners shall be appointed to determine, having regard to the privileges accorded to the United States to the subjects of Her Britannic Majesty, as stated in Articles XIX and XXI of this Treaty, the amount of any compensation which, in their opinion, ought to be paid by the Government of the United States to the Government of Her Britannic Majesty in return for the privileges accorded to the citizens of the United States under Article XVIII of this Treaty; and that any sum of money which the said Commissioners may so award shall be paid by the United States Government in a gross sum within twelve months after such award shall have been given."

The advantages which might be expected to flow from the reciprocal freedom of markets, provided for by Article XXI, might be of two kinds:—

1. Increased trade.
2. Increased profits upon the volume of trade already existing.

The latter, however, could only obtain upon the supposition that the duties previously levied had been a burden upon the foreign producer.

In reference to the first of these questions it is contended—

1. That the increase of consumption in the United States of British caught fish has not been equal to the increase in Canada of the products of the United States fisheries.
2. That a considerable portion of the products of British American fisheries exported to the United States for many years past, has been re-exported to foreign countries where they have entered into competition with other foreign exports of Her Majesty's British American subjects; and it must be borne in mind that these fish have not paid any duty.

These propositions will be dealt with seriatim.

By reference to statement No. 8, to be found on page 435 of the British evidence, it will be found that for the seven years following the abrogation of the Reciprocity Treaty (when duties were payable upon importations) the imports of fish and fish oil from the United States into the Dominion of Canada and Prince Edward Island were as follows:—

	Dollars.
1870	99,409
1871	123,331

the average annual value being 152,506 dollars.

During the years 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, when no duties were payable, they have, under the operation of the Treaty, been as follows:—

	Dollars.
1874	728,921
1876	697,657

the annual average having been increased to 721,637 dollars.

The increase, therefore, of United States exportation of fish and fish oil annually to Canada has been 569,131 dollars, of which 179,030 dollars consisted of fresh fish, leaving 390,101 dollars as the increase upon articles previously subjected to duty. As against this gain to the United States the British producers have gained an increased market in the United States of only 340,589 dollars, as will be seen by the following figures to be found in the same statement.

During the seven years immediately preceding the Washington Treaty, when duties were payable, the United States imported the fish products of Canada and Prince Edward Island as follows, viz.:—

	Dollars.
1867	1,108,779
1868	1,103,859
1869	1,208,805
1870	1,129,665
1871	1,087,341

the annual average being 1,137,839 dollars.

Since the Treaty has been in full operation the annual average has increased to 1,505,888 dollars, the imports having been as follows:—

	Dollars.
1874	1,612,295
1875	1,637,712

the increase in the annual average being 368,049 dollars, of which increase 27,460 dollars was due to fresh fish, leaving 340,589 dollars as the increase upon articles previously subjected to duty. From these figures it is clear, then, that as respects the advantages arising from an increased market the United States and not Canada has been the greatest gainer. It may be remarked, before leaving this part of the subject, that although the statistics put in by the Government of the United States, as to the total imports into the United States from Canada, approximate very closely to those put in by Her Majesty's Government in respect of the exports from Canada to the United States; there is an important discrepancy between the exports from the United States to Canada, as put in evidence in Table XIV of Appendix O, and the imports into Canada from the United States as put in evidence by Her Majesty's Government.

This has already been referred to during the course of the evidence, but the attention of the Commissioners is now again directed to the explicit admissions of Mr. Young, the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics at Washington, in his reports of 1874, 1875, and 1876. With regard to this subject, for example, he says, at page 15 of his report for 1876:—

"During the year ended June 30, 1876, the total value of domestic merchandize and produce exported to Canada, and which was omitted in the Returns of the United States' Custom officers on the Canadian border, as appears from the official statements furnished by the Commissioner of Customs of the Dominion, amounted to 10,507,563 dollars, as against 15,596,524 dollars in the preceding year, and 11,424,566 dollars in 1874."

2. I beg now to call the attention of your Excellency and your Honours to the fact that a considerable proportion of the products of the British-American fisheries, exported to the United States for many years past, has been re-exported to other foreign countries, where they may be fairly presumed to have entered into competition with the direct foreign exports of Her Majesty's British-American subjects.

This will clearly appear by reference to statement No. 11, to be found on page 437 of the British evidence, which shows that the exports of dried and smoked, pickled and other cured fish (exclusive of California) to all other foreign countries, from 1850 to 1876, averaged annually (at a gold valuation), as follows, viz.:—

	Dollars.
1850–1854	755,165 non-reciprocal years.
1860–1866	1,001,984 reciprocal years.
1873–1876	1,640,426 reciprocal years.

Now, comparing these exports from the United States to all foreign countries, with the imports from Canada to the United States, it would appear that they are largely inter-dependent. The imports referred to are as follows:—

	Dollars.
1850–1854	792,419
1856–1866	1,377,727
1866–1873	1,137,839
1873–1877	1,505,888

With regard to this matter, I call attention to the following assertion made at page 9 of the "Answer" of the United States, viz.:—

"But while the result (of the Washington Treaty) to them (Canadians) has been one of steady development and increasing wealth, the United States' codfishery even has declined in amount and value."

If, then, the domestic production of the United States has decreased, and the exports to foreign countries have increased in about the same ratio as have the importations from Canada, is it not evident that the increased imports have been made mainly with a view to the supply of foreign markets—or what is equivalent—to supply the hiatus in the markets of the United States due to the exportation of a greater quantity of their own fish products than the yield of their fisheries warranted, in view of their own requirements for home consumption? It would seem from an examination of the statistics that the increased importations from Canada during those years in which no duties were levied on Canadian fish were largely due to an increased foreign trade, and it is contended that Her Majesty's subjects gained no substantial pecuniary advantage from supplying those foreign markets by indirect rather than direct trade. On the other hand, the tendency of this class of trade is to throw the foreign carrying trade, hitherto conducted by subjects of Her Majesty, more and more into the hands of the shipowners and brokers of the United States.

A close examination of Canadian exports confirms this view. Of the entire exports those to the United States and to other foreign countries compare as follows :—

Years.	Percentage sent to the United States.	Percentage sent to other foreign countries.
1856–66	34 7–10	65 3–10

If any further reasoning is required in support of this very evident contention, the following extract from page 529 of the "United States' Census Report for 1860" may be useful :—

"By the Warehousing Act of 1846, foreign fish were allowed to be imported and entered in bond, and thence exported without payment of duty; but under the Reciprocity Act, Colonial fish are admitted free of duty. These Acts have caused our principal fish distributing cities, such as Boston, New York, and Philadelphia, to become exporters of large quantities of foreign fish."

Although, therefore, the export trade of Canada has progressively increased from year to year, it is plain that the removal of fiscal obstructions on the part of the United States has had the effect more or less of turning a certain proportion of our foreign trade, with other foreign countries, into American channels. In other words, a larger proportion of the West Indian and South American fish trade of Canada has been done through United States' merchants, whenever tariff restrictions have been removed.

Now, the able Counsel and Agent of the United States has chosen as the basis upon which to determine the question of remissions of duty, the year 1874.

It is contended that it would be manifestly unfair to take as a basis upon which to estimate such remissions, those years during which it is alleged the exportations from Canada to the United States have (mainly in consequence of such remissions) considerably increased.

The United States import from Canada and Prince Edward Island of fish and fish-oil from 1867 to 1873, during which period duties were imposed upon such importations, were as follows :—

	Dollars.
1867	1,108,779
1868	1,103,859
1869	1,208,805
1870	1,129,665
1871	1,087,341

The average annual value of the above-mentioned importation was 1,137,840 dollars, and the largest in any one year, 1,393,389 dollars, in 1873.

The commerce and navigation returns of the United States give the importation from Canada in that year at 1,400,562; or, including Newfoundland, at 1,685,489 dollars, as follows :—

Description.	Imported.		Rate of Duty.	Amount of Duty which would have been collected if entered for consumption.
	Quantity.	Values.
		Dollars.	Dollars.	Dollars.
Fish (fresh)	8,627,724 lbs.	278,707	Free.	..
Herring	53,039 bbls.	179,377	1·00 per bbl.	53,339

Sardines, &c., preserved in oil ..	..	3,527	50 per cent.	1,763
All others not elsewhere specified ..	..	552,032	13½ „	74,524
Oil, whale and fish	127,315 gals.	66,068	20 „	13,213
Total	..	1,685,489	..	321,935

Now, by reference to the United States' Commerce and Navigation Returns for 1873 (page 311) it will be seen that the re-exports of foreign fish were as follows :—

	Barrels.	Amount.	Rate.	Duty.
		Dollars.	Dollars.	Dollars.
Herring..	19,928	81,775	1·00 per brl.	19,928

Oil (page 319)	..	25,601	20 „	5,120

This sum, therefore, representing duties which never were collected must be deducted from the aggregate duties accrued, as shown by the figures just previously given, viz., 321,935 dollars.

in regard to which it remains to be decided whether or not its remission has inured to the benefit of the Canadian producer.

The United States contend, at page 31 of the Answer, that the remission of duties to Canadian fishermen during the four years which have already elapsed under the operation of the Treaty has amounted to about 400,000 dollars annually, which proposition it was explicitly stated would be conclusively proved in evidence which would be laid before the Commission. This extraordinary assertion which, it has been contended, has been contravened by the whole tenor of the evidence, whether adduced on behalf of the United States or of Great Britain, was followed up by the laying down of the following principle, viz. :—

"Where a tax or duty is imposed upon a small portion of the producers of any commodity, from which the great body of its producers are exempt, such tax or duty necessarily remains a burden upon the producers of the smaller quantity, diminishing their profits, which cannot be added to the price, and so distributed among the purchasers and consumers."

It is contended, in reply, that this principle is true only in those cases in which the ability on the part of the majority of producers to supply the commodity thus taxed, is fully equal to the demand.

The question whether the consumer or producer pays any imposts levied upon the importation of certain commodities, does not depend upon whether the body of foreign producers is large or small relatively to the body of domestic producers, with whose products theirs are to come into competion, but simply upon the question whether or not the existing home production is equal to the demand. If it be not equal, and a quantity equal to one-third or one-fourth of that produced at home be really required, prices must go up until the foreign producer can be tempted to supply the remainder, and the consumer will pay the increased price not only upon the fraction imported, but upon the greater quantity produced within the importing country as well. And the tendency of all the evidence in this case, British and American, has been a most explicit and direct confirmation of this principle.

The British evidence to which I shall immediately call your attention, proves beyond a doubt that when duties were imposed upon mackerel of 2 dollars per barrel, British exporters to the United States realized a sufficient increase of price to enable them to pay those duties and still receive a net amount equal to the average price received before those duties were imposed, as well as after they were removed.

Upon a careful examination of the United States' testimony, it will, I submit, appear that during those years when duties were imposed upon British-caught fish, the price of mackerel when landed from United States' vessels from their fishing voyages in the bay, was to the full extent of the duty in excess of the price they commanded after the duty was repealed, or before it was imposed.

It is impossible to conceive a clearer proof that the consumer and not the producer had to bear the burden of the duty and not only that, but an equivalent burden upon every barrel of mackerel caught and landed by the United States' mackerel vessels during the existence of that duty.

In the evidence adduced on behalf of Her Majesty's Government this point has been established beyond possibility of refutation. The average prices obtained by the following firms, viz., A. H. Crowe, Lawson and Harrington; and Young, Hart and Co., in gold, at Halifax, after payment of duties and all other charges, are given by the various witnesses as follows, the sales being made in all cases to United States' buyers.

It will be observed, then, that the Halifax merchants had to submit to no decline in price from 1866 to 1873.

The evidence adduced on behalf of the United States proves the prices at which mackerel caught by United States' vessels in the Bay of St. Lawrence during these same periods were valued, on settling with the crews (exclusive of the cost and profits of packing, which would have increased the prices by 2.00 dollars per barrel), to have been as follows:—

These prices produce the following result:—

	1857 to 1865.	1866 to 1873.	1873 to 1876.
	During operation of Reciprocity Treaty.	Dutiable period.	During Washington Treaty.

Average price in United States' currrency	10 42	14 17	10 01
Approximate gold prices*	9 17	11 33	9 00

From these prices, it is abundantly clear that the consuming classes in the United States were compelled to pay at least 2 dollars (gold) per barrel more for all the mackerel brought in by the United States' vessels during the existence of the duty.

What stronger evidence can be required than these facts (perhaps the only facts with reference to which the testimony of witnesses on both sides are fully and absolutely in accord) to satisfy an impartial mind as to the real incidence of taxation, upon the article in question; and inasmuch as the mackerel is the only fish the market for the best qualities of which is limited to the United States, it is not deemed necessary to continue the inquiry with reference to other fish products to which the markets of the world are open, and whose prices therefore can in no way be influenced by the United States.

Now, if your Honours please, there is but one other subject to which I will call the attention of this Commission before I close, and that is to the offer made by the American Commissioners at the time this Treaty of Washington was being negotiated. I refer to the offer to remit the duty on coal, lumber, and salt. The circumstances are stated at length in the Reply of Great Britain to the Answer of the United States, and, therefore, I need not refer particularly to the figures. The sum was 17,800,000 dollars, as far as I can recollect. Now, if it is true, as contended by the United States in their "Answer," that the remission of duties means a boon to the persons in whose favour they are remitted, and that those persons are the producers, then it is clear that this a fair estimate put by the American High Commissioners themselves, upon the fishing privileges that they were then endeavouring to obtain from the British Government. Whether that is a correct principle or not, is no part of my duty to contend. My argument is that that was the view of the United States, as a country, believing in the proposition that the producer, and not the consumer, pays the duty.

In their own Answer they put the remission of duties which they say inures to our benefit at 400,000 dollars a year. While we do not admit the correctness of their view of that remission either in principle or amount, their Answer is an admission of their estimate of the value of the concessions afforded to them. If the concessions were worth as much as that, then the award of this Commission must of necessity be in favour of Great Britain for a large amount. But it may be said "You have got the value of this because we have remitted these duties." We have shown by evidence and argument conclusively that the producer does not pay 1 dollar of these duties, that fish from the Halifax market was sent there during the period when the duties were paid, and that the fish merchant here received back in his own counting-house for the fish sold in Boston, as much money as when there was no duty paid at all. The remission of duty, therefore, is a benefit to citizens of the United States and not to us.

I have, in order to close this argument to-day, passed over a number of subjects to which I at one time intended to call to the attention of the Commission. But the time is pressing. We are all to a considerable extent worn out with the labours of the Commission. Yesterday I asked the Commission to open at an earlier hour to-day in order that I might finish my remarks without further adjournment, and I am happy to be able to redeem my promise.

I have now brought my argument on behalf of Great Britain to a close. To the shortcomings and defects of that argument I am painfully alive. But the cause I have advocated is so righteous in itself, has been supported and sustained by evidence so trustworthy and conclusive, and is to be decided by a tribunal so able and impartial as that which I have the honour to address, that I entertain no fears of the result.

Although I rejoice that a responsibility which for many months has pressed with no ordinary weight upon my learned colleagues and myself, is well nigh ended, yet I cannot but feel a pang of regret that the days of my pleasant intercourse with the gentlemen engaged in and connected with this most important inquiry, are drawing to a close.

For the kind consideration, and unfailing urbanity extended to my colleagues and myself, I tender to your Excellency and your Honours my most sincere acknowledgment and thanks.

What shall I say to my brethren of the United States? To their uniform courtesy tact, and kindly feeling, we chiefly owe it, that this protracted inquiry has almost reached its termination without unpleasant difference or dissension of any kind.

To the cause of the United States, which both my patriotism and my professional duty constrain me to regard as utterly untenable, the ability, ingenuity, and eloquence of Judge Foster, Mr. Dana, and Mr. Trescot, have done more than justice. They have shown themselves no unworthy members of a profession which in their own country has been adorned and illustrated on the Bench and at the Bar by the profound learning of a Marshall, a Kent, and a Story, and by the brilliant eloquence of a Webster and a Choate. From my learned, able, and accomplished brethren of the United States, I shall part when this Commission shall have closed its labours with unfeigned regret.

A few words more and I have done. To the judgment of this Tribunal, should it prove adverse to my anticipations, Great Britain and Canada will bow without a murmur. Should, however, the decision be otherwise, it is gratifying to know that we have the assurance of her counsel, that America will accept the award in the same spirit with which England accepted the Geneva judgment, and like England pay it without unnecessary delay. This is as it should be. It is a spirit which reflects honour upon both countries. The spectacle presented by the Treaty of Washington, and the arbitrations under it, is one at which the world must gaze with wonder and admiration. While nearly every other nation of the world settles its difficulties with other Powers by the dreadful arbitrament of the sword, England and America, two of the most powerful nations upon the earth, whose peaceful flags of commerce float side by side in every quarter of the habitable globe, whose ships of war salute each other almost daily in every clime and on every sea, refer their differences to the peaceful arbitrament of Christian men, sitting without show or parade of any kind in open court.

On the day that the Treaty of Washington was signed by the High Contracting Parties, an epoch in the history of civilization was reached. On that day the heaviest blow ever struck by human agency fell upon that great anvil of the Almighty upon which, in His own way and at His appointed time, the sword and the spear shall be transformed into the plough-share and the reaping-hook.

DECLARATION

RECORDING THE

ADHESION OF CANADA

TO THE

GENERAL POSTAL UNION

OF

Signed at Berne, May 28, 1878.

Presented to both Houses of Parliament by Command of Her Majesty.

Declaration recording the Adhesion of Canada to the General Postal Union.

PAR Circulaire du 11 Avril, 1876, l'Administration Suisse des Postes a proposé aux autres membres de l'Union Générale des Postes de recevoir le Canada aux conditions du Traité de Berne du 9 Octobre, 1874.

Par leurs lettres du 13 Mai, 1878, dont le contenu est identique, les Administrations des Postes de France et d'Espagne ont déclaré retirer l'opposition qu'elles avaient formulée contre l'admission du Canada, dans le terme de six semaines prescrit par l'alinéa 6 de l'Article XVII du Traité précité.

Vu les circonstances qui précèdent, les Soussignés, dûment autorisés à cet effet, constatent par le présent acte diplomatique l'adhésion définitive, dès le 1er Juillet, 1878, du Gouvernement Britannique, pour le Canada, aux stipulations du Traité concernant la création d'une Union Générale des Postes, conclu à Berne le 9 Octobre, 1874, ainsi qu'aux dispositions définitives du Règlement de détail pour l'exécution du dit Traité.

Fait à Berne, le 28 Mai, 1878.

Pour le Gouvernement du Canada :
Le Ministre Résident de Sa Majesté Britannique près la Confédération Suisse, (Signé) HORACE RUMBOLD.

Pour le Conseil Fédéral Suisse, au nom des Membres de l'Union :
Le Président de la Confédération, Signé) SCHENK.

BY a Circular dated 11th April, 1876, the Swiss Postal Department proposed to the other members of the General Postal Union, the admission of Canada to the terms of the Treaty of Berne of 9th October, 1874.

By their letters of 13th May, 1878, the contents of which are identical, the Postal Departments of France and Spain declared that they withdrew the opposition to the admission of Canada which they had expressed within the term of six weeks prescribed by Article XVII, paragraph 6, of the above-mentioned Treaty.

Under these circumstances the Undersigned, duly authorized for this purpose, declare by the present diplomatic instrument the definitive adhesion of the British Government for Canada, from the 1st July, 1878, to the provisions of the Treaty concerning the creation of the General Postal Union concluded at Berne on the 9th October, 1874, as well as to the definitive stipulations and arrangements in detail for carrying the said Treaty into effect.

Sir, House of Commons, London, 17 July 1878.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you for presentation to Her Majesty a Petition, signed by more than 25,000 of Irish Canadian Catholics, inhabitants of Her Majesty's Province of Ontario, in the Dominion of Canada.

The Petitioners complain that an Act giving special privileges to the Orange Society in the Province of New Brunswick had received from the Lieutenant Governor of that Province the Royal Assent, and that this Assent had been forbidden, and has not since been recalled by the Governor General of the Dominion.

In contemplation of an attempt to obtain a similar enactment in the Province of Ontario, the Petitioners humbly pray that Her Majesty may be graciously pleased to forbid the Governor General of the Dominion, and the Lieutenant Governors and their successors, sanctioning by the Royal Assent any enactment giving a Charter to the Orange Society.

Enclosure in No. 1.

Enclosure in No. 1.

TO THE QUEEN'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY.

The PETITION of the undersigned Irish Canadian Catholics, Inhabitants of Your Majesty's Province of Ontario,

Humbly showeth,

That the Orange Society, which has kept alive in the land of our origin memories of evil passions, to the disgrace of religion, the violation of law, the fosterage of discontent, has been transplanted to the several Provinces of Your Majesty's Dominion of Canada.

That condemned as that society in Ireland is by the spirit of the age as embodied in the judgments conveyed against it by the Right Hon. the Marquis of Hartington, the Right Hon. William Ewart Gladstone, and other exponents of public opinion in England, its importation, outside all the circumstances of its origin, into this young Dominion is an evil which can find no apology whatever in either policy or decency.

That whatever be the dangers from which Orangeism assumes to protect Protestantism, they certainly cannot apply in the Province of Nova Scotia, where the Protestants are 67 per cent. of the population; in the Province of New Brunswick, where the Protestants are 62 per cent. of the population; in the Province of Ontario, where the Protestants are 84 per cent. of the population; and that, therefore, Orangeism in these Provinces can find no excuse whatever for its existence in the old cry, which has fallen amongst the enlightened into ridicule since the days of Dean Swift's announcement, that "the lion has been let out of the Tower of London to destroy Protestant religion."

That

That Orangeism in any part of this Dominion may find a justification in the fact that the great majority of the population of the Province of Quebec is Catholic, is a consideration which, even if the tolerant and inoffensive majority of that Province were disposed to exercise its right of local government as illiberally as the Protestant majorities of New Brunswick and of Prince Edward Island exercise theirs, cannot be entertained short of an acceptance of the practice of the 2,000 armed Orangemen of the Province of Ontario who invaded the Province of Quebec on the 16th of last July, to thrust their insult and outrage on the Catholic population of Montreal by insurrectionary violence.

Your Majesty's Petitioners humbly show also, that the Orange body as an organisation menacing the freedom of religious conscience, is in conflict with the spirit of the constitution, and in direct violation of the guarantees of religious liberty, when it makes annually a demonstration of physical force under banners that demand suppression of the Catholic faith.

And your Majesty's Petitioners humbly show further, that the Orange Society outrages publicly with its banners and its music and religious faith, and its visible head, which one million and a half or 42 per cent. of your Majesty's subjects in this Dominion hold most venerable and holy.

That the said Orange Society perpetrates by its banners, music, and exhibition of physical force, wanton outrage on not only the religious faith, and its visible head of half a million of Your Majesty's Canadian subjects who are Catholics of Irish birth or blood, but aggravates that wanton public outrage on those unoffending citizens by the insults conveyed in the Orange presence and the Orange music, to the memories of those of our forefathers who, now half a century in the repose of Irish graves, laid down their lives in a resistance of desperation against what subsequent action of the estates of Your Majesty's realm has confessed in effect to have been cruel oppression.

That though animosity, strife, and bloodshed result here, as in Ireland, from those violations of good citizenship on the part of our misguided fellow-subjects of the Orange Society, Your Majesty's Memorialists are willing to bear, and as far as human nature may be subdued by religious restraint and civil obedience, to forbear in a recognition of the general principle of the right of public procession, and they do not seek to interfere in anywise with that or any other right or privilege enjoyed by the Orange body (so far as that body may be lawful) in common with all similar bodies in this Dominion.

That the Orange Society is, however, not content with rights and privileges in common with all similar bodies in this Dominion, but that it seeks to obtain for itself special rights and privileges through legislation; that it has actually obtained such in the Province of New Brunswick, and that having made several unsuccessful attempts to do so in the Province of Ontario, it contemplates a renewal of those attempts in Ontario now.

That the indecent legislation which has given in the last quarter of the 19th century the Orange Society of New Brunswick the authority of law by special enactment, has received from the Lieutenant Governor of the Province the Royal Assent, and that that Assent had not been forbidden, or has not since been recalled by the Governor General of the Dominion.

And on all these grounds your Memorialists humbly pray that Your Majesty will graciously cause the Governor General and the Lieutenant Governors of this Dominion and their successors in office to be forbidden to sanction any enactment so revolting to the spirit of the Constitution, so well calculated to alienate the affections of a million and a half of Your Majesty's subjects in Canada from the Throne and Government as a special Charter of the Orange Society; and that while saving thus the self-respect, the religious sense, the constitutional equality of ourselves and our co-religionists in this part of the Empire, Your Majesty will save your person and throne before the civilised world, and especially before a vast body of your people, from responsibility for the sanction, by your Royal Assent, of annual outrages on a million and a half of your Canadian subjects through their faith, and on 500,000 of that number through the memories of their fathers.

And your Memorialists shall ever pray.

Here follow the Signatures.

Sir, Downing-street, 2 August 1878.

I AM directed by the Secretary of State for the Colonies to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 17th of July, transmitting, for presentation to the Queen, a Petition to Her Majesty largely signed by Irish Canadian Roman Catholics of the Province of Ontario, praying that the Royal Assent may be refused to any enactment granting a special Charter to the Orange Society within the Dominion of Canada.

Sir Michael Hicks Beach desires me to inform you in reply that, in accordance with the standing rules of the Colonial service, all communications from the Colonies should be transmitted to this Department through the Governor of the Colony from which they proceed, in order that they may be duly verified and reported upon by the responsible authorities.

The Petition which accompanies your letter will therefore be forwarded to the Governor General of Canada, by next mail, for such observations as the Dominion and Provincial authorities may think proper to make upon it; but in the meantime I am to intimate that the question to which it relates would appear, under the provisions of the British North America Act, 1867, to fall within the exclusive powers of the Provincial Legislatures of the Dominion, and that it is contrary to established constitutional procedure for Her Majesty's Government to interfere, unless in very special circumstances, with such legislation as is within the competency of a Provincial Legislature.

I am, &c.

My Lord, Downing-street, 2 August 1878.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, for communication to your Ministers, a copy of a letter which I have received from Mr. Isaac Butt, M.P., accompanied by a Petition addressed to the Queen by Irish Canadian Roman Catholics of the Province of Ontario, praying that the Royal Assent may be refused to any enactment granting a special Charter to the Orange Society within the Dominion of Canada.

I also enclose a copy of the reply which I have caused to be sent to Mr. Butt's letter, and I should be glad to receive from you such observations as the Dominion and Provincial Authorities may think proper to make in the matter.

I have, &c.

GOVERNOR-GENERAL THE MARQUIS OF LORNE, K.T., to the RIGHT HON. SIR MICHAEL HICKS BEACH, BART. (Received April 1, 1879.)

Canada Government House, Ottawa,
March 19, 1879.

SIR,

IN transmitting herewith—

1st. A printed copy of the new tariff;

2nd. The speeches of the Finance Minister in introducing his budget, and the reply of the Hon. R. J. Cartwright, late Finance Minister, as well as the speeches of the Hon. A. Mackenzie and the Hon. C. Tuppen;*

3rd. The leading articles of the Ministerial and Opposition press;*

4th. A memorandum by the Finance Minister, showing how far comparatively England is favoured in the new tariff;

I have the honour to state:—

That after the years of prosperity, viz., from 1867 to 1873, which has been called a time of inflation, there was in one year (1871–72) a surplus in the Treasury amounting to $3,000,000, and in another (1870–71) nearly $4,000,000, and that a reaction of financial depression has followed; and since 1875, although additional taxation had been resorted to by Mr. Mackenzie's Government, there had been deficits in 1875–76 of $1,900,785, in 1876–77 of $1,460,027, in 1877–78 of $1,128,147, and in the first half of 1878–79 about $800,000 or more.

That the Excise and Customs receipts, although population has increased, have given diminishing returns and have declined in value as follows:—Excise, from $5,594,903 in 1873–74 to $4,858,671 in 1877–78; while the Custom receipts have decreased from $15,351,011 in 1873–74 to $12,782,824 in 1877–78.

Stamp duties (in Canada bill stamps only) have also yielded less.

The result, comparing the periods 1873–74 and 1877–78, being as follows:—$2,568,187 Customs, $736,232 Excise, $43,738 bill stamps, making in all a decrease of $3,348,157 in the revenue of 1877–78, as compared with that of 1873–74, from the income derived by taxation.

That the fixed charges for debts, &c. to the provincial governments have increased from $10,255,798 in 1873–74 to $11,659,523 in 1877–78, an addition of $1,403,725, which being a fixed charge cannot be reduced, while the subsidies have only decreased $280,000.

That the Dominion of Canada is liable for public works on the 1st July 1878, as follows:—

(A.) For completion of Lachine and Welland Canals - -	5,500,000
(B.) The construction of the Pacific Railway from Lake Superior to Red River - - - - - -	6,000,000
(C.) For continuation of the branch from French River on Lake Huron to Pembroke - - - - -	2,500,000
Making a total of - - -	16,000,000

In addition to the liabilities for the construction of public works, Canada will have during the next few years to provide in England for the following maturing debts:—In 1880, $6,065,813; in 1881, $1,321,300; in 1882, $2,641,626; in 1883, $1,639,580; in 1884, 1,305,240; and in 1885, $32,467,665.

That in consequence of failure in revenue, and having to provide for the public service, interest on debt, &c., at least $2,000,000 must be obtained by the new budget to meet existing deficiencies.

That the present Government were returned by a large majority in September 1878, the issue at the general elections being revenue versus a protection tariff.

A protection tariff, in order to encourage the industries of the Dominion, was advocated by the leaders of the then Opposition; and the Government they have since formed do not desire to avail themselves of direct taxation. They also desire to point to the very hostile action of the American Government towards the Dominion of Canada in all matters relating to tariff; and to the fact that manufacturers in the United States have established combinations under such perfect organisation, that should any special industry arise in Canada the Canadian market is at once flooded with a corresponding article of American produce sold below value; the effect of such combination being equal to that which is produced by a Government bounty.

I have, &c.
(Signed) LORNE.

TARIFF OF CUSTOMS OF THE DOMINION OF CANADA, AS IN FORCE ON AND AFTER THE 15TH MARCH 1879.

Resolved, That it is expedient to provide that the value of all bottles, flasks, jars, demijohns, carboys, casks, hogsheads, pipes, barrels, and all other vessels or packages, manufactured of tin, iron, lead, zinc, glass, or any other material, and capable of holding liquids, crates, barrels and other packages containing glass, china, crockery, or earthenware, and all packages in which goods are commonly placed for home consumption, including cases in which bottled spirits, wines, or malt liquors are contained, and every package, being the first receptacle or covering enclosing goods for purpose of sale, shall, in all cases not otherwise provided for, in which they contain goods subject to an ad valorem duty, be taken and held to be a part of the fair market value of such goods for duty, and when they contain goods subject to specific duty only such packages shall be charged with a duty of customs of twenty per centum ad valorem to be computed upon their original cost or value; and all or any of the above packages described as capable of holding liquids when containing goods exempt from duty under this Act shall be charged with a duty of twenty per centum ad valorem; but all packages not hereinbefore specified, and not specially charged with duty by any unrepealed enactment, and being the usual and ordinary packages in which goods are packed for exportation only, according to the general usage and custom of trade, shall be free of duty.

Resolved, That it is expedient to provide that on all goods imported into Canada, subject under this Act or any other Act to ad valorem duty, upon which a drawback of duties has been allowed by the Government of the country where the same were purchased, the amount of such drawback shall in all cases be taken and considered to be a part of the fair market value of such goods, and duty shall be collected thereon, and in cases when the amount of such drawback shall have been deducted from the value of such goods upon the face of the invoice under which entry is to be made, the collector of Customs or proper officer shall add the amount of such deduction and collect and cause to be paid the lawful duty thereupon, and the fair market value of all goods, wares, and merchandise imported into Canada shall be understood to be the ordinary wholesale price at which the same are sold for home consumption in the country where they are purchased without deduction of any kind because of any drawback paid or to be paid thereon, or because of any special arrangement between the seller and purchaser having reference to the exportation of such goods, or the exclusive right to territorial limits for the sale thereof, or because of any royalty payable upon patent rights, but not payable when goods are purchased for exportation, or on account of any other consideration by which a special reduction in price might or could be obtained: Provided that nothing herein shall be understood to apply to general fluctuations of market values.

Resolved, That it is expedient to provide that any or all of the following articles, that is to say, animals of all kinds, green fruit, hay, straw, bran, seeds of all kinds, vegetables (including potatoes and other roots), plants, trees, and shrubs, coal and coke, salt, hops, wheat, peas and beans, barley, rye, oats, Indian corn, buckwheat and all other grain, flour of wheat and flour of rye, Indian meal and oatmeal, and flour or meal of any other grain, butter, cheese, fish (salted or smoked), lard, tallow, meats, (fresh, salted or smoked), may be imported into Canada free of duty, or at a less rate of duty than is provided by this Act upon proclamation of the Governor in Council, which may be issued whenever it appears to his satisfaction, that similar articles from Canada may be imported into the United States free of duty, or at a rate of duty not exceeding that payable on the same under such proclamation when imported into Canada.

Resolved, That it is expedient to provide that if at any time any greater duty of customs should be payable in the United States of America on tea or coffee imported from Canada than on tea or coffee imported from any other country, then the Governor in Council may impose on tea or coffee imported into Canada from the said United States an additional duty of customs, equal to the duty payable in the United States on tea or coffee imported from Canada: Provided that tea or coffee imported into Canada from any country other than the said United States but passing in bond through the United States shall be taken and rated as a direct importation from the country wherever the tea or coffee was purchased.

Resolved, That it is expedient to provide that an allowance may be made for deterioration by natural decay or breakage upon all perishable and brittle goods imported into Canada, such as green fruits and vegetables, crockery, china, glass, and glassware, provided such damage is found to exceed twenty-five per centum of the value thereof upon an examination to be made by an appraiser or proper officer of customs at the first landing, or within three days of such landing; but such allowance shall be only for the amount of loss in excess of twenty-five per centum of the whole quantity of such goods contained or included in any one invoice; and provided the duty has been paid on the full value thereof a refund of such duty may be allowed and paid in the proportion and on fulfilment of the conditions above specified, but not otherwise, on application to the Minister of Customs.

Resolved, That it is expedient to provide that in determining the suitable value of merchandize there shall be added to the cost or the actual wholesale price or fair market value at the time of exportation in the principal markets of the country from whence the same has been imported into Canada the cost of inland transportation, shipment and trans-shipment, with all the expenses included, from the place of growth, production or manufacture, whether by land or water, to the vessel in which shipment is made, either in transitu or direct to Canada.

Resolved, That it is expedient to provide that the Governor in Council shall from time to time establish such regulations, not inconsistent with law, as may be required to secure a just, faithful, and impartial appraisal of all goods, wares, and merchandize imported into Canada, and just and proper entries of the actual or fair market value thereof, and of the weight, measures, or other quantities thereof, as each case may require, and such regulations, whether general or special, so made by the Goveror in Council, shall have the full force and authority of law, and it shall be the duty of the appraisers of Canada and every of them, and every person who shall act as such appraiser, or of the Collector of Customs, as the case may be, by all reasonable ways and means in his or their power, to ascertain, estimate and appraise the true and fair market value and wholesale price, any invoice or affidavit thereto to the contrary notwithstanding, of the merchandize, at the time of exportation and in the principal markets of the country whence the same has been imported into Canada, and the proper weights, measures, or other quantities, and the fair market value or wholesale price of every of them, as the case may require.

Resolved, That it is expedient to provide that no refund of duty paid shall be allowed because of any alleged inferiority or deficiency in quantity of goods imported and entered, and which have passed into the custody of the importer under permit of the Collector of Customs; nor because of the omission in the invoice of any trade discount, or other matter or thing which might have the effect of reducing the value of such goods for duty, unless the same shall have been reported to the Collector of Customs within ten days of the date of entry; and the said goods shall have been examined by the said Collector or by an appraiser, or other proper officer of customs, and the proper rate or amount of reduction certified by him after such examination; and if such Collector or proper officer reports that the goods in question cannot be identified as those named in the invoice and entry in question, then and in such case no refund of the duty or any part thereof shall in any case be allowed, and all applications for refund of duty in such cases shall be submitted, with the evidence and all particulars, for decision of the Minister of Customs, who may then order payment on finding the evidence to be sufficient and satisfactory.

Resolved, That it is expedient to repeal all Acts and parts or Schedules of Acts, and all Orders in Council, imposing any duties of customs upon goods, wares, and merchandize, or providing for the exemption of goods, wares, and merchandize from customs duty, when imported into Canada, and to make the following provisions in lieu thereof:

MEMORANDA to accompany TABLES showing the effect of the NEW CANADIAN TARIFF upon the IMPORTS of GREAT BRITAIN and the UNITED STATES.

1. THE general effect must certainly be to decrease importations from the United States and to re-establish commercial relations between Canada and the West Indies, while if it materially alters the measure of trade with Great Britain, it must be on the side of increase, and in several branches this will certainly be the case. Fostering and promoting Canadian industries, and especially manufactures, will not lessen the necessity for large imports of various commodities which are now largely supplied to Canada by Great Britain, but if the result should prove the means of restoring prosperity, the effect upon British mercantile and manufacturing interests must be most favourable. A few examples will serve to illustrate these positions.

2. Among the articles heretofore free upon which a duty is imposed of 50 cents per ton by the present tariff, coal is one of the most prominent. The supply of this article has for years past been received chiefly from the United States, and the small proportion received from England has been generally brought in ships as ballast. The duty will consequently fall upon the owners of such ships, but this will not result in any considerable diminution of the quantity thus imported. In 1878 the value of coal imported from the United States was $2,667,000, while from Great Britain the amount was only $387,454. Should the imposition of this duty stimulate the mining enterprise of Nova Scotia, the increased production would find its way chiefly to the province of Ontario, where United States coal is almost exclusively used at present, and will not interfere with the consumption of English coal in the maritime provinces.

3. The value of live animals imported in 1878 was $341,611, the proportion of which from the United States was $338,015, and from Great Britain $3,084. The duty on these has been raised from 10 per cent. to 20 per cent., but the statement shows that if the imports are lessened, it must affect the United States almost solely.

4. A more important item is that of cottons, the total imports of which in 1878 amounted to about $8,000,000, and of the kinds upon which any considerable increase of duty has been imposed the value was somewhat under $3,000,000; about $1,000,000 of the latter sum represents British goods and $2,000,000 the United States. These goods consist mostly of the cheaper kinds of bleached and unbleached cottons, jeans, denims, and kindred articles. The increase of duty on these classes will certainly lessen the imports from the United States, and the deficiency will be supplied partly from Canadian factories and partly from England, and will tend to increase rather than diminish the volume of trade with the latter country.

The higher classes of cottons, representing an importation of about $5,000,000, are principally supplied by Great Britain, and the increase of duty imposed upon them is only $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. ad valorem, which cannot seriously diminish the trade, especially as Canadian mills and factories are not prepared to produce them. The proportion imported in 1878 from England was $4,000,000 to $1,000,000 from other countries.

5. Similar statements may be made respecting woollens. The total imports of these goods amounted in 1878 to about $8,500,000, of which Great Britain furnished about $7,000,000 worth. Of the latter, the higher classes of goods constituted the proportion of $5,000,000 in round numbers, and upon these the increase of duty is but $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., the former duty being $17\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. and the present 20 per cent.; Canadian manufactories are not prepared to furnish them, nor can they be purchased in the United States except at prices greatly in advance of English manufactures.

6. Iron and manufactures of iron. Iron in bar, rod, sheet, &c., has been taxed heretofore at the low rate of duty of 5 per cent. The value of the importations of 1878 was about $2,400,000, of which Great Britain furnished about $1,600,000. The duty has been increased to 10, 12, 15, and 17½ per cent., but the largest proportion must still be imported from Great Britain, as the prices ruling in the United States would not admit of its being purchased there, and the only diminution of the trade at all probable will originate in an increase of Canadian manufactures, but this will much more largely affect the imports from the United States of other classes of similar goods.

7. In manufactures of iron the arrangement is still more favourable to Great Britain. The total value of the imports in 1878 may be stated at $3,300,000. Of this amount the United States is credited with $2,437,000, consisting of castings and the coarser descriptions of hardware, while the balance of $861,500 consisted of cutlery and a variety of the finer manufactures of iron and steel such as neither the United States nor Canada can at present supply. The increased duty on these articles ranges from 2½ to 7½ per cent., and in some minor items to 10 per cent. The smallest increase is that which applies to British manufactures, or goods chiefly imported from Great Britain, while the heavier rates of duty will fall upon goods now imported from the United States, but which can and will be produced in Canada.

8. Books, periodicals, &c. The duties on these goods have been arranged with special regard to the higher classes of literary productions. The effect of the change from an ad valorem duty of 5 per cent. to a specific duty of 6 cents per pound will be that the revenue will be principally collected upon publications of small literary worth; while valuable works of a scientific character and others which sell at high prices will pay but a small percentage upon their value; books of equal bulk but of little intrinsic value will pay a much higher percentage. The former character is specially applicable to English publications, while an equally large proportion of those from the United States are of a decided inferior description. Bibles, prayer and hymn books are allowed to remain at 5 per cent., and reprints of British copyright works are taxed 12½ per cent., in addition to the duty of 6 cents per pound, for the benefit of the proprietors.

9. The duties imposed upon grain of all kinds, and upon flour and meal, have been graded with reference to the respective values of each kind, and will probably average about 10 per cent. ad valorem. This cannot in any way exert any appreciable effect upon the trade with Great Britain, as the quantity imported from thence is an insignificant fraction of the whole.

10. Sugar, as will be seen by reference to the table herewith, of the higher qualities is nominally raised from 25 to 35 per cent. ad valorem duty, while the specific duty of 1 cent per pound remains unaltered. This ad valorem duty, however, will now be levied on the net cost of sugars imported direct from the place of growth and production, without any addition for the cost of packages and expenses, and hence it is not really much more than 30 per cent., or 5 per cent. increase instead of 10 per cent. A provision of law is also made whereby the duty on refined sugars imported from any country allowing drawbacks on sugar exported will be collected on its full market price when sold for home consumption. This provision makes the duty on sugars from Great Britain considerably less than that on the same classes of sugar from the United States, the drawback in the latter country being on an average of 2½ cents per pound, on which the ad valorem duty will be collected.

(Signed) J. L. Tilley,
Minister of Finance.

Enclosure.

42 Victoria, Chap. 15.

An Act to alter the Duties of Customs and Excise. [Assented to 15*th May* 1879.]

Preamble. Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:—

Repeal of enactments imposing duties of customs. 1. So much of all Acts and parts or schedules of Acts and of all Orders in Council as imposes any duty of Customs upon goods (which word shall, for all the purposes of this Act, have the meaning assigned to it in the Act passed in fortieth year of Her Majesty's reign, and intituled "An Act to amend and consolidate the Acts respecting the Customs"), or exempts goods from Customs duty when imported into Canada, or is in anywise inconsistent with this Act, is hereby repealed; but any power conferred upon the Governor in Council by the Act last cited (fortieth Victoria, chapter ten) to transfer dutiable goods to the list of goods free of duty is not hereby abrogated or impaired; and in lieu and instead of all other duties of Customs upon goods imported into Canada, there shall be raised, levied, collected, and paid upon the goods enumerated in Schedule A. to this Act, or referred to as not enumerated therein but charged with duty, imported into Canada or taken out of warehouse for consumption therein, the several duties of Customs set forth and described in the said Schedule A., and set opposite to each respectively, or charged on them as not enumerated, subject to the provisions herein-after made.

Saving certain power under 40 V., c. 10.

Duties in Schedule A. imposed.

Goods free of duty. 2. The goods enumerated in Schedules B. and C. may, subject to the provisions and conditions therein mentioned, be imported into Canada or taken out of warehouse for consumption therein without payment of any duty of Customs thereon.

Prohibited goods. 3. The goods enumerated in Schedule D. shall not be imported into Canada, under the penalty therein mentioned, and if imported shall be forfeited and forthwith destroyed.

Provisions respecting packages containing goods paying ad valorem duty. 4. The value of all bottles, flasks, jars, demijohns, carboys, casks, hogsheads, pipes, barrels, and all other vessels or packages manufactured of tin, iron, lead, zinc, glass, or any other material, and capable of holding liquids; crates, barrels, and other packages containing glass, china, crockery, or earthenware, and all packages in which goods are commonly placed for home consumption, including cases in which bottled spirits, wines, or malt liquors are contained, and every package, being the first receptacle or covering, enclosing goods for purpose of sale, shall, in all cases not otherwise provided for in which they contain goods subject to an ad volorem duty, be taken and held to be a part of the fair market value of such goods for duty, and when they contain goods subject to specific duty only, such packages shall be charged with a duty of Customs of twenty per centum ad valorem, to be computed upon their original cost or value; and all or any of the above packages described as capable of holding liquids, when containing goods exempt from duty under this Act, shall be charged with a duty of twenty per centum ad valorem; but all packages not herein-before specified, and not herein specially charged with or declared liable to duty under regulations, and being the usual and ordinary packages in which goods are packed for exportation only, according to the general usage and custom of trade, shall be free of duty.

As to packages containing goods paying specific duty only, or free goods in certain cases.

Other packages free.

As to goods on which a drawback has been allowed in country of manufacture. 5. On all goods imported into Canada subject under this Act to ad valorem duty upon which a drawback of duties has been allowed by the Government of the country where the same were manufactured, the amount of such drawback shall, in all cases, be taken and considered to be a part of the fair market value of such goods, and duty shall be collected thereon; and in cases where the amount of such drawback has been deducted from the value of such goods upon the face of the invoice under which entry is to be made, the Collector of Customs, or proper officer, shall add the amount of such deduction and collect and cause to be paid the lawful duty thereupon; and the fair market value of all goods imported into Canada shall be understood to be the ordinary wholesale price at which the same are sold for home consumption in the country where they are purchased or manufactured, without deduction of any kind because of any drawback paid or to be paid thereon, or because of any special arrangement between the seller and purchaser having reference to the exportation of such goods, or the exclusive right to territorial limits for the sale thereof, or because of any royalty payable upon patent rights but not payable when goods are purchased for exportation, or on account of any other consideration by which a special reduction in price might or could be obtained: Provided that nothing herein shall be understood to apply to general fluctuations of market values.

No reduction of value by reason of drawback, &c.

Proviso.

Certain articles to be free of duty in Canada when free in United States.

6. Any or all of the following articles, that is to say, animals of all kinds, green fruit, hay, straw, bran, seeds of all kinds, vegetables (including potatoes and other roots), plants, trees, and shrubs, coal and coke, salt, hops, wheat, peas, and beans, barley, rye, oats, Indian corn, buckwheat, and all other grain, flour of wheat and flour of rye, Indian meal and oatmeal, and flour or meal of any other grain, butter, cheese, fish (salted or smoked), lard, tallow, meats (fresh, salted, or smoked), and lumber, may be imported into Canada free of duty, or at a less rate of duty than is provided by this Act, upon Proclamation of the Governor in Council, which may be issued whenever it appears to his satisfaction that similar articles from Canada may be imported into the United States free of duty, or at a rate of duty not exceeding that payable on the same under such Proclamation when imported into Canada.

Provision in case of higher duty in U.S. on tea or coffee imported from Canada than from elsewhere.

Proviso, if passing in bond through U.S.

7. If at any time any greater duty of Customs should be payable in the United States of America on tea or coffee imported from Canada than on tea or coffee imported from any other country, then the Governor in Council may impose on tea or coffee imported into Canada from the said United States an additional duty of Customs equal to the duty payable in the United States on tea or coffee imported from Canada. Provided that tea or coffee imported into Canada from any country other than the said United States, but passing in bond through the United States, shall be taken and rated as a direct importation from the country in which the tea or coffee was purchased.

Allowance for natural deterioration or breakage on certain articles.

Amount limited.

Proviso for refund in certain cases.

8. An allowance may be made for deterioration by natural decay or breakage upon all perishable and brittle goods imported into Canada, such as green fruits and vegetables, crockery, china, glass and glassware, provided such damage is found to exceed twenty-five per cent. of the value thereof upon an examination to be made by an appraiser, or proper officer of Customs, at their first landing, or within three days of such landing; but such allowance shall be only for the amount of loss in excess of twenty-five per cent. of the whole quantity of such goods contained or included in any one invoice; and provided the duty has been paid on the full value thereof, a refund of such duty may be allowed and paid in the proportion and on fulfilment of the conditions above specified, but not otherwise, on application to the Minister of Customs.

Cost of inland transportation, &c. to be deemed part of value.

9. In determining the dutiable value of goods, except when imported from Great Britain and Ireland, there shall be added to the cost or the actual wholesale price or fair market value, at the time of exportation in the principal markets of the country from whence the same has been imported into Canada, the cost of inland transportation, shipment, and trans-shipment, with all the expenses included, from the place of growth, production, or manufacture, whether by land or water, to the vessel in which shipment is made, either in transitu or direct to Canada, subject to such regulations as may be made by the Governor in Council.

Governor in Council may make regulations for ensuring fair valuation.

Duty of appraisers.

10. The Governor in Council shall from time to time establish such regulations, not inconsistent with law, as may be required to secure a just, faithful, and impartial appraisal of all goods imported into Canada, and just and proper entries of the actual or fair market value thereof, and of the weights, measures, or other quantities thereof, as each case may require; and such regulations, whether general or special, so made by the Governor in Council shall have the full force and authority of law; and it shall be the duty of the appraisers of Canada and every of them, and every person who shall act as such appraiser, or of the Collector of Customs, as the case may be, by all reasonable ways and means in his or their power, to ascertain, estimate, and appraise the true and fair market value and wholesale price (any invoice or affidavit thereto to the contrary notwithstanding) of the goods at the time of exportation, and in the principal markets of the country whence the same have been imported into Canada, and the proper weights, measures, or other quantities, and the fair market value or wholesale price, of every of them, as the case may require.

No refund of duty for alleged inferiority of value, &c., except in certain cases.

11. No refund of duty paid shall be allowed because of any alleged inferiority or deficiency in quantity of goods imported and entered, and which have passed into the custody of the importer under permit of the Collector of Customs, nor because of the omission in the invoice of any trade discount, or other matter or thing which might have the effect of reducing the value of such goods for duty, unless the same has been reported to the Collector of Customs within 10 days of the date of entry, and the said goods have been examined by the said Collector or by an appraiser, or other proper officer of Customs, and the proper rate or amount of reduction certified by him after such examination; and if such Collector or proper officer reports that the goods in question cannot be identified as those named in the invoice and entry in question, then and in such case no refund of the duty or any part thereof shall in any case be allowed; and all applications for refund of duty in such cases shall be submitted, with the evidence and all particulars, for decision of the Minister of Customs, who may then order payment on finding the evidence to be sufficient and satisfactory.

Not if goods cannot be identified.

Minister of Customs to decide.

Remission of or on duties on wines in certain cases.

12. The whole or part of the duty of thirty per centum ad valorem imposed by this Act upon wines imported into Canada may be remitted upon proclamation of the Governor in Council, which may be issued whenever it appears to his satisfaction that the Governments of France and Spain, or either of them, have made changes in their tariffs of duties imposed upon articles imported from Canada in reduction or repeal of the duties now in force in the said countries.

Excise duties on spirits altered.

13. In lieu of all Excise duties—except license fees—now or heretofore imposed on spirits, there shall be imposed, levied, and collected upon every gallon of the strength of proof by Sykes' Hydrometer, and so in proportion for any greater or less strength of spirits, the manufacture of which had not been wholly completed, or upon which the duty had not been paid before the coming into force of this section, an Excise duty of one dollar.

And on malt.

14. In lieu of all Excise duties—except license fees—now or heretofore imposed on malt, there shall be imposed, levied, and collected on every pound of malt made and weighed as removed from the kiln, and upon which the duty had not been paid before the coming into force of this section, an Excise duty of one cent.

Drawback on present stocks of malt liquors.

15. Upon all stocks of malt liquor held by licensed brewers at the time of the coming into force of this section, a drawback may be paid on the malt contained in such stocks, equal to the duty paid thereon in excess of one cent. per pound, and the quantity of malt contained in such stocks of malt liquor, shall be determined under the existing departmental regulations for determining the quantity of malt contained in malt liquor.

Excise duty on certain kinds of tobacco altered.

16. In lieu of all Excise duties—except license fees—now imposed on tobacco known as "common Canadian twist," otherwise called "tabac blanc en torquette," being the unpressed leaf rolled and twisted, and made wholly from raw tobacco, the growth of Canada, and upon raw leaf the growth of Canada, there shall be imposed, levied, and collected on every pound, or less quantity than a pound, an Excise duty of four cents.

From what time the foregoing provisions shall have effect.

17. The foregoing sections to this Act shall be held to have come into force, and the duties mentioned therein and in the schedules to this Act shall be held to have been imposed and to have been substituted for those imposed by any Acts or parts of Acts theretofore in force, on and after the fifteenth day of March in the present year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-nine, and to have been payable on all goods imported or taken out of warehouse for consumption upon or after the said day, or becoming subject to the duties of Excise on and after the same under the next preceding four sections.

General Acts respecting Customs and Inland Revenue, to apply to duties under this Act.

Saving obligations incurred as to former duties.

18. The Acts now in force respecting the Customs and respecting Inland Revenue and Excise, and all regulations lawfully made or to be made under them respectively, shall apply to the duties imposed by this Act, except in so far only as they may be inconsistent with this Act; and all words and expressions used in this Act shall have the meaning assigned to them in the said Acts respectively; and the said Acts respecting the Customs and Inland Revenue and Excise shall continue to apply to any duties accrued under enactments hereby repealed which may not have been paid before the day last mentioned, and to all bonds, penalties, or forfeitures or proceedings relating to, or resulting from such non-payment, or the nonobservance of any enactment or provision of law respecting any such duties.

The MARQUIS OF LORNE, K.T., to the Right Hon. Sir MICHAEL HICKS BEACH, Bart. (Received March 20, 1879.)

Sir, Government House, Ottawa, March 5, 1879.

I have the honour of forwarding to you, for your information, copies of a Return to an Address of the Dominion House of Commons for papers relating to his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec.

I have, &c.
(Signed) LORNE.

Enclosure in No. 1.

Return to Address.—Copies of the Petition addressed to the Governor in Council by the Hon. Messrs. Chapleau, Church, and Angers, praying for the dismissal of his Honour Luc Letellier, Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec; and of the Answer made to the said Petition by the said Lieutenant-Governor; and of the Reply made by the said Hon. Messrs. Chapleau, Church, and Angers to the said Answer; and all Correspondence and Papers relating to the said subject.

Return (19) to an Address of the House of Commons, dated 20th February 1879, for copies of the Petition addressed to the Governor in Council by the Hon. Messrs. Chapleau, Church, and Angers, praying for the dismissal of his Honour Luc Letellier, Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec; of the Answer made to the said Petition by the said Lieutenant-Governor; and of the Reply made by the said Hon. Messrs. Chapleau, Church, and Angers to the said Answer, and all Correspondence and Papers relating to the subject.

By command.

Department of the Secretary of State, 27th February 1879.

J. C. Aikins, Secretary of State.

PETITION.

Canada, Province of Quebec.

To His Excellency General Sir Patrick Leonard McDougall, Knight Commander of the most distinguished Order of Saint Michael and Saint George, Administrator of the Government of Canada, &c. &c. &c., in Council.

Joseph Adolphe Chapleau, of the city of Montreal, member of the Legislative Assembly of the Province of Quebec, for the county of Terrebonne; Levi Ruggles Church, of the said city of Montreal, member of the Legislative Assembly of the Province of Quebec, for the county of Pontiac; and Auguste Real Angers, of the city of Quebec, Queen's Counsel, by this their petition respectfully represent—

That on the 8th March 1878 the Legislative Assembly of the Province of Quebec adopted the following Address to be presented to his Excellency the Governor-General of Canada, to the Senate, to the House of Commons, and to his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec, to wit:—

Exhibit No. 1.—"The humble address of the Legislative Assembly of the Province of Quebec respectfully showeth:—

"That it appears from the explanations given by the Honourable Mr. Angers, and from the official correspondence communicated to this House, that his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor acknowledges that the members of the De Boucherville Cabinet have acted in good faith in the discharge of their duties.

"That his Excellency has allowed the measures submitted by his Government to this House and to the Legislative Council to be discussed and voted upon without order on his part to suspend them.

"That, whilst asserting their devotion to our gracious Sovereign and their respect towards his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor of this Province, this House is of opinion: That the dismissal from office of the De Boucherville Cabinet having taken place without reason constitutes an imminent danger to the existence of responsible government in this Province, is an abuse of power in contempt of the majority of this House, whose confidence they possessed and still possess, and is a violation of the liberties and will of the people.

"And your petitioners will ever humbly pray."

That on the same day the Honourable Legislative Council of the Province of Quebec adopted the following address to be presented to his Excellency the Governor-General, to the House of Commons, to the Senate, and to his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor, to wit:—

Exhibit No. 2.—"The humble address of the Honourable the Legislative Council of the Province of Quebec respectfully showeth:—

"That it appears from the explanations given by Hon. M. de Boucherville, and from official correspondence communicated to this House, that his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor acknowledges that the members of the De Boucherville Cabinet acted in good faith in the discharge of their duties.

"That his Excellency permitted the Bills submitted to this House and to the Legislative Assembly to be discussed and voted upon without any order on his part to suspend them.

"That whilst expressing its loyalty and devotion to our gracious Sovereign, and its respect for the Lieutenant-Governor of this Province, this House is of opinion that the dismissal from office of the De Boucherville Cabinet having taken place without sufficient cause constitutes an imminent danger to the maintenance of responsible government in this Province, is an abuse of power exercised in contempt of the majority of both Houses, (whose confidence they possessed and still possess), and a violation of the rights and will of the people."

That the circumstances under which the Legislative Assembly and the Legislative Council of the Province of Quebec adopted the above resolutions are contained in the ministerial explanations given to the Legislature on the 8th March 1878, of which the following is a copy extracted from the Votes and Proceedings of the 9th of the same month:—

Exhibit No. 3.—"M. De Boucherville had received permission from the Lieutenant-Governor to give explanations respecting his dismissal from office at the sitting on Monday, the 4th March instant. Between half-past 1 and 2 o'clock of the same day he received from his Excellency a notice not to give any explanations until the new Cabinet had been formed.

"This event having been announced, the late De Boucherville Government has the right, in virtue of the permission so obtained, to give its explanations to the House and to the country.

"It is my duty to announce to the House that the De Boucherville Government did not resign. A Government possessing the confidence of the great majority of the representative Assembly, and of almost the whole of the Legislative Council, has no right to resign if it has really at heart the interests of the country and a respect for its duty. This Government was dismissed from office by the Lieutenant-Governor. The facts which preceded and followed this event are entered in a journal kept from day to day and from hour to hour, under the dictation of the ex-Premier, and the following is an exact and faithful recital thereof:

"On the 26th February 1878, at about half-past 4 o'clock p.m., the Premier received from the Lieutenant-Governor, through his aide-de-camp, the following letter:—

"To the Hon. C. B. De Boucherville, Premier of the Province of Quebec.

February 25, 1878.

"The Lieutenant-Governor desires the Executive Council to prepare for his consideration a factum, including a copy of the following documents:—

"1. A copy of the Acts of the Dominion Parliament authorising the construction of the railway now known under the name of the 'Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa, and Occi-'dental Railway,' as well as a copy of the Acts of the Legislature of Quebec respecting the same railway.

"2. A copy of the Acts of the Legislature of the Province of Quebec respecting the construction of the railway between Quebec and Montreal, commonly known as the North Shore Railway.

"3. A copy of the byelaws of each of the municipal corporations by which they agreed to assist in the construction of the said road.

"4. A statement of the amount of the grant paid by each of those corporations, and a copy of the correspondence exchanged between the Government, the Railway Commissioners, or the contractors of the said road, and the said municipal corporations with respect to their said grant or subsidy.

"5. A copy of the several contracts entered into for the construction of the said roads.

"6. A copy of the official or confidential reports of the engineers to whom was entrusted the location of these lines of railway, in whole or in part.

"7. A copy of the report of the Railway Commissioners laid before both Houses during the present session respecting the said roads.

"8. Copy of the representations made to the Government by the municipal corporations interested, or by the ratepayers of these municipalities, respecting the condition of their grant or subsidy.

"9. Copy of the resolutions proposed to the Provincial Legislature during the present session respecting the said subsidies, and to facilitate the payment and survey of the same.

"10. Copy of the Bill, based upon the said resolutions, which was introduced into the House during the present session.

"11. A plan showing the locations of each of the said railways, or of any portion thereof.

"12. A detailed statement of the reasons which induced the Provincial Government not to content themselves with the provisions of the statute and common law, and with those of the civil code of this Province, for the recovery of the sums of money which might become due by the said corporations, but without having in any manner previously consulted with the Lieutenant-Governor, to propose an ex post facto legislation to compel them thereto.

"Another very important measure to provide for the imposition of new taxes was also similarly proposed to the Legislature without having been previously submitted to the Lieutenant-Governor.

"The Lieutenant-Governor is perfectly aware that measures of secondary importance which have previously been sufficiently explained to him may be, as a matter of routine, proposed to both Houses without an express order from himself, but he cannot allow the Executive to communicate to the Legislature on his behalf any important or new measures without his special order, and without his having been previously fully informed and advised thereof.

(Signed) Luc Letellier,
Lieutenant-Governor.

"The Premier prepared his answer during the nights of the 26th and 27th February. This answer was delivered by him in person to the Lieutenant-Governor at Spencer Wood about 10 o'clock a.m. on the 27th. It reads as follows:—

"To His Excellency the Hon. L. Letellier de St. Just, Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec.

"May it please Your Excellency, Quebec, February 27, 1878.

"I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of the memorandum sent me yesterday afternoon by your Excellency, through your aide-de-camp, who at the same time informed me that you were ill in bed. I submitted this memorandum to the Executive Council, and I shall see, as your Excellency desires, that all due diligence be used in order that all the documents required may be transmitted to you as soon as possible.

"In anticipation of the factum desired by your Excellency, which will contain a more detailed statement of the motives which induced the Provincial Government to bring in the measures to which you draw my attention, I consider it my duty to represent that the reasons which, amongst others, caused the Government to submit to the Legislature a law obliging the municipalities to pay their subscriptions for the construction of the Provincial Railway, on the decision of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, after a sworn report made by a competent engineer, and after a notice of 15 days, to give such municipalities an opportunity of being heard, are the ill-will of certain municipalities, shown by some in their neglect to comply with the requests of the treasurer, by others in their formal refusal to pay, and in certain cases by resolutions adopted asking new conditions respecting the agreements which they had made with the Government.

"The Government was of opinion that, without such legislation, the object of which is to avoid the delays of ordinary legal proceedings, the result of the ill-will of these municipalities would have been either to necessitate a new loan by the Province, and, consequently, to cause a burden to be unjustly imposed upon municipalities which had entered into no engagements, and which would derive no immediate benefit from the construction of the road, or the complete stoppage of the works already begun, together with the inevitable loss of interest on the enormous capital already laid out upon this enterprise, and the other damages resulting therefrom.

"The Government, while undertaking, in the first place, by the said law, to fulfil the conditions which it had agreed upon with the said municipalities, considered that, in substituting for the ordinary courts the Lieutenant-Governor, with an Executive Council responsible to the Legislature and to the people, it offered to the parties interested a tribunal which afforded as many guarantees as the ordinary courts.

"I would also take the liberty of calling your Excellency's attention to the fact that similar provisions are already in our statutes.

"I would cite to your Excellency chapter 83 of the Consolidated Statutes of Canada, and also chapter 47 of 36 Victoria of the statutes of Ontario.

"I humbly submit to your Excellency that a law devised for the better securing of the execution of a contract cannot have a retro-active effect. It enacts for the future and its objects are the respective interests of the parties.

"Now, I beg your Excellency to note, that while you were at Rivière Ouelle, I had the honour of requesting your authorisation to lay the question of finances before the House, and that you were kind enough to reply that you sent me a blank form by mail, and I considered this, at the time, as a great mark of confidence on your part. I did, in effect, receive a blank form with your signature, which I handed to the treasurer, who had it filled up by your aide-de-camp.

"Later on I had the honour of requesting your Excellency's authorisation generally to lay money questions before the House, and this your Excellency granted with your usual condescension. This permission, moreover, had invariably been accorded me by your predecessor, the late lamented Mr. Caron.

"I must admit that with this authorisation and the conviction in my mind that your Excellency had read the Treasurer's Budget speech, in which he announced the taxes which were afterwards proposed, I considered I had a right to inform my colleagues that I had your permission for all questions respecting money.

"I beg your Excellency to believe that I never had any intention of arrogating to myself the right of having measures passed without your approval, and that under existing circumstances, having had occasion to speak to your Excellency in reference to the law respecting the Provincial railway, and not having received any order to suspend it, I did not think your Excellency would discover in this measure any intention on my part to slight your prerogatives, which no one is more disposed than I am to respect and uphold.

"Your, &c. &c.

(Signed) "C. B. De Boucherville."

"After some conversation, the Lieutenant Governor having heard M. De Boucherville's explanations, admitted that, if there had been any misunderstanding, it was in good faith on the part of the latter in authorising his colleagues to say that they were authorised to submit the legislation in reference to money matters.

"He afterwards told him, in reply to his question on the subject, that the only difficulty remaining was the question of the Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa and Occidental Railway, and that he would give an answer on the following day, the 28th February.

"On the 28th February, at about half-past 7 in the evening, Mr. De Boucherville went to Spencerwood to convey to the Lieutenant-Governor the documents asked for in the letter of the 25th (which documents were prepared by the Honourable the Secretary and were accompanied by a synopsis). He asked him if he would soon give his answer, The Lieutenant-Governor told him he would examine the documents and probably give it to him on the following day, the 1st March.

"On leaving, Mr. De Boucherville said: 'If I understand you rightly, you are hesitating between giving your sanction to the Railway Bill and reserving it.' He replied: 'That is it.'

"On the 2nd of March, at 5 minutes to 1 in the afternoon, the aide-de-camp of the Lieutenant-Governor handed to Mr. De Boucherville the letter given hereafter.

"Before the aide-de-camp left he was asked how his Excellency was. The aide-de-camp replied that he was not so well, and then asked when we intended closing the Session. Mr. De Boucherville replied that he could not say, as many matters were in arrear.

"The following is the letter in question:—

"Government House, Quebec, March 1, 1878.

"The Lieutenant-Governor, taking into consideration the communication made to him verbally (on the 27th February) by the Premier, and also taking into consideration the letter which the Premier then gave to him, is prepared to admit that there had been no intention on the part of the Premier to slight the prerogatives of the Crown, and that there was only on his part an error committed in good faith in the interpretation that he gave to words used by the Lieutenant-Governor in the interview which they had on the 19th February instant; words which did not imply the authorisation attributed to them by the Premier.

"With this interpretation and the instructions given in consequence by the Premier to the Honourable Messrs. Angers and Church, these gentlemen did not willingly do anything against the duties of their office.

"As to the blank which the Lieutenant-Governor addressed to him from Rivière Ouelle the Lieutenant-Governor knew that such blank was to be used for the purpose of submitting the estimates to the House.

"This act was a token of confidence on his part, as stated by the Premier in his letter of the 27th, but it was confidential.

"The Lieutenant-Governor deems it his duty to observe that in his memorandum of the 25th February last he in no way expressed the opinion that he thought that the Premier ever had the intention of arrogating to himself the right of having measures passed without his approval, or of slighting the prerogatives of the representative of the Crown.

"But the Premier must not lose sight of the fact that although he had not so intended, the fact remains as he was told by the Lieutenant-Governor.

"The fact of having submitted several new and important measures to the Legislature without having previously, in any manner, consulted the Lieutenant-Governor, although without any intention of slighting his prerogatives, gives rise to one of those false positions which places the representative of the Crown in a difficult and critical situation with references to both Houses of the Legislature.

"The Lieutenant-Governor cannot admit that the responsibility of this state of things rests upon him.

"So far as concerns a bill entitled 'An Act respecting the Quebec, Montreal, 'Ottawa, and Occidental Railway,' the Premier cannot apply to the measure the pretended general authorisation mentioned by him in his letter, for their interview took place on the 19th February, and the bill had then been before the House for several days, without the Lieutenant-Governor having been in any manner informed of it by his advisers.

"The Lieutenant-Governor then told the Premier how much he regretted such legislation; he represented to him that he considered it to be contrary to the principles of law and justice. Notwithstanding this, the measure was pushed on until it was adopted by both Houses.

"It is true that the Premier gives in his letter as one of his reasons for so acting 'that 'this permission of making use of the name of the representative of the Crown had been, 'moreover, always allowed him by the predecessor of the present Lieutenant-Governor, 'the late lamented Mr. Caron.'

"This reason cannot avail with the Lieutenant-Governor, for by so doing he would abdicate his position as representative of the Crown, a proceeding which neither the Lieutenant-Governor nor the Premier could reconcile with the duties of the Lieutenant-Governor towards the Crown.

"The Lieutenant-Governor regrets being compelled to state, as he told the Premier, that he has generally not been explicitly informed of the measures adopted by the Cabinet, although the Lieutenant-Governor often gave occasion therefore to the Premier, especially during the course of last year.

"The Lieutenant-Governor, from time to time, since the last meeting of the Legislature, drew the attention of the premier to several matters respecting the interests of the province of Quebec, amongst others :—

"1. To the enormous expenditure occasioned by very large subsidies to several railways when the province was burdened with the construction of the branch line of railway from Quebec to Ottawa, which should prevail over all others; and that at a time when our finances compelled us to raise loans disproportionate to our revenues.

"2. On the necessity of reducing the expenses of the Civil Government and those of Legislation, in place of having recourse to new taxes, with a view of avoiding financial embarassment.

"The Lieutenant-Governor, although with regret, expressed to the Premier the opinion that the Orders in Council, for the increase of the salaries of civil service employées, seemed to him inopportune at a time when the Government had effected with the Bank of Montreal a loan at the rate of seven per cent. for half a million, on condition of increasing this loan to one million, and, in fact, to-day even (1st March) the Lieutenant-Governor was obliged to allow an Order in Council to be passed to secure the last half million for the Government, without which the Government would be unable to meet its obligations, as stated to him by the Honourable the Treasurer, by order of the Premier.

"The Premier did not either then or since inform the Lieutenant-Governor that the Government were in so impecunious a condition as to require special legislation to increase the public burdens.

"The Lieutenant-Governor therefore stated and repeated these facts to the Premier, and now deems it his duty to record them here, in order that they may serve as a memorandum for himself and the Premier. It results therefore :—

"1. That although the Lieutenant-Governor had made several representations, in his quality of representative of the Crown, to the Premier on those various subjects of public interest, his advisers have taken administrative and legislative steps contrary to such representations, and without having previously advised him.

"2. That the Lieutenant-Governor has, without evil motives, but in fact, been placed in a false position, by being exposed to a conflict with the desires of the Legislature, desires which he acknowledges to be paramount, when expressed in a constitutional manner.

"The Lieutenant-Governor has attentively read and examined the memorandum and documents which the Premier was kind enough to bring him yesterday.

"In the record are petitions from several municipal corporations, and from citizens of different localities, addressed to the Lieutenant-Governor, against the resolutions and the Government Bill respecting the Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa and Occidental Railway.

"The Lieutenant-Governor was only yesterday in a position to take communication of some of those petitions, inasmuch as they had not been transmitted to him before the record.

"The Lieutenant-Governor, after mature deliberation, cannot accept the advice of the Premier in reference to the sanction to be given to the Railway Bill entitled 'An Act 'relating to the Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa and Occidental Railway.'

"For all these reasons, therefore, the Lieutenant-Governor cannot consider this memorandum without expressing to the Premier the regret which he feels in being no longer able to retain him in his position, contrary to the rights and prerogatives of the Crown.

(Signed) L. Letellier,
Lieut.-Governor.

"On the 2nd March, about 2 o'clock, p.m., Mr. De Boucherville went to Spencer Wood; when he arrived he was admitted to the presence of the Lieutenant-Governor and told him that according to the memorandum received from him that day, he understood that he was dismissed from the office of Premier.

"The Lieutenant-Governor told him he was to take his own interpretation from the letter. Upon this Mr. De Boucherville handed him the letter, which will be found further on, as being his answer.

"The Lieutenant-Governor, without opening it before him, made some remarks on the difficulty in which the legislation had placed him.

"Mr. De Boucherville replied that in 'his present position, he thought he had no opinion to express on the subject.' He then bowed himself out. When he had proceeded a short distance from the house, he caused the vehicle to return, having forgotten to ask permission from the Lieutenant-Governor to give explanations to the House. After having been a second time admitted to the presence of the Lieutenant-Governor, he asked permission to give explanations and to make known the memorandum of the Lieutentant-Governor and his replies thereto.

"The Lieutenant-Governor told him he had no objection, and asked him as to the person he should send for. Mr. De Boucherville replied that he looked upon himself, having been dismissed, as being in a different position from a minister who, although defeated in the House, still retained the confidence of the Sovereign; that he had had a majority of 25 in one of the late votes, that under these circumtstances he did not think he could advise him in the matter. He then left him, and while in the ante-room, the Lieutenant-Governor recalled him, and said: 'Please delay the explanations until Monday.'

"The following is a copy of a letter which Mr. De Boucherville handed to the Lieutenant-Governor, when the latter told him that he was to take his own interpretation of his memorandum:

"To His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec.

"May it Please Your Excellency, Quebec, March 2, 1878.

"I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your memorandum in which you come to the conclusion that you cannot retain me in my position as Premier.

"I have therefore no other duty to perform beyond submitting to my dismissal from office communicated by your Excellency, reiterating at the same time my profound respect for the rights and prerogatives of the Crown, and my devotion to the interests of our Province.

"I have, &c.
"(Signed) C. B. De Boucherville."

"On the 28th January 1878, Mr. De Boucherville had sent to his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor, who was then at Rivière Ouelle, the following telegraphic despatch:—

"'Can you send me authorisation resolution respecting finances?'

The Lieutenant-Governor, on the following day, the 29th, telegraphed to Mr. De Boucherville: 'Blank mailed to-day. If presence necessary, telegraph. Return Friday.'

"The resolutions respecting the North Shore Railway were submitted to the House only on the 29th January, after the telegram had been received from the Lieutenant-Governor that a form signed in blank had been mailed to Mr. De Boucherville in reply to his despatch of the previous day, saying: "Can you send me authorisation resolutions respecting finances?" On the 30th January, the first resolution was reported from Committee of the whole. On the 31st it was adopted by the House.

"On the 1st February the House again went into committee of the whole, and reported the other resolutions on the same subject. But it was only on the 5th that the adoption of the report of the committee was carried, the House throwing out the motion of non-confidence on this point by 38 to 21.

"On the 5th February a Bill based on these resolutions was introduced; the second reading was delayed until the 18th of February; the third reading took place on the 19th during all this time the Lieutenant-Governor, to whom the votes and proceedings were sent daily, remained silent.

"On the 19th February Mr. De Boucherville met the Lieutenant-Governor, and in the converation which took place on the subject of the measure, thought he had satisfied him as to its legality and the urgency of its being passed. The Lieutenant-Governor was so far from being explicit as to his intention that Mr. De Boucherville left him with the impression that he was authorised.

"The Lieutenant-Governor does not contend in his memorandum of the 1st March 1878 that he had given orders to suspend the legislation.

"Sent up to the Legislative Council, this Bill had gone through its third reading before the first letter was received from the Lieutenant-Governor, date the 25th February last, but only delivered at 4.30 p.m., on the 26th. In fact, the Lieutenant-Governor, in his letter of the 1st March, admits that he did not in any way in his memorandum of the 25th February, express the opinion that he considered the Premier had intended to arrogate to himself the right of getting measures passed without his approval, or of slighting the prerogatives of the representative of the Crown.

"Having ascertained that a misunderstanding existed as to the interpretation of the authorisation asked by telegraphic despatch on the 23rd January, and answered on the 29th, by a message stating that a form signed in blank was sent, and in view of the impressions left by the conversation of the 19th February in Mr. De Boucherville's mind, should the Lieutenant-Governor have waited to make known for the first time the existence of this misunderstanding until the 26th February, at which date the whole of the legislation of which he complains had been discussed and voted in the affirmative by both Houses.

"The confidence shown by the Lieutenant-Governor on the 29th January in Mr. De Boucherville by forwarding the form signed in blank, was calculated to justify him in interpreting the silence of the Lieutenant-Governor at least as not meaning dissent.

"After these interviews of the 19th February the silence observed until the 26th February was also of a nature to lead him to believe that he had a general authorisation to submit to the House all measures which the public service required.

"On the 31st of January, 26 days previous to the first memorandum of the Lieutenant-Governor, the Honourable Treasurer made his budget speech, in which he announced the new taxes which it would be necessary to levy to meet the obligations of the province, obligations contracted during several previous years, and resulting from the policy then inaugurated on railways, and which had received the concurrence of several members belonging to the party opposing the Government.

"Can this speech, published in extenso by the press of the whole country, have escaped the notice of the Lieutenant-Governor?

"On the 19th February the resolutions demanding those taxes, but at a lower rate than the one mentioned by the Treasurer in his speech were presented, and on the 20th were adopted by a vote of 39 against 22.

"The Lieutenant-Governor in his memorandum of the 1st March complains that Mr. De Boucherville did not let him know that the Government was in an impecunious condition requiring special legislation to increase the public taxes.

"The Premier would have formed an erroneous idea of the situation if he had so qualified the temporary embarrassment, caused by the ill-will of the municipalities which had subscribed for the construction of the provincial railway in neglecting to faithfully fulfil their obligations. He would have formed an erroneous idea of the situation in presence of the results obtained so far without any burden having been imposed in order to obtain them.

"On the 22nd February notice was given of resolutions respecting railways in the eastern townships and on the south shore of the St. Lawrence.

"On the 23rd of the same month the resolutions were introduced and subsequently adopted by a vote of 41 to 16. These resolutions do not in any way increase the actual debt of the Province. The Lieutenant-Governor said in the same memorandum: 'That 'the construction of the railway from Quebec to Ottawa should prevail over that of other 'railways.' The legislation of many years past on this subject establishes no priority in favour of the provincial railway to the detriment of railways in the eastern townships and on the south shore. The De Boucherville government would have contravened the law if they had adopted any other view of the matter.

"In the same memorandum the Lieutenant-Governor declares, 'That he cannot accept 'the advice of the Premier in reference to the sanction to be given to the Railway Bill, 'intituled, 'An Act respecting the Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa, and Occidental Railway.' This declaration is premature, the Premier never having been called upon to give his opinion as to the sanction to be given; and if, had he been called upon to do so, he would, under the circumstances, have recommended that it be reserved for the decision of the Governor-General, being in doubt as to the Lieutenant-Governor having the right, of his own accord, ex proprio motu, to exercise the prerogative of veto, and thus to decide finally on the fate of a measure passed by both Houses, when the British North America Act of 1867 seems to leave such power to the Governor General.

"The memorandum of his Excellency refers to petitions of several corporations and citizens of different places, addressed to the Lieutenant-Governor, against the resolutions and the measures of the Government concerning the Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa, and Occidental Railway.

"It is sufficient to consider that these petitions came from debtors from whom the law intends to force payment, to arrive at the correct conclusion that the opinion of both Houses should prevail over that expressed in such petitions.

"The Lieutenant-Governor in the same memorandum refers to Acts of administration which date from before the session, and to which he has given his assent. As he alludes to matters for which the Government is responsible to both Houses, as advisers of the Crown, and as they are foreign to the question of prerogative raised by the Lieutenant-Governor, they cannot be adduced in this memorandum as reasons for the conclusion arrived at by his Excellency that he cannot continue to retain Mr. De Boucherville in his position against the rights and prerogatives of the Crown ; therefore, to avoid being carried away by this side issue or hors d'œuvre, there is no reason to question them now.

" The Lieutenant-Governor further expresses the opinion that the state of our finances forced us to make loans disproportionate to our resources.

" The necessity of here repeating this phrase is to be regretted, but the credit of the Province requires that it should be contradicted. The mere reading of the budget speech will suffice to reassure alarmists.

" From all the above facts from admissions contained in the last memorandum of the Lieutenant-Governor, from the transmission of the form signed in blank and sent by him in reply to a request by Mr. De Boucherville, asking his authorisation to introduce resolutions respecting finances, and from the silence of the Lieutenant-Governor, up to the 26th February last, it results that no measures have been introduced into the House in opposition to the prerogatives of the representative of the Sovereign.

" Nothing more remains now for me to do but to reiterate the declaration I made in commencing these explanations. The De Boucherville Cabinet has not resigned. It has been dismissed from office by the Lieutenant-Governor.

" The Conservative party is no longer in power. But it is in this House a power, a qualified power, a majority in the Opposition. The majority here, the majority in the Council, the majority in the country. The Conservative party has been dismissed from office ; but it stands uncompromised, without compromise, without division, devoted to the constitution and to the welfare of the country.

" (Signed) A. R. Angers,
" Ex-Attorney General,
" Member for the Electoral District of Montmorency."

That on the 7th March, the Legislative Assembly, having heard of the dismissal from office of the De Boucherville Government, adopted before the formation of his honour the Lieutenant-Governor Luc Letellier's new Cabinet, the following address :—

Exhibit No. 4.—" We, Her Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects, the legislative expres" sion of Quebec, in Provincial Legislature assembled, desire to reiterate the assembly
" of our loyalty and attachment to Her Majesty Queen Victoria, and our perfect sub" mission to the Constitution.

" We renew the declaration of our confidence in the De Boucherville Administration,
" so often and decidedly expressed during the present session.

" We desire firmly and emphatically to declare that we have not, and cannot have,
" confidence in any administration which may be substituted for the one dismissed, inas" much as such dismissal occurred whilst the De Boucherville administration enjoyed the " entire confidence of the large majority of the representatives of the people in Provincial " Legislature assembled, unless such administration to be appointed be a strong and
" efficient one, chosen from the party represented by the majority in this House."

That on the 9th March Mr. Loranger, member for Laval, seconded by Mr. Lynch, member for Brome, moved that the following address be by the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly presented at the Bar of the Honourable Legislative Council to his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor at the prorogation of the Legislature :—

Exhibit No. 3, p. 226.—" The Legislative Assembly of the Province of Quebec deem it their duty to humbly represent that the Cabinet of which the Honourable Henri Gustave Joly is the chief, was defeated three different times, at the sitting of the 8th 8th instant, by majorities varying from 20 to 22 votes.

" And they regret to state that the Constitution has been disregarded by the advisers of his Excellency to the extent that they persist in retaining power against the will of the majority of this House, and of the country.

" The Legislative Assembly believes it, moreover, their duty to express their regret that they have been put to the necessity of suspending the passage of the Supply Bill until justice has been extended to the majority of this House.

" The Legislative Assembly desires respectfully to represent to your Excellency that there exists in the House a political party possessing the confidence of the country, and country, and having a large majority in the House, that this party is competent to administer the public business, and that the prorogation of the Legislature presently, would be prejudicial to the legislation and to the interests of the country.

"The Legislative Assembly desires to represent to your Excellency that the fact of the minority having a control over public affairs in the cause of the embarrassment under which the Province labours through the suspension of the Supply Bill; and that a prompt solution of the difficulty may be arrived at by acting in conformity with the Constitution.

"The Legislative Assembly desires also to represent to your Excellency that inasmuch as there exists in the House a political party strong enough to command a large majority, there is no necessity for a dissolution of the Legislature, a step which will cause considerable and useless expense to the province, and seriously threaten the peace and tranquility of the people of this province."

The House, after voting by 33 against 12 that the resolutions above mentioned were in order, was unexpectedly interrupted before their adoption by a message of his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor, requesting the attendance of the House in the Legislative Council, and then and there was by him prorogued.

That the Lieutenant-Governor addressed to his Excellency the Governor-General an "explanatory case," bearing date the 19th March 1878. This document, most materially different from the one sent to Mr. de Boucherville informing him of the reasons for which the Lieutenant-Governor was no longer able to retain him in his position, is as follows:—

"Exhibit No. 5. (Translation.)

"To the Right Honourable the Earl of Dufferin, K.P., K.C.B., G.C.M.G., Governor-General of Canada, Ottawa.

"My Lord, Government House, Quebec, March 18th, 1878.

"I have the honour now to submit for your Lordship's consideration documents and details which I could not lay before the public, but from which it would have been more clearly understood that the dismissal of M. de Boucherville's Cabinet, was forced upon me by circumstances.

"These details are not contained in the correspondence which I authorised M. de Boucherville to place before the House, and which are hereunto annexed.

"From the day that I was by your Excellency raised to the position I occupy at present, all my private relations with the members of my Cabinet, up to the time of their dismissal from office, were, I must admit, generally of an agreeable nature; but in those of an official character with the premier, I almost invariably felt that I did not enjoy that entire confidence on his part, which is the chief element of a cordial understanding between the representative of the Crown and his advisers.

"After having studied the general state of the affairs of our Province, after having become convinced that legislative and administrative changes were becoming more and more necessary, I decided upon using with moderation, and with the greatest possible discretion, the influence attached to my position in order to obtain the realization of that which I deemed to be of the greatest advantage to the Province.

"I regret to state to your Excellency that, although M. de Boucherville did, on most occasions, take my advice in good part, and generally approved of it, he nevertheless, almost always acted as though he had never received it. Nevertheless, far from using my authority to obstruct his action in any way, I invariably treated him with great indulgence, as will appear to your Excellency by the following facts:

"1st. During the session of 1876, a bill had been read three times in one of the two branches of the Legislature, and only twice in the other.

"This bill, bearing all the certificates which were necessary to induce me to believe that it had been regularly passed and adopted, was submitted to me by the Premier for my sanction.

In consequence of being left in ignorance of these facts by my advisers, I sanctioned the bill.

"Not long afterwards I was informed of the irregularity, and I immediately spoke of it to the Premier; I made the observation that such an act would entail too serious consequences to allow of its being passed over.

"As a favour to him, however, I passed over this instance of irregular legislation, which was then irreparable.

"2nd. During the same session another bill was submitted to me for my sanction.

On examining it, I perceived a blank which had not been filled up, which I pointed out to the Premier, in the following letter:—

"'Private.

"'My Dear Premier, Quebec, December 27th, 1878.

"'A Bill (E.) which originated in the Council was passed by the Legislative Assembly, without amendment; upon reading it before adding my certificate of sanction, I noticed that a blank had not been filled up in the seventh line of the sixth section.

"'You followed the usual practice in not fixing the amount of the penalty in the Legislative Council; but the matter passed unperceived, or the officers, through some mistake, omitted to insert the amount fixed by the House, or it may have been an error in the proof sheets.

"'While on the subject of these mistakes, you will find another in the second section of the same Act, wherein the word amender is in the infinitive mood. I notice this latter inaccuracy, to which I do not attach much importance, only because I discovered another in an Act in which I had to point out to you—an omission which I consider fatal.

"'Yours, &c.

"'(Signed) L. Letellier.'

"The Premier came to me and said that he regretted the omission; he requested me to give my sanction to the Bill in the state in which it was. The conciliatory spirit which I showed in granting my consent seemed to please him.

"3rd.—In March, 1877, (vide Appendix A,) my advisers caused me to make an appointment of a municipal councillor for the south ward of the village of Montmagny, under the pretext that there had been no election, or that if such election had taken place, it was illegal.

"The whole of the circumstances connected with this case, I deem it my duty to explain to your Excellency, on account of the important principle involved therein.

"After due personal examination of the petitions and other accompanying documents relating to that election, I called on the Premier, at his own office, to beg of him not to hurry the appointment, which he was asked to make, of a municipal councillor for that locality, before receiving more ample information.

"I pointed out to him that it appeared that a municipal election had taken place, and that in such case, as a principle, the Executive Council should not interfere.

"I added that from the moment that a legal, or even an illegal election had taken place, the duty of deciding it rested with the courts, in accordance with the ordinary course of law, of which they are the interpreters.

"I then intimated to M. De Boucherville that I maintained on principle, that all matters cognisable by the judiciary should be invariably left to the courts, which from their organisation are better fitted than the executive to inquire into matter of fact and of evidence, and that I would never allow the substitution of the powers of the executive for those of the courts, when the latter had jurisdiction.

"The Premier admitted that that opinion, and the principle on which I based it, were in conformity with his ideas, and necessary for the proper administration of justice. He asked me if I would consent to see Mr. Angers, the Attorney-General, on the subject.

"I at once consented, and the Attorney-General was immediately sent for; the facts connected with that election difficulty and my views regarding them, were then communicated to him. He promised that before any appointment should be made by the Lieutenant-Governor he would make inquiry.

"Shortly afterwards he reported to me that he had made an inquiry into the facts of the case, and, at his suggestion, I appointed Jules Bélanger to be councillor.

"In the beginning of March 1877, difficulties and quarrels arose at Montmagny, in consequence of that election.

"After that appointment those quarrels broke forth afresh in the municipal council itself, from which the Councillor whom I had thus been caused to appoint, was expelled with violence. That appointment I was recommended to make, notwithstanding the fact that an election had taken place; that it had been held and presided over by the Mayor, that Eugène Fournier had been returned by acclamation, that he had been sworn in according to law, and that at the very time when the appointment of Jules Bélanger was recommended to me, the person thus elected had in fact taken his seat, had been sworn, and had sat at the said Council, as appears by the minutes of the Council.

"When I afterwards learned these facts, I communicated them to the Premier, whom I requested to prepare a revocation of the appointment which I had thus been caused to make, contrary to the principles above set forth, and the justice of which he had himself admitted.

"The Premier answered that the matter was of a very delicate nature, and such a proceeding would be contrary to the recommendation of Mr. Angers, his Attorney-General; he concluded by saying that he would get him to prepare a report on the subject.

"I received that report some days later. After having read it I again intimated to Mr. De Boucherville, that in the interests of peace, and in conformity with the principle that executive should not be substituted for judicial power in matters within the province of the latter, I insisted upon the revocation being made.

"After waiting several days for an answer, and not having received any from the Premier, I addressed a letter to him, of which the following is a copy :—

"'Private and confidential.

"'My Dear De Boucherville, Quebec, March 14, 1877.

"'I have not received any answer on the subject of the appointment of a councillor at Montmagny.

"'Those who deceived the Government in order to induce me to perform an executive act in connexion with a question which they then knew to be within the judicial power, do not, in my opinion, deserve consideration, which cannot but be injurious to the Government and myself.

"'The remedy is very simple, rescind the appointment ; allow the parties interested to fight it out before the Courts.

"'Yours, &c.

"'(Signed) L. Letellier.'

"If, my Lord, I insist upon this latter point, it is to show your Excellency that the Prime Minister was then perfectly aware of my views on that point, and should not, in consequence, have introduced during the last Session of our Legislature, any legislative measure, or perform any administrative act tending, to substitute executive for judicial power without notifying me, and especially without advising me on the subject.

"It was easy for the Premier to understand from my remarks and the frequent conversations which I had with him, that I could not consent to see Her Majesty's subjects despoiled of the right guaranteed to them by Magna Charta; that their property should never be interfered with, except in virtue of a judgment rendered by the tribunals of the of the country.

"4th.—On the 19th March 1877, being on the eve of absenting myself for a few days, I wrote to the Hon. Mr. Chapleau; and in a postcript I said : 'Please oblige me by 'telling the Premier that if he needs my concurrence, Mr. Gauthier may bring down to 'me the documents requiring my signature.'

"M. De Boucherville should have understood from that, that if I was ready to give him my concurrence, it was on condition of having all documents submitted to me before signing them.

"I leave you, my Lord, to judge in what manner my views were interpreted.

"5th. Under date of the 6th of November last I addressed to the Honourable M. De Boucherville the letter of which the following is a copy :—

"'(Private.)

"'My dear De Boucherville, Quebec, November 6th, 1877.

"'In the last "Official Gazette" were published, under my signature, two proclamations which I had not signed.

"'One was for the summoning of Parliament, which I had reserved in order to confer with you ; the other, which I did not even see, appoints a day of thanksgiving.

"'These proceedings, the nature of which I shall not characterise, entail, apart from their impropriety, invalidities which you will easily understand.

"'Yours very truly,

"'The Hon. C. B. De Boucherville, (Signed) L. Letellier.

"'Premier.'

"The following are the notes which I took of the conversation which I had with M. De Boucherville on the subject :—

"'M. De Boucherville came on the same day he received the letter to tell me that he regretted that the thing had occurred, and that it was no fault of his. I accepted the excuse, and I then told him that I would not tolerate my name being used when necessary for any duty of my office unless the documents requiring my signature had been previously submitted to me, and unless information was afforded to me, which M. De Boucherville assured me would be the course followed in future.

" 6th. But, my Lord, there is another point still more important, which I cannot any longer refrain from mentioning.

" From the conversations which I have held with M. De Boucherville there results a fact which, if it were known, would of itself have sufficiently justified me in believing that he did not possess the confidence of the people of this province.

" On two different occasions, some time after the session of 1876, I pointed out to him that millions had been voted to aid railways in general at a time when our finances did not appear to me to be in a condition to warrant, all at once, a lavish expenditure in subsidising these numerous undertakings, particularly as, apart from that, our credit was so heavily pledged towards the building of the Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa, and Occidental Railway.

" He very frankly avowed that these grants, though they were for the development of the Province, had been necessitated by political considerations; that without them the support of the members whose counties were traversed by those railways would cease to be secured to Government; that there would be no means of having a majority; that those members formed combinations, 'rings,' to control the House.

" M. De Boucherville is not unaware that I thereupon told him that it was better to save the Province than a Government, and that if his administration was not strong enough to resist those influences it would be better for him to form a combination of honest and well-meaning men from both sides of the House, rather than submit to the dictations of those 'rings,' and to the control of those combinations.

" When he made no attempt to escape from that deleterious influence, after his own avowal that the Legislature was controlled by those 'rings,' when, by his legislation, he sought to favour them anew during the last session without having previously advised with me, had I not the right, as the representative of my Sovereign, to believe and to be convinced that M. de Boucherville did not possess a constitutional majority in the Legislative Assembly?

" 7th.—In communicating to both Houses, my memoranda of the 25th February and 1st March last, the premier and Mr. Attorney-General Angers, in violation of their duty, overstepped the authorisation which I had given by my letter of the 4th of March last, for that purpose. They added to that communication a report of pretended conversations, the correctness of which I contest and the impropriety of which I maintain.

" I shall point out, my Lord, one fact alone to prove that incorrectness and that impropriety; the Hon. Messrs. De Boucherville and Angers, in their explanations of the two Houses, lay great stress on the telegram which Mr. De Boucherville despatched to me at Rivière Ouelle, to ask my permission to introduce resolutions concerning the finances, and on the blank signature that I sent up in answer to it.

" But these gentlemen themselves had that blank signature filled up by my private secretary, so as to give to the telegram the meaning which I attributed to it, namely, a request for permission to introduce the supplies. The following is a copy of the message produced with that blank signature.

" Mr. Treasurer Church presented a message from His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor, as follows:—

" ' L. Letellier,

" ' The Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec transmits to the Legislative Assembly the supplementary estimates for the current year, and for the fiscal year ending 30th June 1879, which, in conformity with the provisions of the 54th section of the British North America Act, 1867, he recommends to the Legislative Assembly.

" ' Quebec, 30th January 1878.'

" My ministers never had, by their own admission, any other authorisation from me for the introduction of their railway and taxation resolutions than the blank signature above mentioned, in which not a word is said of them. Besides which, it will be noticed that the railway resolutions were introduced on the 29th January, whereas the message is dated the 30th.

" It is for this reason, my Lord, that I bring to your knowledge all the facts and details which are connected with the relations which I have had with M. De Bouchrville and his colleagues.

" Were the controversy with me and alone as a private individual, I would abstain from any remonstrance against the injustice of their reflections upon the conduct of the representative of the Crown, which they have made in violation of their duty ; but in this matter the maintenance of the Constitution is at stake.

" If, without any authority from me, proclamations, have been published which I never signed, is it surprising that messages were communicated in my name to the Houses, respecting which I had never been consulted ?

" It is because as the representative of my Sovereign, I have been unjustly and shamefully dragged before the public, that I make known to you, my Lord, that in the performance of my duty as Her representative, my object has not only been to protect the dignity of my office, but to afford to the people of this province an opportunity of knowing that, under existing circumstances, the exercise of Royal Prerogative has not been hostile to their constitutional liberties ; but that, on the contrary, it has afforded them the means of freely exercising their judgment.

" There results, my Lord, from what I have now stated :—

" 1st. That in general, the recommendations which I have made to my Cabinet did not receive the consideration which is due to the representative of the Crown.

" 2nd. That my name has been used by the members of the Government in the signature of the document which I had never seen.

" 3rd. That a proclamation, summoning the Legislature, was published in the ' Official Gazette ' without my being consulted or informed of it, and before my signature had been attached thereto.

" 4th. That a like proclamation, fixing a day of thanksgiving, was also published under similar circumstances.

" 5th. That, although I had intimated to the Premier, by my advice and by my letter of the 14th March 1877, my firm determination to protect the inhabitants of this Province against the arbitrary decisions of the Executive in matters within the jurisdiction of the Courts of Justice, he thought proper, without my participation and without advising me, to propose to both Houses, in legislating for the Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa and Occidental Railway, to substitute the power of the Executive for that of the Judiciary.

" 6th. That, without having advised me, and without having received authorisation of any sort whatever from me, the Government of M. de Boucherville proposed to the Legislature a measure of almost general taxation upon the ordinary contracts and transactions of life, transfers of bank stock, &c., while no message from me had been asked for this object, nor signed by me to authorise its proposition to the Houses.

" 7th. That, after its dismissal, the Government of M. de Boucherville again failed in its duty by assigning reasons for the adjournment of the House from day to day, different from those agreed on between myself and the Premier, at the risk of prejudicing public opinion against the representative of the Crown.

" 8th. That, at the time of the communication of the causes which rendered necessary the dismissal of the Cabinet, in the explanations which were given by the Premier to the Legislative Council, and by the Attorney-General to the Legislative Assembly, both of them referred to pretended conversations which they had no authority whatever to communicate to the Legislature, since the Premier had, by his answer to the letter of the Lieutenant-Governor of the 4th March last, limited his explanations to the communications to both Houses of my memoranda of the 25th February and 1st March, and the answers of the Premier of the 27th February and of the 2nd and 4th March instant.

" 9th. That, therefore, the additions and comments made by the Premier before the Legislative Council, and by the Attorney-General before the Legislative Assembly were contrary to the conditions agreed upon between the Lieutenant-Governor and the Premier.

" 10th. That the Premier and his colleagues, by making use of pretended private conversations to explain the causes of their dismissal, in contravention to their duty to the Crown and to what they had pledged themselves to observe with regard to it, have placed the Lieutenant-Governor under the necessity of bringing under the notice of your Excellency all the reasons for that dismissal.

" I have, &c.

" (Signed) L. Letellier,

" Lieutenant-Governor."

"Summary of official record.—In January 1877, an election had taken place for the south ward of the village of Montmagny; that election having been declared null and void by the Court, it ordered a fresh election and appointed Eugène Hamond to preside thereat.

"On the day fixed, Eugène Hamond, refusing to preside, Naz. Bernatchez, Esq., Mayor of the Municipality, the senior magistrate present presided.

"The meeting elected Eugène Fournier.

"Eugène Hamond wrote to the Lieutenant-Governor that he had not presided at the meeting—without adding, however, that there had been no election. He recommended, at the same time, that Jules Bélanger be appointed.

"Eugène Fournier, elected at the meeting of the 19th February, took the oath of office and took his seat on the 23rd February.

"On the 3rd March the Attorney-General (Mr. Angers) recommended the appointment of Jules Belanger, who was accordingly appointed on the 7th of the same month.

"On the 10th of March Mr. Bernatchez, Mayor of Montmagny, addressed to the Lieut.-Governor a memorial setting forth the facts, and praying that the appointment be cancelled."

"On the 15th March the Attorney-General made a report recommending that the appointment of Jules Belanger be maintained.

"On the 27th March the Lieut.-Governor revoked that appointment on a report of the Government."

"Quebec, March 4th, 1878.

"The Lieut.-Governor desires that his two memoranda of the 25th February, and 1st March, addressed to the Hon. M. De Boucherville, and the answers made to those memoranda by the Hon. M. De Boucherville (of the 27th February and 3rd of March) be not now communicated to both Houses.

"'That communication authorised by the Lieut.-Governor at the request of the Hon. M. DeBoucherville, should be made as soon as the arrangements for the formation of a new Executive Council are completed.

"'The Hon. M. De Boucherville may communicate to the Houses that the adjournment from day to day is rendered necessary by the last-mentioned cause.

"'Your Excellency, "'Quebec, 4th March, 1878.

"'In conformity with your wish, expressed in a letter of to-day's date, I shall withhold until the formation of a new Executive Council, the explanations I was authorised by your Excellency to communicate to the Houses.

"'I have, &c.

"'(Signed) C. B. De Boucherville.'"

"'That on the 3rd April 1878, the Honourable M. De Boucherville addressed to his Excellency the Governor-General the following despatch, with an extract of the votes and proceedings of the Legislative Assembly, No. 42, to wit:—

"'To his Excellency the Right Honorable the Earl of Dufferin, K.P., K.C.B., G.C.M.G., Governor-General of Canada, Ottawa.

"'My Lord, "'Ottawa, April 2nd, 1878.

"'The explanatory case addressed to your Excellency by his Honour M. Letellier and accompanying the documents and details which related to my recent dismissal from office, and by you transmitted to the Senate and House of Commons, containing as it does statements of facts, the accuracy of which I respectfully deny, imposes upon me the duty of submitting for your information and consideration the following:—

"'As your Excellency is doubtless aware, M. Angers laid upon the table of the Legislative Assembly on the 8th March last, copies of the correspondence and explanations by him made at my request relating to the dismissal from office of the De Boucherville Government.

" ' This correspondence and explanations with some comments of his own, are contained in the copy of the votes and proceedings of that House of the 9th March, and I respectfully beg to be permitted to annex them as forming part hereof, I beg, however, to add to these explanations of M. Angers a few words upon two subjects, viz. :—

" ' 1. In the memorandum which I had the honour to address to his Honour M. Letellier, under date 27th February, I said : ' Later I had the honour to ask your Ex- ' cellency for a general permission to submit to the House measures concerning money ' matters which your Excellency gave me with your ordinary courtesy. This per- ' mission, I may say, had always been granted me by your predecessor, the lamented ' M. Caron.' I do not think that the meaning of these phrases is correctly rendered in the paragraph in his Honour's letter to me, under date the 1st of March, wherein he says :—

" ' It is true that the Premier gives in his letter as one of the reasons for acting as he did, that this permission of using the name of the representative of the Crown had always been granted him by the predecessor of the present Lieutenant-Governor the lamented M. Caron.'

" ' This reason cannot be one for the Lieutenant-Governor, for in so acting, he would have abdicated his position as representative of the Crown which act neither the Lieutenant-Governor or the Premier could reconcile with the obligation of the Lieutenant-Governor of the Crown.

" ' It is manifest that I desire to say, and that, in fact, I did say, that the late M. Caron had given me that authority for money matters only.

" ' My Lord, I respect too highly the memory of that virtuous and distinguished statesman to allow any such misinterpretation of my meaning to pass unchallenged, by which I am made to intimate that the deceased M. Caron had abdicated to me his position as the representative of the Crown. Every person who knew the late M. Caron and his high legal and constitutional attainments, will share with me my regretful surprise that any such imputation should be cast upon his memory.

" ' 2nd. That, not having kept any memorandum of such conversations as I had with the Lieutenant-Governor, except those which took place since the 25th February last, I have no remarks to make upon the paragraph, wherein it is stated :—

" ' The Premier did not let the Governor know, then or since, that the Government was in such a state of penury as to necessitate special legislation to increase public taxation ; unless it be that this statement does not seem to me to accord with a preceding paragraph, wherein it is stated that the Lieutenant-Governor drew my attention to the necessity of reducing the expenses of Government and of the Legislature, instead of having recourse to new taxes in view of avoiding financial embarrassment.

" ' I acknowledge that I never did inform the Governor that the Province was in a state of penury, simply because I was convinced of the contrary.

" ' The Lieutenant-Governor expressed also, but with regret to the Premier, that the orders passed in Council to increase the salaries of Civil Service servants seemed to him inopportune.

" ' Upon this matter I merely desire to remark that these Orders in Council were authorised by a law passed during the session of 1876.

" ' I propose now my Lord, to deal with the specific allegations made against me by his Honour Mr. Letellier, in his explanatory case, and for convenience sake, I take the liberty to quote from His Honour's memorandum : " 1st. During the session of 1876, a " Bill had been read three times in one of the two branches of the legislature, and only " twice in the other."

" ' This Bill bearing all the certificates which were necessary to induce me to believe that it had been regularly passed and adopted was submitted to me by the Premier for my sanction.

" ' In consequence of being left in ignorance of these facts by my advisers, I sanctioned the Bill.

" ' Not long afterwards I was informed of the irregularity, and I immediately spoke of it to the Premier ; I made the observation that such an act would entail too serious consequences to allow of its being passed over.

" ' As a favour to him, however, I passed over this instance of irregular legislation, which was then irreparable.'

" ' In relation to this, the facts will furnish a sufficient answer. The Act in question was a Bill entitled : " An Act to authorise the formation of Societies for the improve-

" ment of country roads and for the destruction of noxious weeds in the Province of " Quebec." ' It was introduced in the Legislative Council duly passed that House and was sent down to the Legislative Assembly for its concurrence.

" ' Apparently in the hurry of the last hours of the Session, after it had been read twice, the Clerk by mistake, certified it as passed without an amendment and it was thus sent back to the Legislative Council. His Honour came down on the following day to prorogue the Legislature, and his assent was given to this Bill along with others. " The error was immediately discovered by the Attorney-General who made a report for transmission to Ottawa, stating the error and suggesting that the Act should be disallowed.

" ' The Hon. Mr. Blake, then Minister of Justice, reported in reply that this was unnecessary, that the Act not having received all its stages, was but blank paper, and as a consequence it was not printed in the statutes.

" ' In view of this fact it is difficult to understand the statement of His Honour the Lieuteuant-Governor that " as a favour " to me, he " passed over this instance of irregular legislation which was then irreparable."

" ' 2. During the same session another Bill was submitted to me for my sanction. On examining it I perceived a blank which had not been filled up, which I pointed out to the Premier in the following letter :—

(Private.)

" ' My Dear Premier, " ' Quebec, December 20th, 1876.

A Bill (E) which originated in the Council was passed by the Legislative Assembly without amendment ; upon reading it, before adding my certificate of sanction I noticed that a blank had not been filled up in the seventh line of the sixth section.

" ' You followed the usual practice in not fixing the amount of the penalty in the Legislative Council, but the matter passed unperceived, or the officers through some mistake, omitted to insert the amount fixed by the House, or it may have been an error in the proof sheets.

" ' While on the subject of these mistakes, you will find another in the second section of the same Act, wherein the word amender is in the infinitive mood. I notice this latter inaccuracy to which I do not attach much importance, only because I discover another in an Act, in which I had to point out to you an omission which I consider fatal.

" ' Yours, &c.

" (Signed) L. Letellier.

" ' The Premier came to me and said that he regretted the omission ; he requested me to give my sanction to the Bill in the state in which it was.

" ' The conciliatory spirit which I showed in granting my consent seemed to please him. In relation to this I have to say that the Act in question was " An Act to provide for " the safety and protection of the public in theatres, edifices, and public halls." As stated it was passed first in the Legislative Council, where the blank, being the amount of the penalty could not be inserted. By inadvertance it passed the Legislative Assembly in the same form. After its passage the omission was discovered, and a short Bill was introduced to remedy it. The Act in which the omission occurred is numbered 19, and the Act supplying the omission is numbered 20, of the statutes of 1876, and both were sanctioned by His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor at the same time.

" ' 3. In March 1877, (vide Appendix A,) my advisers caused me to make an appointment of a Municipal Councillor, for the South Ward of the village of Montmagny, under the pretext that there had been no election, or that if such election had taken place it was illegal, &c.'

" As to the third complaint of his Honour it is difficult to understand, seeing that it had no relation to the dismissal of myself and my colleagues why it is introduced.

" Whether wisely or not the municipal code of the province of Quebec provides that in a certain contingency the Lieutenant-Governor of the province shall appoint a councillor. In the opinion of the law adviser of his Honour, upon a petition sent in from the village of Montmagny, that contingency had arisen, and he made a report recommending an appointment. That report was approved, and the appointment made by his Honour. Subsequently other information was received, which induced his Honour to urge the revocation of the appointment, and out of deference to him, while seeing no reason to change its opinion, the Government yielded, and the appointment was cancelled.

" ' 4th. On the 19th of March 1877 being on the eve of absenting myself for a few days I wrote to the Honourable M. Chapleau, and in a postcript I said :—Please oblige me by telling the Premier that if he needs any concurrence M. Gauthier may bring down to me the documents requiring my signature.

"'M. De Boucherville should have understood from that, that if I was ready to give him my concurrence it was on condition of having all documents submitted to me before signing them.

"'I leave you my Lord to judge in what manner my views were interpreted.'

"It would seem somewhat remarkable that a statement to which his Honour appears to attach so much importance should have appeared as a postcript to what I have reason to believe was a private letter, in no sense relating to public business. I may say, however, that a reference to dates will show that the documents referred to had relation to the Montmagny councillorship, which was at the time a subject of discussion and was not intended to have, and had not any such significance as that attempted now to be attached to it.

"5th. Under date of the 6th of November last I addressed to the Honourable M. De Boucherville the letter of which the following is a copy :—

"(Private.)

"'The Honourable C. B. De Boucherville, Premier.

"'My Dear De Boucherville, Quebec, November 6th, 1877.

In the last Official Gazette were published over my signature two proclamations which I had not signed.

"'One was for the summoning of Parliament, which I had reserved in order to confer with you; the other, which I did not even see, appoints a day of thanksgiving.

"'These proceedings, the nature of which I shall not characterise, are productive, apart from their impropriety, of nullities, which you will easily understand.

"Yours truly,

"(Signed) L. Letellier.

"'The following are the notes which I took of the conversation which I had with M. De Boucherville on the subject :—M. De Boucherville came on the same day he received the letter, to tell me that he regretted that the thing had occurred, and that it was no fault of his. I accepted the excuse, and I then told him that I would not tolerate my name being used when necessary for any duty of my office, unless the documents requiring my signature had been previously submitted to me, and unless information was afforded to me, which M. De Boucherville assured me would be the course followed in future.

"It is a sufficient answer to this complaint to say that the proclamation for the summorning of the Legislature for the despatch of business was not published until the 24th November, and it could not, therefore, be that proclamation to which his Honour referred in the letter of the 6th November. The proclamation to which he refers was the mere formal one by which the meeting of the Legislature is further postponed from time to time, and I am informed that the Order in Council for the particular proclamation to which his Honour referred was signed by him, and is of record, so signed, with the proper officer.

"As to the proclamation fixing a day of thanksgiving, I have to remark that this was the result of a communication from the Premier of Canada, the Honourable Alexander Mackenzie, to the Lieutenant-Governor, and handed to me by his Honour with the request that I would carry out the suggestion. It will appear sufficiently strange under these circumstances that I should be accused of acting without his knowledge, even if the clerical duty of obtaining his signature had been omitted. I am informed, however, that in this case also the Order in Council, as well as the proclamation, were signed by his Honour, and are of record, bearing his signature, in the office of the proper officer.

"6th. But, my Lord, there is another point still more important, which I cannot any longer refrain from mentioning. From the conversations which I have held with M. De Boucherville there results a fact which, if it were known, would of itself have sufficiently justified me in believing that he did not possess the confidence of the people of this province.

"On two occasions, some time time after the session of 1876, I pointed out to him that millions had been voted to him to aid railways in general at a time when our finances did not appear to me in a condition to warrant all at once a lavish expenditure in subsidising these numerous undertakings, particularly as apart from that, our credit was so heavily pledged towards the building of the Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa, and Occidental Railway.

"He very frankly avowed that these grants, though they were for the development of the province, had been necessitated by political considerations; that without them the support of the members whose counties were traversed by those railways would cease to be secured to Government; that there would be no means of having a majority; that the members formed combinations—rings—to control the House.

"'M. De Boucherville is not unaware that I thereupon told him that it was better to save the province than a government, and that if his administration was not strong enough to resist those influences, it would be better for him to form a combination of honest and well-meaning men from both sides of the House, rather than submit to the dictation of those 'rings' and to the control of those combinations.

"'When he made no attempt to escape from that deleterious influence, after his own avowal that the Legislature was controlled by those 'rings;' when by his legislation he sought to favour them anew during the last session, without having previously advised with me, had I not the right, as the representative of my Sovereign, to believe and to be convinced that M. De Boucherville did not possess a constitutional majority in the Legislative Assembly?"

"I have no desire to enter into a discussion as to the precise conversations that may have taken place beween his Honour and myself in the frequent intercourse which we had together; but I submit as my answer to this most serious imputation, 'that I confessed to being controlled by 'rings' in relation to the railway legislation while I was the leader of the Provincial Government, the following facts:—

"I took office in 1874. In the session following a measure was introduced to increase the subsidies granted by previous legislation to a number of railways; several amendments were moved to the resolutions, all of them looking to an increase in the grants, and for these the opposition, under the leadership of Mr. Joly, voted. The general elections took place subsequent to that session, and, whether the legislation was good or bad, it was sustained by a very large majority of the people, and is therefore no longer a proper subject of discussion in the connexion in which his Honour introduced it. At the first session after the elections the Government, at the request of the municipalities of Montreal and Quebec, assumed the task of constructing the North Shore and Northern Colonisation railways, now known as the Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa, and Occidental Railway. Great pressure was brought to bear upon the Government to increase the subsidies to the other roads at that time, but this pressure was resisted. As a matter of fact it is not true that 'millions have been voted to aid railways in general' at a time when 'our credit was so heavily pledged towards the building of the Quebec, Montreal, 'Ottawa, and Occidental Railway.' On the contrary, since our credit became so pledged not one dollar has been added to the debt or liabilities of the Province on account of those 'railways in general.'

"In the session of 1876 a measure was introduced authorising a portion of the subsidy on some of these railways from the unbuilt portion, to be used on that which was under construction, to enable them to be carried to particular points which it was considered important in the public interests should be reached, and a lapsed subsidy of 200,000 dollars was divided among other roads of a similar class, the Bill passing the Legislature without division.

"In relation to this Act, his Honour M. Letellier in proroguing the Legislature used these words: 'I trust that the result of your labours will be to give a new impetus to the 'great improvements which have been undertaken in this Province.' During the last session this progress of 'doubling up' of the subsidy was again adopted, but without adding to the public liability. This Act was carried through its final stages in the Legislative Council after the change of Government, and was assented to by his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor.

"'7th. In communicating to both Houses my memoranda of the 25th February and 1st March last, the Premier and Mr. Attorney-General Angers, in violation of their duty, overstepped the authorisation which I had given by my letter of the 4th March last for that purpose. They added to that communication a report of pretended conversations the correctness of which I contest, and the impropriety of which I maintain, &c.'

"As this relates to what occurred after the dismissal of the late Government, it can hardly be held to justify that dismissal. It is sufficient to refer to the correspondence, which shows that there was no stipulation on my part as to the precise form of explanations to be made to the House; and in view of the fact that we were a dismissed ministry I must claim that we had a duty, not only to ourselves, but to the majority of the representatives of the people whose confidence we enjoyed, to make the explanations as full as possible. As to the introduction without authorisation of the railway and finance Bills, I conceived myself to have been fully authorised, and the explanations which I offered to his Honour on this point, and which were accepted by him, do not require to be repeated.

"To sum up after the manner of his Honour:—

"1st. That in general the recommendations which I made to my Cabinet did not receive the consideration which is due to the representative of the Crown.'

"As responsible ministers we considered it to be our duty to advise his Honour not to be bound to act upon advice from him. At the same time, as is seen in the case of the Montmagny councillorship, we were disposed, as far as possible, to pay proper deference to his views and wishes.

"'2nd. That my name has been used by the members of the Government in the signature of documents which I had never seen.'

"I have simply to say that I know of no such case, unless it refers to the proclamations mentioned in the 'explanatory case,' and the answer on that point is sufficiently distinct.

"'3rd. That a proclamation summoning the Legislature was published in the "Official Gazette" without my being consulted or informed of it, and before my signature had been attached thereto.'

"No proclamation summoning the Legislature was so published without the knowledge and signature of his Honour, and the Legislature was, in fact, not summoned for the despatch of business for nearly three weeks after his Honour's letter of complaint on the subject.

"4th. That a like proclamation fixing a day of thanksgiving was also published under similar circumstances.

"The thanksgiving day was fixed at the request of his Honour himself, and the Order in Council fixing it was signed by him.

"5th and 6th. That although I had intimated to the Premier, by my advice and by my letter of the 14th March 1877, my firm determination to protect the inhabitants of this Province against the arbitrary decisions of the executive in matters within the jurisdiction of the courts of justice, he thought proper without my participation, and without advising me, to propose to both Houses, in legislating for the Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa, and Occidental Railway, to substitute the power of the executive for that of the judiciary.

"That without having advised me, and without having received authorisation of any sort whatever from me, the Government of M. De Boucherville proposed to the Legislature a measure of almost general taxation upon the ordinary contracts and transactions of life, transfers of bank stock, &c., while no message from me had been asked for this subject, nor signed by me to authorise its proposition to the Houses.

"In relation to these measures I considered myself authorised by the reply of his Honour to my request for an authorisation for resolutions respecting finances, and my explanations, as is seen by his letter to me, were accepted, and the Government relieved from all imputation of intentional discourtesy.

"7th. That, after its dismissal, the Government of the late M. De Boucherville again failed in its duty by assigning reasons for the adjournment of the House from day to day different from those agreed on between myself and the Premier, at the risk of prejudicing public opinion against the representative of the Crown."

"No reasons were assigned by me for the adjournment of the Legislative Council, neither the Speaker nor myself being present at any sitting of that House during the crisis, and the reasons assigned by M. Angers for the adjournment of the Legislative Assembly were in these words:—

"The Lieutenant-Governor signified his desire that the explanations respecting the "dismissal from office of the members of the Executive Council be not given this day, "but only after a new Cabinet shall have been formed," that reason being substantially that given in the letter of his Honour of the 4th March.

"8th. That at the time of the communication of the causes which rendered necessary the dismissal of the Cabinet, in the explanations which were given by the Premier to the Legislative Council, and by the Attorney-General to the Legislative Assembly, both of them referred to pretended conversations which they had no authority whatever to communicate to the Legislature, since the Premier had, by his answer to the letter of the Lieutenant-Governor of the 4th March last, limited his explanations to the communication to both Houses, of my memoranda of the 25th February and 1st March, and the answers of the Premier of the 27th February and the 2nd and 4th March instant."

" My letter of the 4th March makes or accepts no such limitation, and, for the reason I have already stated, I considered myself fully justified in making the explanations that were made.

" 9th. That therefore the additions and the comments made by the Premier before the Legislative Council, and by the Attorney-General before the Legislative Assembly, were contrary to the conditions agreed upon between the Lieutenant-Governor and the Premier."

" As I have stated, there were no such conditions agreed upon between the Lieutenant-Governor and myself.

" 10th. That the Premier and his colleagues, by making use of pretended private conversations to explain the causes of their dismissal, in contravention to their duty to the Crown, and to what they had pledged themselves to observe with regard to it, have placed, the Lieutenant-Governor under the necessity of bringing under the notice of your Excellency all the reasons for their dismissal."

" The conversations reported by me were not 'pretended' but real, of which notes were taken immediately after they occurred, and which were necessary to explain fully the circumstances preceding my dismissal. If they have compelled his Honour to state 'all the reasons for that dismissal,' I venture the opinion that it would have been more respectful to the Legislature, whose confidence I enjoyed had 'all the reasons' been communicated to it.

" The observations I have made upon these additional reasons, will, I hope, serve to convince your Excellency that they were not such as to strengthen the position of the Lieutenant-Governor.

That the Senate on the 16th April 1878, adopted the following resolution by a vote of 37 against 20 :—

Debates of the Senate, pp. 595 and 676.—" To resolve, that the messages of his Excellency the Governor General of the 26th March and 8th April, be now read, and that it be resolved that the course adopted by the Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec towards his late Ministry, was at variance with the constitutional principles upon which 'responsible government should be conducted.'

That on the 11th April 1878, the Right Honourable Sir John A. Macdonald, moved the following resolution before the House of Commons :—

Debates of the Commons, p. 1878.—" That Mr. Speaker do not now leave the Chair, but that it be resolved that the recent dismissal by the Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec of his Ministers was, under the circumstances, unwise and subversive of the position accorded to the advisers of the Crown since the concession of the principle of responsible Government to the British North American Colonies."

The then Government opposed the same as inopportune, seeing that the electors of the Province of Quebec within a few days would pronounce its verdict upon the events which made the subject of the above resolution.

Here is the verdict pronounced by the Province of Quebec after the general elections which followed the coup d'état.

The Legislative Assembly on the 11th of June 1878, amended the last paragraph of the resolutions proposed in answer to the speech at the opening of the Session, by adding at the end thereof the following words :—

Exhibit No. 7.—" That this House, while expressing its firm determination to insist on the strictest economy in every branch of the public service, and on the closest supervision over the expenses of the administration, regrets that the present advisers of his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor should have persisted in remaining in power without having been supported by the majority of the Legislative Assembly upon their taking office, and without yet being supported by such majority."

That, on the 14th June 1878, the Honourable Legislative Council adopted the following resolution, by amending the ninth paragraph of the resolutions proposed in answer to the speech at the opening of the Session :—

Exhibit No. 8.—" But that this House desires to express anew its regret that his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor was advised to dismiss his Ministers in March last, at the time they enjoyed the confidence of both branches of the Legislature and of this Province."

"That this House is of opinion that in acting on this advice, dismissing his ministers and appointing a new Cabinet from the ranks of the minority, his Excellency was advised contrary to the recognised principles of responsible government.

"That to complete and corroborate the answer made by the Honourable M. De Boucherville to the 'explanatory case' addressed by the Lieutenant-Governor to his Excellency the Governor General, in which he states: 'That a proclamation summoning the Legislature was published in the Official Gazette without my being consulted or informed of it, and before my signature had been attached thereto; that a like proclamation, fixing a day of thanksgiving, was also published under similar circumstances.'"

These four documents were copied from the originals, and laid before the House by the present Government of Quebec.

Exhibit No. 5, p. 9.—Seeing the facts established by them, it is impossible to explain how his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor can have stated with accuracy, in an official despatch to his Excellency the Governor-General, "that a Proclamation summoning the "Legislature, and published in the Official Gazette, without my being consulted or in-"formed of it, and before my signature had been attached thereto, that a like Procla-"mation fixing a day of Thanksgiving was also published, under similar circumstances."

The Order in Council approved on the 20th November 1877, shows that the Lieutenant-Governor was consulted and informed concerning the calling of the Legislature, and the original Proclamation dated 23rd November 1877 bears his signature, "L. Letellier," as shown by the copy laid before the House by the present Government.

The Order in Council approved on the 30th October 1877, shows also that the Lieutenant-Governor was consulted and informed concerning the day of Thanksgiving, and the original Proclamation, dated 30th October 1877, bears his signature "L. Letellier," as shown by the copy laid before the House by the present Government.

All the documents above referred to are authentic, and are contained partly in votes and proceedings of the Senate and of the House of Commons of Canada, and in the sessional papers, and partly in the votes and proceedings of the Legislative Council and Legislative Assembly of Quebec, official copies thereof are hereunto annexed.

From the foregoing, it results that the dismissal from office, by his honour the Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec, of the De Boucherville Government was, under the circumstances, unjustifiable, unwise, and subversive of the position accorded to the advisers of the Crown since the concession of the principle of responsible government to the British North American Colonies; and that in his communications with his Excellency the Governor-General, respecting the aforesaid dismissal, and the reasons which he alleges as having moved him to make such dismissal, he has made statements unsupported by, and contradictory of, the official documents to which they relate.

And that in the opinion of the undersigned, such erroneous statements as appear from the foregoing details, could not have been made by mistake or failure of memory.

Wherefore, the violation of the principles of responsible government committed by the Lieutenant-Governor, and his actions as above represented, are of a nature to imperil the peace and prosperity of the Dominion of Canada, and to bring into disrespect the dignity of the Crown, and should be dealt with under the authority granted the Honourable the Privy Council of Canada by the 59th section of the British North America Act, 1867.

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR'S ANSWER to PETITION.

SIR, Government House, Quebec, December 9, 1878.

I HAVE had under consideration Mr. Under Secretary's letter of the 22nd ultimo, transmitting the copy of a memorial from Messrs. Chapleau, Church, and Angers, representing that I had made statements to his Excellency the Governor-General "unsupported "by and contradictory of the official documents to which they relate; that such erroneous "statements could not have been made by mistake or failure of memory, and further "representing that the violation of the principles of responsible government committed by "the Lieutenant-Governor, and his actions as above represented, should be dealt with "under the authority granted the honourable the Privy Council of Canada by the 59th "section of the British North America Act, 1867."

Before replying to the very serious charges preferred against me by three members of the late Executive Council of the Province of Quebec, I must call your attention to a very extraordinary error committed by the memoralists, all of whom are members of the legal profession, and one of them an ex-attorney-general. In the 59th section of the British North America Act there is no reference to the Privy Council, which is not even named in that section. It declares that the Lieutenant-Governor shall hold Office "during the pleasure of the Governor-General," whose office and position are wholly ignored by the memoralists—a circumstance which I notice, chiefly because it is in strict accordance with the practice which they followed as executive councillors towards the Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec.

The charges preferred against me are, 1st, a violation of the principles of responsible government; 2nd, erroneous statements willfully made.

With regard to the first charge, I have to state that I have always understood that responsible or parliamentary government, in the same sense in which it is understood in England and in the administration of the affairs of the Dominion, was also the rule in the province of Quebec.

Notwithstanding the wide difference between the powers of the Imperial Parliament, of the Dominion Parliament, and of the Provincial Legislatures, the principles on which the government of each is conducted are considered the same.

As the representative of the Crown in the Province of Quebec I claim the right to be consulted on all matters on which it is necessary that the influence of the Crown should be used.

The right of consultation has been repeatedly acknowledged by English statesmen of all parties, as well as by the best writers on constitutional law.

Although I deem it unnecessary to refer to precedents in support of my views on the question, yet I may state that I have been assured on unquestionable authority that during the government of the Earl of Elgin, who initiated the system of responsible government in Canada, his ministers were most scrupulous in consulting him on every question that arose, whether of administration or legislation.

I shall venture to assume that in claiming for the Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec the right to be consulted by his executive council, which by the 63rd clause of the British North America Act is to be composed of such persons as "the Lieutenant-"Governor from time to time thinks fit." I am strictly claiming what the Governor-General would claim in regard to Dominion affairs, and what our Most Gracious Sovereign would claim with regard to questions of Imperial character.

I shall proceed to consider the application of the principle to the circumstances which led to the dismissal of the Hon. M. De Boucherville.

It will not, I presume, be disputed that no measures of greater importance were introduced during the first session of 1878 than the Bill imposing new taxes and the Bill relating to the Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa, and Occidental Railway.

It appears in the documents accompanying the memorial that I never was consulted on either of these important measures.

Has my positive assertion been denied?

The contention of the Hon. M. De Boucherville is "that I ought to have read the "treasurer's budget speech, in which he announced the proposed taxes," and my reply is that "I should have been consulted" before the delivery of that speech!

In regard to the Railway Bill, the Hon. M. De Boucherville contends that a telegram addressed to me during a brief absence at Riviére Ouelle, in which he asked my authority "to put the question of finance before the House," and in accordance with which I sent my signature to my private secretary for the message to accompany the estimates, was an adequate consultation on a railway bill which contained provisions substituting to the judiciary the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, as a tribunal to decide as to the liability of municipalities for the payment of money which they disputed.

I re-affirm in the most unequivocal terms that I never was consulted either as to the proposed new taxes or as to the railway bill: and with regard to the latter measure the Hon. M. De Boucherville was fully aware, from what I said to him when the Montmagny case was under deliberation, that I had insuperable objections to the substitution of the executive authority for the legal tribunals of the province.

I may here notice a remarkable discrepancy between the statements of the Hon. M. De Boucherville and those of Mr. Angers, which could hardly have been unintentional on the part of the latter, who desired to convey the idea that I had given the Hon. M. De Boucherville full authority to introduce in the name of the Government all such bills as he and his colleagues might think proper. In the conversation which took place on the 19th February, about three weeks after the introduction of the railway measure, the Hon. M. De Boucherville alleges that I gave him "authorisation generally to lay money ques- "tions before the House," and adds "I considered I had a right to inform my colleagues "that I had your permission for all questions respecting money." Such a permission would have been wholly inconsistent with my repeated requests that everything should be submitted to me. But Mr. Angers, in order to cover the railway bill, changes the Hon. M. De Boucherville's language from "questions respecting money" to "all "measures which the public service required."

It is contended by those who are responsible for the omission to consult me at the proper time, that I ought to have notified them that I objected to their Bill at an earlier period.

I was placed in a position of great embarrassment, owing to the Hon. M. De Boucherville's reticence on the subject of the Government measures, and to the concealment from me of the petitions against the Bill, which I only had cognizance of after my request for information on the 25th of February.

When, in addition to the various reasons already given, I found that there was a strong objection to the Government measure on the part of the municipalities interested, I came to the conclusion that it would be most unwise to sanction such legislation, and that the removal of the Hon. M. De Boucherville as Premier was rendered necessary.

It has been made a subject of complaint by the Legislative Assembly, that I did not send for a member of the party in the majority of the existing House to form a new administration; but on reference to the documents accompanying the memorial, it will appear that I requested the Hon. M. De Boucherville to name the person for whom I should send, and that he declined to advise me.

Under the circumstances, I contend that in sending for the leader of the Opposition, I followed the constitutional practice.

The Hon. M. De Boucherville was the acknowledged leader of the party commanding the majority in the Legislature; but he had, in my judgment, failed in his duty to me as Lieutenant-Governor, and had in consequence forfeited my confidence.

To him chiefly I objected, and if proof were wanted that my judgment was in accordance with public opinion, it is only necessary for me to state that I have been assured, on authority on which I can rely, that at a meeting of the members of the party which supported the Hon. M. De Boucherville, M. Chapleau, whose signature stands first to the memorial, was chosen leader of the party, so that the correctness of my judgment has been acknowledged by the members of his own party.

Before closing this branch of the complaint of the memorialists, I may refer to their allegation that the appeal to the country, made on the advice of my present Council, was unsuccessful.

In support of that allegation they furnish a copy of a resolution adopted by a majority of one, when the House was not full, concealing the fact that the following resolution was immediately adopted in a full House as an amendment and an addition to the one alluded to by the memorialists: " That nevertheless under the present circumstances, " this House believes it to be its duty to give a general and independent support to the " Government, in such a manner that the measures which it proposes may be submitted " to the judgment of this House."

They do not mention that out of the five elective members of the Hon. M. De Boucherville's Cabinet, three failed to secure their return to the House of Assembly, and that a considerable number of their supporters shared the same fate, while the Hon. M. Joly and his five colleagues in the Assembly were returned.

I may also add that all the measures introduced by the Government were adopted by the Legislative Assembly.

Although I have thought it right to notice this branch of the complaint, yet it is obviously not one affecting me personally. The dissolution was resorted to in strict accordance with constitutional practice, and the present Cabinet can only hold office while enabled by the Legislature to carry on the public business.

With regard to the second head of the complaint of the memorialists, I may observe that my letter to the Governor-General of the 18th March 1878, has been by numbers misunderstood.

It has been assumed that my object, in that letter, was to prefer new charges against the Hon. M. De Boucherville and his colleagues, on which to justify his dismissal. Such was far from being my intention. I conceived that in accordance with the practice followed by the Governor-General, who communicates freely and fully with the Imperial authorities on all subjects of interest, it was my duty, especially after the unauthorised statement made by M. Angers, in the House of Assembly, to apprise the Governor-General of all important circumstances preceding the dismissal of the Hon. M. De Boucherville.

The statement of M. Angers is defended by M. De Boucherville, although in my letter of the 4th March I defined, in the most precise manner, the documents which were to be communicated to the House.

As I had never seen M. Angers' memorandum I could not have permitted it to be communicated, and it is not denied that permission was necessary in order to justify the explanations.

I may observe that neither the Hon. M. De Boucherville, nor the memorialists, seem to have appreciated my objections to their first communication to the House of Assembly, which, in my letter to the Governor-General, I referred to as different from what was agreed on between the Hon. M. De Boucherville and myself.

It will be found, on reference to the papers, that when the Hon. M. De Boucherville, on the 2nd March, asked permission to give explanations, he expressly referred to " the " memorandum of the Lieutenant-Governor, and his replies thereto," the same documents to which I referred in my letter of the 4th March.

On the 2nd, I requested the Hon. M. De Boucherville, verbally, to delay the explanations, but, on the 4th, I addressed a letter to him, requesting him to communicate to the Houses that the adjournment from day to day was rendered necessary owing to the arrangements for the formation of a new Executive not having been completed.

I consider that I had just ground of complaint that M. Angers in making that communication announced that the Ministry had been dismissed; the consequence of which was that a prejudice was created against me, several days before the various documents could be laid before the House.

With regard to the two Bills in which irregularities had occurred, the Hon. M. De Boucherville confirms the accuracy of my statements regarding them.

If the Montmagny case was referred to by me in my letter to the Earl of Dufferin, it was in order to establish the fact that the Hon. M. De Boucherville was fully cognisant of my strong objection to any acts tending to substitute executive for judicial power, and that he therefore ought not to have introduced the provisions in the Railway Bill, substituting the Lieutenant-Governor in Council for the legal tribunals, without consulting me specially on the point.

The proclamations which were published in the " Official Gazette " without my signature were referred to in order to establish the fact that I had specially called the Hon. M. De Boucherville's attention to the irregularity of such proceedings, and that he had therefore no excuse for using my name without my special sanction.

The Hon. M. De Boucherville in alleging that the two proclamations mentioned in my memorandum were signed, omitting at the same time to state when, has endeavoured to create an impression that my statement is incorrect; I must re-affirm my previous statement, that both the proclamations referred to " were published with my signature in " the ' Official Gazette ' before my signature thereto was given."

In both cases I signed the proclamations after their publication, so as to prevent any irregularity, but I remonstrated at once with the Hon. M. De Boucherville verbally, and in a letter, dated 6th November. He expressed to me his regret at the occurrence, &c., &c.

I referred to these irregularities merely to prove that I had taken all possible means to convey to the Hon. M. De Boucherville my desire that my name should not be used without my express permission.

While referring to these proclamations I may observe, that by introducing words never used by me, viz., " for the despatch of business," the Hon. M. De Boucherville has endeavoured to convey the idea that I referred to the proclamation summoning Parliament " for the despatch of business," whereas it was what he terms " the mere formal one " on which I desired to confer with him, before the proclamation was published.

My attention having been drawn by my private secretary to the fact that these proclamations had been published before the original proclamations were signed, I sent my letter of the 6th November to the Hon. M. De Boucherville, who came at once to my office, where my private secretary brought a copy of the " Official Gazette " (the one of the 3rd November, 1877) to compare with the original proclamations, and it was only then, after the explanations alluded to, that I signed the originals in the presence of these gentlemen, for the reasons already alluded to.

I am not aware that there is any charge brought forward by the memorialists that I have not fully met, but if it should appear that there is, I undertake, on its being pointed out, to refute it in a satisfactory manner.

I venture to assert that various documents submitted by the memorialists do not establish the case on which they rely. It is, however, possible, that charges made in their petition may not strike me as of importance, or may be viewed in a different light by others, and I therefore deem it necessary to request that I may have the opportunity of refuting any specific allegations that may seem to be warranted by the allegations of the memorialists.

I have endeavoured to meet the various charges preferred against me in the memorial of Messieurs Chapleau, Church, and Angers, as explicitly as the nature of the case would admit.

I confess that I am not altogether clear as to the specific charges of the memorialists, some of which are of such character that I decline to qualify them, and I therefore may have omitted to notice some that may appear to others more formidable than they do to me. I will therefore simply affirm the correctness of every statement in my letter to his Excellency the Earl of Dufferin, of the 18th March last, and I will request that, if there is the least doubt as to any of them, or of any others that I may have made during the discussions consequent on the change of Ministry in March last, I may be afforded an opportunity of further explanations.

Reply of Petitioners.

Canada, Province of Quebec.

To his Excellency the Right Hon. Sir John Douglas Sutherland Campbell, Marquis of Lorne, one of her Majesty's most honourable Privy Council, Knight of the most ancient and most noble Order of the Thistle, and Knight Grand Cross of the most distinguished Order of St. Michael and St. George, &c., &c., &c., in Council.

Joseph Adolphe Chapleau, Levi Ruggles Church, and Auguste Real Angers, by this their reply to the answer of the Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec, by them received this 18th day of December instant, to their petition, communicated to him by his Excellency the Administrator in Council, on the 22nd day of November last, respectfully say—

That the Lieutenant-Governor's plea to the jurisdiction of the Governor-General in Council on that subject-matter of the petition of the undersigned, is not well founded. It does not appear to the undersigned that there is any necessity to demonstrate that the petitioners had the right to petition the Governor-General in Council in this matter, and to conclude praying the Honourable the Privy Council to apply the provisions of the 59th section of the British North America Act of 1867 to the Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec :—" When it is necessary that the authority of the Crown should be exercised in public acts of government a Privy Council is convened, from whence Orders in Council and proclamations are promulgated." Todd, Vol. 1, page 233, of 1867.

This interpretation of the British North American Act of 1867 has been universally accepted, viz., that whenever the statute enacts that the Governor-General shall do anything, it has always been understood to mean the Governor-General in Council ; the language of section 59 is in that respect identical with that of sections 24, 26, 32, 34, and 96, concerning the appointment of judges and senators ; and the undersigned have yet to learn that any one has seriously contended that such powers were exercised by his Excellency individually and without the advice of his Council ; and, moreover, the provision of section 59, which imposes the necessity of communicating the cause assigned for the removal of a Lieutenant-Governor to the Senate and House of Commons (to which the Governor-General is not personally responsible), shows that the act is not a personal one and done without the advice of his Council.

Moreover, the Lieutenant-Governor, in objecting to the jurisdiction of the Governor in Council, has, at the same time, undeservedly imputed motives to the undersigned by stating that the " memorialists had wholly ignored the office and position of the " Governor-General, a circumstance which he said he chiefly noticed, because it was in " accordance with the practice which they followed as Executive councillors towards " the Lieutenant-Governor." It will appear strange that the Lieutenant-Governor should have indulged in these comments, when in his own letter of the 1st March 1878, to the Honourable M. De Boucherville, referring to Messrs. Angers and Church, he admits that "those gentlemen had done nothing willingly not in conformity with the "duties of their office." The undersigned can only protest against such insinuations against their loyalty and devotion to the Crown and the Representative of the Sovereign, whilst they resent the unfair and untrue suggestions of the motives which it is claimed actuated them. The ability of his Honour, Mr. Letellier, to interpret the Constitutional Act may be judged of by the manner in which he has dealt with the question of jurisdiction.

The whole question raised by the Lieutenant-Governor to justify the dismissal of his ministers is really reduced to this:—"I have never been consulted upon two important "questions of the session, and my positive assertion upon this point has never been "denied."

Not only is this pretension contested, but the explanations given by Mr. De Boucherville to the Lieutenant-Governor, in his letter of the 27th of March, were accepted and considered by him as sufficient to establish the perfect good faith of the Prime Minister and his colleagues.

What are the facts?

On the 28th of January a general authorisation respecting finances is asked from the Lieutenant-Governor; on the 29th that authorisation is transmitted in blank to the Prime Minister; the resolutions concerning the collection of the municipal subscriptions to the Government railway are introduced on the 30th; on the 31st the estimates are laid before the House, with a complete financial exposé by the Treasurer, explaining his ways and means for the next year, and announcing in the most distinct manner the new tax required for the public service and for which a bill was announced. A lively debate is immediately engaged, both in the House and the public press on the subject of those two financial questions. On the following days the Railway Bill, affecting municipal subscriptions, is introduced and goes through its various stages. On the 19th of February a conversation takes place with respect to the Railway Bill between the Prime Minister and the Lieutenant-Governor. The latter, as he himself admits in his letter of the 1st of March, then expressed, it is true, his regret at seeing that measure before the House, but in no way does he demand that it should be withdrawn, or even suspended. Notwithstanding the official knowledge that the Lieutenant-Governor had of the progress of these two measures in the House, a fact that he has never yet denied, the Lieutenant-Governor does not think it his duty to interfere and ask his ministers to withdraw that legislation. Confident that he possessed the authorisation of the Lieutenant-Governor, and relying upon the acquiescence implied by the conversation which took place between them, that these measures might be submitted and discussed in the House, the Prime Minister had them passed through both Houses. And in the face of all this can the Lieutenant-Governor pretend that this legislation was never made known to him, and that he was never consulted about it?

Such a pretension was so untenable that the Lieutenant-Governor, wishing to prevent the effect of the ministerial explanations and of the solemn protest of both Houses, transmitted to the Governor-General and to the Federal Parliament, thought it necessary to address to his Excellency Lord Dufferin, his explanatory case, dated the 18th of March 1878.

Dealing with that part of the Lieutenant-Governor's answer which bears upon one of the charges contained in the petition, and in which he states, in contradiction to official and authentic documents, that he signed the proclamations referred to "after their publication," the undersigned represent that this explanation is of no value, it cannot be received to contradict authentic documents and is of no value in presence of the facts established by the proclamations bearing his signature and the dates at which they were signed; it is difficult to understand how the Lieutenant-Governor can bear evidence against his own signature and expect that his statement upon the point can be credited, and it is to be noted that such statement was omitted in the Lieutenant-Governor's despatch to the late Governor General, the Earl of Dufferin.

To disprove his expressions of confidence in Mr. De Boucherville in sending him a blank signed in answer to a demand of authorization to introduce "resolutions respecting finances," the Lieutenant-Governor now states that this blank was sent to his private secretary. This statement is inaccurate; it was sent to the honourable Mr. De Boucherville, as admitted by the Lieutenant-Governor in his letter of the 1st day of March last.

In proof of the fact that the day of thanksgiving was appointed after consulting with the Lieutenant-Governor, as shown by the Order in Council previously approved by him, and moreover, at his special request, the undersigned refer to the letter of the Hon.

Mr. Mackenzie to the Lieutenant-Governor on the subject, which may be found at Ottawa.

The charge of concealment from the Lieutenant-Governor of petitions against the Railway Bill is a new one; it is gratuitous and unsupported by any evidence; they had not been laid 24 hours before the Executive Council when they were communicated to the Lieutenant-Governor.

The Lieutenant-Governor states again that the explanations given by Mr. Angers to the House were unauthorised. In refutation, and to make this point clear, it is only necessary to refer to Mr. De Boucherville's statement in which he affirms he was verbally authorised to communicate to the House the correspondence exchanged between him and the Lieutenant-Governor, and to give explanations, and also to the written answer made by Mr. De Boucherville to the Lieutenant-Governor's letter on the 4th day of March last.

Referring to what the Lieutenant-Governor calls discrepancies between the statements of the Hon. Mr. De Boucherville and those of Mr. Angers by simply reading the latter's explanations to the Legislative Assembly they show that he did not quote the Hon. Mr. De Boucherville, but gave what was understood to be the extent of the authorisation which Mr. De Boucherville had from the Lieutenant-Governor.

In relation to the fact whether Mr. De Boucherville's statement corroborates the allegation of the Lieutenant-Governor on the two Bills in which inaccuracies had occurred, reference may be had to Mr. De Boucherville's letter of the 2nd April last, to the Governor-General. It completely disproves the allegation that Mr. De Boucherville requested the Lieutenant-Governor to give his sanction to the Bill to provide for the safety of the public in theatres, &c., in the state in which it was; "the conciliatory spirit which I showed," said the Lieutenant-Governor, "in granting my consent seemed to please him." This statement is shown to be erroneous by the Statute Book of 1876, cap. 20, amending cap. 19, and there was no occasion for the pretended consent to pass the Bill in the state in which it was "nor for the satisfaction of Mr. De Boucherville at the pretended" conciliatory spirit of the Lieutenant-Governor.

The allegation that the Lieutenant-Governor passed over the instance of irregular legislation in the case of a Bill to authorise the formation of Societies for the improvement of country roads, &c., is also completely explained in the same letter of Mr. De Boucherville of the 2nd April last. Reference might be made to the reports of the Attorney-General of Quebec and of the Honourable the Minister of Justice on this subject, and then it will appear most strange that the Lieutenant-Governor should say; "as a favour to him (Mr. De Boucherville) I passed over this instance of irregular "legislation which was then irreparable."

The constant reference made by the Lieutenant-Governor to the Montmagny case may require once for all the remark that there never was in this case, or in any other, the intentions to substitute the action of the executive to that of the judiciary, and that the Government in this matter acted in strict accordance with the law, as shown by the report of Mr. Angers, dated 15th March 1877 (vide return to Legislative Assembly, p. 12). But in this instance the application of the law did not suit the views of the party opposing the Government, and they corresponded with the Lieutenant-Governor not as is required by constitutional practice through his ministers, but with him personally (vide same return, p. 16), thereby delivering himself over to external and irresponsible advisers, and they prevailed upon him to cancel the appointment of Jules Belanger, made by himself upon the advice of his minister, to which cancellation the Government seeing the persistency of the Lieutenant-Governor on the subject, in opposition to the Attorney-General's report, acquiesced out of deference to the Lieutenant-Governor, and so stated to him at the time such acquiescence was made.

The Lieutenant-Governor, attempting to offer a justification for neglecting to accept the protest of the majority of the House, declaring that it had not and could not have any confidence in any Government which might be formed out of the party composing the majority, says that M. De Boucherville after his dismissal had declined to advise him on the person for whom he should send. It is plain that M. De Boucherville being dismissed could not offer any advice. It is easy to foresee of what little importance M. De Boucherville's advice would have been when the advice and protest of the House on the subject, expressed in its address, did not prevent the Lieutenant-Governor from seeking his advisers in the ranks of the minority, which fact entailed the necessity and expense to the province of a dissolution.

The Lieutenant-Governor says: "I have been assured on authority on which I can rely that at a meeting of the members of the party which supported M. De Boucherville, Mr. Chapleau, whose signature stands first to the memorial, was chosen leader of the party, so that the correctness of my judgment has been acknowledged by the members of his own party."

After the general elections it was necessary that the Conservative party should choose a leader in the Legislative Assembly, M. De Boucherville being leader and member of the Legislative Council. This was done at a private caucus of the party, but the undersigned entirely fail to see what this had to do with, or in what way it sustains, the correctness of the Lieutenant-Governor's judgment.

The Lieutenant-Governor lays great stress on the fact that at the general elections of the 1st of May last his Ministry was sustained by a majority, and that the said majority supported him in the House. That reason might perhaps be invoked by the Cabinet of Mr. Joly, and even then the English precedents ought to have convinced him that a ministry sustained by the vote of the Speaker alone, chosen and elected by ministerial influence, is not considered as having a constitutional majority in the parliamentary acceptation of the term. Only lately her Majesty refused to give her sanction to Acts passed in a British colony, where they had been carried by the preponderating vote of the Speaker, and in the present case the well known facts in connexion with the election of the Speaker of the House are hardly of a nature to increase the importance of his vote.

The resolution passed at the last Session censuring the formation of the new Government taken from the ranks of the minority, had a peculiar signification under the circumstances.

In decreeing a dissolution of the Legislature, the Lieutenant-Governor had himself declared that he desired to know in a more constitutional manner the sentiments of the people of this province on the actual state of public affairs, and on the ministerial changes which had just taken place. The First Minister had also opened the electoral campaign by an appeal to the electors of the province, in which he solicited their approbation of the course adopted on the 2nd of March.

The majority of the members of the Legislative Assembly condemned that action, but as public works of great magnitude were then in progress, they did not consider themselves justified in refusing to concur in a general and independent manner with the measures of the Government.

It is well known that the session had been called together chiefly to obtain a vote of supply, and no legislation of importance, with the exception of a measure of the late Government for handing over to the Minister of Public Works the construction of the Provincial railway, was passed.

It was with this view that the supplies were voted, but not without the solemn protest contained in the direct motion of want of confidence which preceded the granting of the supplies.

At all events this majority cannot be invoked by the Lieutenant-Governor to justify his conduct, "Le succes ne fait jamais le droit." Success is not justification, and the electors would learn with consternation that a functionary of the Federal Government (when neither the people of the Province nor their representatives can constitutionally punish nor even censure) is to be protected from all censure and all punishment from those to whom alone he is directly responsible, provided that by his violation of the constitution he can procure a majority, all the more easily obtained that one is less scrupulous as to the means of obtaining it by his certitude of absolute impunity. In his memorandum of the 18th March the Lieutenant-Governor tells his Excellency that he is reluctantly compelled to make revelations concerning the conduct of his Ministers, to maintain the dignity of his office, to prove that his object has always been to protect the constitutional liberties of the people, and, finally, "because the "existence of the constitution is at stake." We, on the contrary, most respectfully hold that never has the constitution received a more severe blow. The responsibility of the Ministers for all the acts of the head of the State, and the absolute immunity of the latter, imply, necessarily, an entire reciprocal confidence, and the inviolability of the secrecy of their advice and counsel. No one can dispense with this rule without making responsible government an impossibility. If the head of the State were allowed, after the struggle of parties has terminated in the House by the adoption of a measure, to come and accuse his Ministers of having acted through sordid motives or in any other reprehensible way, ministerial responsibility would be no more. Such an act from a constitutional monarch would be a violation of the fundamental principles of responsible government, and would expose him to dangerous conflicts with his Parliament. How much more so does such an act by a public officer who is responsible to a higher authority deserve reproof and punishment?

The Lieutenant-Governor, after assuming his office, as he admits himself, gets persuaded that ministerial and administrative changes have become necessary, and determines to use the influence attached to his position to realise what he deems to be to the best advantage of the Province. The Prime Minister, acting in accordance with the wishes of a large majority of the national representation, follows a policy which does not commend itself to the personal opinions of the Lieutenant-Governor. Immediately the Lieutenant-Governor takes for mistrust or insubordination what was simply the respect for the people's will. The most insignificant details are carefully criticised, confidential conversations are secretly noted, involuntary mistakes of the employés are charged as grave errors of administration. Lastly, taking advantage of the confidence which his Prime Minister had placed in him, and the good faith with which he interpreted his words and acts, he knowingly allows the vote to be taken in both Houses on measures introduced by his Cabinet, and then suddenly thwarts and arrests that legislation. He respects neither the decisions of both Houses regarding these measures nor the confidence of the Houses in his Ministry, nor the energetic protestations of both branches of the Legislature claiming the free exercise of representative government. He dismisses his Ministers and brusquely dissolves Parliament.

Then, to explain his conduct, the Lieutenant-Governor forwards to his Excellency Lord Dufferin his memorandum dated the 18th of March, which alone, we humbly submit, would be enough to justify the dismissal of the Lieutenant-Governor. In that factum, under the pretence of defending the prerogative of the Crown, the Lieutenant-Governor divulges, in misconstruing them, certain acts and confidential conversations the secret of which is considered as sacred by the Sovereign himself.

The Honourable Mr. De Boucherville, in his letter to his Excellency, has replied to the said factum, and the undersigned think they have completed that answer by their present rejoinder.

Among the allegations of that factum, one stands above all the others, and constitutes, in effect, an accusation of malversation.

The Lieutenant-Governor accuses the Prime Minister and his colleagues of nothing less than having yielded to dishonest combinations or "rings" in the House, of having granted considerable sums of money, as subsidies to railway companies, while acting under their pernicious influence, and then he adds:—"When he made no attempt to escape from that deletorious influence, after his own avowal that the Legislature was controlled by those rings; when by his legislation he sought to favour them anew during the last session, without having previously advised with me, had I not the right, as the representative of my Sovereign, to believe and to be convinced that M. De Boucherville did not possess a constitutional majority in the Legislative Assembly."

In other words, the Lieutenant-Governor accuses his Ministers of having deliberately introduced legislation with the venal object of enriching private parties; of having resisted the benevolent and charitable advice that he, the Lieutenant-Governor, was giving them, and of having allowed even, "during the last session," the continuation of the said dishonest legislation without consulting him beforehand and against his former advice.

We emphatically deny the truth of these allegations.

Since the De Boucherville Government undertook the construction of the great Provincial railway, they have added nothing to the aggregate of the obligations they entered into at the outset with the railway companies. On the contrary, when the opposition (which the Lieutenant-Governor called on the 2nd March last to advise him), was asking, while in opposition, that new grants be made for the Southern railway as a compensation for the amount the public treasury was pledged to spend on the construction of the Provincial line on the North Shore of the St. Lawrence, the Government of M. De Boucherville resisted the demands. It is a fact of public notoriety that frequent and numerous delegations beseiged the Prime Minister, in view of getting some advantages by way of increased subsidies for the railway enterprises in which those delegations were interested, and that they created quite an opposition to him on account of his refusing to yield to their demands.

But a still more remarkable fact is, that the measure introduced the Session before last by the De Boucherville Administration, concerning railway enterprises, a measure granting no new subsidies, but applying in a special way the subsidies to which the companies were entitled, and which is the measure to which the Lieutenant-Governor alludes in the passage of his memorandum just quoted, that measure was adopted and carried through without any notification by the new ministry, and afterwards sanctioned by the Lieutenant-Governor.

The undersigned respectfully contends that this accusation of the Lieutenant-Governor against his Ministers, in such a violation of the confidence he owes to his advisers, and such a misrepresentation of their conduct and of his own, that it renders impossible the service of the State under a chief who thus tries to destroy instead of defending the honour of his Ministers.

The charges now submitted to the consideration of your Excellency, are but the echo of the grievances expressed in the addresses passed by the Legislature of Quebec, and forwarded to the Governor-General, the Senate and the House of Commons, in March last. They are also to be found in the correspondence between the Lieutenant-Governor and M. De Boucherville, in the answer of M. De Boucherville to the "explanatory case" of the Lieutenant-Governor to his Excellency Lord Dufferin, and finally in the additional documents referred to in the memorial of the undersigned.

These grievances may be summed up in the following manner:

1st. The Lieutenant Governor, in dismissing his ministers when they enjoyed the confidence of both Houses of the Legislature, and when they had not been guilty, as the Lieutenant-Governor admits, of any wilful want of respect for the prerogative of the Crown, has violated the principle of responsible government.

2nd. The Lieutenant-Governor in giving as his reasons for the dismissal of his ministers, the introduction without his consent of two bills having reference to the financial interests of the Province, after he had really given his authorisation to these measures and after these measures had been fully discussed and voted upon in the Legislative Assembly, has been guilty of a breach of good faith towards his advisers and of want of respect to the Legislature.

3rd. The Lieutenant-Governor in his explanations laid before his Excellency Lord Dufferin has divulged the secrets of his advisers, giving an inaccurate version and a false interpretation to the words and actions, he has attacked the authenticity of public records, questioned measures and acts of administration which he had long before sanctioned, and has rendered illusory and impossible all guarantees for that mutual confidence which should ever exist between the chief of the executive and his advisers.

The undersigned have not attempted to follow and discuss all the matters referred to in the original memorial, nor in some instances to re-adduce proofs and reflections therein contained, which answers explain or contravert allegations made from time to time and in different documents by the Lieutenant-Governor. The record must be considered as a whole, add from it, and in it will be found ample grounds for all they have advanced and asserted against the Lieutenant-Governor, whilst it demonstrates the necessity which exists that the constitutional rights of the people should be vindicated.

Wherefore, your petitioners persist in the conclusions of their petition and pray as in and by the same they have already prayed.

No. 41.—Votes and Proceedings of the Legislative Assembly of the Province of Quebec.—Quebec, Friday, 8th March 1878.

The following petition was received and read, namely :—

Of Benjamin Gagné, Esquire, of St. Nicholas, County of Lévis ; praying amendments to the notarial tariff.

Mr. Speaker reported to the House, that he, yesterday, presented to his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor, the address of the Legislative Assembly, expressing their loyalty to Her Majesty Queen Victoria, and entire submission to the constitution ; that his Excellency received him graciously and gave the following reply :

L. Letellier,

Gentlemen of the Legislative Assembly ;

I thank you for the expression of loyalty and attachment to Her Majesty Queen Victoria contained in your address, and I receive with pleasure the assurance of your entire submission to the constitution.

In the exercise of the rights and prerogatives of the Crown, I, last Saturday, entrusted Mr. Joly with the duty of forming a new administration, and the result of his labours will be communicated to you to-morrow.

Government House,
Quebec, 7th March 1878.

The Honourable Mr. Laframboise, seconded by Mr. Watts, moved,—

That Bill (No. 90) for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money required for defraying certain expenses of the civil government for the fiscal years ending on the thirtieth day of June one thousand eight hundred and seventy-eight, and on the thirtieth day of June one thousand eight hundred and seventy-nine, and for other purposes connected with the public service, be now read a second time.

Mr. Loranger, seconded by Mr. Lynch, moved,—

That the following address be presented to his Excellency the Governor-General of the Dominion of Canada, to the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, and to his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec.

To his Excellency the Honourable Luc Letellier de St. Just, Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec.

"The humble Address of the Legislative Assembly of the Province of Quebec, respectfully showeth :

That it appears from the explanations given by the Honourable Mr. Angers, and from the official correspondence communicated to this House, that his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor acknowledges that the Members of the De Boucherville Cabinet have acted in good faith in the discharge of their duties ;

That his Excellency has allowed the measures submitted by his Government to this House and to the Legislative Council, to be discussed and voted upon without order on his part to suspend them ;

That, whilst asserting their devotion to Our Gracious Sovereign and their respect towards his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor of this Province, this House is of opinion :

That the dismissal from office of the De Boucherville Cabinet, having taken place without reason, constitutes an eminent danger to the existence of responsible Government in this Province ; is an abuse of power in contempt of the majority of this House, whose confidence they possess and still possess, and is a violation of the liberties and will of the people ;

And your petitioners will ever humbly pray."

And, objection having been taken that the said proceeding was not in order, inasmuch as the proceedings of this House and debates on questions cannot be suspended to discuss questions of privilege,

Mr. Speaker ruled :

"That the question now before the House is a question of privilege, and must consequently be now taken into consideration."

And another objection having been taken, that this motion tends to censure the conduct of the Lieutenant-Governor, and is in consequence out of order,

Mr. Speaker ruled:

It is a principle of a constitutional Government that the Crown can commit no wrong. The Lieutenant-Governor represents the Crown in our Legislature. It is, therefore, necessary that there should always be around the Sovereign and the Lieutenant-Governor, advisers, Ministers who are always to bear the responsibility which cannot be laid upon the Crown, and of this responsibility there cannot be a solution of continuity. And, although in Addresses the words "Lieutenant-Governor" are used as in measures brought before the House, by the very nature of our constitution these words are addressed only to the Ministers, who are responsible to the House. The Sovereign, in the person of Her representative, is never in question. In the present case the reproaches contained in the motion are addressed to the advisers of his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor. I, therefore, rule it to be in order.

Mr. Speaker, under the provision of chapter 4 of the Statutes of the Province of Quebec, 31st Victoria, called upon Mr. Taillon to take the Chair during his temporary absence.

After a short time, Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair.

The House having continued to sit until twelve o'clock midnight.

Saturday, 9th March 1878.

The question on Mr. Loranger's motion, having been put, was agreed to on the following division:

YEAS.

MM. Alleyn, Angers, Baker, Champagne, Chapleau, Charlebois, Church, Deschenes, Dulac, Dupont, Fortin (Gaspé), Fradette, Garneau, Gauthier, Houde (Maskinongé), Houde (Nicolet), Kennedy, Lacerte, Lalonde, Larochelle, Lavallée, Le Cavalier, Loranger, Lynch, Martin, Mathieu, McGauvran, Picard, Sawyer, St. Cyr, Taillon, Tarte, Turcotte, and Wurtele.—34.

NAYS.

MM. De Beaujeu, Fortin (Montmagny), Laberge, Lafontaine, Lafromboise, Molleur, Pâquet, Préfontaine, Rinfret dit Malouin, Shehyn, Sylvestre, and Watts.—12.

Mr. Loranger, seconded by Mr. Lynch, moved that the said address be engrossed and signed by Mr. Speaker, and that it be transmitted to his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec, with prayer that he transmit the same to his Excellency the Governor-General of Canada, and that the said address be also transmitted to the Senate and House of Commons of Canada.

Which motion was adopted on the same division.

And the question having been again put that Bill (No. 90) for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money required for defraying certain expenses of the civil Government for the fiscal year ending on the thirtieth day of June one thousand eight hundred and seventy-eight, and on the thirtieth day of June one thousand eight hundred and seventy-nine, and for other purposes connected with the Public Service, be now read a second time.

The Honourable Mr. Angers moved, seconded by the Honourable Mr. Church, that all the words after "Public Service" be struck out and replaced by the following: "be not now read, but that the reading thereof be suspended until such time as justice "shall have been rendered to the majority of this House, inasmuch as when the "resolutions upon which the said Bill is based were adopted, the Cabinet charged with "the public business enjoyed the confidence of this House and of the country; whilst "the present Administration does not possess that confidence."

Which amendment was agreed to on the following division:—

YEAS.

MM. Alleyn, Angers, Baker, Champagne, Chapleau, Charlebois, Church, Deschênes, Dulac, Dupont, Fortin (Gaspé), Fradette, Garneau, Gauthier, Houde (Maskinongé), Houde (Nicolet), Kennedy, Lacerte, Lalonde, Larochelle, Lavallée, Loranger, Lynch, Martin, McGauvran, Picard, Sawyer, St. Cyr, Taillon, Tarte, Turcotte, and Wurtele.—32.

NAYS.

MM. De Beaujeu, Fortin (Montmagny), Laberge, Lafontaine, Laframboise, Mathieu, Molleur, Pâquet, Préfontaine, Rinfret dit Malouin, Shehyn, Sylvestre, and Watts.—13.

The main motion as amended was then carried on the same division.

Mr. Mathieu, seconded by Mr. Champagne, moved,

That the Speaker do immediately issue his warrant, addressed to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery for the new writs for the election of Members to serve in the present Parliament for the Electoral Division of Lotbinière, for the Electoral Division of St. Hyacinthe, for the Electoral Division of St. John's, for the Electoral Division of Rimouski, in the place of Henri Gustave Joly, Esquire, Pierre Bachand, Esquire, Felix G. Marchand, Esquire, and Alexandre Chauveau, Esquire, who, since their respective elections as representatives of the above mentioned Electoral Divisions, have accepted an office of Emolument under the Crown, by which acceptance the seats of the said Henri Gustave Joly, Pierre Bachand, Felix G. Marchand, and Alexandre Chauveau have become vacant.

The Honourable Mr. Angers, seconded by the Honourable Mr. Church, moved in amendment to the said motion,

That the words "and this House, whilst ordering the issue of the said writs, deem it "to be their duty to declare that the Administration whose formation created these "vacancies does not possess the confidence of this House, nor that of the country," be added to the end thereof.

Which amendment was agreed to on the following division :—

YEAS.

MM. Alleyn, Angers, Baker, Champagne, Chapleau, Charlebois, Church, Deschenes, Dulac, Dupont, Fortin (Gaspé), Fradette, Garneau, Gauthier, Houde (Maskinongé), Houde (Nicolet), Kennedy, Lacerte, Lalonde, Larochelle, Lavallée, Loranger, Lynch, Martin, Mathieu, McGauvran, Picard, St. Cyr, Taillon, Tarte, Turcotte, and Wurtele. —32.

NAYS.

MM. De Beaujeu, Fortin (Montmagny), Laberge, Lafontaine, Laframboise, Molleur, Pâquet, Préfontaine, Rinfret dit Malouin, Shehyn, Sylvestre, and Watts.—12.

The main motion as amended was then carried on the same division.

On motion of the Honourable Mr. Laframboise, seconded by Mr. Watts, it was Resolved,—That when this House adjourns it do stand adjourned until three o'clock p.m. this day.

A message was received from the Legislative Council agreeing to—

Bill (No. 20), intituled "An Act to amend Chapter 77 of the Consolidated Statutes "for Lower Canada, respecting the Court of Queen's Bench, with an amendment to "which they desire the concurrence of this House."

Also the following bills without amendments :—

Bill (No. 11), intituled "An Act respecting the notification for and the attendance at "the removal of Seals and Inventories."

Bill (No. 55), intituled "An Act to amend certain articles of the Municipal Code of "the Province of Quebec."

Bill (No. 84), intituled "An Act to provide for the giving notice of Sheriff's sale to "hypothecary creditors."

Bill (No. 96), intituled "An Act to further amend the laws respecting Public "Instruction in this Province ;" and Bill (No. 100), intituled "An Act to amend Chapter 69 of the Consolidated Statutes "for Lower Canada, respecting Building Societies in the Province of Quebec."

And the House then adjourned.

FRIDAY, 8TH MARCH 1878.

The Honourable Legislative Councillors convened were :

The Honourable Henry Starnes, Speaker :

The Honourable Messieurs

Archambeault,	Gaudet,	Le Maire,	Ross,
Boucherville, de	Gingras,	Léry, de	Roy,
Bryson,	Hearn,	Panet,	Webb,
Dionne,	La Bruère, de	Proulx,	Wood.
Dostaler,	Laviolette,	Prudhomme,

The following petitions were severally brought up and laid on the table :—

By the Honourable Mr. Ross, of the Sisters of Providence of the Cote-St. Louis.

By the Honourable Mr. Hearn, of the Board of Trade of Quebec.

The following petitions were read and received :—

Of the inhabitants of the township of Woodbridge, county of Kamouraska, praying for the refund of the amount due by them to the Government on their lots.

Of the Board of Trade of Quebec, opposing the Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa, and Occidental Railway Act.

Hon. Mr. de La Bruère, seconded by Hon. Mr. Webb, moved,—

That the following address be presented to his Excellency the Governor-General of the Dominion of Canada, to the Senate and to the House of Commons of Canada, and to his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec.

To his Excellency the Honourable Luc Letellier de St. Just, Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec.

"The humble address of the Honourable Legislative Council of the Province of Quebec, respectfully showeth,—

That it appears from the explanations given by the Hon. M. De Boucherville, and from official correspondence communicated to this House, that his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor acknowledges that the members of the De Boucherville Cabinet acted in good faith in the discharge of their duties.

That his Excellency permitted the bills submitted to this House and to the Legislative Assembly to be discussed and voted upon, without any order on his part to suspend them.

That whilst expressing its loyalty and devotion to our Gracious Sovereign, and its respect for the Lieutenant-Governor of this Province, this House is of opinion :

That the dismissal from office of the De Boucherville Cabinet, having taken place without sufficient cause, constitutes an imminent danger to the maintenance of responsible government in this Province, is an abuse of power exercised in contempt of the majority of both Houses, whose confidence they possessed and still possess, and a violation of the rights and will of the people."

And, objection being taken by the Hon. Mr. Archambeault that this motion is not in order, because the notice required by the 28th Rule of this House had not been given,

The Speaker decided that the said motion is not in order.

And the decision of the Speaker being appealed from by the Hon. Mr. de La Bruère, for the reason that this motion being a motion of privilege and of urgency, does not require the usual notice demanded by the 28th Rule of this House.

The question was put, and the House reversed the decision of the Speaker.

And the question of concurrence being put on the said motion, it was unanimously resolved in the affirmative.

Then, on motion of the Hon. Mr. de La Bruère, seconded by the Hon. Mr. Webb, it was Ordered, That the Address be engrossed and signed by the Speaker of this House, and be by him transmitted to his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec, praying his Excellency to transmit it to his Excellency the Governor-General of the Dominion of Canada, to the Senate and to the House of Commons of Canada.

The Order of the Day was read for the third reading of the Bill (No. 20) intituled : "An Act to amend chapter 77 of the Consolidated Statutes of Lower Canada, respecting the Court of Queen's Bench."

The Hon. Mr. Archambeault moved :—

That the said Bill, as amended, be now read a third time.

The question was put whether this Bill, as amended, should pass ? It was Resolved in the affirmative.

Ordered, that the Clerk go down to the Legislative Assembly and acquaint that House that the Legislative Council have passed this Bill with several amendments, to which they desire the concurrence of the Legislative Assembly.

The Order of the Day was read for putting the House into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of Bill (No. 11) intituled : "An Act respecting the notification for " and the attendance at the removal of seals on inventories."

The House adjourned during pleasure, and was put into Committee of the Whole.

After some time the House was resumed.

The Honourable Mr. Wood, from the said Committee, reported that they had gone through the said Bill, and had directed him to report the same without amendment.

On motion of the Honourable Mr. de La Bruère, it was Ordered, that the said Bill be read a third time presently.

The said Bill was then accordingly read a third time.

The Honourable Mr. Archambault moved,—

That when this House do adjourn, it do stand adjourned until to morrow at 11 'clock A.M.

And the question of concurrence being put on the said motion, it was Resolved in the affirmative.

Then, on motion of the Honourable Mr. De Boucherville, the House adjourned until to-morrow at 11 o'clock A.M.

Exhibit No. 3.

No. 42.—Votes and Proceedings of the Legislative Assembly of the Province of Quebec.—Quebec, Saturday, 9th March 1878.

Mr. Speaker informed the House that, in conformity with the orders given to him at yesterday's sitting, he issued his warrant for the election of Members in the counties of those Members who have accepted office as Ministers; and that he was informed by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery that the answer of the Government was that the matter was under consideration.

The following letter and "copies of the correspondence and explanations relating to "the dismissal from office of the De Boucherville Government" were laid upon the table.

Sir, Quebec, 8th March 1878.

I have the honour to forward you, to be laid before the House, copy of the correspondence and explanations relating to the dismissal from office of the De Boucherville Government, which I read and communicated to the House.

I have, &c.,

A. R. Angers,

Ex-Attorney-General,

Member for the County of Montmorency.

Mr. Speaker,

"Mr. De Boucherville had received permission from the Lieutenant-Governor to give explanations respecting his dismissal from office at the sitting on Monday, the 4th March instant. Between half-past one and two o'clock of the same day, he received from his Excellency a notice not to give any explanations until the new Cabinet had been formed.

This event having been announced, the late De Boucherville Government has the right, in virtue of the permission so obtained, to give its explanation to the House and to the country.

It is my duty to announce to the House that the De Boucherville Government did not resign. A Government, possessing the confidence of the great majority of the Representative Assembly and of almost the whole of the Legislative Council, has no right to resign, if it has really at heart the interests of the country, and a respect for its duty. This Government was dismissed from office by the Lieutenant-Governor. The facts which preceded and followed this event are entered in a journal, kept from day to day and from hour to hour, under the dictation of the Ex-Premier, and the following is an extract and faithful recital thereof.

On the 26th February 1878, at half-past four o'clock, p.m., the Premier received from the Lieutenant-Governor, through his aide-de-camp, the following letter:

To the Honourable C. B. De Boucherville, Premier of the Province of Quebec.

Government House, Quebec, February 25, 1878.

The Lieutenant-Governor desires the Executive Council to prepare for his consideration a factum, including a copy of the following documents:—

1. A copy of the Acts of the Dominion Parliament authorising the construction of the railway known under the name of the "Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa, and Occidental railway," as well as a copy of the Acts of the Legislature of Quebec, respecting the same railway.

2. A copy of the Acts of the Legislature of the Province of Quebec, respecting the construction of the railway between Quebec and Montreal, commonly known as the "North Shore Railway."

3. A copy of the byelaws of each of the Municipal Corporations by which they agreed to assist in the construction of the said road.

4. A statement of the amount of the grant, paid by each of those corporations, and a copy of the correspondence exchanged between the Government, the railway commissioners or the contractors of the said road, and the said Municipal Corporations, with respect to their said grant or subsidy.

5. A copy of the several contracts entered into for the construction of the said road.

6. A copy of the official or confidential reports of the engineers to whom was entrusted the location of these lines of railway, in whole or in part.

7. A copy of the report of the railway commissioners, laid before both Houses during the present session, respecting the said roads.

8. A copy of the representations made to the Government by the municipal corporations interested or by the ratepayers of these municipalities, respecting the conditions of their grant or subsidy.

9. A copy of the resolutions proposed to the Provincial Legislature, during the present session, respecting the said subsidies, and to facilitate the payment and recovery of the same.

10. A copy of the Bill, based upon the said resolutions, which was introduced into the House during the present session.

11. A plan showing the locations of each of the said railways, or of any portion thereof.

12. A detailed statement of the reasons which induced the Provincial Government not to content themselves with the provisions of the statute and common law, and with those of the civil code of this province, for the recovery of the sums of money which might become due by the said corporations, but, without having in any manner previously consulted with the Lieutenant-Governor, to propose an ex post facto legislation to compel them thereto.

Another very important measure, to provide for the imposition of new taxes, was also similarly proposed to the Legislature, without having been previously submitted to the Lieutenant-Governor.

The Lieutenant-Governor is perfectly aware that measures of secondary importance, which have previously been sufficiently explained to him, may be, as a matter of routine, proposed to both Houses, without an express order from himself, but he cannot allow the Executive to communicate to the Legislature, on his behalf, any important or new measures, without his special order, and without his having been previously fully informed and advised thereof.

Luc Letellier,
Lieut.-Governor.

The Premier prepared his answer during the night of the 26th and 27th February. This answer was delivered by him, in person, to the Lieutenant-Governor at Spencer Wood, about ten o'clock a.m., on the 27th. It read as follows:—

To his Excellency the Hon. L. Letellier de St. Just, Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec.

May it please Your Excellency, Quebec, February 27, 1877.

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of the memorandum sent me yesterday afternoon by your Excellency, through your aide-de-camp, who, at the same time, informed me that you were ill in bed. I submitted this memorandum to the Executive Council, and I shall see, as your Excellency desires, that all due diligence be used in order that all the documents required may be transmitted to you as soon as possible.

In anticipation of the factum desired by your Excellency, which will contain a more detailed statement of the motives which induced the Provincial Government to bring in the measures to which you draw my attention, I consider it my duty to represent that the reasons, which, amongst others, caused the Government to submit to the Legislature a law obliging the municipalities to pay their subscriptions, for the construction of the Provincial railway, on the decision of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, after a sworn report, made by a competent engineer, and after a notice of fifteen days, to give such municipalities an opportunity of being heard,—are the ill-will of certain municipalities; shown by some in their neglect to comply with the request of the Treasurer, by others in their formal refusal to pay, and in certain cases, by resolutions adopted asking new conditions respecting the agreements which they had made with the Government.

The Government was of opinion that without such legislation, the object of which is to avoid the delays of ordinary legal proceedings, the result of the ill-will of these municipalities would have been either to necessitate a new loan by the Province, and consequently to cause a burden to be unjustly imposed upon municipalities which had entered into no engagements and which would derive no immediate benefit from the construction of the road, or the complete stoppage of the works already begun, together with the inevitable loss of interest on the enormous capital already laid out upon this enterprise and the other damages relating therefrom.

The Government, while undertaking, in the first place, by the said law, to fulfil the conditions which it had agreed upon with the said municipalities, considered that, in substituting for the ordinary courts the Lieutenant-Governor with an Executive Council responsible to the Legislature and to the people, it offered to the parties interested a tribunal which afforded as many guarantees as the ordinary courts. I would also take the liberty of calling your Excellency's attention to the fact that similar provisions are already in our Statutes. I would cite to your Excellency chapter 83 of the Consolidated Statutes of Canada, and also chapter 47 of 36 Vict. of the Statutes of Ontario.

I humbly submit to your Excellency that a law devised for the better securing of the execution of a contract cannot have a retroactive effect. It enacts for the future, and its objects are the respective interests of the parties.

Now, I beg your Excellency to note that, while you were at Rivière Ouelle, I had the honour of requesting your authorisation to lay the question of finances before the House, and that you were kind enough to reply that you sent me a blank form by mail, and I considered this at the time, as a great mark of confidence on your part. I did, in effect, receive a blank form with your signature, which I handed to the Treasurer, who had it filled up by your aide-de-camp.

Later on, I had the honour of requesting your Excellency's authorisation generally to lay money questions before the House, and this your Excellency granted with your usual condescension. This permision, moreover, had invariably been accorded me by your predecessor, the late lamented Mr. Caron.

I must admit that, with this authorisation, and the conviction in my mind that your Excellency had read the Treasurer's Budget Speech, in which he announced the taxes which were afterwards proposed, I considered I had a right to inform my colleagues that I had your permission for all questions respecting money.

I beg your Excellency to believe that I never had any intention of arrogating to myself the right of having measures passed without your approval, and that under existing circumstances, having had occasion to speak to your Excellency in reference to the law respecting the Provincial railway, and not having received any order to suspend it, I did not think your Excellency would discover in this measure any intention on my part to slight your prerogatives, which no one is more disposed than I am to respect and uphold.

(Signed) C. B. De Boucherville.

After some conversation the Lieutenant-Governor, having heard Mr. De Boucherville's explanations, admitted that, if there had been any misunderstanding, it was in good faith on the part of the latter, in authorising his colleagues to say that they were authorised to submit the legislation in reference to money matters. He afterwards told him, in reply to his question on the subject, that the only difficulty remaining was the question of the Quebec, Montreal, and Ottawa and Occidental Railway, and that he would give an answer on the following day, the 28th February.

On the 28th February, at about half-past seven in the evening, Mr. De Boucherville went to Spencer Wood to convey to the Lieutenant-Governor the documents asked for in the letter of the 25th (which documents were prepared by the Honourable the Secretary, and were accompanied by a synopsis). He asked him if he would soon give his answer. The Lieutenant-Governor told him that he would examine the documents and probably give it to him on the following day, the 1st March.

On leaving, Mr. De Boucherville said: "If I understand you rightly, you are hesitating between giving your sanction to the Railway Bill and reserving it." He replied, "That is it."

On the 2nd March, at five minutes to one in the afternoon, the aide-de-camp of the Lieutenant-Governor handed to Mr. De Boucherville the letter given hereafter. Before the aide-de-camp left, he was asked how his Excellency was. The aide-de-camp replied that he was not so well, and then asked when we intended closing the session. Mr. De Boucherville replied that he could not say, as many matters were in arrear.

The following is the letter in question :-

To the Hon. C. B. De Boucherville, Premier, Quebec.

Government House, Quebec, March 1, 1878.

The Lieutenant-Governor, taking into consideration the communication made to him verbally (on the 27th February) by the Premier, and also taking into consideration the letter which the Premier then gave to him, is prepared to admit that there had been no intention on the part of the Premier to slight the prerogatives of the Crown, and that there was only on his part an error, committed in good faith, in the interpretation that he gave to words used by the Lieutenant-Governor in the interview which they had on the 19th February instant—words which did not imply the authorisation attributed to them by the Premier.

With this interpretation and the instructions given in consequence by the Premier to the Honourable Messrs. Angers and Church, these gentlemen did not wittingly do anything against the duties of their office.

As to the blank, which the Lieutenant-Governor addressed to him from Rivière Ouelle, the Lieutenant-Governor knew that such blank was to be used for the purpose of submitting the estimates to the House.

This Act was a token of confidence on his part, as stated by the Premier in his letter of the 27th, but it was confidential.

The Lieutenant-Governor deems it his duty to observe that, in his memorandum of the 25th of February last, he in no way expressed the opinion that he thought that the Premier ever had the intention of arrogating to himself the "right" of "having measures "passed without his approval, or of slighting the prerogatives of the representative of the "Crown."

But the Premier must not lose sight of the fact that, although he had not so intended, the fact remains as he was told by the Lieutenant-Governor.

The fact of having submitted several new and important measures to the Legislature, without having previously, in any manner, consulted the Lieutenant-Governor, although without any intention of slighting his prerogatives, gives rise to one of those false positions which places the representative of the Crown in a difficult and critical situation, with reference to both Houses of the Legislature.

The Lieutenant-Governor cannot admit that the responsibility of this state of things rests upon him.

So far as concerns the Bill intituled "An Act respecting the Quebec, Montreal, Ottaway and Occidental Railway," the Premier cannot apply to the measure the pretended general authorisation mentioned by him in his letter, for their interview took place on the 19th February, and the Bill had then been before the House for several days, without the Lieutenant-Governor having been in any manner informed of it by his advisers.

The Lieutenant-Governor then told the Premier how much he regretted such legislation; he represented to him that he considered it to be contrary to the principles of law and justice; notwithstanding this, the measure was pushed on until it was adopted by both Houses.

It is true that the Premier gives in his letter, as one of his reasons for so acting, "that this permission of making use of the name of the representative of the Crown had "been, moreover, always allowed to him by the predecessor of the present Lieutenant-"Governor, the late lamented Mr. Caron."

This reason cannot avail with the Lieutenant-Governor, for, by so doing, he would abdicate his position as representative of the Crown, a proceeding which neither the Lieutenant-Governor nor the Premier could reconcile with the duties of the Lieutenant-Governor towards the Crown.

The Lieutenant-Governor regrets being compelled to state, as he told the Premier, that he has generally not been explicitly informed of the measures adopted by the Cabinet; although the Lieutenant-Governor often gave occasion therefor to the Premier, especially during the course of last year.

The Lieutenant-Governor, from time to time, since the last meeting of the Legislature, drew the attention of the Premier to several matters respecting the interests of the Province of Quebec, amongst others:

1. To the enormous expenditure occasioned by very large subsidies to several railways when the Province was burdened with the construction of the trunk line of railway from Quebec to Ottawa, which should prevail over all others, and that at a time when our finances compelled us to raise loans disproportioned to our revenues.

2. On the necessity of reducing the expenses of the Civil Government, and those of legislation, in place of having recourse to new taxes, with a view of avoiding financial embarrassment.

The Lieutenant-Governor, although with regret, expressed to the Premier the opinion that the Orders in Council for the increase of the salaries of civil service employees, seemed to him to be inopportune at a time when the Government had effected with the Bank of Montreal a loan at the rate of 7 per cent. for half a million, on condition of increasing this loan to one million; and, in fact, to-day even (1st March) the Lieutenant-Governor was obliged to allow an Order in Council to be passed to secure the last half million for the Government, without which the Government would be unable to meet its obligations, as stated to him by the honourable the treasurer, by order of the Premier.

The Premier did not, either then or since, inform the Lieutenant-Governor that the Government were in so impecunious a position as to require special legislation to increase the public burdens.

The Lieutenant-Governor therefore stated and repeated these facts to the Premier, and now deems it his duty to record them here, in order that they may serve as a memorandum for himself and the Premier.

It results therefore—

1. That, although the Lieutenant Governor had made several representations in his quality of representative of the Crown to the Premier on those various subjects of public interest, his advisers have taken administrative and legislative steps contrary to such representations, and without having previously advised him.

2. That the Lieutenant-Governor has, without evil motives, but in fact, been placed in a false position, by being exposed to a conflict with the desires of the Legislature, desires which he acknowledges to be paramount, when expressed in a constitutional manner.

The Lieutenant-Governor has attentively read and examined the memorandum and documents which the Premier was kind enough to bring him yesterday.

In the record are petitions from several municipal corporations and from citizens of different localities, addressed to the Lieutenant-Governor against the resolutions, and the Government Bill respecting the Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa, and Occidental Railway.

The Lieutenant-Governor was only yesterday in a position to take communication of some of these petitions, inasmuch as they had not been transmitted to him before the record.

The Lieutenant-Governor, after mature deliberation, cannot accept the advice of the Premier in reference to the sanction to be given to the Railway Bill, intituled " An " Act relating to the Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa, and Occidental Railway."

For all these reasons, therefore, the Lieutenant-Governor cannot conclude this memorandum without expressing to the Premier the regret which he feels in being no longer able to retain him in his position, contrary to the rights and prerogatives of the Crown.

(Signed) L. Letellier,
Lieutenant-Governor.

On the 2nd March about 2 o'clock p.m., Mr. De Boucherville went to Spencer Wood. When he arrived he was admitted to the presence of the Lieutenant-Governor, and told him " that according to the memorandum received from him that day, he understood " that he was dismissed from the office of Premier."

The Lieutenant-Governor told him he was to take his own interpretation from the letter. Upon this Mr. De Boucherville handed him the letter, which will be found further on, as being his answer.

The Lieutenant-Governor, without opening it before him, made some remarks on the difficulty in which the legislation had placed him.

Mr. De Boucherville replied that in his present position he thought he had no opinion to express on the subject. He then bowed himself out. When he had proceeded a short distance from the house he caused the vehicle to return, having forgotten to ask permission from the Lieutenant-Governor to give explanations to the House. After having been a second time admitted to the presence of the Lieutenant-Governor, he asked permission to give explanations and to make known the memorandum of the Lieutenant-Governor and his replies thereto.

The Lieutenant-Governor told him he had no objection, and asked him as to the person he should send for. Mr. De Boucherville replied that he looked upon himself —having been dismissed—as being in a different position from a minister who, although defeated in the House still retained the confidence of the Sovereign; that he had had a majority of twenty-five in one of the late votes; that under these circumstances he did not think he could advise him in the matter. He then left him, and while in the ante-room the Lieutenant-Governor recalled him and said, " Please delay the explanations " until Monday."

The following is a copy of the letter which Mr. De Boucherville handed to the Lieutenant-Governor, when the latter told him he was to take his own into interpretation of his memorandum.

May it please your Excellency, Quebec, March 2, 1878.

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your memorandum, in which you come to the conclusion that you cannot retain me in my position as Premier.

I have therefore no other duty to perform beyond submitting to my dismissal from office, communicated by your Excellency, reiterating at the same time my profound respect for the rights and prerogatives of the Crown, and my devotion to the interests of our Province.

I have, &c.
(Signed) C. B. De Boucherville.

To his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec.

On the 28th January 1878, M. De Boucherville had sent to his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor, who was then at Rivière Ouelle, the following telegraphic despatch—

" Can you send me authorisation resolutions respecting finances."

The Lieutenant-Governor on the following day, the 29th, telegraphed M. De Boucherville :

" Blank mailed to day. If presence necessary telegraph. Return Friday."

The resolutions respecting the North Shore Railway were submitted to the House only on the 29th January, after the telegram had been received from the Lieutenant-Governor, that a form signed in blank had been mailed to M. De Boucherville in reply to his despatch of the previous day, saying, " Can you send me authorisation resolutions " respecting finances ?"

On the 30th January the first resolution was reported from Committee of the Whole. On the 31st it was adopted by the House. On the 1st February the House again went into Committee of the Whole and reported the other resolutions on the same subject. But it was only on the 5th that the adoption of the report of the committee was carried, the House throwing out the motion of non-confidence on this point by 38 to 21.

On the 5th February a bill, based on these resolutions, was introduced; the second reading was delayed until the 18th February; the third reading took place on the 19th. During all this time the Lieutenant-Governor to whom the votes and proceedings were sent daily remained silent.

On the 19th February, Mr. De Boucherville met the Lieutenant-Governor and, in the conversation which took place on the subject of the measure, thought he had satisfied him as to its legality and the urgency of its being passed. The Lieutenant-Governor was so far from being explicit as to his intentions, that Mr. De Boucherville left him with the impression that he was authorised.

The Lieutenant-Governor does not contend, in his memorandum of the 1st March, 1878, that he had given orders to suspend the legislation.

Sent up to the Legislative Council, this bill had gone through its third reading before the first letter was received from the Lieutenant-Governor, dated the 25th February last, but only delivered at 4.30 p.m. on the 26th. In fact, the Lieutenant-Governor, in his letter of the 1st March, admits that he did not, in any way, in his memorandum of the 25th February, express the opinion that he considered the Premier had intended to arrogate to himself the right of getting measures passed without his approval or of slighting the prerogatives of the representative of the Crown.

Having ascertained that a misunderstanding existed as to the interpretation of the authorisation asked by telegraphic despatch on the 28th January and answered on the 29th by a message stating that a form signed in blank was sent, and in view of the impressions left by the conversation of the 19th February in Mr. De Boucherville's mind, should the Lieutenant-Governor have waited to make known, for the first time, the existence of this misunderstanding until the 26th February, at which date the whole of the legislation, of which he complains, has been discussed and voted in the affirmative by both Houses ?

The confidence shown by the Lieutenant-Governor on the 29th January in Mr. DeBoucherville by forwarding the form signed in blank, was calculated to justify him in interpreting the silence of the Lieutenant-Governor at least as not meaning dissent.

After these interviews of the 19th February, the silence observed until the 26th February was also of a nature to lead him to believe that he had a general authorisation to submit to the House all measures which the public service required.

On the 31st of January, twenty-six days previous to the first memorandum of the Lieutenant-Governor, the Honourable Treasurer made his budget speech, in which he announced the new taxes which it would be necessary to levy to meet the obligations of the Province, obligations contracted during several previous years and resulting from the policy then inaugurated on railways, and which had received the concurrence of several members belonging to the party opposing the Government.

Can this speech, published in extenso by the press of the whole country have escaped the notice of the Lieutenant-Governor ?

On the 19th of February, the resolutions demanding those taxes, but a lower rate than the one mentioned by the Treasurer in his speech, were presented; and on the 20th were adopted by a vote of 39 against 22.

The Lieutenant-Governor in his memorandum of the 1st March, complains that Mr. De Boucherville did not let him know that the Government was in an impecunious condition, requiring special legislation to increase the public taxes.

The Premier would have formed an erroneous idea of the situation, if he had so qualified the temporary embarrassment caused by the ill will of the municipalities which had subscribed for the construction of the provincial railway in neglecting to faithfully fulfil their obligations. He would have formed an erroneous idea of the situation, in presence of the results obtained, so far without any burden having been imposed in order to obtain them.

On the 22nd February, notice was given of resolutions respecting railways in the Eastern Townships and on the South Shore of the St. Lawrence.

On the 23rd of the same month the resolutions were introduced and subsequently adopted by a vote of 41 to 16. These resolutions do not in any way increase the actual debt of the Province.

The Lieutenant-Governor said in the same memorandum, " That the constitution of " the railway from Quebec to Ottawa should prevail over that of other railways." The legislation of many years past on this subject establishes no priority in favour of the provincial railway to the detriment of railways in the Eastern Townships and on the South Shore. The De Boucherville Government would have contravened the law if they had adopted any other view of the matter.

In the same memorandum the Lieutenant-Governor declares, " That he cannot accept " the advice of the Premier in reference to the sanction to be given to the Railway Bill, " intituled ' An Act respecting the Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa, and Occidental Railway.' " This declaration is premature, the Premier never having been called upon to give his opinion as to the sanction to be given; and, if he had been called upon to do so, he would, under the circumstances, have recommended that it be reserved for the decision of the Governor General, being in doubt as to the Lieutenant-Governor having the right, of his own accord, ex proprio motu, to exercise the prerogative of veto, and thus to decide finally on the fate of a measure passed by both Houses, when the British North America Act of 1867 seems to leave such power to the Governor-General.

The memorandum of his Excellency refers to petitions of several corporations and citizens of different places, addressed to the Lieutenant-Governor, against the resolutions and the measures of the Government concerning the Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa, and Occidental Railway.

It is sufficient to consider that these petitions came from debtors, from whom the law intends to force payment, to arrive at the correct conclusion that the opinion of both Houses should prevail over that expressed in such petitions.

The Lieutenant-Governor, in the same memorandum, refers to acts of Administration which date from before the session, and to which he has given his assent. As he alludes to matters for which the Government is responsible to both houses, as advisers of the Crown, and as they are foreign to the question of prerogative raised by the Lieutenant-Governor, they cannot be adduced in this memorandum as reasons for the conclusion, arrived at by his Excellency, that he cannot continue to retain M. De Boucherville in his position against the rights and prerogatives of the Crown; therefore, to avoid being carried away by this side issue or hors d'œuvre, there is no reason to question them now.

The Lieutenant-Governor further expresses the opinion " that the state of our finances " forced us to make loans disproportionate to our resources."

The necessity of here repeating this phrase is to be regretted; but the credit of the Province requires that it should be contradicted. The mere reading of the budget speech will suffice to reassure alarmists.

From all the above facts, from admissions contained in the last memorandum of the Lieutenant-Governor, from the transmission of the form signed in blank and sent by him in reply to a request from M. De Boucherville, asking his authorisation to introduce " resolutions respecting finances," and from the silence of the Lieutenant-Governor up to the 26th February last, it results that no measures have been introduced into the House in opposition to the prerogatives of the representative of the Sovereign.

Nothing more remains now for me to do but to reiterate the declaration made in commencing these explanations; the De Boucherville Cabinet has not resigned; it has been dismissed from office by the Lieutenant-Governor.

The conservative party is no longer in power. But it is, in this House, the power, a qualified power, a majority in the opposition. The majority here, the majority in the Council, the majority in the country. The conservative party has been dismissed from office; but it stands uncompromised, without compromise, without division, devoted to the Constitution and to the welfare of the country.

(Signed) A. R. Angers,
Ex-Attorney-General,
Member for the Electoral District of Montmorency.

A message was received from the Legislative Council agreeing to the following Bills without amendment:—

Bill (No. 83) intituled: " An Act to amend and consolidate the Quebec License Act " and its amendments."

Bill (No. 109) intituled: "An Act to further amend the law respecting subsidies in "money made to certain Railway Companies."

Bill (No. 48) intituled: "An Act to define and regulate the limits of certain municipalities and parishes in the counties of Nicolet, Arthabaska, and Drummond, and to "include, in the county of Nicolet, the portion of these municipalities and parishes not "now included therein."

Bill (No. 112) intituled: "An Act to amend the Act 20 Vict. cap. 125, respecting "the Quebec North Shore Turnpike Roads."

Bill (No. 108) intituled: "An Act respecting the indemnity to petty jurors in "criminal cases."

Bill (No. 12) intituled: "An Act respecting the proof of Heirships or Legatee-"ships."

Mr. Dupont, seconded by Mr. Lavallée, moved—

That the sum of one hundred dollars, deposited for the Bill (No. 45), intituled: "An "Act to incorporate the Beet Sugar Company of the Province of Quebec," be refunded to the promoters of the said Bill.

Which motion was withdrawn, the mover not having obtained the consent of the House.

Mr. Loranger, seconded by Mr. Lynch, moved that the following Address, affirming the privileges and immunities of the House, be presented by Mr. Speaker to his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec, at the Bar of the Legislative Council, at the prorogation of this Legislature.

To his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec.

May it please your Excellency,

The Legislative Assembly of the Province of Quebec deem it their duty to humbly represent that the Cabinet of which the Honourable Henri Gustave Joly is the chief, was defeated three different times, at the sitting of the 8th of March instant, by majorities varying from 20 to 22 votes.

And they regret to state that the Constitution has been disregarded by the advisers of his Excellency to the extent that they persist in retaining power against the will of the majority of this House and of the country.

The Legislative Assembly believes it, moreover, their duty to express their regret that they have been put to the necessity of suspending the passage of the Supply Bill, until justice has been extended to the majority of this House.

The Legislative Assembly desires respectfully to represent to your Excellency that there exists in the House a political party, possessing the confidence of the country, and having a large majority in the House; that this party is competent to administer the public business, and that the prorogation of the Legislature presently would be prejudicial to the legislation and to the interests of the country.

The Legislative Assembly desires to represent to your Excellency that the fact of the minority having a control over public affairs is the cause of the embarrassment under which the province labours, through the suspension of the Supply Bill; and that a prompt solution of the difficulty may be arrived at by acting in conformity with the Constitution.

The Legislative Assembly desires also to represent to your Excellency, that inasmuch as there exists in the House a political party strong enough to command a large majority there is no necessity for a dissolution of the Legislature, a step which will cause considerable and useless expense to the province, and seriously threaten the peace and tranquility of the people of this province.

And your petitioners will ever pray.

And objection having been taken that the said motion is contrary to the Constitution and should be considered out of order.

Mr. Speaker ruled:

"That the point of order was raised and decided yesterday."

And appeal having been made from Mr. Speaker's decision.

The question was put and carried in the affirmative on the following division:—

In favour of Mr. Speaker's decision.

MM. Alleyn, Angers, Baker, Champagne, Chapleau, Charlebois, Deschenes, Dulace Dupont, Fortin (Gaspé), Fradette, Garneau, Gauthier, Houde (Maskinongé), Houd, (Nicolet), Kennedy, Lacerte, Lalonde, Larochelle, Lavallée, Le Cavalier, Loranger, Lynch, Martin, Mathieu, McGauvran, Picard, Sawyer, St. Cyr, Taillon, Tarte, Thornton, and Wurtele.—33.

Against Mr. Speaker's decision.

MM. De Beaujeu, Fortin (Montmagny), Laberge, Lafontaine, Laframboise, Molleur, Pâquet, Prefontaine, Rinfret dit Moulin, Shehyn, Sylvestre, and Watts.—12.

A message was received from his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor, by Samuel Staunton Hatt, Esquire, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, desiring the attendance of the House in the Legislative Council Chamber.

Accordingly Mr. Speaker, with the Members present, went to the Legislative Council Chamber, when his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor was pleased, in Her Majesty's name, to give the Royal assent to the following Bills, namely:—

After which his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor was pleased to close the Third Session, the Third Parliament of the Province of Quebec, with the following speech:

Honourable Gentlemen of the Legislative Council:

Gentlemen of the Legislative Assembly:

Being desirous of ascertaining, in a constitutional manner, the feelings of the people of this Province, regarding the present state of public affairs, and the ministerial changes which have just taken place, I have determined upon proroguing the Legislature of this Province, with a view to its dissolution at an early date.

I sincerely entertain the hope that the electors of this Province will, in the choice of their representatives, exhibit as much judgment as patriotism in order to assure peace, prosperity, and happiness to the people of this Province.

The Provincial Legislature was then prorogued to Thursday the eleventh day of April next.

Louis Beaubien,
Speaker.

Exhibit No. 4.

No. 40.—Votes and Proceedings of the Legislative Assembly of the Province of Quebec.—Quebec, Thursday, 7th March 1878.

The Honourable Mr. Angers, seconded by Honourable Mr. Church, moved that the House do now adjourn, and that it do stand adjourned until 3 o'clock to-morrow afternoon.

Mr. Lynch, seconded by Mr. Loranger, moved in amendment, that this House do not now adjourn, but that it be Resolved,—That this House desires to reiterate its expression of loyalty and attachment to Her Majesty Queen Victoria, and its perfect submission to the Constitution.

That this House renews the declaration of its confidence in the De Boucherville Administration, so often and decidedly expressed during the present session.

That this House desires firmly and emphatically to declare that it has not and cannot have confidence in any administration which may be substituted for the one dismissed,—inasmuch as such dismissal occurred whilst the De Boucherville Administration enjoyed the entire confidence of the large majority of the representatives of the people, in Provincial Legislature assembled; unless such Administration to be appointed be a strong and efficient one chosen from the party represented by the majority of this House.

That the foregoing resolutions be referred to a Select Committee composed of Messrs. Wurtele, Taillon, Tarte, the mover and the seconder, to prepare and report the draft of an address to his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor in conformity with the said resolutions.

And objection having been taken that this motion was not in order, inasmuch as allusion is made to the dismissal of the Members of the Government, and that there are no documents relating to that subject before the House;

And another objection having also been taken that the main motion was not in order, as two days' notice was not given;

Mr. Speaker ruled:

On the first objection: "That the matter is before the House; that it was brought "up in the House on the 4th March instant, by the honourable member for Mont-"morency;"

And, on the second objection, "That a motion to adjourn is always in order."

And a further objection having been taken that the motion in amendment was out of order, inasmuch as no motion in amendment can be made to a motion to adjourn the House.

Mr. Speaker ruled:

"That the motion can be made, as we may find similar precedents in the journals of "the House of Commons."

And further objection having been taken that the motion in amendment has no reference to the main motion;

Mr. Speaker ruled:

"That he had already given his decision on that objection."

And the motion in amendment having been put, it was agreed to on the following division:—

YEAS.

MM. Alleyn, Angers, Baker, Champagne, Chapleau, Charlebois, Church, Deschenes, Dulac, Dupont, Fortin (Gaspé), Fradette, Garneau, Gauthier, Houde (Maskinongé), Houde (Nicolet), Kennedy, Lacerte, Lalonde, Larochelle, Lavallée, Le Cavalier, Loranger, Lynch, Martin, Mathieu, McGauvran, Peltier, Picard, Sawyer, St. Cyr, Taillon, Tarte, Turcotte, and Wurtele.—35.

NAYS.

MM. Bachand, Cameron, Chauveau, De Beaujeu, Fortin (Montmagny), Laberge, Lafontaine, Laframboise, Marchand, Molleur, Pâquet, Prefontaine, Rinfret dit Malouin, Shehyn, Sylvestre, and Watts.—16.

The question on the main motion, as amended, was then put and carried on the same division.

And objection being taken that this Committee has been named during the sitting of the House, and not having adjourned to allow the Committee to meet, the Committee cannot report;

Mr. Speaker ruled:

"That inasmuch as Committees appointed to draft addresses in answer to Speeches from the Throne are accustomed to report at once, without suspending the proceedings of the House by adjourning, therefore, the same proceeding can be allowed in this instance."

And appeal having been made from Mr. Speaker's decision.

The question was put and the decision maintained on the following division:—

In favour of Mr. Speaker's decision.

MM. Alleyn, Angers, Baker, Champagne, Chapleau, Charlebois, Church, Deschenes, Dulac, Dupont, Fradette, Garneau, Gauthier, Houde (Maskinongé), Houde (Nicolet), Lacerte, Lalonde, Larochelle, Lavalée, Le Cavalier, Loranger, Lynch, Martin, Mathieu, McGauvran, Peltier, Picard, Sawyer, St. Cyr, Taillon, Tarte, and Wurtele.—32.

Against Mr. Speaker's decision.

MM. Bachand, Cameron, Chauveau, De Beaujeu, Fortin (Montmagny), Kennedy, Laberge, Lafontaine, Laframboise, Marchand, Molleur, Pâquet, Prefontaine, Rinfret dit Malouin, Shehyn, Sylvestre, Turcotte, and Watts.—18.

Mr. Lynch then reported the draft of an Address to his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor, and the same being read a second time, on a division, was agreed to, and is as followeth:—

"To his Excellency the Honourable Luc Letellier de St. Just, Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec.

"MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY:

"We, Her Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly of Quebec, in Provincial Legislature assembled, 'desire to reiterate the expression of our 'loyalty and attachment to Her Majesty Queen Victoria,' and our perfect submission to the Constitution.

"We renew the declaration of our confidence in the De Boucherville administration, so often and decidedly expressed during the present session.

"We desire firmly and emphatically to declare that we have not and cannot have confidence in any administration which may be substituted for the one dismissed, inasmuch as such dismissal occurred whilst the De Boucherville administration enjoyed the entire confidence of the large majority of the representatives of the people, in Provincial Legislature assembled, unless such administration to be appointed be a strong and efficient one, chosen from the party represented by the majority in this House."

On motion of Mr. Lynch, seconded by Mr. Loranger, it was, on a division

Ordered,—That the said address be engrossed and that it be presented to his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor by the Honourable the speaker of this House.

And the House then adjourned.

LOUIS BEAUBIEN,
Speaker.

Exhibit No. 5.

MESSAGE from his EXCELLENCY the GOVERNOR GENERAL.

DUFFERIN, Government House, Ottawa, March 22, 1878.

THE Governor General transmits to the Senate and House of Commons an address from the Legislative Council of the Province of Quebec to the Senate and House of Commons; also, an address from the Legislative Assembly of the Province of Quebec to the Senate and House of Commons—on the subject of recent ministerial changes in that Province.

Legislative Assembly, Friday, March 8, 1878.

Resolved, that the following address be presented to his Excellency the Governor General of the Dominion of Canada, to the Senate and Commons of Canada, and to his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec.

Attest,

E. SIMARD,
D.C.L.A.

Legislative Assembly, Friday, March 8, 1878.

Resolved, that the said address be engrossed and signed by Mr. Speaker, and that it be transmitted to his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec, with prayer that he transmit the same to his Excellency the Governor General of Canada, and that the said address be also transmitted to the Senate and House of Commons of Canada.

Attest,

E. SIMARD,
D.C.L.A.

To the Honourable the Members of the Senate and of the House of Commons of the Dominion of Canada, in Parliament assembled.

The humble address of the Legislative Assembly of the Province of Quebec, respectfully showeth—

That it appears from the explanations given by the Honourable M. Angers, and from the official correspondence communicated to this House, that his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor acknowledges that the members of the De Boucherville Cabinet have acted in good faith in the discharge of their duties:

That his Excellency has allowed the measures submitted by his Government to this House, and to the Legislative Council, to be discussed and voted upon without order on his part to suspend them:

That whilst asserting their devotion to our Gracious Sovereign, and their respect towards his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor of this Province, this House is of opinion:

That the dismissal from office of the De Boucherville Cabinet has taken place without reason, constitutes an eminent danger to the existence of responsible government of this Province, and is an abuse of power in contempt of the majority of this House, whose confidence they possessed, and still possess, and is a violation of the liberties and will of the people.

And your petitioners will ever pray.

I have, &c.
LOUIS BEAUBIEN,
Speaker of the Legislative Assembly of the Province of Quebec.

Legislative Assembly, Quebec,
March 8, 1878.

Government House, Quebec,
March 18, 1878.

SIR,

I HAVE the honour to forward you an address to the Honourable the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, voted by the Legislative Council of the Province of Quebec, on the 8th instant.

I have, &c.
L. LETELLIER.

The Hon. R. W. Scott,
Secretary of State, Ottawa.

Legislative Council,
Friday, March 8, 1878.

Resolved, That this Address be engrossed and signed by the Speaker of this House, and transmitted by him to his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec, with a request that he will transmit it to his Excellency the Governor-General of the Dominion of Canada, and to the Senate and House of Commons of Canada.

Attest,
BOUCHER DE BOUCHERVILLE,
Clerk, Legislative Council.

To the Honourable the Senate and House of Commons of the Dominion of Canada.

The humble Address of the Honourable the Legislative Council of the Province of Quebec respectfully showeth:—

That it appears from explanation given by the Honourable M. De Boucherville, and from official correspondence communicated to this House, that his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor acknowledges that the Members of the De Boucherville Cabinet acted in good faith in the discharge of their duties;

That his Excellency permitted the Bills submitted to this House, and to the Legislative Assembly, to be discussed and voted upon without any order on his part to suspend them;

That, whilst expressing its loyalty and devotion to our Gracious Sovereign, and its respect for the Lieutenant-Governor of this Province, this House is of opinion:

That the dismissal from office of the De Boucherville Cabinet having taken place without sufficient cause, constitutes an imminent danger to the maintenance of responsible government in this Province, is an abuse of power exercised in contempt of the majority of both Houses whose confidence they possessed, and still possess, and a violation of the rights and will of the people.

HENRY STARNES,
Speaker, Legislative Council.

Legislative Council,
Friday, March 8, 1878.

Message from His Excellency the Governor-General.

Dufferin,

The Governor-General transmits to the Senate and House of Commons a Memorandum from his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec, with accompanying documents, containing explanations in reference to the recent ministerial changes in that Province.

Government House, Ottawa,
March 26, 1878.

(Translation.)

To His Excellency the Right Hon. the Earl of Dufferin, K.P., K.C.B., G.C.M.G., Governor-General of Canada, Ottawa.

Government House, Quebec,
March 19, 1878.

My Lord,

The annexed explanatory case which I now address to your Excellency will, I am persuaded, have the effect of showing that I have always acted towards M. DeBoucherville and his colleagues with good will, and with every desire of affording to them co-operation during their tenure of office.

What might have tended to produce unfortunate conflicts between myself and my Cabinet was almost invariably smoothed over by my friendly desire to overlook the irregularities which I have noted in the present statement of facts.

I hope, my Lord, that the difficult position which I have been compelled to occupy will be justified, not only because it is constitutional, but also because the conduct of my Cabinet endangered not only the prerogatives of the Crown, but also the most important interests of the people of this Province.

I have, &c.
(Signed) L. Letellier,
Lieutenant-Governor.

(Translation.)

To the Right Hon. the Earl of Dufferin, K.P., K.C.B., K.C.M.G., Governor-General of Canada, Ottawa.

Government House, Quebec,
March 18, 1878.

My Lord,

I have the honour now to submit, for your Lordship's consideration, documents and details which I could not lay before the public, but from which it would have been more clearly understood that the dismissal of M. DeBoucherville's Cabinet was forced upon me by circumstances.

These details are not contained in the correspondence which I authorised M. De Boucherville to place before the Houses, and which are hereunto annexed.

From the day that I was, by your Excellency, raised to the position I occupy at present, all my private relations with the members of my Cabinet, up to the time of their dismissal from office, were, I must admit, generally of an agreeable nature; but in those of an official character with the Premier I almost invariably felt that I did not enjoy that entire confidence on his part which is the chief element of a cordial understanding between the Representative of the Crown and his advisers.

After having studied the general state of the affairs of our Province, after having become convinced that legislative and administrative changes were becoming more and more necessary, I decided upon using with moderation, and with the greatest possible discretion, the influence attached to my position, in order to obtain the realisation of that which I deemed to be of the greatest advantage to the Province.

I regret to state to your Excellency that, although M. DeBoucherville did, on most occasions, take my advice in good part, and generally approved of it, he nevertheless almost always acted as though he had never received it. Nevertheless, far from using my authority to obstruct his action in any way, I invariably treated him with great indulgence, as will appear to your Excellency by the following facts :—

1st. During the Session of 1876 a Bill had been read three times in one of the two branches of the Legislature, and only twice in the other.

This Bill, bearing all the certificates which were necessary to induce me to believe that it had been regularly passed and adopted, was submitted to me by the Premier for my sanction.

In consequence of being left in ignorance of these facts by my advisers I sanctioned the Bill.

Not long afterwards I was informed of the irregularity, and I immediately spoke of it to the Premier. I made the observation that such an act would entail too serious consequences to allow of its being passed over.

As a favour to him, however, I passed over this instance of irregular legislation, which was then irreparable.

2nd. During the same session another Bill was submitted to me for my sanction. On examining it, I perceived a blank which had not been filled up, which I pointed out to the Premier in the following letter :—

" (Private.)

" My dear Premier, Quebec, December 27, 1876.

" A Bill (E) which originated in the Council, was passed by the Legislative " Assembly without amendment ; upon reading it, before adding my certificate of " sanction, I noticed that a blank had not been filled up in the seventh line of the sixth " section.

" You followed the usual practice in not fixing the amount of the penalty in the " Legislative Council ; but the matter passed unperceived, or the officers, through some " mistake, omitted to insert the amount fixed by the House, or it may have been an " error in the proof sheets.

" While on the subject of these mistakes, you will find another in the second section " of the same Act, wherein the word 'amender' is in the infinitive mood. I notice this " latter inaccuracy, to which I do not attach much importance, only because I discovered " another in an Act in which I had to point out to you an omission which I consider " fatal.

" Yours very truly,

" (Signed) L. Letellier."

The Premier came to me and said that he regretted the omission ; he requested me to give my sanction to the Bill in the state in which it was. The conciliatory spirit which I showed in granting my consent seemed to please him.

3rd. In March 1877 (vide Appendix A), my advisers caused me to make an appointment of a municipal councillor for the south ward of the village of Montmagny, under the pretext that there had been no election, or that if such election had taken place it was illegal.

The whole of the circumstances connected with this case I deem it my duty to explain to your Excellency, on account of the important principle involved therein.

After due personal examination of the petitions and other accompanying documents relating to that election, I called on the Premier, at his own office, to beg of him not to hurry the appointment which he was asked to make of a municipal councillor for that locality, before receiving more ample information.

I pointed out to him that it appeared that a municipal election had taken place, and that in such case, as a principle, the Executive Council should not interfere.

I added that from the moment that a legal, or even an illegal election had taken place, the duty of deciding it rested with the Courts in accordance with the ordinary course of law, of which they are the interpreters.

I then intimated to M. De Boucherville that I maintained on principle that all matters cognisable by the Judiciary should be invariably left to the Courts, which, from their organization, are better fitted than the Executive to inquire into matters of fact and of evidence, and that I would never allow the substitution of the powers of the Executive for those of the Courts, when the latter had jurisdiction.

The Premier admitted that that opinion and the principles on which I based it were in conformity with his ideas, and necessary for the proper Administration of justice. He asked me if I would consent to see M. Angers, the Attorney-General, on the subject.

I at once consented, and the Attorney-General was immediately sent for; the acts connected with that election difficulty, and my views regarding them were then communicated to him. He promised that before any appointment should be made by the Lieutenant-Governor, he would make inquiry.

Shortly afterwards he reported to me that he had made an inquiry into the facts of the case, and at his suggestion, I appointed Jules Bélanger to be councillor.

In the beginning of March 1877 difficulties and quarrels arose at Montmagny in consequence of that election.

After that appointment those quarrels broke forth afresh in the municipal council itself, from which the councillor whom I had thus been caused to appoint was expelled with violence. That appointment I was recommended to make, notwithstanding the fact that an election had taken place; that it had been held and presided over by the Mayor, that Eugene Fournier had been returned by acclamation, that he had been sworn in according to law, and that, at the very time when the appointment of Jules Bélanger was recommended to me, the person thus elected had in fact taken his seat, had been sworn, and had sat at the said Council, as appears by the minutes of the council.

When I afterwards learned these facts, I communicated them to the Premier, whom I requested to prepare a revocation of the appointment which I had thus been caused to make, contrary to the principles above set forth, and the justice of which he had himself admitted.

The Premier answered that the matter was of a very delicate nature, as such a proceeding would be contrary to the recommendation of M. Angers, his Attorney-General; he concluded by saying that he would get him to prepare a report on the subject.

I received that report some days later. After having read it, I again intimated to M. De Boucherville, that in the interests of peace, and in conformity with the principle that executive should not be substituted for judicial power in matters within the province of the latter, I insisted upon the revocation being make.

After waiting several days for an answer, and not having received any from the Premier, I addressed a letter to him, of which the following is a copy:—

" (Private and Confidential.

" My dear De Boucherville, Quebec, March 14, 1877.

I have not received any answer on the subject of the appointment of a Councillor at Montmagny.

Those who deceived the Government in order to induce me to perform an executive act in connexion with a question which they then knew to be within the judicial power, do not, in my opinion, deserve consideration which cannot but be injurious to the Government and myself.

The remedy is very simple—rescind the appointment—allow the parties interested to fight it out before the Courts.

Yours, &c.
(Signed) L. Letellier."

If, my Lord, I insist upon this latter point, it is to show your Excellency that the Prime Minister was then perfectly aware of my views on that point, and should not, in consequence, have introduced, during the last Session of our Legislature, any legislative measure or performed any administrative act tending to substitute executive for judicial power, without notifying me, and especially without advising me on the subject.

It was easy for the Premier to understand, from my remarks and the frequent conversation which I had with him, that I could not consent to see Her Majesty's subjects despoiled of the right guaranteed to them by Magna Charta, that their property should never be interfered with, except in virtue of a judgment rendered by the tribunals of the country.

4th. On the 19th March 1877, being on the eve of absenting myself for a few days I wrote to the Hon. M. Chapleau, and in a postscript I said: " Please oblige me by telling the Premier that if he needs my concurrence, Mr. Gauthier may bring down to me the documents requiring my signature."

M. De Boucherville should have understood from that, that if I was ready to give my concurrence, it was on condition of having all documents submitted to me before signing them.

I leave you, my Lord, to judge in what manner my views were interpreted.

5th. Under date of the 6th of November last, I addressed to the Honourable M. De Boucherville the letter of which the following is a copy :—

" Private.

" My dear De Boucherville, Quebec, November 6, 1877.

In the last " Official Gazette " were published under my signature, two proclamations which I had not signed.

One was for the summoning of Parliament, which I had reserved in order to confer with you, the other, which I did not even see, appoints a day of Thanksgiving.

These proceedings, the nature of which I shall not characterise, entail, apart from their impropriety, invalidities whieh you will easily understand.

Yours, &c.

The Hon. C. B. De Boucherville, Premier. (Signed) L. Letellier."

The following are the notes which I took of the conversation which I had with M. De Boucherville on the subject.

" M. De Boucherville came on the same day he received the letter to tell me that he regretted that the thing had occurred, and that it was no fault of his. I accepted the excuse, and I then told him that I would not tolerate my name being used, when necessary for any duty of my office, unless the documents requiring my signature had been previously submitted to me, and unless information was afforded to me ; which M. De Boucherville assured me would be the course followed in future.

6th. But my Lord, there is another point still more important, which I cannot any longer refrain from mentioning.

From the conversation which I have held with M. De Boucherville, there results a fact, which, if it were known, would of itself have sufficiently justified me in believing that he did not possess the confidence of the people of this Province.

On two different occasions, some time after the session of 1877, I pointed out to him that millions had been voted to aid railways in general at a time when our finances did not appear to me to be in a condition to warrant, all at once, a lavish expenditure in subsidizing these numerous undertakings, particularly as, apart from that, our credit was " so heavily pledged towards the building of the " Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa, and " Occidental Railway."

He very frankly avowed that these grants, though they were for the development of the Province, had been necessitated by political considerations ; that without them, the support of the members whose counties were traversed by those railways would cease to be secured to Government ; that there would be no means of having a majority ; that those members formed combinations—" rings "—to control the House.

M. De Boucherville is not unaware that I thereupon told him that it was better to save the Province than a Government, and that if his Administration was not strong enough to resist those influences, it would be better for him to form a combination of honest and well meaning men, from both sides of the House, rather than submit to the dictation of those " rings," and to the control of those combinations.

When he made no attempt to escape from that deleterious influence, after his own avowal that the Legislature was controlled by those " rings," when by his legislation he sought to favour them anew during the last session, without having previously advised with me, had I not the right, as the Representative of my Sovereign, to believe and to be convinced that M. DeBoucherville did not possess a constitutional majority in the Legislative Assembly.

7th. In communicating to both Houses my Memoranda of the 25th February and 1st March last, the Premier and Mr. Attorney-General Angers, in violation of their duty, overstepped the authorisation which I had given by my letter of the 4th of March last for that purpose. They added to that communication a report of pretended conversations, the correctness of which I contest, and the impropriety of which I maintain.

I shall point out, my Lord, one fact alone to prove that incorrectness and that impropriety. The Hon. Messrs. De Boucherville and Angers, in their explanations to the two Houses, lay great stress on the telegram which M. De Boucherville despatched to me at Rivière Ouelle, to ask my permission to introduce resolutions concerning the finances, and on the blank signature that I sent up in answer to it.

But these gentlemen themselves had that blank signature filled up by my private secretary, so as to give to the telegram the meaning which I attributed to it, namely, a request for permission to introduce the supplies. The following is a copy of the message produced with that blank signature :—

" L. Letellier,

" The Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec transmits to the Legislative Assembly the supplementary estimates for the current year and for the fiscal year ending 30th June 1879, which, in conformity with the provisions of the 54th section of the British North America Act, 1867, he recommends to the Legislative Assembly.

My ministers never had, by their own admission, any other authorisation from me for the introduction of their railway and taxation resolutions than the blank signature above mentioned, in which not a word is said of them. Besides which, it will be noticed that the railway resolutions were introduced on the 29th January, whereas the message is dated the 30th.

It is for this reason, my Lord, that I bring to your knowledge all the facts and details which are connected with the relations which I have had with M. De Boucherville and his colleagues.

Were the controversy with me alone, as a private individual, I would abstain from any remonstrance against the injustice of their reflections upon the conduct of the Representative of the Crown, which they have made in violation of their duty ; but in this matter the maintenance of the Constitution is at stake.

If, without any authority from me, proclamations have been published which I never signed, is it surprising that messages were communicated in my name to the houses respecting which I had never been consulted ?

It is because, as the Representative of my Sovereign, I have been unjustly and shamefully dragged before the public that I make known to you, my Lord, that, in the performance of my duty as her Representative, my object has not only been to protect the dignity of my office but to afford to the people of this Province an opportunity of knowing that, under existing circumstances, the exercise of the Royal prerogative has not been hostile to their constitutional liberties ; but that, on the contrary it has afforded them the means of freely exercising their judgment.

There results, my Lord, from what I have now stated :—

1st. That in general the recommendations which I made to my Cabinet did not receive the consideration which is due to the Representative of the Crown.

2nd. That my name has been used by the members of the Government in the signature of documents which I had never seen.

3rd. That a proclamation summoning the Legislature was published in " Official Gazette " without my being consulted or informed of it, and before my signature had been attached thereto.

4th. That a like proclamation fixing a Day of Thanksgiving was also published under similar circumstances.

5th. That, although I had intimated to the Premier by my advice, and by my letter of the 14th of March 1877, my firm determination to protect the inhabitants of this Province against the arbitrary decisions of the Executive in matters within the jurisdiction of the courts of justice, he thought proper, without my participation and without advising me, to propose to both Houses, in legislating for the " Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa, and Occidental Railway," to substitute the power of the Executive for that of the Judiciary.

6th. That, without having advised me, and without having received authorisation of any sort whatever from me, the Government of M. De Boucherville proposed to the Legislature a measure of almost general taxation upon the ordinary contracts and transactions of life, transfers of bank stock, &c., while no message from me had been asked for this object, nor signed by me to authorise its proposition to the Houses.

7th. That, after its dismissal, the Government of M. De Boucherville again failed in its duty by assigning reasons for the adjournment of the House from day to day, different from those agreed on between myself and the Premier, at the risk of prejudicing public opinion against the Representative of the Crown.

8th. That at the time of the communication of the causes which rendered necessary the dismissal of the Cabinet, in the explanations which were given by the Premier to the Legislative Council, and by the Attorney-General to the Legislative Assembly, both of them referred to pretended conversations which they had no authority whatever to communicate to the Legislature, since the Premier had, by his answer to the letter of the Lieutenant-Governor of the 4th March last, limited his explanations to the communication to both Houses of my Memoranda of the 25th February and 1st March, and the answers of the Premier of the 27th February and of the 2nd and 4th March, instant.

9th. That, therefore the additions and the comments made by the Premier before the Legislative Council, and by the Attorney-General before the Legislative Assembly, were contrary to the conditions agreed upon between the Lieutenant-Governor and the Premier.

10th. That the Premier and his colleagues, by making use of pretended private conversations to explain the causes of their dismissal, in contravention to their duty to the Crown and to what they had pledged themselves to observe with regard to it, have placed the Lieutenant-Governor under the necessity of bringing under the notice of your Excellency all the reasons for that dismissal.

I have, &c.

Lieutenant-Governor.

Summary of Official Record.

In January 1877 an election had taken place for the south ward of the village of Montmagny. That election having been declared null and void by the Court, it ordered a fresh election, and appointed Eugène Hamond to preside thereat.

On the day fixed, Eugène Hamond refusing to preside, Naz. Bernatchez, Esq., Mayor of the municipality, the senior magistrate present, presided.

The meeting elected Eugène Fournier.

Eugène Hamond wrote to the Lieutenant-Governor that he had not presided at the meeting, without adding, however, that there had been no election. He recommended at the same time, that Jules Bélanger be appointed.

Eugène Fournier, elected at the meeting of the 19th February, took the oath of office and took his seat on the 23rd February.

On the 3rd of March the Attorney-General (M. Angers) recommended the appointment of Jules Bélanger, who was accordingly appointed on the 7th of the same month.

On the 10th of March Mr. Bernatchez, Mayor of Montmagny, addressed to the Lieutenant-Governor a memorial setting forth the facts, and praying that the appointment be cancelled.

On the 15th of March the Attorney-General made a report, recommending that the appointment of Jules Bélanger be maintained.

On the 27th of March the Lieutenant-Governor revoked that appointment, on a report of the Government.

Quebec, March 4, 1878.

The Lieutenant-Governor desires that his two memoranda (of the 25th February and 1st March), addressed to the Hon. M. DeBoucherville, and the answers made to those memoranda by the Hon. M. De Boucherville (of the 27th February and 3rd March), be not now communicated to both Houses.

That communication, authorised by the Lieutenant-Governor at the request of the Hon. M. De Boucherville, should be made as soon as the arrangements for the formation of a new Executive Council are completed.

The Hon. M. De Boucherville may communicate to the Houses that the adjournment from day to day is rendered necessary by the last-mentioned cause.

Your Excellency, Quebec, March 4, 1878.

In conformity with your wish expressed in a letter of to-day's date, I shall withhold, until the formation of a new Executive Council, the explanations I was authorised by your Excellency to communicate to the Houses.

Government House, Quebec,
February 25, 1878.

The Lieutenant-Governor desires the Executive Council to prepare, for his consideration, a "factum" containing a copy of the following documents, viz. :—

1. A copy of the Acts of the Federal Parliament authorising the construction of the railway now known under the name of "Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa, and Occidental," as well as a copy of the Acts of the Legislature of the Province of Quebec respecting the said railway.

2. A copy of the Acts of the Legislature of the Province of Quebec, respecting the building of the railway between Quebec and Montreal, which line is commonly designated by the name of "North Shore Railway."

3. A copy of the byelaws of each of the municipal corporations by which they undertook to help in constructing the said railways.

4. A statement of the amount of the bonus paid by each of those corporations, and a copy of the correspondence between the Government, its commissioners, or the contractors for the said railways, and the aforesaid municipalities, with regard to their bonus or subsidy.

5. A copy of the various contracts entered into for the building of those several roads.

6. A copy of the official or confidential reports of the engineers who have been ordered to locate those lines of railway in whole or in part.

7. A copy of the report of the Railway Commissioners submitted to the Houses, during the present session, with regard to the said railways.

8. A copy of the representations made to the Government by the municipal bodies so interested, or the ratepayers of those municipalities, with regard to the conditions of their bonus or subsidy.

9. A copy of the resolutions which have been proposed to the Provincial Legislature during the present session, with regard to the aforesaid subsidies, and to facilitate the payment and collection thereof.

10. A copy of the Bill based on those resolutions which has been introduced in the Legislature of Quebec during the present session.

11. A plan showing the several locatings of each of the said railways or of any part of them.

12. A statement of the reasons which led the Provincial Government not to be satisfied with the provisions of the statutory and public law, and of the Civil Code of this province for the recovery of any sums of money which may be due by those corporations, but, without previously advising in any way with the Lieutenant-Governor, to propose ex post facto legislation, to compel them to pay.

Another very important Bill, to make provision for levying new taxes, has also been proposed to the Legislature, without having been previously snbmitted for the consideration of the Lieutenant-Governor.

The Lieutenant-Governor quite understands that propositions of secondary importance, and on which he has been previously officially informed, may be, as matter of routine, proposed to the Houses, without a special order from himself; but he cannot in any way permit that the Executive should make communications in his name to the Legislature, with regard to measures which are of a new and important character, without his special authorisation, and without his having been previously fully informed and advised in respect thereof.

Lieutenant-Governor.

(Translation).

To His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec.

Your Excellency, Quebec, February 27, 1878.

I have the honour to acknowledge receipt of the Memorandum which your Excellency caused to be handed me yesterday afternoon by your aide-de-camp, who informed me at the same time that you were ill in bed.

I have submitted that Memorandum to the Executive Council, and will see, as your Excellency desires, that diligence is used to cause all the documents asked for to be transmitted to you as soon as possible.

Anticipating the factum which your Excellency wishes to have, and which will contain a more detailed statement of the motives which have induced the Provincial Government to propose the measures to which you draw my attention, I deem it my duty to represent to you:

That, amongst others, the reasons which led the Government to submit to the Legislature a law compelling the municipalities to pay their subscriptions towards building the provincial railway, on the decision of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, under a sworn report of a competent engineer, and after a 15 days' notice, to give those municipalities an opportunity of being heard, are the manifestations of bad faith of certain municipalities, shown in certain cases by their neglect to respond to the calls of the Treasurer, in others by their formal refusal to pay, and in certain cases by resolutions adopted demanding new conditions in respect to the agreements they had entered into with the Government.

The Government believed that, without such legislation, the object of which is to avoid the slowness of ordinary judicial proceedings, the result of the bad faith of the municipalities would have been either to necessitate a new loan by the Province, and therefore an unjust charge upon municipalities who had entered into no agreement, and who are to derive no immediate advantage from the construction of the road, or to put a complete stop to the works begun, with the inevitable loss of the interest on the enormous capital already invested in the enterprise, and the other damages which would result. The Government, firstly obliging itself by that law to fulfil the conditions agreed upon with those municipalities, believe that in substituting for the ordinary courts, the Lieutenant-Governor with an Executive Council, responsible to the Legislature and to the people, they were offering to parties interested, a tribunal which insured them as many guarantees as the ordinary courts.

I would further bring under your Excellency's notice that provisions of a similar nature to this legislation exist already in our Statutes. I may cite to your Excellency cap. 83 of the Consolidated Statutes of Canada, and also cap. 47 of 36 Vict. of the Statutes of Ontario.

I respectfully submit to your Excellency that a law framed to better assure the execution of a contract cannot produce a retroactive effect; it enacts for the future, and has for its end the respective interests of both parties.

I would now beg your Excellency to observe that while you were at Rivière Ouelle, I had the honour to ask your authority to put the question of finance before the House, and that you kindly answered, stating you were forwarding through the mail a blank, which act I took at that time as a great mark of confidence on your part. I received, in fact, a blank, with your signature, and I gave it to the Treasurer, who had it filled up by your aide-de-camp. Later I had the honour to ask your Excellency for a general permission to submit to the House measures concerning money matters, which your Excellency gave me with your ordinary courtesy.

That permission, I may say, had always been granted me by your predecessor, the lamented Mr. Caron. I must admit that with that permission, and being convinced your Excellency had read the Treasurer's speech, in which he announced the taxation subsequently proposed, I considered myself authorised to tell my colleagues that I had your permission for all money measures.

I beg your Excellency to believe that I never had the intention of assuming the right of having measures passed without your approbation, and that in this case, having had occasion to confer with you with regard to the law respecting the Provincial Railway and not having orders to suspend it, I did not think your Excellency would see in that measure any intention on my part of disregarding your prerogatives, which nobody is more disposed to respect and uphold than myself.

I have, &c.

(Translation.)

To the Hon. C. B. De Boucherville, Prime Minister, Quebec.

March 1, 1878.

The Lieutenant-Governor, taking into consideration what the Prime Minister communicated to him verbally (February 27), and taking into consideration the letter which the Premier then handed to him, is ready to admit that there was no intention on the part of the Premier to disregard the prerogatives of the Crown, and that there has been on his part only an error committed in good faith, in interpreting as he did the words of the Lieutenant-Governor in their interview of the 19th February instant, words which did not convey the sense of authorisation which the Premier attached to them.

With such an interpretation, and the instructions which were in consequence given by the Premier to the Hon. Messrs. Angers and Church, those gentlemen have done nothing, knowingly, not in conformity with the duties of their office.

As to the blank which the Lieutenant-Governor sent him from Rivière Ouelle, the Lieutenant-Governor knew that that blank would be used to lay the estimates before the House.

That act was a mark of confidence on his part, as the Premier characterises it in his letter of the 27th; but that act was confidential.

The Lieutenant-Governor deems it right to observe that, in his Memorandum of the 25th February instant, he in no way expressed the opinion that he believed that the Premier ever had the intention of taking upon himself the right "of having measures passed without his approbation, or of disregarding the prerogatives of the Representative of the Crown."

But the Prime Minister cannot lose sight of the fact that, although there was no intention on his part, in fact the thing exists, as the Lieutenant-Governor told him.

The fact of having proposed to the Houses several new and important measures without having previously in any way advised the Lieutenant-Governor thereof, although the intention of disregarding his prerogatives did not exist, does not the less constitute one of those false positions which places the Representative of the Crown in a critical and difficult position with regard to the two Houses of the Legislature.

The Lieutenant-Governor cannot admit that the responsibility of this state of affairs should rest with him.

With regard to the Bill, intituled "An Act respecting the Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa, and Occidental Railway," the Premier cannot claim for that measure the asserted general authorisation which he mentions in his letter, for their interview was on the 19th February, and that Bill was before the Legislature several days before that date, without the Lieutenant-Governor having been in any way informed of it by his advisers.

The Lieutenant-Governor expressed at the time to the Premier how much he regretted that legislation; he represented to him that he considered it contrary to the principles of law and justice; notwithstanding that, the measure was carried through both Houses until adopted.

It is true that the Premier gives in his letter, as one of the reasons for acting as he did, "that this permission of using the name of the Representative of the Crown had, besides, always been granted him by the predecessor of the present Lieutenant-Governor, the lamented Mr. Caron."

This reason cannot be one for the Lieutenant-Governor; for in so acting he would have abdicated his position as Representative of the Crown, which act neither the Lieutenant-Governor or the Premier could reconcile with the obligations of the Lieutenant-Governor towards the Crown.

The Lieutenant-Governor regrets having to state, as he told the Premier, that he has not been informed in general, in an explicit manner, of the measures adopted by the Cabinet, although the Lieutenant-Governor had often given the Premier an opportunity to do so, especially during last year.

From time to time, since the last session of the Legislature, the Lieutenant-Governor has drawn the attention of the Premier to several subjects regarding the interests of the Province of Quebec, among others: 1st. The enormous expenditure occasioned by very large subsidies to several railways, while the Province was burdened with the construction of the great railway from Quebec to Ottawa, which should take precedence of the others; and this, when the state of our finances obliged us to undertake loans disproportioned to our revenue.

2nd. The necessity of reducing the expenses of the civil government, and of the Legislature, instead of having recourse to new taxes, in view of avoiding financial embarrassment.

The Lieutenant-Governor expressed also, but with regret, to the Premier, that the Orders passed in Council to increase the salaries of Civil Service servants, seemed to him inopportune, at a time when the Government were negotiating with the Bank of Montreal a loan of half a million, with power to increase that loan to $1,000,000, at a rate of interest of 7 per cent.; and, indeed, even to-day (1st of March) the Lieutenant-Governor is obliged to allow that an Order in Council be passed to obtain the last half million for the Government, without which the Government would be unable to meet its obligations, as I was informed by the Hon. the Provincial Treasurer to-day, by order of the Prime Minister.

The Premier did not let the Lieutenant-Governor know, then, or since, that the Government were in such a state of penury as to necessitate special legislation to increase public taxation.

Therefore the Lieutenant-Governor said and repeated these things to the Premier, and he deems it advisable to record them here, that they may serve as memoranda for himself and for the Premier.

It therefore results:—1st. That although the Lieutenant-Governor has made many recommendations, in his position as Representative of the Crown, to the Premier on these different subjects of public interest, his advisers have undertaken a course of administrative and legislative acts, contrary to these recommendations, and without having previously advised with him.

2nd. That the Lieutenant-Governor has been placed, without evil intention, but, in fact, in a false position, by being exposed to a conflict with the will of the Legislature, which he recognises as being in all cases supreme so long as that will is expressed in all constitutional ways.

The Lieutenant-Governor has read and examined carefully the Memorandum and documents which the Premier was kind enough to bring him yesterday.

There are in the record petitions from several municipal corporations and from citizens of different places, addressed to the Lieutenant-Governor, against the resolutions and the Government Bill, with regard to the "Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa, and Occidental Railway."

The Lieutenant-Governor was only yesterday able to take cognizance of some of these petitions, as they had not been communicated to him before he received them in the record.

The Lieutenant-Governor, after having maturely deliberated, cannot accept the advice of the Premier with regard to the sanctioning of the Railway Bill, intituled "An Act respecting the Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa, and Occidental Railway."

For all these causes the Lieutenant-Governot cannot conclude this Memorandum without expressing to the Premier the regret he feels at being no longer able to continue to retain him in his position, contrary to the rights and privileges of the Crown.

Your Excellency, Quebec, March 2, 1878.

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Memorandum, in which you come to the conclusion that you can no longer continue to retain me in my position as Prime Minister. There is no other duty for me to fulfill but to submit to the dismissal from office, which your Excellency has notified me of, declaring at the same time my profound respect for the rights and privileges of the Crown, and my devotion to the interests of our Province.

Message from His Excellency the Governor-General.

Dufferin,

The Governor-General transmits to the House of Commons a letter from the Hon. C. B. De Boucherville, having reference to recent ministerial changes in the Province of Quebec.

Government House, Ottawa,
8th April 1878

Sir, Ottawa, April 3, 1878.

I have the honour to inform, through you, his Excellency the Governor-General that I have this day transmitted to the Hon. the Secretary of State of Canada a letter or memorandum with annexed document, addressed to his Excellency with request that it may be put in his Excellency's hands, and that his Excellency the Governor-General may be pleased to lay that letter and annexed document before both Houses of Parliament.

My letter letter or memorandum being an explanation of the charges brought against me and my colleagues by the Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec, I believe that it is due to me and my colleagues that our explanations may be communicated to both Houses of Parliament, in the same way that the Lieutenant-Governor's memorandum was communicated to them.

I have, therefore, to respectfully reiterate my request,

Sir, Ottawa, April 3, 1878.

I have the honour to transmit herewith a letter, with annexed document, addressed to his Excellency the Governor-General. I have the honour to request, through you, his Excellency to be kind enough to lay the above-mentioned letter and documents before both Houses of Parliament.

I have, &c.

The Hon. R. W. Scott, (Signed) C. B. De Boucherville,
Secretary of State, Ottawa. M. L. C.

To His Excellency the Right Honourable the Earl of Dufferin, K.P., K.C.B., G.C.M.G.,
Governor-General of Canada, Ottawa.

My Lord, Ottawa, April 2, 1878.

The "explanatory case" addressed to your Excellency by his Honour M. Letellier, and accompanying the documents and details which related to my recent dismissal from office, and by you transmitted to the Senate and House of Commons, containing as it does statements of facts, the accuracy of which I respectfully deny, imposes upon me the duty of submitting for your information and consideration the following:—

As your Excellency is doubtless aware, M. Angers laid upon the table of the Legislative Assembly on the 8th of March last, copies of the correspondence and explanations by him made at my request relating to the dismissal from office of the De Boucherville Government. This correspondence and explanations, with some comments of his own, are contained in the copy of the votes and proceedings of that House of the 9th March, and I respectfully beg to be permitted to annex them as forming part hereof. I beg, however, to add to these explanations of M. Angers a few words upon two subjects, viz. :—

1. In the Memorandum which I had the honour to address to his Honour M. Letellier, under date 27th February, I said :—" Later I had the honour to ask your Excellency for a general permission to submit to the House measures concerning money matters, which your Excellency gave me with your ordinary courtesy. This permission, I may say, had always been granted me by your predecessor, the lamented M. Caron."

I do not think that the meaning of these phrases is correctly rendered in the paragraph in his Honour's letter to me, under date the 1st March, wherein he says :—

" It is true that the Premier gives in his letter as one of the reasons for acting as he did, that this permission of using the name of the Representative of the Crown had always been granted him by the predecessor of the present Lieutenant-Governor, the lamented M. Caron.

" This reason cannot be one for the Lieutenant-Governor ; for in so acting he would have abdicated his position as Representative of the Crown, which act neither the Lieutenant-Governor nor the Premier could reconcile with the obligation of the Lieutenant-Governor to the Crown."

It is manifest that I desired to say, and that, in fact, I did say, that the late M. Caron had given me that authority for money matters only.

My Lord, I respect too highly the memory of that virtuous and distinguished statesman, to allow any such misinterpretation of my meaning to pass unchallenged, by which I am made to intimate that the deceased M. Caron had abdicated to me his position as the Representative of the Crown. Every person who knew the late M. Caron and his high legal and constitutional attainments, will share with me my regretful surprise that any such imputation should be cast upon his memory.

2nd. That, not having kept any memorandum of such conversations as I had with the Lieutenant-Governor, except those which took place since the 25th February last, I have no remarks to make upon the paragraph, wherein it is stated :—

" The Premier did not let the Governor know, then or since, that the Government was in such a state of penury as to necessitate special legislation to increase public taxation," unless it be that this statement does not seem to me to accord with a preceding paragraph, wherein it is stated that the Lieutenant-Governor drew my attention " to the necessity of reducing the expenses of Government and of the Legislature, instead of having recourse to new taxes in view of avoiding financial embarrassment."

I acknowledge that I never did inform the Governor that the Province was in a state of penury, simply because I was convinced of the contrary.

" The Lieutenant-Governor expressed also, but with regret, to the Premier, that the Orders passed in Council to increase the salaries of Civil Service servants seemed to him inopportune."

Upon this matter I merely desire to remark that these Orders in Council were authorized by a law passed during the Session of 1876.

I propose now, my Lord, to deal with the specific allegations made against me by his Honour M. Letellier, in his explanatory case, and, for convenience sake, I take the liberty to quote from his Honour's memorandum :—

1st. " During the Session of 1876, a Bill had been read three times in one of the two branches of the Legislature, and only twice in the other.

" This Bill bearing all the certificates which were necessary to induce me to believe that it had been regularly passed and adopted, was submitted to me by the Premier for my sanction.

" In consequence of being left in ignorance of these facts by my advisers, I sanctioned the Bill.

" Not long afterwards I was informed of the irregularity, and I immediately spoke of it to the Premier. I made the observation that such an Act would entail too serious consequences to allow of its being passed over.

" As a favour to him, however, I passed over this instance of irregular legislation, which was then irreparable."

In relation to this the facts will furnish a sufficient answer. The Act in question was a Bill, entitled, " An Act to authorise the formation of societies for the improvement of country roads, and for the destruction of noxious weeds in the Province of Quebec." It was introduced in the Legislative Council, duly passed that House, and was sent down to the Legislative Assembly for its concurrence.

Apparently in the hurry of the last hours of the session, after it had been read twice, the Clerk, by mistake, certified it as passed without amendment, and it was thus sent back to the Legislative Council. His Honour came down on the following day to prorogue the Legislature, and his assent was given to this Bill along with others. The error was immediately discovered by the Attorney-General, who made a report for transmission to Ottawa stating the error, and suggesting that the Act should be disallowed. The Hon. Mr. Blake, then Minister of Justice, reported in reply that this was unnecessary, that the Act, not having received all its stages, was but blank paper, and as a consequence it was not printed in the Statutes. In view of this fact, it is difficult to understand the statement of his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor that, "as a favour" to me, he "passed over this instance of irregular Legislation, which was then irreparable."

2nd. "During the same session another Bill was submitted to me for my sanction. On examining it I perceived a blank which had not been filled up, which I pointed out to the Premier in the following letter:—

"(Private.)

"My dear Premier, Quebec, December 27, 1876.

"A Bill (E) which originated in the Council, was passed by the Legislative Assembly without amendment; upon reading it before adding my certificate of sanction, I noticed that a blank had not been filled up in the seventh line of the sixth section.

"You followed the usual practice in not fixing the amount of the penalty in the Legislative Council, but the matter passed unperceived, or the officers, through some mistake, omitted to insert the amount fixed by the House, or it may have been an error in the proof sheets.

"While on the subject of these mistakes, you will find another in the second section of the same Act, wherein the word 'amender' is in the infinite mood. I notice this latter inaccuracy, to which I do not attach much importance, only because I discovered another in an Act in which I had to point out to you an omission which I consider fatal.

"Yours, &c.
"(Signed) L. Letellier."

"The Premier came to me and said that he regretted the omission; he requested me to give my sanction to the Bill in the state in which it was. The conciliatory spirit which I showed in granting my consent seemed to please him."

In relation to this, I have to say that the Act in question was "An Act to provide for the safety and protection of the public in theatres, edifices and public halls." As stated, it was passed first in the Legislative Council, where the blank, being the amount of the penalty, could not be inserted. By inadvertence it passed the Legislative Assembly in the same form. After its passage, the omission was discovered, and a short Bill was introduced to remedy it. The Act in which the omission occurred is numbered 19, and the Act supplying the omission is numbered 20, of the statutes of 1876, and both were sanctioned by his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor at the same time.

3rd. "In March, 1877 (vide Appendix A.), my advisers caused me to make an appointment of a municipal councillor for the south ward of the village of Montmagny, under the pretext that there had been no election, or that if such election had taken place, it was illegal," &c.

As to the third complaint of his Honour, it is difficult to understand, seeing that it had no relation to the dismissal of myself and my colleagues, why it is introduced. Whether wisely or not, the municipal code of the Province of Quebec provides that, in a certain contingency, the Lieutenant-Governor of the Province shall appoint a councillor. In the opinion of the law adviser of his Honor, upon a petition sent in from the village of Montmagny, that contingency had arisen, and he made a report recommending an appointment. That report was approved, and the appointment made by his Honour. Subsequently other information was received, which induced his Honour to urge the revocation of the appointment, and out of deference to him, while seeing no reason to change its opinion, the Government yielded, and the appointment was cancelled.

4th. "On the 19th March 1877, being on the eve of absenting myself for a few days, I wrote to the Hon. M. Chapleau, and in a postscript I said, 'Please oblige me by telling the Premier that if he needs my concurrence, M. Gauthier may bring down to me the documents requiring my signature.'

" M. De Boucherville should have understood from that, that if I was ready to give him my concurrence, it was on condition of having all documents submitted to me before signing them."

" I leave you, my Lord, to judge in what manner my views were interpreted."

It would seem somewhat remarkable that a statement to which his Honour appears to attach so much importance should have appeared as a postscript to what I have reason to believe was a private letter, in no sense relating to public business. I may say, however, that a reference to dates will show that the documents referred to had relation to the Montmagny Councillorship, which was at the time a subject of discussion, and was not intended to have and had not any such significance as that attempted now to be attached to it.

5th. " Under date of the 6th of November last, I addressed to the Honourable M. De Boucherville, the letter of which the following is a copy :—

" (Private.)

" My dear De Boucherville, Quebec, November 6, 1877.

" In the last 'Official Gazette' were published over my signature two proclamations which I had not signed.

" One was for the summoning of Parliament, which I had reserved in order to confer with you ; the other, which I did not even see, appoints a Day of Thanksgiving.

" These proceedings, the nature of which I shall not characterise, are productive, apart from their impropriety, of nullities of which you will easily understand.

" Yours, &c.

" The Honourable C. B. De Boucherville, Premier. (Signed) L. Letellier."

The following are the notes which I took of the conversation which I had with M. De Boucherville on the subject :—

" M. De Boucherville came on the same day he received the letter, to tell me that he regretted that the thing had occurred, and that it was no fault of his. I accepted the excuse, and I then told him that I would not tolerate my name being used, when necessary, for any duty of my office, unless the documents requiring my signature had been previously submitted to me, and unless information was afforded to me, which M. De Boucherville assured me would be the course followed in future.

It is a sufficient answer to this complaint, to say that the proclamation for the summoning of the Legislature for the despatch of business, was not published until the 24th November, and it could not, therefore, be that proclamation to which his Honour referred in his letter of the 6th November. The proclamation to which he refers was the mere formal one by which the meeting of the Legislature is further postponed from time to time; and I am informed that the Order in Council for the particular proclamation to which his Honour referred was signed by him, and is of record, so signed, with the proper officer.

As to the proclamation fixing a Day of Thanksgiving, I have to remark that this was the result of a communication from the Premier of Canada, the Honourable Alexander Mackenzie, to the Lieutenant-Governor, and handed to me by his Honour with the request that I would carry out the suggestion. It will appear sufficiently strange under these circumstances, that I should be accused of acting without his knowledge, even if the clerical duty of obtaining his signature had been omitted. I am informed, however, that in this case also, the Order in Council, as well as the Proclamation, were signed by his Honour, and are of record, bearing his signature, in the office of the proper officer.

6th. " But, my Lord, there is another point still more important, which I cannot any longer refrain from mentioning.

" From the conversations which I have held with M. De Boucherville, there results a fact, which, if it were known, would of itself have sufficiently justified me in believing that he did not possess the confidence of the people of this Province.

" On two occasions, sometime after the session of 1876, I pointed out to him that millions had been voted to aid railways in general, at a time when our finances did not appear to me in a condition to warrant all at once a lavish expenditure in subsidising these numerous undertakings, particularly as, apart from that, our credit was so heavily pledged towards the building of the Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa, and Occidental Railway.

"He very frankly avowed that these grants, though they were for the development of the Province, had been necessitated by political considerations; that without them, the support of the members whose counties were traversed by those railways would cease to be secured to Government; that there would be no means of having a majority; that the members formed combinations—'rings'—to control the House.

"M. De Boucherville is not unaware that I thereupon told him that it was better to save the Province than a government, and that if his administration was not strong enough to resist those influences, it would be better for him to form a combination of honest and well-meaning men, from both sides of the house, rather than submit to the dictation of those 'rings,' and to the control of those combinations.

"When he made no attempt to escape from that deleterious influence, after his own avowal that the Legislature was controlled by those 'rings'; when by his legislation he sought to favour them anew during the last session, without having previously advised with me, had I not the right, as the Representative of my Sovereign, to believe and to be convinced that M. De Boucherville did not possess a constitutional majority in the Legislative Assembly?"

I have no desire to enter into a discussion as to the precise conversations that may have taken place between his Honour and myself, in the frequent intercourse which we had together, but, I submit as my answer to this most serious imputation, "that I confessed to being controlled by 'rings,'" in relation to the railway legislation while I was the leader of the Provincial Government, the following facts:—

I took office in 1874. In the session following a measure was introduced to increase the subsidies granted by previous legislation to a number of railways. Several amendments were moved to the resolutions, all of them looking to an increase in the grants, and for these, the opposition, under the leadership of Mr. Joly, voted. The general elections took place subsequent to that session, and, whether the legislation was good or bad, it was sustained by a very large majority of the people, and is, therefore, no longer a proper subject of discussion in the connexion in which his Honour introduced it. At the first session after the elections, the Government, at the request of the municipalities of Montreal and Quebec, assumed the task of constructing the North Shore and Northern Colonization Railways, now known as the "Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa and Occidental Railway." Great pressure was brought to bear upon the Government to increase the subsidies to the other roads at that time, but this pressure was resisted. As a matter of fact, it is not true that "millions have been voted to aid railways in general," at a time when "our credit was so heavily pledged towards the building of the Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa, and Occidental Railway." On the contrary, since our credit became so pledged, not one dollar has been added to the debt or liabilities of this Province on account of those "railways in general."

In the session of 1876 a measure was introduced authorising a portion of the subsidy on some of these railways, from the unbuilt portion, to be used on that which was under construction to enable them to be carried to particular points, which was considered important to the public interests should be reached, and a lapsed subsidy of $200,000 was divided among other roads of a similar class, the Bill passing the Legislature without division.

In relation to this Act, his Honour M. Letellier, in proroguing the Legislature, used these words:—"I trust that the result of your labours will be to give a new impetus to the great improvements which have been undertaken in this Province." During the last session this process of "doubling up" of the subsidy was again adopted, but without adding to the public liability. This Act was carried through its final stages in the Legislative Council, after the change of Government, and was assented to by his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor.

7th. "In communicating to both Houses my memoranda of the 25th February and 1st March last, the Premier and Mr. Attorney-General Angers, in violation of their duty, overstepped the authorisation which I had given by my letter of the 4th of March last for that purpose. They added to that communication a report of pretended conversations, the correctness of which I contest, and the impropriety of which I maintain, &c."

As this relates to what occurred after the dismissal of the late Government, it can hardly be held to justify that dismissal. It is sufficient to refer to the correspondence, which shows that there was no stipulation on my part as to the precise form of explanations to be made to the House; and in view of the fact that we were a dismissed ministry, I must claim that we had a duty, not only to ourselves, but to the majority of the representatives of the people whose confidence we enjoyed, to make the explanations as full as possible. As to the introduction, without authorisation, of the Railway and Finance Bills, I conceived myself to have been fully authorised, and the explanations which I offered to his Honour on this point, and which were accepted by him, do not require to be repeated.

To sum up after the manner of his Honour:—

"1st. That in general the recommendations which I made to my Cabinet did not receive the consideration which is due to the Representative of the Crown."

As responsible ministers, we considered it to be our duty to advise his Honour not to be bound to act upon advice from him. At the same time, as is seen in the case of the Montmagny Councillorship, we were disposed, as far as possible, to pay proper deference to his views and wishes.

"2nd. That my name has been used by members of the Government in the signature of documents which I had never seen."

I have simply to say that I know of no such case, unless it refers to the proclamations mentioned in the "Explanatory case," and the answer on that point is sufficiently distinct.

"3rd. That a proclamation summoning the Legislature was published in the "Official Gazette" without my being consulted or informed of it, and before my signature had been attached thereto."

No proclamation summoning the Legislature was so published without the knowledge and signature of his Honour, and the Legislature was in fact not summoned for the despatch of business for nearly three weeks after his Honour's letter of complaint on the subject.

"4th. That a like proclamation fixing a Day of Thanksgiving was also published under similar circumstances."

The Thanksgiving Day was fixed at the request of his Honour himself, and the Order in Council fixing it was signed by him.

"5th and 6th. That, although I had intimated to the Premier by my advice, and by my letter of the 14th March 1877, my firm determination to protect the inhabitants of this Province against the arbitrary decisions of the Executive in matters within the jurisdiction of the courts of justice, he thought proper without my participation and without advising me, to propose to both Houses, in legislating for the 'Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa, and Occidental Railway,' to substitute the power of the Executive for that of the Judiciary."

"That, without having advised me, and without having received authorization of any sort whatever from me, the Government of M. De Boucherville proposed to the Legislature a measure of almost general taxation upon the ordinary contracts and transactions of life, transfers of bank stock, &c., while no message from me had been asked for this subject, nor signed by me to authorise its proposition to the Houses."

In relation to these measures I considered myself authorised by the reply of his Honour to my request for an authorization for resolutions respecting finances, and my explanations, as is seen by his letter to me, were accepted, and the Government relieved from all imputation of intentional discourtesy.

"7th. That, after its dismissal, the Government of the late M. de Boucherville again failed in its duty by assigning reasons for the adjournment of the House from day to day different from those agreed on between myself and the Premier, at the risk of prejudicing public opinion against the Representative of the Crown."

No reasons were assigned by me for the adjournment of the Legislative Council, neither the Speaker nor myself being present at any sitting of that House during the crisis, and the reasons assigned by M. Angers for the adjournment of the Legislative Assembly were in these words:—

"The Lieutenant-Governor signified his desire that the explanations respecting the dismissal from office of the members of the Executive Council be not given this day, but only after a new Cabinet shall have been formed;" that reason being substantially that given in the letter of his Honour of the 4th March.

"8th. That at the time of the communication of the causes which rendered necessary the dismissal of the Cabinet, in the explanations which were given by the Premier to the Legislative Council, and by the Attorney-General to the Legislative Assembly, both of them referred to pretended conversations which they had no authority whatever to communicate to the Legislature, since the Premier had, by his answer to the letter of the Lieutenant-Governor of the 4th March last, limited his explanations to the communication to both Houses of my memoranda of the 25th February and 1st March, and the answers of the Premier of the 27th February and of the 2nd and 4th March instant."

My letter of the 4th March makes or accepts no such limitation, and, for the reason I have already stated, I considered myself fully justified in making the explanations that were made.

"9th. That therefore the additions and the comments made by the Premier before the Legislative Council, and by the Attorney-General before the Legislative Assembly, were contrary to the conditions agreed upon between the Lieutenant-Governor and the Premier."

As I have stated, there were no such conditions agreed upon between the Lieutenant-Governor and myself.

"10th. That the Premier and his colleagues, by making use of pretended private conversations to explain the causes of their dismissal, in contravention to their duty to the Crown and to what they had pledged themselves to observe with regard to it, have placed the Lieutenant-Governor under the necessity of bringing under the notice of your Excellency all the reasons for their dismissal."

The conversations reported by me were not "pretended" but real, of which notes were taken immediately after they occurred, and which were necessary to explain fully the circumstances preceding my dismissal. If they have compelled his Honour to state "all the reasons for that dismissal," I venture the opinion that it would have been more respectful to the Legislature, whose confidence I enjoyed, had "all the reasons" been communicated to it.

The observations I have made upon these additional reasons will, I hope, serve to convince your Excellency that they were not such as to strengthen the position of the Lieutenant-Governor.

I have, &c.

No. 42.—Extract from the Votes and Proceedings of the Legislative Assembly of the Province of Quebec.

The following letter and "copies of the correspondence and explanations relating to the dismissal from office of the De Boucherville Government" were laid upon the table:

Sir, Quebec, March 8, 1878.

I have the honour to forward you, to be laid before the House, copy of the correspondence and explanations relating to the dismissal from office of the De Boucherville Government, which I read and communicated to the House.

I have, &c.

(Signed) A. R. Angers,
Ex-Attorney-General,
Member for the County of Montmorency.

Mr. Speaker,

Mr. De Boucherville had received permission from the Lieutenant-Governor to give explanations respecting his dismissal from office at the sitting on Monday, the 4th March instant; between half-past one and two o'clock of the same day, he received from His Excellency a notice not to give any explanations until the new Cabinet had been formed.

This event having been announced, the late De Boucherville Government has the right, in virtue of the permission so obtained, to give its explanations to the House and to the country.

It is my duty to announce to the House that the De Boucherville Government did not resign. A Government, possessing the confidence of the great majority of the Representative Assembly, and of almost the whole of the Legislative Council, has no right to resign, if it has really at heart the interest of the country, and a respect for its duty. The Government was dismissed from office by the Lieutenant-Governor. The facts which preceded and followed this event are entered in a journal kept from day to day and from hour to hour, under the dictation of the ex-Premier, and the following is an exact and faithful recital thereof.

On the 26th February 1878, at about half-past four o'clock p.m., the Premier received from the Lieutenant-Governor, through his Aide-de-Camp, the following letter:—

Government House, Quebec, February 25, 1878.

The Lieutenant-Governor desires the Executive Council to prepare for his consideration a factum including a copy of the following documents:—

1. A copy of the Acts of the Dominion Parliament authorising the construction of the railway now known under the name of the "Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa, and Occidental Railway" as well as a copy of the Acts of the Legislature of Quebec, respecting the same railway:

2. A copy of the Acts of the Legislature of the Province of Quebec respecting the construction of the railway between Quebec and Montreal commonly known as the North Shore Railway:

3. A copy of the byelaws of each of the Municipal Corporations by which they agreed to assist in the construction of the said road:

4. A statement of the amount of the grant paid by each of those corporations, and a copy of the correspondence exchanged between the Government, the Railway Commissioners, or the contractors of the said road and the said municipal corporations, with respect to their said grant or subsidy:

5. A copy of the several contracts entered into for the construction of the said roads:

6. A copy of the official and confidential reports of the engineers to whom was entrusted the location of these lines of railway, in whole or in part:

7. A copy of the report of the Railway Commissioners, laid before both Houses during the present session, respecting the said roads:

8. Copy of the representations made to the Government by the municipal corporations interested or by the ratepayers of these municipalities, respecting the conditions of their grant or subsidy:

9. Copy of the resolutions proposed to the Provincial Legislature, during the present session, respecting the said subsidies and to facilitate the payment and recovery of the same:

10. Copy of the Bill, based upon the said resolutions, which was introduced into the House, during the present Session:

11. A plan showing the locations of each of the said railways or of any portion thereof:

12. A detailed statement of the reasons which induced the Provincial Government not to content themselves with the provisions of the Statute and Common Law and with those of the Civil Code of this Province, for the recovery of the sums of money which might become due by the said corporations, but, without having in any manner previously consulted with the Lieutenant-Governor, to propose an ex post facto legislation to compel them thereto.

Another very important measure, to provide for the imposition of new taxes, was also similarly proposed to the Legislature, without having been previously submitted to the Lieutenant-Governor.

The Lieutenant-Governor is perfectly aware that measures of secondary importance, which have previously been sufficiently explained to him, may be, as a matter of routine, proposed to both Houses, without an express order from himself, but he cannot allow the Executive to communicate to the Legislature, on his behalf, any important or new measures, without his special order and without his having been previously fully informed and advised thereof.

Luc Letellier,
Lieutenant-Governor.

The Premier prepared his answer during the night of the 26th-27th February. This answer was delivered by him in person to the Lieutenant-Governor, at Spencer Wood, about 10 o'clock a.m. on the 27th. It reads as follows:—

To His Excellency the Hon. L. Letellier de St. Just, Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY, Quebec, February 27, 1878.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of the memorandum sent me yesterday afternoon by your Excellency through your aide-de-camp, who, at the same time, informed me that you were ill in bed. I submitted this memorandum to the Executive Council, and I shall see, as your Excellency desires, that all due diligence be used, in order that all the documents required may be transmitted to you as soon as possible.

In anticipation of the factum desired by your Excellency, which will contain a more detailed statement of the motives which induced the Provincial Government to bring in the measures to which you draw my attention, I consider it my duty to represent that the reasons which, amongst others, caused the Government to submit to the Legislature a law obliging the municipalities to pay their subscriptions for the construction of the Provincial Railway, on the decision of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, after a sworn report, made by a competent engineer, and after a notice of fifteen days, to give such municipalities an opportunity of being heard,—are the ill will of certain municipalities, shown by some in their neglect to comply with the requests of the Treasurer, by others in their formal refusal to pay, and, in certain cases, by resolutions adopted, asking new conditions respecting the agreements which they had made with the Government.

The Government was of opinion that, without such legislation, the object of which is to avoid the delays of ordinary legal proceedings, the result of the ill-will of these municipalities would have been, either to necessitate a new loan by the Province and consequently to cause a burden to be unjustly imposed upon municipalities which had entered into no engagements and which would derive no immediate benefit from the construction of the road, or the complete stoppage of the works already begun, together with the inevitable loss of interest on the enormous capital already laid out upon this enterprise, and the other damages resulting therefrom.

The Government, while undertaking in the first place, by the said law, to fulfil the conditions which it had agreed upon with the said municipalities, considered that, in substituting for the ordinary courts, the Lieutenant-Governor with an Executive Council responsible to the Legislature and to the people, it offered to the parties interested a tribunal which afforded as many guarantees as the ordinary courts. I would also take the liberty of calling your Excellency's attention to the fact that similar provisions are already in our Statutes. I would cite to your Excellency chapter 83 of the consolidated Statutes of Canada, and also chapter 47 of 36 Victoria of the Statutes of Ontario.

I humbly submit to your Excellency that a law devised for the better securing of the execution of a contract cannot have a retroactive effect. It enacts for the future, and its objects are the respective interests of the parties.

Now I beg your Excellency to note that while you were at Riviére Ouelle I had the honour of requesting your authorisation to lay the question of finances before the House, and that you were kind enough to reply that you sent me a blank form by mail, and I considered this, at the time, as a great mark of confidence on your part. I did, in effect, receive a blank form with your signature, which I handed to the treasurer, who had it filled up by your aide-de-camp.

Later on, I had the honour of requesting your Excellency's authorisation generally to lay money questions before the House, and this your Excellency granted, with your usual condescension. This permission, moreover, had invariably been accorded me by your predecessor, the late lamented Mr. Caron.

I must admit, that with this authorisation, and the conviction in my mind that your Excellency had read the Treasurer's budget speech, in which he announced the taxes which were afterwards proposed, I considered I had a right to inform my colleagues that I had your permission for all questions respecting money.

I beg your Excellency to believe that I never had any intention of arrogating to myself the right of having measures passed without your approval, and that, under existing circumstances, having had occasion to speak to your Excellency in reference to the law respecting the provincial railway, and not having received any order to suspend it, I did not think your Excellency would discover in this measure any intention on my part to slight your prerogatives, which no one is more disposed than I am to respect and uphold.

Yours, &c.

C. B. De Boucherville.

After some conversation, the Lieutenant-Governor, having heard Mr. De Boucherville's explanations, admitted that, if there had been any misunderstanding, it was in good faith on the part of the latter, in authorising his colleagues to say that they were authorised to submit the legislation in reference to money matters. He afterwards told him, in reply to his question on the subject, that the only difficulty remaining was the question of the Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa, and Occidental Railway and that he would give an answer on the following day, the 28th February.

On the 28th February, at about half-past seven in the evening, Mr. De Boucherville went to Spencer Wood to convey to the Lieutenant-Governor the documents asked for in the letter of the 25th (which documents were prepared by the Honourable the Secretary, and were accompanied by a synopsis). He asked him if he would soon give his answer. The Lieutenant-Governor told him that he would examine the documents and probably give it to him on the following day, the 1st March.

On leaving, Mr. De Boucherville said: "If I understand you rightly, you are hesitating between giving your sanction to the Railway Bill and reserving it." He replied: "That is it."

On the 2nd of March, at five minutes to one in the afternoon, the Aide-de-Camp of the Lieutenant-Governor handed to Mr. De Boucherville the letter given hereafter.

Before the Aide-de-Camp left, he was asked how his Excellency was. The Aide-de-Camp replied that he was not so well, and then asked, "When we intended closing the session." Mr. De Boucherville replied that he could not say, as many matters were in arrear. The following is the letter in question:—

Government House, Quebec, March 1, 1878.

The Lieutenant-Governor taking into consideration the communication made to him verbally (on the 27th February) by the Premier, and also taking into consideration the letter which the Premier then gave to him, is prepared to admit that there had been no intention on the part of the Premier to slight the prerogatives of the Crown, and that there was only on his part an error, committed in good faith, in the interpretation that he gave to words used by the Lieutenant-Governor in the interview which they had on the 19th February instant, words which did not imply the authorisation attributed to them by the Premier.

With this interpretation and the instructions given in consequence by the Premier to the Honourable Messrs. Angers and Church, these gentlemen did not wittingly do anything against the duties of their office.

As to the blank which the Lieutenant-Governor addressed to him from Riviére Ouelle, the Lieutenant-Governor knew that such blank was to be used for the purpose of submitting the Estimates to the House.

This act was a token of confidence on his part, as stated by the Premier in his letter of the 27th, but it was confidential.

The Lieutenant-Governor deems it his duty to observe that, in his memorandum of the 25th of February last, he in no way expressed the opinion that he thought that the Premier ever had the intention of arrogating to himself the "right" of "having measures "passed without his approval, or of slighting the prerogatives of the Representative of the "Crown."

But the Premier must not lose sight of the fact that, although he had not so intended, the fact remains as he was told by the Lieutenant-Governor.

The fact of having submitted several new and important measures to the Legislature, without having previously, in any manner, consulted the Lieutenant-Governor, although without any intention of slighting his prerogatives, gives rise to one of those false positions which places the Representative of the Crown in a difficult and critical situation, with reference to both Houses of the Legislature.

The Lieutenant-Governor cannot admit that the responsibility of this state of things rests upon him.

So far as concerns the Bill intituled: "An Act respecting the Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa, and Occidental Railway," the Premier cannot apply to the measure the pretended general authorization mentioned by him in his letter, for their interview took place on the 19th February, and the Bill had then been before the House for several days without the Lieutenant-Governor having been in any manner informed of it by his advisers.

The Lieutenant-Governor then told the Premier how much he regretted such legislation; he represented to him that he considered the principles of law and justice; notwithstanding this, the measure was pushed on until it was adopted by both Houses.

It is true that the Premier gives, in his letter, as one of his reasons for so acting, "that this permission of making use of the name of the representative of the Crown had been, moreover, always allowed to him by the predecessor of the present Lieutenant-Governor, the late lamented Mr. Caron."

This reason cannot avail with the Lieutenant-Governor, for, by so doing, he would abdicate his position as Representative of the Crown; a proceeding which neither the Lieutenant-Governor nor the Premier could reconcile with the duties of the Lieutenant-Governor towards the Crown.

The Lieutenant-Governor regrets being compelled to state, as he told the Premier, that he has generally not been explicitly informed of the measures adopted by the Cabinet; although the Lieutenant-Governor often gave occasion therefor to the Premier, especially during the course of last year.

The Lieutenant-Governor, from time to time since the last meeting of the Legislature, drew the attention of the Premier to several matters respecting the interests of the Province of Quebec, amongst others:—

1. To the enormous expenditure, occasioned by very large subsidies to several railways when the Province was burdened with the construction of the trunk line of railway from Quebec to Ottawa, which should prevail over all others; and that at a time when our finances compelled us to raise loans disproportioned to our revenues.

2. On the necessity of reducing the expenses of the Civil Government, and those of legislation, in place of having recourse to new taxes, with a view of avoiding financial embarrassment.

The Lieutenant-Governor, although with regret, expressed to the Premier the opinion that the Orders in Council for the increase of the salaries of Civil Service employees, seemed to him to be inopportune at a time when the Government had effected with the Bank of Montreal a loan at the rate of 7 per cent. for half a million, on condition of increasing this loan to one million; and in fact, to-day even (1st March), the Lieutenant-Governor was obliged to allow an Order in Council to be passed to secure the last half million for the Goverment, without which the Government would be unable to meet its obligations, as stated to him by the Honourable the Treasurer, by order of the Premier.

The Premier did not, either then or since, inform the Lieutenant-Governor that the Government were in so impecunious a position as to require special legislation to increase the public burdens.

The Lieutenant-Governor therefore stated and repeated these facts to the Premier, and now deems it his duty to record them here, in order that they may serve as a memorandum for himself and the Premier.

It results therefore,—

1. That although the Lieutenant-Governor had made several representations, in his quality of Representative of the Crown, to the Premier on those various subjects of public interest, his advisers have taken administrative and legislative steps contrary to such representations, and without having previously advised him.

2. That the Lieutenant-Governor has, without evil motives, but in fact been placed in a false position, by being exposed to a conflict with the desires of the Legislature; desires which he acknowledges to be paramount, when expressed in a constitutional manner.

The Lieutenant-Governor has attentively read and examined the memorandum and documents which the Premier was kind enough to bring him yesterday.

In the record are petitions from several Municipal Corporations and from citizens of different localities, addressed to the Lieutenant-Governor, against the resolutions and the Government Bill respecting the Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa, and Occidental Railway.

The Lieutenant-Governor was only yesterday in a position to take communication of some of these positions, inasmuch as they had not been transmitted to him before the Record.

The Lieutenant-Governor, after mature deliberation, cannot accept the advice of the Premier in reference to the sanction to be given to the Railway Bill, intituled " An Act relating to the Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa, and Occidental Railway."

For all these reasons, therefore, the Lieutenant-Governor cannot conclude this memorandum without expressing to the Premier the regret which he feels in being no longer able to retain him in his position, contrary to the rights and prerogatives of the Crown.

(Signed) L. Letellier,
Lieutenant-Governor.

On the 2nd March, about 2 o'clock p.m., Mr. De Boucherville went to Spencer Wood. When he arrived he was admitted to the presence of the Lieutenant-Governor, and told him " that according to the memorandum received from him that day, he understood that he was dismissed from the office of Premier."

The Lieutenant-Governor told him he was to take his own interpretation from the letter. Upon this Mr. De Boucherville handed him the letter, which will be found further on, as being his answer.

The Lieutenant-Governor, without opening before him, made some remarks on the difficulty on which the legislation had placed him.

Mr. De Boucherville replied that in his present position he thought he had no opinion to express on the subject. He then bowed himself out. When he had proceeded a short distance from the House he caused the vehicle to return having forgotten to ask permission from the Lieutenant-Governor to give explanations to the House. After having been a second time admitted to the presence of the Lieutenant-Governor, he asked permission to give explanations and to make known the memorandum of the Lieutenant-Governor and his replies thereto.

The Lieutenant-Governor told him he had no objection, and asked him as to the person he should send for. Mr. De Boucherville replied that he looked upon himself—having been dismissed—as being in a different position from a Minister who, although defeated in the House, still retained the confidence of the Sovereign; that he had had a majority of twenty-five in one of the late votes; that, under these circumstances, he did not think he could advise him in the matter. He then left him, and while in the ante-room the Lieutenant-Governor recalled him, and said: " Please delay the explanations until Monday."

The following is a copy of the letter which Mr. De Boucherville handed to the Lieutenant-Governor, when the latter told him he was to take his own interpretation of his memorandum.

To His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec.

May it please your Excellency, Quebec, March 2, 1878.

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your memorandum, in which you come to the conclusion that you cannot retain me in my position as Premier.

I have therefore no other duty to perform beyond submitting to my dismissal from office, communicated by your Excellency, reiterating at the same time my profound respect for the rights and prerogatives of the Crown, and my devotion to the interests of our Province.

I have, &c.
(Signed) C. B. De Boucherville.

On the 28th January 1878, Mr. De Boucherville had sent to his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor, who was then at Rivière Ouelle, the following telegraphic Despatch:—

" Can you send me authorisation—resolutions respecting finances."

The Lieutenant-Governor on the following day, the 20th, telegraphed Mr. De Boucherville:—

" Blank mailed to-day. If presence necessary, telegraph. Return Friday."

The resolutions respecting the North Shore Railway were submitted to the House only on the 29th January, after the telegram had been received from the Lieutenant-

Governor that a form signed in blank had been mailed to Mr. De Boucherville, in reply to his despatch of the previous day, saying: "Can you send me authorisation—resolutions respecting finances?"

On the 30th January, the first resolution was reported from Committee of the Whole. On the 31st it was adopted by the House. On the 1st February the House again went into Committee of the Whole and reported the other resolutions on the same subject. But it was only on the 5th that the adoption of the report of the Committee was carried, the House throwing out the motion of non-confidence on this point by 38 to 21.

On the 5th February a Bill based on these resolutions was introduced; the second reading was delayed until the 18th February; the third reading took place on the 19th. During all this time the Lieutenant-Governor, to whom the Votes and Proceedings were sent daily, remained silent.

On the 19th February, Mr. De Boucherville met the Lieutenant-Governor, and in the conversation which took place on the subject of the measure, thought he had satisfied him as to its legality and the urgency of its being passed. The Lieutenant-Governor was so far from being explicit as to his intentions, that Mr. De Boucherville left him with the impression that he was authorised.

The Lieutenant-Governor does not contend, in his memorandum of the 1st March 1878, that he had given orders to suspend the legislation.

Sent up to the Legislative Council, this Bill had gone through its third reading before the first letter was received from the Lieutenant-Governor, dated the 25th February last, but only delivered at 4.30 p.m., on the 26th. In fact, the Lieutenant-Governor, in his letter of the 1st March, admits that he did not, in any way, in his memorandum of the 25th February, express the opinion that he considered the Premier had intended to arrogate to himself the right of getting measures passed without his approval or of slighting the prerogatives of the Representative of the Crown.

Having ascertained that a misunderstanding existed as to the interpretation of the authorisation asked by telegraphic Despatch on the 28th January and answered on the 29th by a message stating that a form signed in blank was sent, and in view of the impressions left by the conversation of the 19th February in Mr. De Boucherville's mind, should the Lieutenant-Governor have waited to make known, for the first time, the existence of this misunderstanding until the 26th February at which date the whole of the legislation, of which he complains, had been discussed and voted in the affirmative by both Houses.

The confidence shown by the Lieutenant-Governor on the 29th January in Mr. De Boucherville, by forwarding the form signed in blank, was calculated to justify him in interpreting the silence of the Lieutenant-Governor at least as not meaning dissent.

After these interviews of the 19th February, the silence observed until the 26th February was also of a nature to lead him to believe that he had a general authorization to submit to the House all measures which the public service required.

On the 31st of January, 26 days previous to the first memorandum of the Lieutenant-Governor, the Honourable Treasurer made his budget speech, in which he announced the new taxes which it would be necessary to levy to meet the obligations of the Province—obligations contracted during several previous years, and resulting from the policy then inaugurated on railways and which have received the concurrence of several members belonging to the party opposing the Government.

Can this speech, published in extenso by the press of the whole country, have escaped the notice of the Lieutenant-Governor?

On the 19th of February the resolutions demanding those taxes, but at a lower rate than the one mentioned by the Treasurer in his speech, were presented; and on the 20th were adopted by a vote of 39 against 22.

The Lieutenant-Governor, in his memorandum of the 1st March, complains that Mr. De Boucherville did not let him know that the Government was in an impecunious condition requiring special legislation to increase the public taxes.

The Premier would have formed an erroneous idea of the situation, if he had so qualified the temporary embarrassment caused by the ill-will of the municipalities which had subscribed for the construction of the Provincial Railway in neglecting to faithfully fulfil their obligations. He would have formed an erroneous idea of the situation, in presence of the results obtained, so far without any burden having been imposed in order to obtain them.

On the 22nd February notice was given of resolutions respecting railways in the eastern townships and on the south shore of the St. Lawrence.

On the 23rd of the same month the resolutions were introduced and subsequently adopted by a vote of 41 to 16. These resolutions do not in any way increase the actual debt of the Province.

The Lieutenant-Governor said in the same memorandum, "That the construction "of the railway from Quebec to Ottawa should prevail over that of other railways." The legislation of many years past on this subject establishes no priority in favour of the Provincial Railway to the detriment of railways in the eastern townships and on the south shore. The DeBoucherville Government would have contravened the law if they had adopted any other view of the matter.

In the same memorandum the Lieutenant-Governor declares: "That he cannot "accept the advice of the Premier in reference to the sanction to be given to the railway "Bill, intituled 'An Act respecting the Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa, and Occidental "'Railway.'" This declaration is premature, the Premier never having been called upon to give his opinion as to the sanction to be given; and if he had been called upon to do so, he would, under the circumstances, have recommended that it be reserved for the decision of the Governor-General, being in doubt as to the Lieutenant-Governor having the right, of his own accord ex proprio motu, to exercise the prerogative of veto, and thus to decide finally on the fate of a measure passed by both Houses, when the British North America Act of 1867 seems to leave such power to the Governor-General.

The memorandum of his Excellency refers to petitions of several corporations and citizens of different places, addressed to the Lieutenant-Governor against the resolutions and the measures of the Government concerning the Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa, and Occidental Railway.

It is sufficient to consider that these petitions came from debtors, from whom the law intends to force payment, to arrive at the correct conclusion that the opinion of both Houses should prevail over that expressed in such petitions.

The Lieutenant-Governor, in the same memorandum, refers to acts of administration which date from before the session, and to which he has given his assent. As he alludes to matters for which the Government is responsible to both Houses, as advisers of the Crown, and as they are foreign to the question of prerogative raised by the Lieutenant-Governor, they cannot be adduced in this memorandum as reasons for the conclusion arrived at by his Excellency, that he cannot continue to retain Mr. De Boucherville in his position against the rights and prerogatives of the Crown; therefore, to avoid being carried away by this side issue or hors d'œuvre, there is no reason to question them now.

The Lieutenant-Governor further expresses the opinion "that the state of our finances "forced us to make loans disproportionate to our resources."

The necessity of here repeating this phrase is to be regretted; but the credit of the Province requires that it should be contradicted. The mere reading of the Budget speech will suffice to reassure alarmists.

From all the above facts, from admissions contained in the last memorandum of the Lieutenant-Governor, from the transmission of the form signed in blank and sent by him in reply to a request of Mr. De Boucherville, asking his authorisation to introduce "resolutions respecting finances," and from the silence of the Lieutenant-Governor up to the 26th February last, it results that no measures have been introduced into the House in opposition to the prerogatives of the representative of the Sovereign.

Nothing more remains now for me to do but to reiterate the declaration I made in commencing these explanations; the De Boucherville cabinet has not resigned. It has been dismissed from office by the Lieutenant-Governor.

The Conservative party is no longer in power. But it is in the House the power—a qualified power—a majority in the opposition. The majority here, the majority in the Council, the majority in the country. The Conservative party has been dismissed from office; but it stands uncompromised, without compromise, without division—devoted to the constitution and to the welfare of the country.

(Signed) A. R. Angers,
Ex-Attorney-General,
Member for the Electoral District of Montmorency.

Mr. Loranger, seconded by Mr. Lynch, moved that the following address, affirming the privileges and immunities of the House, be presented by Mr. Speaker to his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec, at the bar of the Legislative Council, at the prorogation of the Legislature.

To his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec.

May it please your Excellency,

The Legislative Assembly of the Province of Quebec deem it their duty to humbly represent that the cabinet of which the Honourable Henri Gustave Joly is the chief, was defeated three different times, at the sitting of the 8th of March instant, by majorities varying from 20 to 22 votes.

And they regret to state that the constitution has been disregarded by the advisers of his Excellency to the extent that they persist in retaining power against the will of the majority of the House and of the country.

The Legislative Assembly believes it, moreover, their duty to express their regret that they have been put to the necessity of suspending the passage of the Supply Bill until justice has been extended to the majority of this House.

The Legislative Assembly desires respectfully to represent to your Excellency that there exists in the House a political party, possessing the confidence of the country, and having a large majority in the House; that this party is competent to administer the public business, and that the prorogation of the Legislature presently would be prejudicial to the legislation and to the interests of the country.

The Legislative Assembly desires to represent to your Excellency, that the fact of the minority having a control over public affairs is the cause of the embarrassment under which the Province labours, through the suspension of the Supply Bill; and that a prompt solution of the difficulty may be arrived at by acting in conformity with the constitution.

The Legislative Assembly desires also to represent to your Excellency that inasmuch as there exists in the House a political party strong enough to command a large majority there is no necessity for a dissolution of the Legislature, a step which will cause considerable and useless expense to the Province, and seriously threaten the peace and tranquillity of the people of this Province.

And your petitioners will ever pray.

And objection having been taken that the said motion is contrary to the constitution, and should be considered out of order,

Mr. Speaker ruled "that the point of order was raised and decided yesterday."

And appeal having been made from Mr. Speaker's decision,

The question was put and carried in the affirmative on the following division :—

In favour of Mr. Speaker's decision.

MM. Alleyn, Angers, Baker, Champagne, Chapleau, Charlebois, Deschenes, Dulac, Dupont, Fortin (Gaspé), Fradette, Garneau, Gauthier, Houde (Maskinongé), Houde (Nicolet), Kennedy, Lacerte, Lalonde, Larochelle, Lavallée, Le Cavalier, Loranger, Lynch, Martin, Mathieu, McGauvran, Picard, Sawyer, St. Cyr, Taillon, Tarte, Thornton, and Wurtele.—33.

Against Mr. Speaker's decision.

MM. De Beaujeu, Fortin (Montmagny), Laberge, Lafontaine, Laframboise, Molleur, Pâquet, Préfotaine, Rinfret dit Malouin, Shehyn, Sylvestre, and Watts.—12.

Exhibit No. 7.

No. 7.—Votes and Proceedings of the Legislative Assembly of the Province of Quebec.—Quebec, Tuesday, 11th June 1878.

Mr. Bertrand, seconded by Mr. Robillard, introduced a Bill (No. 4) to amend certain articles of the Civil Code of the Province of Quebec.

Second reading to-morrow.

Mr. Desaulniers, seconded by Mr. Caron, introduced a Bill (No. 3) to amend article 775 of the Municipal Code.

Second reading to-morrow.

The order of the day for resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment moved on Thursday the 6th instant to the amendment to the motion made by Mr. Gagnon, respecting an address to his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor, in reply to his speech in opening the present session, and which amendment was conceived in these terms :

"That, after the last words in the closing paragraph of the resolutions contained in the proposed motion, the following words be added :—

"That this House, while expressing its firm determination to insist on the strictest economy in every branch of the public service, and on the closest supervision over the expenses of administration, regrets that the present advisers of his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor should have persisted in remaining in power without having been supported by the majority of the Legislative Assembly upon their taking office, and without yet being supported by such majority."

Which said amendment was :

That all the words after "that" in the motion in amendment be struck out and replaced by the following words: "this House entirely approves of the policy of "economy and retrenchment inaugurated by the Government, and hopes that it will "continue to put it energetically into practice."

And the question on the amendment to the said amendment having been put it was negatived on the following division.

YEAS.

MM. Bachand, Blais, Boutin, Brousseau, Cameron, Chauveau, Dupuis, Flynn, Fortin, Gagnon, Irvine, Joly, Laberge, Lafontaine (Shefford), Lafontaine (Napierville), Langelier (Portneuf), Langelier (Montmorency), Lovell, Marchand, McShane, Meikle, Molleur, Murphy, Nelson, Paquet, Poirier, Racicot, Rinfret dit Malouin, Ross, Shehyn, Watts.—31.

NAYS.

MM. Audet, Beaubien, Bergevin, Bertrand, Caron, Champagne, Chapleau, Charlebois, Church, Desaulniers, Daschênes, Duckett, Duhamel, Gauthier, Houde, Lalonde, Lavallée, LeCavalier, Loranger, Lynch, Magnan, Martel, Mathieu, Peltier, Picard, Robertson, Robillard, Sawyer, St. Cyr, Taillon, Tarte, Wurtele.—32.

And the question on the amendment to the main motion having been put it was carried on the following division :—

YEAS.

MM. Audet, Beaubien, Bergevin, Bertrand, Caron, Champagne, Chapleau, Charlebois, Church, Desaulniers, Deschênes, Duckett, Duhamel, Gauthier, Houde, Lalonde, Lavallée, LeCavalier, Loranger, Lynch, Magnan, Martel, Matnieu, Peltier, Picard, Robertson, Robillard, Sawyer, St. Cyr, Taillon, Tarte, Wurtele.—32.

NAYS.

MM. Bachand, Blais, Boutin, Brousseau, Cameron, Chauveau, Dupuis, Flynn, Fortin, Gagnon, Irvine, Joly, Laberge, Lafontaine (Shefford), Lafontaine (Napierville), Langelier, (Portneuf), Langelier (Montmorency), Lovell, Marchand, McShane, Meikle, Molleur, Murphy, Nelson, Paquet, Poirier, Racicot, Rinfret dit Malouin, Ross, Shehyn, Watts.—31.

And then the main motion as amended having been put,

Mr. Watts moves in amendment, seconded by Mr. Racicot,

That after the last word of the said resolutions as amended, the following words be added :—

"That, nevertheless, under present circumstances this House believes it to be its duty to give a general independent support to the Government, in such a manner that the measures which it proposes may be submitted to the judgment of this House.

Mr. Loranger, seconded by Hon. Mr. Chapleau, moved in amendment to the said amendment:

That all the words after "that" in the amendment be struck out, and that the following be substituted: "Moreover this House is of opinion that the principles of the "constitution of responsible government require that the cabinet entrusted with the "administration of public affairs be supported by the majority of the House."

And a debate arising,

Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of the Act 31 Vict. cap. 4, of the Statutes of the Province of Quebec, called upon Mr. Rinfret dit Malouin, member for the electoral division of Quebec Centre, to replace him in the chair during his temporary absence.

And the House having sat until after 12 o'clock, midnight.

Wednesday, June 12, 1878.

After some time the Speaker resumed the chair.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Chapleau, seconded by Hon. Mr. Church, it was ordered that the debate be adjourned.

And then the House adjourned.

ARTHUR TURCOTTE,
Speaker.

So it was resolved in the affirmative.

The said paragraph was adopted as amended.

The tenth paragraph being again read and the question of concurrence being put thereon, it was Resolved in the affirmative.

On motion of the Hon. Mr. Starnes, seconded by the Hon. Mr. Rémillard, it was Ordered that the Hon. Messrs. Proulx, Rémillard, and the mover be appointed a committee to prepare an address based on the said resolution.

The House adjourned during pleasure.

After some time the House was resumed, and the Hon. Mr. Rémillard reported an address prepared by the said committee as follows:—

To his Excellency the Hon. Luc Letellier de St. Just, Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec.

May it please your Excellency, we, Her Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects the Legislative Council of Quebec, in Provincial Legislature assembled, humbly thank your Excellency for your Gracious Speech from the Throne at the opening of this Session, and further to assure your Excellency:

"Who sees us, with pleasure met together, for the despatch of the business of this Province, to rest assured that we will give the greatest attention to such business.

"With your Excellency, we believe our financial condition to be the most important of the subjects which we have to consider.

"With your Excellency, we are of opinion that it behoves us to complete railways already commenced, so as to reap, with the least possible delay, the benefit of the sacrifices we have made to build them.

"To carry out these undertakings with success and to meet all our engagements, it is indispensable that expenditure should be reduced as low as is consistent with the efficient administration of the public service.

"We will carefully consider the Bill which will be submitted to us, to transfer to the Commissioner of Public Works all the powers now vested in the Railway Commissioners and to abolish the office.

"We will attentively consider the measure which will be submitted to provide for the abolition of District Magistrates Courts.

"We, although convinced of the serious danger to the rights and liberty of the Province of Quebec by any modification to the British North America Act, we will, however, give all our attention to the British North America Act which will be submitted to us to that effect.

"We look forward with interest to the communication of the judgment rendered, since last session, by Her Majesty in Her Privy Council, on the question of the arbitration between the Provinces of Quebec and Ontario.

"Your Excellency may rest assured that we will manifest, in the fulfilment of our important duties, that serious attention, that devotion to the interests confided to us, and that loyalty to our Sovereign Lady the Queen, which is to be expected from the Legislature of Quebec."

But that this House desires to express anew its regret that your Excellency was advised to dismiss your ministers in march last, at the time they enjoyed the confidence of both branches of the Legislature and of the Province.

That this House is of opinion that in acting on this advice dismissing your ministers, and appointing a new cabinet from the ranks of the minority, your Excellency was advised to follow a course contrary to the recognised principles of responsible government.

"10. With your Excellency, we ardently pray that Heaven may bless our labours and that they may tend to the union, peace, and prosperity of the inhabitants of our Province."

Which address being read by the clerk was unanimously adopted.

On motion of the Hon. Mr. Starnes, seconded by the Hon. Mr. Proulx, it was Ordered, that the said address be engrossed and signed by the Hon. the Speaker of this House.

On motion of the Hon. Mr. Starnes, seconded by the Hon. Mr. Rémillard, it was Ordered, that the said address be presented to his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor by the Speaker of this House.

On motion of the Hon. Mr. Dionne, it was Ordered, that when this House adjourns, it do stand adjourned to Tuesday next, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

Then on motion of the Hon. M. Dostaler,

The House adjourned until Tuesday next, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

L. H. Huot, Esq.,
Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, Quebec.

COPY of the REPORT of a COMMITTEE of the HONOURABLE the EXECUTIVE COUNCIL, dated 19th November 1877, approved by the Lieutenant-Governor on the 20th November 1877.

(No. 372.)

On the calling together of the Parliament of the Province,

The Honourable the Commissioner of Agriculture and Public Works, in a memorandum dated 19th November instant, 1877, recommends that a proclamation be prepared and published, calling together the Legislature of this Province for the despatch of business, for the 19th of December 1877.

The Committee concurs in this recommendation and submits to the approval of the Lieutenant-Governor.

VICTORIA, by the Grace of God, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Queen, Defender of the Faith, &c., &c., &c.

To Our Beloved and Faithful the Legislative Councillors of the Province of Quebec, and the Members elected to serve in the Legislative Assembly of Our said Province, and summoned and called to a meeting of the Legislature of Our said Province, at Our City of Quebec, on the 3rd day of the month of December next, to have been commenced and held—Greeting:

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas the meeting of the Legislature of the Province of Quebec stands prorogued to the 3rd day of the month of December next; nevertheless for certain causes and considerations, We have thought fit to further prorogue the same to Wednesday the 19th day of the month of December next, so that neither you nor any of you, on the said 3rd day of December next, at Our said city of Quebec, to appear and to be held and constrained, for We do will that you and each of you and all others in this behalf interested, that on Wednesday, the 19th day of the month of December next, at Our said city of Quebec, personally you be and appear for the despatch of business, to treat, do, act, and conclude upon those things which in Our Legislature of the Province of Quebec, by the common council of Our said province, may by the favour of God, be ordained.

In testimony whereof, we have caused these Our Letters to be made Patent, and the Great Seal of our said Province of Quebec to be hereunto affixed: Witness, Our trusty and well-beloved the Honourable Luc Letellier de Saint Just, Lieutenant-Governor of our said Province of Quebec.

At Our Government House, in Our city of Quebec, in Our said Province, this 23rd day of November, in the year of Our Lord 1877, and in the 41st year of Our Reign.

By command,

Clerk of the Crown in Chancery.

Copy of the Report of a Committee of the Honourable the Executive Council, dated 30th October 1877, approved by the Lieutenant-Governor on the 30th October 1877.

(No. 348.)

The Honourable the Commissioner of Agriculture and Public Works, in a report dated 30th October instant, 1877, sets forth that Divine Providence having protected this Province from the calamities which affect other nations, and favoured this country with an abundant harvest,

That it is the duty of the inhabitants of this Province to recognise by public thanksgiving that all good comes from God, and that the earth would be sterile without the assistance of His divine will.

The Honourable Commissioner therefore recommends that a proclamation be issued by his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor making the 22nd of November next a day of thanksgiving to the Almighty to thank Him for having protected our hearths from calamity, and for having blessed the labours of the people of this Province by granting to it an abundant harvest.

The Committee concurs in the above report, and submits it to the approval of the Lieutenant-Governor.

DISTRICT MAGISTRATE'S COURT FOR THE COUNTY OF MONTMAGNY.

Ex Parte :—Jules Belanger, guardian and proprietor of a bridge, in the village of Montmagny, in the County and District of Montmagny - Petitioner.

Eugène Fournier, diver, of the village of Montmagny - - Respondent.

January 31, 1877.

Present: JAMES OLIVA, Esquire.

The Court after having heard the parties in this cause by their respective counsel and the declaration made in this cause by the respondent, and filed in the record and his admissions before the Court,

Considering that on the 8th of January instant, at a meeting of the electors of the South Ward of the village of Montmagny, held at the said place for the election of a Councillor for the said Ward, two candidates were nominated, namely, Eugène Fournier and Jules Belanger.

Considering that more candidates were thus nominated than there were councillors to be elected.

Considering that the presiding officer of such meeting granted a poll on the requisition of a number of electors required by law, and commenced then and there to register the votes of the electors present in favour of two candidates.

Considering that such presiding officer, after beginning to register the votes on the said 8th day of January, without waiting that an hour should have elapsed without registering a vote, closed the said election and proclaimed the said Eugène Fournier as the councillor elected.

Considering that the closing of such election and such proclamation were illegal, premature, and contrary to the express wording of the law.

The Court declares the election and proclamation of the said Eugène Fournier illegal, annuls and cancels them, and orders that on Monday, the 19th day of February next, at 10 of the clock in the forenoon, at the village of Montmangy, in the South Ward of the said village of Montmagny, after notice given as required by law, there shall be held a meeting of the municipal electors of the South Ward of the said municipality of Montmagny, for the purpose of then and there holding a new election to replace the said Eugène Fournier, whose election is thus annulled by the present. And the Court appoints for such purpose Eugène Hamond, Esquire, of the village of Montmagny, to preside over such election.

The Court considering that the said Eugène Fournier has not maintained his said election, but on the contrary has admitted and consented that it be annulled, and therefore that he is not responsible for the irregularities in connexion with such election, rejects that portion of the conclusions of the petition of the said petitioner in which he prays for costs against the said respondent, but without costs.

In the year 1877, on the 19th day of the month of February, at 9 of the clock in the forenoon.

On the requisition of Messieurs Jules Bélanger and Magloire Langlois, both electors and ratepayers of the South Ward of the Corporation of the village of Montmagny, and residing therein,

I, the undersigned, notary public for the Province of Quebec, residing in the parish of St. Thomas, in the county of Montmagny,

Went for that purpose to the residence of Captain Eugène Hamond, situate in the said village of Montmagny, and being there and speaking to him, I did on behalf of the petitioners, say and declare as follows, to wit :—

That in virtue of a judgment rendered by James Oliva, Esquire, stipendiary magistrate, in January last, and duly served on him, he had been appointed to preside over the election of a councillor in the South Ward of the said Corporation of the village of Montmagny, which is to take place this day, the 19th of February, for the purpose of electing a councillor in the place of Eugène Fournier, whose election was set aside by the said judgment.

That the said election would be useless and of no effect or avail other than to give rise to lawsuits and cause considerable expense to the ratepayers of the Corporation of the village of Montmagny, for the following reasons, to wit, because no public notice was given within the delay required and provided by the Municipal Code, namely, seven clear days between the publication of the notice and the day of the election.

Wherefore we have protested and notified, as, by these presents, we do protest and notify, the said Eugène Hamond not to preside over the said election, and that in default of his complying herewith, the said petitioners intend to hold him personally responsible for all costs and expenses which may be incurred and for all against which we should and may protest in such cases.

And speaking as aforesaid we left a copy of these presents with him at his domicile so that he cannot plead or pretend ignorance thereof.

Thus done and notified under No. 8,210, at the domicile of the said Eugène Hamond, on the day and on the year first aforesaid, on being required so to do and after its having been read.

(Signed) F. X. Gendreau.

Sir, St. Thomas, Montmagny, February 19, 1877.

I have the honour to forward you a copy of a judgment of the Magistrate's Court for the County of Montmagny, authorising me to preside over a public meeting which was to have been held to-day, the 19th day of February, for the purpose of electing a councillor for the South Ward of the municipality of Montmagny.

In accordance with the copy of the judgment which had been served on me as provided by Article 361, I did not preside over such meeting because the legal notice, as required by Article 362 of the Municipal Code, and in virtue of the enclosed judgment, was not given.

I also enclose herewith the protest served on me this day, the 19th of February, and I therefore recommend that Jules Bélanger, ratepayer, elector, and proprietor, be appointed to fill the vacancy caused by the setting aside of the election of Mr. Eugène Fournier, as appears by the said judgment.

AT a meeting of the municipal electors of the South Ward of the Corporation of the village of Montmagny, held on the 19th day of February instant, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, in accordance with a judgment rendered by the Magistrate's Court for the county of Montmagny, on the 31st day of January 1877, which said meeting was held in the house of the Pont Regent, situate within the limits of the aforesaid South Ward:

Eugène Hamond, Esq., the person appointed by the court to preside over the said meeting, having refused to preside over the said meeting, although called upon to do so by the electors present, the undersigned, Mayor of the said municipality of the village of Montmagny, acting as magistrate ex-officio, and as such the senior magistrate present at at the said meeting, presided over such meeting.

Eugène Fournier, having been proposed by Louis Dion, Hermenegilde Boulanger, and other electors of the said South Ward of the Corporation of the village of Montmagny, as councillor for the said quarter, was nominated, and as no other person was proposed by the said meeting in opposition to the appointment of the said Eugène Fournier during the space of one hour after the said motion, I proclaimed the said Eugène Fournier as councillor duly elected for the South Ward of the village of Montmagny.

In faith of which I have signed these presents at Montmagny on the 19th day of February 1877.

SIR, Montmagny, March 19, 1877.

I REGRET to learn from your letter of the 16th instant that his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor has been advised not to revoke the appointment of Mr. Jules Bélanger, as municipal councillor for the South Ward in the village of Montmagny. Article 362 of the Municipal Code says that "The omission to give this notice prevents "a meeting of the municipal electors from being held," but there was no such omission, since notice was given on the 17th February, as you have been informed by the ex-secretary-treasurer.

Article 295 says that, in the case of every general election, "The omission to give "such public notice does not prevent the meeting of the municipal electors from being "held."

The ratepayers have the same interest in either case; it was evident that it was only by inadvertence that Article 362 was not amended, in the same manner as Article 295, by the 36 Vict. c. 21. s. 7.

Article 16 says: "No objection founded upon form, or upon the omission of any "formality, even imperative, can be allowed to prevail in any action, suit, or proceeding "respecting municipal matters."

An undisputed fact exists, and that is, that on the 19th of February 1877 a meeting of the ratepayers of the South Ward of the village of Montmagny was held for the purpose of electing a municipal councillor.

That the said meeting was held in virtue of a judgment rendered by the Magistrate's Court.

That a public notice of the said meeting was posted up at the church door, and on the house in which the poll was held for the said South Ward; and the said notice was read in a loud and intelligible voice by the undersigned at the church door after grand mass, on Sunday the 18th of February last, as appears by a certificate under oath filed amongst the archives of the Council.

That the presiding officer appointed by the said court having refused to preside over the said meeting, I was called upon to preside.

That Mr. Eugène Fournier having been nominated, and no other candidate having been proposed to oppose him, after the delay fixed by law he was declared elected by acclamation.

That Mr. Eugène Fournier has been duly sworn in as municipal councillor, and has exercised and still does exercise the functions of such municipal office, as appears by the copy of the procès-verbal of the votes and proceedings of the Municipal Council of the village of Montmagny of the meeting held on the 23rd February last, which I have the honour to transmit you to be laid before his Excellency with these presents.

You will observe by the copy of the said procès-verbal that all the members of the council were present at the said meeting, and that not one of them made any objection to Mr. Fournier taking his seat.

I am informed by distinguished lawyers that the election of Mr. Eugène Fournier, even supposing it was irregular, can only be annulled and set aside by the judgment of a competent court, that so long as it has not been annulled by a court of justice, and Mr. Eugène Fournier holds his seat of municipal councillor, his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor has no right to appoint another councillor in his place.

That his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor having appointed Mr. Bélanger to replace Mr. Eugène Fournier before the election of the latter had been set aside, the appointment made by his Excellency is altogether null.

Notwithstanding the profound respect which the Municipal Council of the village of Montmagny has for his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor, and for all the orders issued in his name, being convinced that the appointment of Mr. Bélanger as councillor was made irregularly and illegally, and that to submit thereto would be to waive the rights and privileges secured to every citizen by the constitution and laws of this country, the majority of the Council opposes, and will firmly oppose, the admission of Mr. Jules Bélanger into its midst.

I have, &c.

To the Hon. J. A. Chapleau,
Provincial Secretary, Quebec.

Department of the Law Officers of the Crown.

Quebec, March 15, 1877.

Having taken communication of the petition of N. Bernatchez, Mayor of the village of Montmagny, dated 10th of March instant, and received on the 13th of the same month, praying for the cancelling of the appointment of Jules Bélanger as municipal councillor for the South Ward of the said village of Montmagny, and representing that his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor has been deceived and led into error, and that the said appointment was made on false representations, I have the honour to report as follows:—

The record on which I based my opinion when I recommended the said appointment to his Excellency establishes that the notice required by law for the calling together of the meeting of municipal electors for the new election ordered by the court was not given. A telegram from the secretary-treasurer of the said municipality establishes that the notice of the meeting which was to be held on the 19th of February last was only posted up on the evening of the 17th by the Mayor, N. Bernatchez.

The record also contains a protest calling upon the presiding officer appointed by the judgment not to hold the election, owing to the notice of the meeting required by law not having been given.

All these documents, with a letter from the presiding officer appointed by the judgment establishing that he had not presided over the meeting, have been submitted to his Excellency with my report recommending the appointment of Jules Bélanger.

Article 362 of the Municipal Code requires that in the case of an election ordered by a judgment of the court, a public notice be given of the holding of a meeting called together for such purpose.

By Article 238 such notice must be given at least seven clear days before the day fixed for the meeting.

Article 362 says that the omission to give this notice prevents the meeting from being held.

The petitioner Mr. Bernatchez, in support of his request for the cancelling of the said appointment, does not allege that the notice required by Article 362, without which the meeting could not be held, was given; he does allege only, in support of his request, the fact that on a certain occasion (on which a meeting of electors could not even be held) he proceeded to make a pretended election.

A party cannot derive any advantage or create any presumption in his favour from the fact that he contravened Article 362.

The pretended election held by the petitioner Bernatchez on the day on which a meeting of electors could not take place, is not only liable to be cancelled, but it is of itself completely null.

I am of opinion that the appointment made by his Excellency of Jules Bélanger as municipal councillor for the South Ward of the village of Montmagny was legally made and should not be set aside.

(Signed) A. R. Angers,
Attorney-General.

Sir, Secretary's Office, Quebec, March 16, 1877.

In reference to the petition forwarded by you on the 10th of this month respecting the appointment of Mr. Jules Bélanger as municipal councillor for the South Ward of the village of Montmagny, I have the honour to inform you that the appointment made by his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor cannot be cancelled. It has been shown to his Excellency that the notice required by law for calling together the meeting of municipal electors for the purpose of holding the election ordered by the judgment of the court was not given. A telegram from the secretary-treasurer of the said municipality establishes that the notice of the meeting which was fixed for the 19th of February last, was only posted up in the evening of the 17th by yourself.

There has also been produced a protest calling upon the presiding officer appointed by the judgment not to hold the election, as the notice of the meeting had not been given as required by law.

All these documents, together with a letter from the presiding officer appointed by the judgment, establishing that he had not presided over the meeting, have been submitted to his Excellency with a report recommending the appointment of Mr. Jules Bélanger.

Article 362 of the Municipal Code requires that in the case of an election ordered by a judgment of the court, a public notice be given of the holding of such meeting called together for such purpose.

By Article 238 this notice must be given seven clear days before the day fixed for the meeting.

Article 362 says that the omission of such notice prevents the holding of the meeting.

In support of your demand for the cancelling of the appointment, you do not allege that the notice required by Article 362, without which the meeting could not be held, was given; but you only base your request upon the fact that (on a certain occasion when a meeting of electors could not even be held) you proceeded to hold a pretended election.

A party cannot derive any advantage or create any presumption in his favour from the fact that he has contravened Article 362.

The election held by you on the very day on which a meeting of electors could not be held, is not only liable to cancellation, but is of itself completely null.

Therefore, his Excellency has been advised not to cancel the appointment of Mr. Bélanger.

I have, &c.

Montmagny, March 17, 1877.

May it please your Excellency, Montmagny, March 10, 1877.

I take the liberty of respectfully informing you that on the 19th day of February last, Eugène Fournier, of the village of Montmagny, was elected by acclamation municipal councillor for the South Ward of the said village of Montmagny, at a meeting of the municipal electors of the said ward, held in accordance with a judgment rendered by the Magistrate's Court for the county of Montmagny, dated the 31st January 1877, as appears by a copy of the minutes of the said meeting, which I have the honour to enclose herewith.

That the said Eugène Fournier has been duly sworn in as municipal councillor, and that he has already exercised and still exercises the duties of the said office.

The Council learns with regret that your Excellency has been deceived and led into error, and that in consequence of false representations your Excellency, being under the impression that the said seat was vacant, has appointed Jules Bélanger as the person to fill the place of municipal councillor for the said ward.

Under the circumstances we respectfully hope that, in consideration of the facts elsewhere set forth, your Excellency will be pleased to cancel the appointment of the said Jules Bélanger, so as to avoid the inevitable trouble to which this conflict of authority will give rise.

To his Excellency the Hon. Luc Letellier de St. Just, Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec.

My Lord, Government House, Quebec, March 19, 1878.

The annexed explanatory case which I now address to your Excellency will, I am persuaded, have the effect of showing that I have always acted towards M. De Boucherville and his colleagues with good will, and with every desire of affording to them co-operation during their tenure of office.

What might have tended to produce unfortunate conflicts between myself and my cabinet was almost invariably smoothed over by my friendly desire to overlook the irregularities which I have noted in the present statement of facts.

I hope, my Lord, that the difficult position which I have been compelled to occupy will be justified, not only because it is constitutional, but also because the conduct of my cabinet endangered not only the prerogatives of the Crown, but also the most important interests of the people of this Province.

I have, &c.

To his Excellency the Right Hon.
The Earl of Dufferin, K.P., K.C.B., G.C.M.G.,

My Lord, Government House, Quebec, March 18, 1878.

I have the honour now to submit for your Lordship's consideration documents and details which I could not lay before the public, but from which it would have been more clearly understood that the dismissal of M. De Boucherville's cabinet was forced upon me by circumstances.

These details are not contained in the correspondence which I authorised M. De Boucherville to place before the Houses, and which are hereunto annexed.

From the day that I was, by your Excellency, raised to the position I occupy at present, all my private relations with the members of my cabinet, up to the time of their dismissal from office, were, I must admit, generally of an agreeable nature; but in those of an official character with the Premier, I almost invariably felt that I did not enjoy that entire confidence on his part which is the chief element of a cordial understanding between the representative of the Crown and his advisers.

After having studied the general state of the affairs of our Province, after having become convinced that legislative and administrative changes were becoming more and more necessary, I decided upon using with moderation, and with the greatest possible discretion, the influence attached to my position, in order to obtain the realisation of that which I deemed to be of the greatest advantage to the Province.

I regret to state to your Excellency that, although M. De Boucherville did, on most occasions, take my advice in good part and generally approved of it, he, nevertheless, almost always acted as though he had never received it. Nevertheless, far from using my authority to obstruct his action in any way, I invariably treated him with great indulgence, as will appear to your Excellency by the following facts:—

1st. During the session of 1876, a Bill had been read three times in one of the two branches of the Legislature, and only twice in the other.

This Bill, bearing all the certificates which were necessary to induce me to believe that it had been regularly passed and adopted, was submitted to me by the Premier for my sanction.

In consequence of being left in ignorance of these facts by my advisers, I sanctioned the Bill.

Not long afterwards I was informed of the irregularity, and immediately spoke of it to the Premier. I made the observation that such an act would entail too serious consequences to allow of its being passed over.

As a favour to him, however, I passed over this instance of irregular legislation, which was then irreparable.

2nd. During the same session another Bill was submitted to me for my sanction. On examining it I perceived a blank which had not been filled up, which I pointed out to the Premier in the following letter:—

"(Private.)

"My dear Premier, Quebec, December 27, 1876.

"A Bill (E.) which originated in the Council was passed by the Legislative Assembly without amendment. Upon reading it, before adding my certificate of sanction, I noticed that a blank had not been filled up in the seventh line of the sixth section.

"You followed the usual practice in not fixing the amount of the penalty in the Legislative Council; but the matter passed unperceived, or the officers, through some mistake, omitted to insert the amount fixed by the House, or it may have been an error in the proof sheets.

" While on the subject of these mistakes, you will find another in the second section of the same Act, wherein the word 'amender' is in the infinitive mood. I notice this latter accuracy, to which I do not attach much importance, only because I discovered another in an Act in which I had to point out to you, an omission which I consider fatal.

" Yours very truly,
" (Signed) L. LETELLIER."

The Premier came to me and said that he regretted the omission; he requested me to give my sanction to the Bill in the state in which it was. The conciliatory spirit which I showed in granting my consent seemed to please him.

3rd. In March 1877 (vide Appendix A.) my advisers caused me to make an appointment of a municipal councillor for the South Ward of the village of Montmagny, under the pretext that there had been no election, or that if such election had taken place, it was illegal.

The whole of the circumstances connected with this case I deem it my duty to explain to your Excellency, on account of the important principle involved therein.

After due personal examination of the petitions and other accompanying documents relating to that election, I called on the Premier, at his own office, to beg of him not to hurry the appointment which he was asked to make of a municipal councillor for that locality before receiving more ample information.

I pointed out to him that it appeared that a municipal election had taken place, and that in such case, as a principle, the Executive Council should not interfere.

I added that from the moment that a legal, or even an illegal election had taken place, the duty of deciding it rested with the courts in accordance with the ordinary course of law, of which they are the interpreters.

I then intimated to Mr. De Boucherville that I maintained on principle that all matters cognisable by the judiciary should be invariably left to the courts, which from their organisation are better fitted than the Executive to inquire into matters of fact and of evidence, and that I would never allow the substitution of the powers of the Executive for those of the courts when the latter had jurisdiction.

The Premier admitted that this opinion and the principles on which I based it were in conformity with his ideas, and necessary for the proper administration of justice. He asked me if I would consent to see Mr. Angers, the Attorney-General, on the subject.

I at once consented, and the Attorney-General was immediately sent for; the facts connected with that election difficulty, and my views regarding them, were then communicated to him. He promised that before any appointment should be made by the Lieutenant-Governor, he would make inquiry.

Shortly afterwards he reported to me that he had made an inquiry into the facts of the case, and, at his suggestion, I appointed Jules Bélanger to be councillor.

In the beginning of March 1877, difficulties and quarrels arose at Montmagny in consequence of that election.

After that appointment those quarrels broke forth afresh in the Municipal Council itself, from which the councillor, whom I had thus been caused to appoint, was expelled with violence. That appointment I was recommended to make, notwithstanding the fact that an election had taken place; that it had been held and presided over by the Mayor, that Eugène Fournier had been returned by acclamation; that he had been sworn in according to law, and that, at the very time when the appointment of Jules Bélanger was recommended to me, the person thus elected had in fact taken his seat, had been sworn, and had sat at the said Council, as appears by the minutes of the Council.

When I afterwards learned these facts, I communicated them to the Premier, whom I requested to prepare a revocation of the appointment which I had thus been caused to make, contrary to the principle above set forth, and the justice of which he had himself admitted.

The Premier answered that the matter was of a very delicate nature, as such a proceeding would be contrary to the recommendation of Mr. Angers, his Attorney-General; he concluded by saying that he would get him to prepare a report on the subject.

I received that report some days later. After having read it, I again intimated to M. De Boucherville, that in the interests of peace, and in conformity with the principle that the Executive should not be substituted for Judicial power in matters within the province of the latter, I insisted upon the revocation being made.

After waiting several days for an answer, and not having received any from the Premier, I addressed a letter to him, of which the following is a copy ;—

" (Private and Confidential.)

My dear DeBoucherville, Quebec, March 14, 1877.

" I have not received any answer on the subject of the appointment of a councillor at Montmagny.

" Those who deceived the Government in order to induce me to perform an Executive act in connexion with a question which they then knew to be within the Judicial power, do not, in my opinion, deserve consideration, which cannot but be injurious to the Government and myself.

" The remedy is very simple—rescind the appointment—allow the parties interested to fight it out before the courts.

" Yours very truly,

" (Signed) L. Letellier."

If, my Lord, I insist upon this latter point, it is to show your Excellency that the Prime Minister was then perfectly aware of my views on that point, and should not, in consequence, have introduced, during the last session of our Legislature, any legislative measure or performed any administrative act tending to substitute Executive for Judicial power, without notifying me, and especially without advising me on the subject.

It was easy for the Premier to understand from my remarks and the frequent conversations which I had with him, that I could not consent to see Her Majesty's subjects despoiled of the right guaranteed to them by Magna Charta, that their property should never be interfered with, except in virtue of judgment rendered by the tribunals of the country.

4th. On the 19th March 1877, being on the eve of absenting myself for a few days, I wrote to the Honourable Mr. Chapleau, and in a postscript I said, " Please oblige me " by telling the Premier that if he needs my concurrence Mr. Gauthier may bring down " to me the documents requiring my signature."

M. DeBoucherville should have understood from that, that if I was ready to give him my concurrence, it was on condition of having all documents submitted to me before signing them.

I leave you, my Lord, to judge in what manner my views were interpreted.

5th. Under date of the 6th of November last I addressed to the Honourable M. DeBoucherville the letter of which the following is a copy :—

" (Private.)

" My dear DeBoucherville, Quebec, November 6, 1877.

In the last Official Gazette were published under my signature two proclamations which I had not signed.

" One was for the summ ning of Parliament, which I had reserved in order to confer with you ; the other, which I did not even see, appoints a day of thanksgiving.

" These proceedings, the nature of which I shall not characterise, entail, apart from their impropriety, invalidities of which you will easily understand.

" Yours, &c.

" The Hon. C. B. DeBoucherville, (Signed) L. Letellier.

" Premier."

The following are the notes which I took of the conversation which I had with Mr. DeBoucherville on the subject.

" Mr. DeBoucherville came on the same day he received the letter, to tell me that he regretted the thing had occurred, and that it was no fault of his. I accepted the excuse, and I then told him that I would not tolerate my name being used when necessary for any duty of my office, unless the documents requiring my signature had been previously submitted to me, and unless information was afforded to me ; which M. DeBoucherville assured me would be the course followed in future.

6th. But, my Lord, there is another point still more important, which I cannot any longer refrain from mentioning.

From the conversations which I have held with M. DeBoucherville, there results a fact, which, if it were known, would of itself have sufficiently justified me in believing that he did not possess the confidence of the people of this Province.

On two different occasions, some time after the session of 1876, I pointed out to him that millions had been voted to aid railways in general, at a time when our finances did not appear to me to be in a condition to warrant, all at once, a lavish expenditure in subsidising these numerous undertakings, particularly as, apart from that, our credit was so heavily pledged towards the building of the "Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa, and "Occidental Railway."

He very frankly avowed that these grants, though they were for the development of the Province, had been necessitated by political considerations, that without them the support of the members whose counties were traversed by those railways, would cease to be secured to Government; that there would be no means of having a majority; that those members formed combinations—"rings"—to control the House.

M. DeBoucherville is not unaware that I thereupon told him that it was better to save the Province than a Government, and that if his administration was not strong enough to resist those influences, it would be better for him to form a combination of honest and well-meaning men from both sides of the House, rather than submit to the dictation of those "rings," and to the control of those combinations.

When he made no attempt to escape from that deleterious influence, after his own avowal that the Legislature was controlled by those "rings," when by his legislation he sought to favour them anew during the last session, without having previously advised with me, had I not the right, as the representative of my Sovereign, to believe and to be convinced that Mr. DeBoucherville did not possess a constitutional majority in the Legislative Assembly?

7th. In communicating to both Houses my memoranda of the 25th February and 1st March last, the Premier and Mr. Attorney-General Angers, in violation of their duty, overstepped the authorisation which I had given by my letter of the 4th of March last for that purpose. They added to that communication a report of pretended conversations, the correctness of which I contest, and the impropriety of which I maintain.

I shall point out, my Lord, one fact alone to prove that incorrectness and that impropriety. The Hon. Messrs. DeBoucherville and Angers, in their explanations to the two Houses, lay great stress on the telegram which M. DeBoucherville despatched to me at Rivière Ouelle, to ask my permission to introduce resolutions concerning the finances, and on the blank signature that I sent up in answer to it.

But these gentlemen themselves had that blank signature filled up by my private secretary, so as to give to the telegram the meaning which I attributed to it, namely, a request for permission to introduce the supplies. The following is a copy of the message produced with that blank signature:—

"L. Letellier,

"The Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec transmits to the Legislative Assembly the supplementary estimates for the current year and for the fiscal year ending 30th June 1879, which, in conformity with the provisions of the 54th section of the British North America Act, 1867, he recommends to the Legislative Assembly.

"30th January 1878."

My ministers never had, by their own admission, any other authorisation from me for the introduction of their railway and taxation resolutions than the blank signature above-mentioned, in which not a word is said of them. Besides which, it will be noticed that the railway resolutions were introduced on the 20th January, whereas the message is dated the 30th.

It is for this reason, my Lord, that I bring to your knowledge all the facts and details which are connected with the relations which I have had with M. DeBoucherville and his colleagues.

Were the controversy with me alone, as a private individual, I would abstain from any remonstrance against the injustice of their reflections upon the conduct of the representative of the Crown, which they have made in violation of their duty; but in this matter the maintenance of the constitution is at stake.

If, without any authority from me, proclamations have been published which I never signed, is it surprising that messages were communicated in my name to the Houses respecting which I had never been consulted ?

It is because, as the representative of my Sovereign, I have been unjustly and shamefully dragged before the public that I make known to you, my Lord, that, in the performance of my duty as Her representative, my object has not only been to protect the dignity of my office, but to afford to the people of this Province an opportunity of knowing that, under existing circumstances, the exercise of the Royal prerogative has not been hostile to their constitutional liberties; but that, on the contrary, it has afforded them the means of freely exercising their judgment.

There results, my Lord, from what I have now stated :—

1st. That in general the recommendations which I made to my cabinet did not receive the consideration which is due to the representative of the Crown.

2nd. That my name has been used by the members of the Government in the signature of documents which I had never seen.

3rd. That a proclamation summoning the Legislature was published in the Official Gazette without my being consulted or informed of it, and before my signature had been attached thereto.

4th. That a like proclamation fixing a day of thanksgiving was also published under similiar circumstances.

5th. That although I had intimated to the Premier by my advice, and by my letter of the 14th March 1877, my firm determination to protect the inhabitants of this Province against the arbitrary decisions of the Executive in matters within the jurisdiction of the courts of justice, he thought proper, without my participation and without advising me, to propose to both Houses, in legislating for the "Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa, and Occidental Railway," to substitute the power of the Executive for that of the judiciary.

6th. That, without having advised me, and without having received authorisation of any sort whatever from me, the Government of Mr. DeBoucherville proposed to the Legislature a measure of almost general taxation upon the ordinary contracts and transactions of life, transfers of bank stock, &c., while no message from me had been asked for this object, nor signed by me to authorise its proposition to the Houses.

7th. That, after its dismissal, the Government of Mr. DeBoucherville again failed in its duty by assigning reasons for the adjournment of the House from day to day different from those agreed on between myself and the Premier, at the risk of prejudicing public opinion against the representative of the Crown.

8th. That at the time of the communication of the causes which rendered necessary the dismissal of the cabinet, in the explanations which were given by the Premier to the Legislative Council, and by the Attorney-General to the Legislative Assembly, both of them referred to pretended conversations which they had no authority whatever to communicate to the Legislature, since the Premier had, by his answer to the letter of the Lieutenant-Governor of the 4th March last, limited his explanations to the communication to both Houses of my memoranda of the 25th February and 1st March, and the answers of the Premier of the 27th February and of the 2nd and 4th March instant.

9th. That, therefore, the additions and the comments made by the Premier before the Legislative Council, and by the Attorney-General before the Legislative Assembly, were contrary to the conditions agreed upon between the Lieutenant-Governor and the Premier.

10th. That the Premier and his colleagues, by making use of pretended private conversations to explain the causes of their dismissal, in contravention to their duty to the Crown and to what they had pledged themselves to observe with regard to it, have placed the Lieutentant-Governor under the necessity of bringing under the notice of your Excellency all the reasons for that dismissal.

I have, &c.

APPENDIX A.

SUMMARY OF OFFICIAL RECORD.

In January 1877 an election had taken place for the South Ward of the village of Montmagny. That election having been declared null and void by the court, it ordered a fresh election, and appointed Eugène Hamond to preside thereat.

On the day fixed, Eugène Hamond refusing to preside, Naz Bernatchez, Esq., Mayor of the Municipality, the senior magistrate present, presided.

The meeting elected Eugène Fournier.

Eugène Hamond wrote to the Lieutenant-Governor he had not presided at the meeting, without adding, however, that there had been no election. He recommended at the same time that Jules Bélanger be appointed.

Eugène Fournier, elected at the meeting of the 19th February, took the oath of office and took his seat on the 23rd February.

On the 3rd of March the Attorney-General (Mr. Angers) recommended the appointment of Jules Bélanger, who was accordingly appointed on the 7th of the same month.

On the 10th of March Mr. Bernatchez, Mayor of Montmagny, addressed to the Lieutenant-Governor a memorial setting forth the facts, and praying that the appointment be cancelled.

On the 15th of March the Attorney-General made a report, recommending that the appointment of Jules Bélanger be maintained.

On the 27th of March the Lieutenant-Governor revoked that appointment, on a report of the Government.

APPENDIX B.

Quebec, March 4, 1878.

THE Lieutenant-Governor desires that his two memoranda (of the 25th February and 1st March), addressed to the Hon M. DeBoucherville, and the answers made to those memoranda by the Hon. M. DeBoucherville (of the 27th February and 3rd March) be not now communicated to both Houses.

That communication, authorised by the Lieutenant-Governor at the request of the Hon. M. DeBoucherville, should be made as soon as the arrangements for the formation of a new Executive Council are completed.

The Hon. M. DeBoucherville may communicate to the Houses that the adjournment from day to day is rendered necessary by the last-mentioned cause.

(Signed) L. LETELLIER.

To the Hon. C. B. DeBoucherville,
Quebec.

YOUR EXCELLENCY, Quebec, March 4, 1878.

IN conformity with your wish expressed in a letter of to-day's date, I shall withhold, until the formation of a new Executive Council, the explanations I was authorised by your Excellency to communicate to the Houses.

I have, &c.

Government House, Quebec, February 25, 1878.

THE Lieutenant-Governor desires the Executive Council to prepare, for his consideration, a "factum" containing a copy of the following documents, viz. :—

1. A copy of the Acts of the Federal Parliament authorising the construction of the railway now known under the name of "Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa, and Occidental Railway," as well as a copy of the Acts of the Legislature of the Province of Quebec respecting the said railway.

2. A copy of the Acts of the Legislature of the Province of Quebec, respecting the building of the railway between Quebec and Montreal, which line is commonly designated by the name of "North Shore Railway."

3. A copy of the byelaws of each of the municipal corporations by which they undertook to help in constructing the said railways.

4. A statement of the amount of the bonus paid by each of those corporations, and a copy of the correspondence between the Government, its Commissioners or the contractors for the said railways, and the aforesaid municipalities, with regard to their bonus or subsidy.

5. A copy of the various contracts entered into for the building of those several roads.

6. A copy of the official or confidential reports of the engineers who have been ordered to locate those lines of railway in whole or in part.

7. A copy of the report of the Railway Commissioners submitted to the Houses, during the present session, with regard to the said railways.

8. A copy of the representations made to the Government by the municipal bodies so interested, of the ratepayers of those municipalities, with regard to the conditions of their bonus or subsidy.

9. A copy of the resolutions which have been proposed to the Provincial Legislature during the present session, with regard to the aforesaid subsidies, and to facilitate the payment and collection thereof.

10. A copy of the Bill based on those resolutions which has been introduced in the Legislature of Quebec during the present session.

11. A plan showing the several locatings of each of the said railways or of any part of them.

12. A statement of the reasons which led the Provincial Government not to be satisfied with the provisions of the statutory and public law and of the civil code of this Province for the recovery of any sums of money which may be due by those corporations, but, without previously advising in any way with the Lieutenant-Governor, to propose ex post facto legislation to compel them to pay.

Another very important Bill, to make provision for levying new taxes, has also been proposed to the Legislature, without having been previously submitted for the consideration of the Lieutenant-Governor.

The Lieutenant-Governor quite understands that propositions of secondary importance, and on which he has been previously officially informed, may be, as matter of routine, proposed to the Houses, without a special order from himself; but he cannot in any way permit that the Executive should make communications in his name to the Legislature, with regard to measures which are of a new and important character, without his special authorisation, and without his having been previously fully informed and advised in respect thereof.

(Signed) L. Letellier,
Lieutenant-Governor.

Your Excellency, Quebec, February 27, 1878.

I have the honour to acknowledge receipt of the memorandum which your Excellency caused to be handed me yesterday afternoon by your Aide-de-Camp, who informed me at the same time that you were ill in bed.

I have submitted that memorandum to the Executive Council, and will see, as your Excellency desires, that diligence is used to cause all the documents asked for to be transmitted to you as soon as possible.

Anticipating the factum which your Excellency wishes to have, and which will contain a more detailed statement of the motives which have induced the Provincial Government to propose the measures to which you draw my attention, I deem it my duty to represent to you :

That amongst others, the reasons which led the Government to submit to the Legislature a law compelling the municipalities to pay their subscriptions towards building the Provincial Railway, on the decision of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, under a sworn report of a competent engineer, and after a 15 days notice, to give those municipalities an opportunity of being heard, are the manifestations of bad faith of certain municipalities, shown in certain cases by their neglect to respond to the calls of the Treasurer, in others by their formal refusal to pay, and in certain cases by resolutions adopted demanding new conditions in respect to the agreements they had entered into with the Government.

The Government believed that, without such legislation, the object of which is to avoid the slowness of ordinary judicial proceedings, the result of the bad faith of the municipalities would have been either to necessitate a new loan by the Province, and therefore an unjust charge upon municipalities who had entered into no agreement, and who are to derive no immediate advantage from the construction of the road, or to put a complete stop to the works begun, with the inevitable loss of the interest on the enormous capital already invested in the enterprise, and the other damages which would result. The Government, firstly obliging itself by that law to fulfil the conditions agreed upon with those municipalities, believed that in substituting for the ordinary courts the Lieutenant-Governor with an Executive Council, responsible to the Legislature and to the people, they were offering to parties interested a tribunal which insured them as many guarantees as the ordinary courts.

I would further bring under your Excellency's notice that provisions of a similar nature to this legislation exist already in our Statutes. I may cite to your Excellency Chap. 83 of the Consolidated Statutes of Canada, and also Chap. 47 of 36 Vict. of the Statutes of Ontario.

I respectfully submit to your Excellency that a law framed to better assure the execution of a contract cannot produce a retro-active effect; it enacts for the future, and has for its end the respective interests of both parties.

I would now beg your Excellency to observe that while you were at Rivière Ouelle, I had the honour to ask your authority to put the question of finance before the House, and that you kindly answered, stating you were forwarding through the mail a blank, which act I took at that time as a great mark of confidence on your part. I received, in fact, a blank with your signature, and I gave it to the Treasurer, who had it filled up by your aide-de-camp. Later I had the honour to ask your Excellency for a general permission to submit to the House measures concerning money matters, which your Excellency gave me with your ordinary courtesy.

That permission, I may say, has always been granted me by your predecessor, the late lamented Mr. Caron. I must admit that with that permission, and being convinced your Excellency had read the Treasurer's speech, in which he announced the taxation subsequently proposed, I considered myself authorised to tell my colleagues that I had your permission for all money measures.

I beg your Excellency to believe that I never had the intention of assuming the right of having measures passed without your approbation, and that, in this case, having had occasion to confer with you with regard to the law respecting the Provincial Railway, and not having orders to suspend it, I did not think your Excellency would see in that measure any intention on my part of disregarding your prerogatives, which nobody is more disposed to respect and uphold than myself.

I have, &c.
(Signed) C. B. DeBoucherville.

To his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec.

Government House, Quebec, March 1, 1878.

The Lieutenant-Governor, taking into consideration what the Prime Minister communicated to him verbally (27th Feb.), and taking into consideration the letter which the Premier then handed to him, is ready to admit that there was no intention on the part of the Premier to disregard the prerogatives of the Crown, and that there has been on his part only an error committed in good faith, in interpreting, as he did, the words of the Lieutenant-Governor in their interview of the 19th February instant, words which did not convey the sense of authorisation which the Premier attached to them.

With such an interpretation, and the instructions which were in consequence given by the Premier to the Hon. Messrs. Angers and Church, those gentlemen have done nothing knowingly not in conformity with the duties of their office.

As to the blank which the Lieutenant-Governor sent him from Rivière Ouelle, the Lieutenant-Governor knew that that blank would be used to lay the estimates before the House.

That act was a mark of confidence on his part, as the Premier characterises it in his letter of the 27th, but that act was confidential.

The Lieutenant-Governor deems it right to observe that, in his memorandum of the 25th February inst., he in no way expressed the opinion that he believed that the Premier ever had the intention of taking upon himself the right "of having measures " passed without his approbation, or of disregarding the prerogatives of the representa- " tive of the Crown."

But the Prime Minister cannot lose sight of the fact that, although there was no intention on his part, in fact the thing exists, as the Lieutenant-Governor told him.

The fact of having proposed to the Houses several new and important measures without having previously in any way advised the Lieutenant-Governor thereof, although the intention of disregarding his prerogatives did not exist, does not the less constitute one of those false positions which place the representative of the Crown in a critical and difficult position with regard to the two Houses of the Legislature.

The Lieutenant-Governor cannot admit that the responsibility of this state of affairs should rest with him.

With regard to the Bill intituled " An Act respecting the Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa, and Occidental Railway," the Premier cannot claim for that measure the asserted general authorisation which he mentions in his letter, for their interview was on the 19th February, and that Bill was before the Legislature several days before that date, without the Lieutenant-Governor having been in any way informed of it by his advisers.

The Lieutenant-Governor expressed at that time to the Premier how much he regretted that legislation ; he represented to him that he considered it contrary to the principles of law and justice ; notwithstanding that, the measure was carried through both Houses until adopted.

It is true that the Premier gives in his letter, as one of the reasons for acting as he did, "that this permission of using the name of the representative of the Crown had, " besides, always been granted him by the predecessor of the present Lieutenant- " Governor, the late lamented Mr. Caron."

This reason cannot be one for the Lieutenant-Governor, for in so acting he would have abdicated his position as representative of the Crown, which act neither the Lieutenant-Governor nor the Premier could reconcile with the obligations of the Lieutenant-Governor towards the Crown.

The Lieutenant-Governor regrets having to state, as he told the Premier, that he has not been informed, in general, in an explicit manner of the measures adopted by the cabinet, although the Lieutenant-Governor had often given the Premier an opportunity to do so, especially during last year.

From time to time, since the last session of the Legislature, the Lieutenant-Governor has drawn the attention of the Premier to several subjects regarding the interests of the Province of Quebec, amongst others :

1st. The enormous expenditure occasioned by very large subsidies to several railways, while the Province was burdened with the construction of the great railway from Quebec to Ottawa, which should take precedence of the others ; and this, when the state of our finances obliged us to undertake loans disproportioned to our revenue.

2nd. The necessity of reducing the expenses of the Civil Government and of the Legislature, instead of having recourse to new taxes, in view of avoiding financial embarrassment.

The Lieutenant-Governor expressed also, but with regret, to the Premier, that the Orders passed in Council to increase the salaries of Civil Service servants seemed to him inopportune, at a time when the Government were negotiating with the Bank of Montreal a loan of half a million, with power to increase that loan to $1,000,000, at a rate of interest of 7 (seven) per cent. ; and indeed, even to-day (1st of March), the Lieutenant-Governor is obliged to allow an Order in Council to be passed to obtain the last half million for the Government, without which the Government would be unable to meet its obligations, as I was informed by the Hon. the Provincial Treasurer to-day by order of the Prime Minister.

The Premier did not let the Lieutenant-Governor know, then or since, that the Government were in such a state of penury as to necessitate special legislation to increase public taxation.

Therefore the Lieutenant-Governor said and repeated these things to the Premier, and he deems it advisable to record them here, that they may serve as memoranda for himself and for the Premier.

It therefore results:

1st. That although the Lieutenant-Governor has made many recommendations in his position as representative of the Crown to the Premier on these different subjects of public interest, his advisers have undertaken a course of administrative and legislative acts contrary to these recommendations, and without having previously advised him.

2nd. That the Lieutenant-Governor has been placed, without evil intention, but in fact, in a false position, by being exposed to a conflict with the will of the Legislature, which he recognises as being, in all cases, supreme, so long as that will is expressed in all constitutional ways.

The Lieutenant-Governor has read and examined carefully the memorandum and documents which the Premier was kind enough to bring him yesterday.

There are, in the record, petitions from several municipal corporations and from citizens of different places, addressed to the Lieutenant-Governor, against the resolutions and the Government Bill, with regard to the "Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa, and Occidental Railway."

The Lieutenant-Governor was only yesterday able to take cognizance of some of these petitions, as they had not been communicated to him before he received them in the record.

The Lieutenant-Governor, after having maturely deliberated, cannot accept advice of the Premier with regard to the sanctioning of the Railway Bill, intituled "An Act respecting the Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa, and Occidental Railway."

For all these causes the Lieutenant-Governor cannot conclude this memorandum without expressing to the Premier the regret he feels at being no longer able to continue to retain him in his position, contrary to the rights and privileges of the Crown.

Your Excellency, Quebec, March 2, 1878.

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your memorandum, in which you come to the conclusion that you can no longer continue to retain me in my position as Prime Minister. There is no other duty for me to fulfil but to submit to the dismissal from office, which your Excelleney has notified me of, declaring at the same time my profound respect for the rights and privileges of the Crown, and my devotion to the interests of the Province.

Governor-General the MARQUIS OF LORNE, K.T., to the Right Hon. Sir MICHAEL HICKS BEACH, Bart. (Received April 1, 1879.)

Canada, Government House, Ottawa,
Sir, March 15, 1879.

With my Despatch of the 5th instant* I had the honour to transmit to you copies of a correspondence which had been submitted to the Dominion Parliament relative to certain ministerial changes which took place in the Province of Quebec in the early part of last year.

* No. 1.

A few days after this paper had been laid on the table of the House, Mr. J. A. Mousseau, a supporter of the Government, gave the following notice:—"That this "House do resolve that the dismissal by the Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec of his "ministers on the 2nd day of March 1878 was, under the circumstances, unwise and "subversive of the position accorded to the advisers of the Crown since the concession "of the principle of responsible Government to the British North American Colonies."

The motion came up for consideration on the 12th instant, and was debated on that and the succeeding day, and on the morning of the 14th instant a division was taken with the following result:—Yeas, 136; nays, 51; a majority of 85 in favour of the motion.

Twenty-one members were absent or did not record their votes.

I enclose an extract from the newspapers, giving a full report of the debate, pending the issue of Hansard, which will be sent to you in due course.*

Mr. Mousseau's motion was identical with one on the same subject moved by Sir J. A. Macdonald in the last session of Parliament and defeated by a majority of 32.

GOVERNOR-GENERAL THE MARQUIS OF LORNE, K.T., to the RIGHT HON. SIR MICHAEL HICKS BEACH, BART. (Received April 28, 1879.)

Government House, Ottawa, April 9, 1879.

SIR,

WITH reference to the correspondence noted in the margin concerning the action of the Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec, the ministerial changes in that Province, which resulted from that action, and the subsequent events which have occurred, I have now the honour to report that on Saturday, the 29th March, Sir J. A. Macdonald came to Government House, and after conversation on other subjects, stated that he had waited until the return of Mr. Langevin from Quebec (whither he had gone on account of a family bereavement), and for the return of Mr. Masson, to communicate to me the decision the Cabinet had arrived at with regard to Mr. Letellier, the Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec. The decision was to the effect that the usefulness of Mr. Letellier had gone, and that he must be relieved of his office. I said that Sir John must know, from what I had already said to him on this subject, that I could not agree in the policy he recommended, but requested him to give his reason in writing, and told him I should put my reasons against such a policy in writing. He intimated that he would do as I requested. I said further, that I considered that the dismissal of the Lieutenant-Governor would set a dangerous precedent.

On Wednesday, the 2nd of April, Sir John again came to me, and informed me that, as an alternative, he suggested that the question involved in the dismissal of the Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec should be referred to Her Majesty's Government. I assented to this, and he produced a note of the statement he proposed to make to the House on the subject; it was in these terms: "Sir John Macdonald waited on his Excellency the "Governor-General, and informed him that after the resolution of the Senate in the last "session of Parliament, and the resolution of the House of Commons during the present "session, it was the opinion of his Excellency's advisers that the usefulness of the Hon. "Mr. Letellier as Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec was gone, and they advised that in the "public interest it was expedient that he should be removed from his office. His "Excellency thereupon was pleased to state that as the Federal system introduced by the "British North America Act of 1867 was, until then, unknown in Great Britain or her "Colonies, there were no precedents to guide us; that the decision in the present case "would settle for the future the relations between the Dominion and Provincial "Governments, so far as the office of Lieutenant-Governor is concerned, and that he "therefore deemed it expedient to submit the advice tendered to him and the whole case "with all the attendant circumstances to Her Majesty's Government for their consideration "and instructions."

I informed Sir John Macdonald that I agreed to his suggestion to use the above words in making his statement to the House of Commons.

Some misconception having arisen with reference to the statement made to the House, Sir John Macdonald on Monday the 7th April rose in his place, and in answer to Mons. Desjardin said: "I am glad the honourable member has asked the question. I beg "leave to state to the House that the Postmaster General, my colleague, will sail by "the next Canadian steamer for England for the purpose of supporting, with the consent "of the Governor-General, the advice given by the Government for the removal of "Lieutenant-Governor Letellier. He may, perhaps, be accompanied by another gentle-"man; at all events he goes next Saturday. I need scarcely say that the fact of our "holding the position we do at this moment shows that the Governor-General did not "make that reference against our advice, and the fact of our remaining in office shows "we hold ourselves responsible for the action of the Governor-General."

It will be seen from the foregoing narrative that in referring the question of the dismissal of the Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec to Her Majesty's Government I have not acted against the advice of my Ministry.

I consider that it is important than an opinion be given on the subject by Her Majesty's Government, for it is expedient that an authoritative expression of their views be obtained with reference to the powers given by the British North America Act of 1867 to the Governor-General, in respect of the dismissal of the Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec. By clause 12 of this Act it is provided that, in certain cases, the Governor-General has power to act individually, and in clause 59, the words "in Council" are omitted, and the language used is "a Lieutenant-Governor shall hold office during the "pleasure of the Governor-General." Sir John A. Macdonald will refer to this point in a memorandum which will be forwarded on Monday the 14th instant.

In the case of Lieutenant-Governor Letellier, the dismissal proposed would establish a new precedent. He would be dismissed, although the responsibility of the act for which he has been censured by the present Dominion House of Commons has been assumed by his minister, M. Joly, who with his colleagues has been able to carry on the Government of the Province since the provincial elections which took place in the summer of last year.

To dismiss the Lieutenant-Governor for acts, for which M. Joly has declared himself to be responsible to the Provincial Legislature, is a new exercise of the Federal power, and as it affects the interpretation of an Imperial Act, which carefully guards Provincial interests, I consider the wish of Sir John Macdonald to refer the matter to the Imperial Government as wise, and meeting in the fullest manner the requirements of the constitution.

This Despatch has been read by Sir John Macdonald, who has pronounced the narrative of the conversations which have taken place between us to be accurate.

I enclose extracts* from the public newspapers, of all shades of politics, with regard to this important question, and for facility of reference I transmit copies of the printed papers which accompanied the Despatches above quoted, and further a copy of a report of the debates which took place in the Legislative Assembly of Quebec, after M. Joly's administration had assumed power.

Enclosure in No. 4.

MEMORANDUM by Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

As this important matter has been referred to Her Majesty's Government by his Excellency the Governor-General with the assent of his Advisers, it is proper that their reasons for tendering the advice that Mr. Letellier be removed should be submitted to his Excellency for transmission to the Secretary of State for the Colonies. Perhaps the most convenient way for doing so would be by a succinct narrative statement of the circumstances surrounding the case. The papers laid before Parliament enter so fully into the details that the narrative may be a short one. In 1876 Mons. Letellier, then a member of the Dominion Ministry, was appointed Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec. Although an active politician, and believed to have strong party leanings, no objection was taken by anyone to his appointment. Of course Canada which only adopted the Federal system with local Lieutenant-Governors in 1867 had no service similar to that which now exists in Great Britain. The Governorship of Colonies has with the recent exception of Canada become a branch of the Civil Service of England, and gentlemen appointed to any Colonial Government, although holding commissions during the pleasure of the Crown, have a right to expect that they will not be removed without cause until the usual term of office has expired. In Canada since the 1st July 1867, when the Dominion was formed, the Lieutenant-Governors of the different Provinces were almost of necessity selected from men of political standing, and although it might have been apprehended that the party proclivities of these gentlemen would interfere more or less with the impartial performance of their duties, it is satisfactory to be able to state that except in this case no charge or complaint has been made that any Lieutenant-Governor has allowed his conduct as such to be influenced by his party predilections. When Mr. Letellier was appointed Lieutenant-Governor he was a prominent member of Mr. Mackenzie's ministry and the leader of his Government in the Senate. It was therefore especially necessary that he should have avoided even a semblance of being actuated by party feeling in his new position. Instead of this there is too much reason to believe that he assumed his office with a distinct purpose of exerting his official influence on behalf of his political friends. Now in Quebec it is perhaps more necessary than in any other Province of the Dominion that the conduct of its Governor should be politically colourless. Its people of French origin have a traditional respect for authority, and as in old France, except in times of revolutionary or great political excitement, the influence of the Government of the day over the electorate is so great that the party having the advantage of that influence have much the greater chance of success. In fact, in the case of a general election, the two parties do not enter into the field on equal terms. When Mr. Letellier assumed his Government he found that his Ministry, of which the Hon. Mr. Bouchierville was the first Minister, possessed the confidence of both branches of the Legislature. It was known that in the Legislative Council, consisting of 24 members, he had the support of 19; in the Legislative Assembly, composed of 65, he enjoyed the confidence of at least 40 members. It might, therefore, naturally have been supposed that his task was an easy one, and that he could have safely accepted the advice of his Ministers (strongly supported as they were by both branches of the Legislature) on all subjects within the range of their constitutional powers of Government and advice. A perusal of the documents laid before Parliament will show that he did not act fairly or loyally towards them. It is not too much to say that he laid in wait for an opportunity of removing them. He allowed them to proceed with the business of the session until near its close, and then, on the grounds or pretexts disclosed in the papers, he dismissed them. The correspondence will show how frivolous and disingenuous his pretexts were. A stranger to Quebec might naturally inquire as to what object Mr. Letellier had in dismissing his Ministry. He had, it is believed, a distinct and specific object. The general elections for the Dominion Parliament were of necessity to take place in 1878, when the Ministry of which, as has been already stated, Mr. Letellier had been a prominent member, would be obliged to go to the country and give an account of their stewardship. In consequence of the traditional influence of Government, which has been alluded to, it was obviously of political importance to that administration to have such influence exerted in its favour. Hence arose the anxiety of Mr. Letellier to forget his position as Governor—to dismiss his advisers, who were known to be politically opposed to the Dominion Ministry, and to substitute for them a cabinet which would act in sympathy with them and exercise the Provincial patronage to carry the Dominion elections. With that view Mr. Joly, who, before he became leader of his party in Quebec, had been a strong supporter in the Dominion Parliament of Mr. Mackenzie, was selected. He resorted to a dissolution, and the result was that, notwithstanding all the influence that the Quebec Government could exercise, he did not succeed in securing a majority. At that election the battle was fought, not on Mr. Letellier's conduct, with which constitutionally the local electors had nothing to do, but upon the comparative merits of the policy of the two parties, of the Joly and de Bouchierville Ministries; and the result was, as has been stated, that while Mr. de Bouchierville's former support was diminished, Mr. Joly had not a majority at his back. It was, however, necessary to Mr. Joly's existence that he should be able to secure a majority, if but of one, in the House of Assembly, and this he effected by causing to be chosen speaker Mr. Turcotte, a gentleman elected under a positive pledge to oppose him, and who after his election had declared his continued opposition. It has been asserted, and never denied, and has recently been stated in the most explicit terms in the late debate in the Dominion Parliament by a member in his place, that Mr. Turcotte was sent for and his acceptance of the speakership arranged in the presence of Mr. Letellier.

Notwithstanding the purchase of the Speaker a vote of want of confidence was passed in the Legislative Assembly, and a similar resolution was adopted in the Upper House. Mr. Joly, however, did not resign as he ought to have done, and as the Lieutenant-Governor ought to have called upon him to do. He held to office and proceeded with the business of the country. He succeeded in carrying the supplies, and the fact of his having done so is quoted as a proof of the substantial confidence of the House in him. But the refusal of supplies is an antiquated procedure, and has long since been succeeded in England by votes of want of confidence, and for the same reasons which induced the Opposition at Quebec to vote the supplies. The refusal to do so would have clogged the whole machinery of Government, would have stopped the construction of the Government railways and ruined the contractors, and at a time of great depression would have deprived very many working men of the means of subsistence. The Opposition therefore patriotically deemed it wise, while persisting in their expression of want of confidence, not to obstruct the whole business of the country. During the whole of the legislative existence of Mr. Joly he has thus been carrying on the Government by the improper partizanship of the Lieutenant-Governor, and the casting vote of a speaker purchased with his connivance. In the session of the Dominion Parliament of 1878 the conduct of Mr. Letellier was brought before the House of Commons by Sir John Macdonald, the leader of the Opposition, who moved the following resolution :—

"That the recent dismissal by the Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec of his Ministry was, under the circumstances, unwise and subversive of the position accorded to the advisers of the Crown since the concession of the principle of responsible Government to the British North American Colonies."

On reference to the debates, it will be seen that Mr. Mackenzie's Government did not defend Mr. Letellier's action, although they supported their old colleague by a vote of 112 to 70. During the same session the senate passed by a vote of 37 to 20 the following resolution :—

"That the messages of his Excellency the Governor-General of the 26th March and 8th April be now read, and that it be resolved that the course adopted by the Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec towards his late Ministry was at variance with the constitutional principles upon which Responsible Government should be conducted."

Then came on last autumn the general election for the Parliament of the Dominion, and among the many questions submitted to the people one of the most prominent was the conduct of Mr. Letellier, and the votes of the two Houses of Parliament with respect to it. In the Province of Quebec it was the question of the day, and the opinion of the electors may be known by the return of 48 gentlemen pledged to Mr. Letellier's condemnation against 17 supporters. When the present session of Parliament met, Mr. Mousseau, a representative from Quebec, brought forward a motion identical in its terms with that moved in the previous session by Sir John Macdonald, and it was carried by a vote of 136 to 51 members. The analysis of this vote sufficiently shows that the general condemnation of Mr. Letellier's conduct was not confined to his own Province.

Under these circumstances the Governor-General's advisers thought it their duty to convey to his Excellency their opinion that after the Senate's resolution of last session, and the vote of the House of Commons during the present session, Mr. Letellier's usefulness was gone, and they advised his removal; and now the whole question stands for the consideration of Her Majesty's Government on the Governor-General's reference.

It is necessary now to consider the tenure of office by Lieutenant-Governors appointed under British North America Act, 1867. When the resolutions on which that Act was based were being prepared it was thought expedient to continue in the Dominion the English practice with respect to Colonial Governors. This might have been done without legislative enactment, but to prevent the possibility of its being supposed that Lieutenant-Governors under the new regime were of necessity to be in sympathy with the Dominion Ministry of the day, and to be removable with every change of party, the provision in the 59th clause was introduced which says that no Lieutenant-Governor shall be removable within five years of his appointment except for cause assigned, which shall be communicated within one month after the order for removal is made, and shall be communicated by message to the Senate and House of Commons.

This left the tenure to be one of pleasure as before, but was intended by statutory enactment to establish the practice which obtains in England. It gives no vested right to a Lieutenant-Governor in his office for five years; it does not place him in the position of a judge who holds office during good behaviour, although removable by vote of both houses. The statute merely operates and was meant to operate as a check upon the capricious and arbitrary exercise of the power of dismissal by compelling the Ministry to submit the reasons for the exercise of the Royal pleasure for Parliament. A Lieutenant-Governor is still removable and ought to be removable whenever it is felt by the Dominion Government that it is for the public interest that he should be displaced. Due regard should of course be had to his feelings and position, and the power should not be lightly exercised; but it is not necessary that he should be tried, convicted, or even charged with gross moral or personal wrong.

If, as in the case of Imperial officers of like position, it becomes necessary or expedient for the advantage, good government, or contentment of the people governed that he should be removed, it is the duty of the Dominion Government to discard him. His usefulness may have been destroyed by accident or misfortune as well as by fault, but still the usefulness once gone the office should also go. This is, we know, the practice in England, but there Her Majesty's Government have the means from the multiplicity of offices at their gift to remove the unsuccessful or erring Governor to another sphere of action. Here the same means can scarcely be said to exist. It may perhaps be said that stronger reasons should therefore be assigned for the dismissal of a Governor; but, on the other hand, a Canadian officer so removed is not deprived of any professional status or prospects. He belongs to no service, and his office is considered more as a dignified retirement from active political life than one of profit or emolument. At the end of his five years he has no claim for another appointment or for further consideration, and he stands in a position similar to that of a minister who has lost power. In Mr. Letellier's case it is not in the opinion of his Excellency's advisers at all necessary in order to justify their advice to go behind the vote of Parliament, it is sufficient for them that Parliament has passed a censure on his official conduct.

After such a vote it must be obvious that he cannot either with profit or advantage be maintained in his position. At the same time they must express their full concurrence in the justice of the censure. They proved that by their votes in the Legislature; but had they not voted at all, or even if their opinion had been averse to that arrived at by Parliament, it seems clear that they are bound to respect that decision and to act upon it as they have done by advising the removal. It has been argued that while by the 58th clause of the Act, Lieutenant-Governors are to be appointed by the Governor-General in Council by instrument under the Great Seal, the 59th clause provides that he shall hold office during the pleasure of the Governor-General, and that therefore while the appointment must be under the advice of a Responsible Ministry, the removal may be made by his Excellency without reference to his Council, and the 12th clause of the Act is quoted in support of that view. That clause provides as to what powers, authorities, and functions are to be vested in the Governor-General with the advice of his Privy Council, and what in the Governor-General himself. The argument is not however tenable. Long before Confederation the principle of what is known as Responsible Government had been conceded to the Colonies now united in the Dominion. This principle established that in all matters of internal concern the representative of the Crown should act according to the advice of Ministers enjoying the confidence of Parliament. The concession was not withdrawn by the Confederation Act. On the contrary, it begins by a preamble stating the desire of the Provinces to be united into one Dominion with a constitution similar in principle to that of the United Kingdom; and this has been carried out in theory and practice in the Dominion of Canada from the commencement of its existence. The principle forms part of our constitution now as it did in those of the several Provinces before the Union. It is a part of the lex non scripta of the constitution, and any express enactment of the principle was wisely avoided.

A comparison between the elasticity of the British constitution and its gradual development under an unwritten law with the rigidity of a written constitution as existing in the United States has shown the superiority of the former system. Whether, therefore, in any case power is given to the Governor-General to act individually or with the aid of his Council the act as one within the scope of the Canadian Constitution must be on the advice of a Responsible Minister. The distinction drawn in the Statute between an act of the Governor and an act of the Governor in Council is a technical one, and arose from the fact that in Canada for a long period before confederation certain acts of administration were required by law to be done under the sanction of an Order in Council while others did not require that formality. In both cases, however, since Responsible Government has been conceded, such acts have always been performed under the advice of a Responsible Ministry or Minister. Again the 59th clause provides that the Lieutenant-Governor is not to be removed except for cause assigned. Someone must be responsible to Parliament for the reasonableness of such cause, and must defend it there, and be liable to censure should the cause be deemed insufficient.

Now the Governor-General cannot be held constitutionally responsible or open to censure in any way by Parliament. As Her Majesty's representative he holds the same constitutional position in that respect as the Queen does in England. It seems to follow, therefore, that upon the Ministry of the day must rest the responsibility of advising the removal, of assigning the cause, and of justifying its sufficiency.

Two special grounds have been urged why Mr. Letellier should not be removed; first, that the motion of censure made in the late Parliament having been lost, the case should not be re-opened without new cause; second, that Mr. Joly assumed the whole responsibility of the Lieutenant-Governor's act, and after an appeal to the people his Ministry still exists. As to the first ground it may be answered that, as already stated, the arguments used in opposition to the motion did not attempt to justify his conduct, but were founded on the inexpediency of raising the question at that time when Mr. Joly had gone or was about to go to the country, that the question had not been before the people at the time the then House of Commons was elected, and that it had been one of the subjects submitted to the people at the last election for the Dominion. The present House of Commons coming fresh from the people and supposed to express their opinion has by an overwhelming vote reversed the decision of the expiring Parliament, and pronounced a deliberate censure on Mr. Letellier's conduct. As to the second ground, the answer is that the Lieutenant-Governor of a Province holds the same relation to the Dominion Government and Legislature as the Governor-General does to Her Majesty and the Imperial Parliament. Here we have nothing to do with the appointment or removal of the Queen's representative. We loyally accept the Governor-General selected by the Queen, and have no right to express an opinion as to his continuation in office or recall. All that the people of Canada can require is that the Governor-General for the time being should always act upon the advice of Ministers responsible to him. The right of discussion and the power of censure rest practically with the Imperial House of Commons, and have been not infrequently exercised there. So in the Province of Quebec its legislature and people are bound to receive the nominee of the Governor-General, and so long as their constitutional rights are protected have nothing to say against his recall for any cause whatever. If Mr. Letellier were removed, his successor must accept the Ministry which he finds enjoying the confidence of the Legislature, and so long as this constitutional right is preserved it matters not to them who may be their Lieutenant-Governor. It rests with the Dominion Parliament to approve or disapprove of a change in the personnel in the Lieutenant-Governorship. The distinction seems to have been fully observed in the Province of Quebec during the late Local and Dominion elections. It must be borne in mind that the constituencies and the franchise are the same for both elections, and the same body of electors which when the question constitutionally before them was the comparative merits of the De Bouchierville and Joly administrations divided in nearly equal numbers returned to the Dominion Parliament 48 as against 17 or a majority of 31 pledged to vote for the censure of Mr. Letellier's conduct in the place where it alone could be constitutionally impugned.

After full and anxious consideration his Excellency's advisers desire to express their strong conviction that it is highly expedient that the vote of Parliament should be given effect to by the dismissal of Mr. Letellier. If it is not, a Provincial Lieutenant-Governor will be the only practically irresponsible official in Canada. On the other hand, his removal will be a warning to all future Lieutenant-Governors to exercise their powers as such with the strictest impartiality. As Mr. Letellier has been the first, in the case of his removal he will probably be the last partisan Lieutenant-Governor, and all future trouble from that source may be considered as at an end. His fate will be a warning to others for all time to come. Again, they are convinced that peace and contentment will not be restored in the Province of Quebec so long as he retains his present position; and lastly, they think that a Ministry enjoying the confidence of Her Majesty's representative and a large majority of both Houses of Parliament and administering all the affairs of Canada, whether of a legislative or executive character, and including the appointment of Lieutenant-Governors may be safely entrusted with the responsibility of advising their removal.

All which is respectfully submitted.

No. 5.

GOVERNOR-GENERAL THE MARQUIS OF LORNE, K.T., to the RIGHT HON. SIR MICHAEL HICKS BEACH, BART. (Received May 6, 1879.)

Government House, Ottawa,
April 23, 1879.

SIR,

WITH reference to previous correspondence regarding the case of the Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec, I have the honour to transmit herewith the statement of M. Letellier St. Just, which I forward to you on the recommendation of my responsible advisers. I also enclose a copy of a telegraphic message which I caused to be sent to the Lieutenant-Governor to-day.

I have, &c.

The UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE FOR CANADA to the GOVERNOR-GENERAL'S SECRETARY.

Ottawa, April 22, 1879.

SIR,

I AM directed to transmit to you herewith, to be handed to his Excellency the Governor-General in accordance with the request of his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec contained in his Honour's Despatch of the 18th instant, the enclosed Memorandum to be transmitted by his Excellency for the consideration of Her Majesty's Imperial Government, as the Lieutenant-Governor requests.

I have, &c.
(Signed) EDOUARD J. LANGEVIN,
Under-Secretary of State.

The Governor General's Secretary.

Enclosure 1. in No. 5.

SIR, Government House, Quebec, April 18, 1879.

IN the return to an Address to the House of Commons from the Department of the Secretary of State, dated 27th February last, I find a petition addressed to his Excellency the Governor-General in Council, by Messieurs Chapleau, Church, and Angers, which purports to be a reply to my letter to the Secretary of State, of the 9th December, 1878.

Having in that letter requested that I might be afforded an opportunity of giving further explanations on any of the charges preferred against me by the petitioners, which might appear to require them, and not having been called upon for such explanations, I should have refrained from offering any further remarks on a question in which I am personally concerned, were it not that I have learned from the newspapers that advice had been tendered to His Excellency the Governor-General by his responsible Ministers, which, in my opinion, would, if followed, be destructive of that Local Government secured to the Province of Quebec by the "British North America Act."

I have likewise learned from the same sources of information that such advice has been referred for the consideration of Her Majesty's Imperial Government, and that a Dominion Minister of State, and a distinguished member of the Montreal bar, have proceeded to England in connexion with this case.

Having received no official communication as to the nature of the mission entrusted to these gentlemen, I feel I am working in the dark in preparing the case which the Federal Government has consented to transmit, as I do not even know what the Imperial Government is specifically called upon to decide.

Under the circumstances stated I feel it my duty to begin by placing on record a rejoinder to the reply of Messieurs Chapleau, Church, and Angers, to my answer of the 9th December last, and to respectfully request that His Excellency the Governor-General will not only give it his own consideralion, but transmit it to the Right Honourable the Secretary of State for the Colonies, if the return to the Address of the House of Commons shall have been or is to be transmitted.

The petitioners have wholly misunderstood the passage in my said answer of the 9th December last, in which I referred to the "extraordinary error" committed by them in their original petition, in reference to the 59th Section of the "British North America Act."

It was far from my intention to put forward any plea to the jurisdiction of the Governor-General in Council.

I merely intended to draw the intention of his Excellency the Governor-General to the fact that the petitioners ignored him as they had ignored me.

The first of the alleged grievances summed up by the petitioners is in these words :— "The Lieutenant-Governor, in dismissing his ministers when they enjoyed the confidence "of both Houses of the Legislature, and when they had not been guilty, as the "Lieutenant-Governor admits, of any wilful want of respect for the "prerogative of "the Crown, has violated the principles of responsible government." This would imply that it was a violation of responsible government to dismiss my ministers on the ground that a Bill introduced by them without my consent, and carried by their influence as ministers through the two Houses of the Legislature, contained provisions which I conscientiously believe were contrary to law and justice.

I willingly accept the issue here presented.

The Bill above referred to was introduced in my name but without my authority, unless it be held that the telegram addressed to me at Rivière Ouelle, "Can you send me "authorisation resolution respecting finances?"—was such a communication to me, as I had a right to expect, regarding a Railway Bill containing provisions that were, in my deliberate judgment, contrary to the principles of law and justice (copy of which Bill is annexed hereto.)

It may be as well to remark on the subject of the Railway Bill, that the municipalities which it was intended to coerce by legislative action, have, since the advent to power of the new administration, appreciated their good faith by making satisfactory arrangements with them.

I may observe on the subject of Bills introduced into the Legislature, that unless the permission of the Crown has been expressly obtained, the Ministry must necessarily take the responsibility of acting without such permission, as in all other cases in which they act without previous consultation, and in the event of the Sovereign or his representative disapproving of such action, its disallowance constitutes no just ground of complaint.

To sum up, the legitimate inference, it appears to me, to be drawn from the first grievance of the petitioners is, that in their opinion it would be a violation of responsible government to dismiss a Ministry enjoying the confidence of the Legislature unless it had been guilty of wilful want of respect for the prerogative of the Crown. Now, I maintain that whether a Ministry enjoys the confidence of the Legislature or not, the Representative of the Crown is entitled to dismiss them, should they attempt, as in my case, to pass measures contrary to his views, and without having previously obtained his sanction, provided he finds advisers willing to assume the responsibility of his acts.

The second grievance, as stated by the petitioners, is based on the pretension that I had really given my authorisation to the measures of which I complained, and that, having done so, I had, after their discussion in the Legislature, dismissed the ministers who had introduced them with my concurrence. I submit that it is sufficiently established by documentary evidence that I had never given such authorisation.

The third grievance merits serious consideration, as it is based on an assumption that the representatives of the Crown in the Provinces of the Dominion have no right to divulge the secrets of their advisers to their official superior. On precisely the same ground it would be improper for his Excellency the Governor-General to divulge to the Secretary of State for the Colonies "the secrets of his advisers."

I join issue with the petitioners: 1st. As to my right to communicate as freely with the Governor-General or the Dominion Secretary of State as the Governor-General may do with Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies.

2nd. As to the propriety of my addressing the Governor-General under the circumstances.

My reasons were explicitly stated at the conclusion of my letter to His Excellency the Governor-General, viz.: the unauthorised explanations made to both Houses of the Legislature, in the form of a memorandum signed by Mr. Angers, one of the petitioners.

I maintain that, according to British constitutional practice, the explanations rendered necessary by a change of Ministry must be such as have been expressly authorised by the Sovereign or his representive.

The explanations authorised by me were defined in my letter on the 4th March, to M. De Boucherville, to be my two memoranda (of 25th February and 1st March), and the answers to those memoranda by M. De Boucherville (of the 27th February and 3rd March), and I further requested that such explanations should not be made until the completion of the arrangements for the formation of a new Executive Council.

I had just reason to complain, not only of the premature and unauthorised announcement that the De Boucherville Ministry had been dismissed, but of the wholly unauthorised memorandum of Mr. Angers read to the House of Assembly, which I had never seen.

M. De Boucherville had, in his letter of the 4th March, acknowledging mine of the same day, expressly referred to the explanations which I had authorised, and the extent of which my said letter had clearly and precisely indicated.

It is evident, from M. De Boucherville's letter to the Governor-General, that the ex-ministers hold the opinion that they had a right to make any explanations that they themselves thought proper, without the knowledge or consent of the Lieutenant-Governor.

On this point I am at issue with them. Mr. Angers having thought proper, without my knowledge or consent, to make statements to the Legislature, I considered that it was my duty to explain more fully to the Governor-General the circumstances adverted to in my letter of the 1st March to M. De Boucherville, and which led me to remind that gentleman that from time to time my advisers had "taken administrative and "legislative steps contrary to such representations and without having previously "advised me."

My object in acquainting the Governor-General with various circumstances which indicated on the part of the Executive Council a determination to deprive me of the legitimate prerogatives attached to my office, was simply to convince his Excellency that, far from being desirous of seeking an opportunity to come to a rupture with the Executive Council, I had on several occasions reason to complain of their inattention to my remonstrances, and of their omission even to consult me. These were not assigned as reasons for my final decision, but as circumstances which led me to believe that M. De Boucherville and his colleagues had been indisposed to treat me with that confidence which I had a right to expect.

In my letter to the Secretary of State, of the 9th December last, I had adduced as evidence of the concurrence of his own party in my opinion that M. De Boucherville was unequal to the position which he had occupied, that another leader had been chosen in his place. This fact has not been denied.

The petitioners state in reply that "it was necessary that the conservative party should choose a leader in the Legislative Assembly, M. De Boucherville being leader and a member of the Legislative Council."

This statement is calculated to convey an erroneous impression.

The leader of a party may be in either branch of the Legislature, as the petitioners are well aware, and M. DeBoucherville though in the Legislative Council, was Prime Minister.

M. Chapleau was chosen as leader of the party; and it is clearly understood that M. De Boucherville, who has since accepted a seat in the Dominion Senate, is no longer in the position of leader which he formerly occupied.

With regard to that portion of the petitioners' letter which relates to the Quebec elections, and to subsequent proceedings in the Provincial Legislature, I must be permitted to remark that they are wholly irrelevant to the real question at issue, whatever may be their bearing on Mr. Joly's administration.

I cannot for a moment admit that the Lieutenant-Governor of the Province was on trial by the people. Mr. Joly accepted the full constitutional responsibility for my acts, and has been able to carry his measures in the Legislature. As a striking evidence of the great change in the House of Assembly effected by the recent provincial elections, I shall merely direct attention to the vote which was taken on the 9th of March 1878, before these elections, on the amendment to the second reading of the Supply Bill, proposed by Mr. Angers and seconded by Mr. Church, the Bill being thrown out by 32 to 13; while, after the elections of the 1st May following, the Supply Bill introduced by the Joly Government was passed unanimously.

It may not be out of place here to re-affirm the correctness of all the statements which I have made in the memoranda, which have passed between M. De Boucherville and myself, as well as in my correspondence with the Earl of Dufferin and my answer to Messrs. Chapleau, Angers, and Church.

There are some other points raised for the first time by the latter gentlemen in their reply, which are of very secondary importance, and not worthy of any special notice.

I have only, in conclusion, to remark that no apprehension of personal consequences to myself would have induced me to engage in such a discussion as the present, but that I feel most deeply that the interests of my native Province are at stake, and inasmuch as it has been represented to me by a Minute in Council of my Executive Government (coinciding with my personal opinion) that the rights and autonomy of the Province of Quebec might be injuriously affected by the result of the decision which may be given in this case, I think it only just that I should submit for the consideration of the Imperial authorities the said order, which reads as follows:—

No. 172.

The Honourable the Commissioner of Agriculture and Public Works, in a report dated the 17th of April instant, represents that the Honourable H. L. Langevin, one of the members of the Privy Council of Canada, has taken his departure for England, to confer with Her Majesty's Government respecting the attempted removal of the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec, for the dismissal of the Honourable M. De Boucherville's late administration;

That the Lieutenant-Governors in their respective provinces have the same power and authority under the "British North America Act" as those which are possessed by the Governor-General, as respects the government of the Dominion;

That the power of dissolving Parliament and dismissing ministers is the undoubted prerogative of Lieutenant-Governors of Provinces;

That His Honour Lieutenant-Governor Letellier De St. Just, in the exercise of this well-recognised authority, dismissed his ministers on the 2nd day of March 1878, the reasons assigned being as follows:—

That his ministers had taken steps regarding administrative and legislative measures, not only contrary to his representations, but even without having previously advised him, and especially with reference to a Bill containing provisions which would have deprived subjects of Her Majesty of their undoubted right to have the protection of the judicial tribunals of the country in cases of dispute with the Provincial Government;

That the Honourable M. De Boucherville, the late Premier, having declined to name a person to replace him, when requested to do so by His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor, Mr. Joly, the leader of the Opposition, was called upon by His Honour to form a new administration;

That Mr. Joly accomplished this task and the new ministry were sworn in on the 8th of March 1878, and, by constitutional usage necessarily assumed the responsibility of all the acts of the Lieutenant-Governor, which had caused the retirement of the late ministers;

That Mr. Joly accepted this responsibility by his undertaking to form a new administration, and that he expressly stated in his address to the electors of the Province that he did assume this responsibility;

That within the space of fourteen (14) days from the time when the members of the new administration were sworn in, viz.: on the 22nd March, 1878, the Parliament of Quebec was dissolved, and a new election was ordered to take place on the first day of May 1878, the writs being returnable on the twenty-ninth day of May 1878;

That the Quebec Legislature was convened for the fourth day of June 1878, viz.: six days after the return of the writs;

That at this session the new administration succeeded in carrying through the Legislative Assembly the supplies and all the measures proposed by the Government, and the sanction of the people to the action of the Lieutenant-Governor was thus obtained in the proper constitutional manner;

That the significance of this public verdict will best be appreciated when it is stated that, at the elections on the first day of May last, all the ministers of the new Cabinet were elected, while three out of five ministers of the De Boucherville Government, who sought re-election, were defeated at the polls;

That on the eleventh (11th) day of April 1878, Sir John A. Macdonald, then leader of the Opposition in the House of Commons of Canada, moved the following resolution: "That Mr. Speaker do not now leave the chair, but that it be resolved that the recent "dismissal by the Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec of his ministers was, under the "circumstances, unwise and subversive of the position accorded to the advisers of the "Crown since the concession of the principle of Responsible Government to the British "North American Colonies."

That this resolution was resisted by the Dominion Government, on the ground that the Federal Parliament ought not to interfere in the internal affairs of the Province of Quebec, and that the issue was then before the electors of that Province, as the only competent tribunal;

That the House of Commons sustained the views of the Government by a vote of one hundred and twelve (112) to seventy (70);

That during the month of September last, general elections took place for the Commons of Canada, the sole issue between the parties being a question of tariff, and the former Government were defeated and a large majority returned, pledged to protection.

That before the new House of Commons, the action of the Lieutenant-Governor was once more brought forward by a resolution, which was an exact repetition of that introduced by Sir John A. Macdonald on the 11th April 1878, and was carried by a vote of 136 to 51.

That the action of the Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec in dismissing his ministers and calling others in their stead is a purely provincial matter affecting in no way federal interests, and is not one of the causes contemplated in the 59th section of the British North America Act, as justifying the removal of the Lieutenant-Governor;

The committee concur in the foregoing report of the Honourable the Commissioner of Agriculture and Public Works, and submit the same for the Lieutenant-Governor's approval.

(Signed) H. G. Joly,
Chairman of Committee.

Approved, 17th April 1879,
(Signed) L. Letellier.

It is my duty to spare no effort to defeat the present attempt to violate in my person the established constitutional principle that the Representative of the Sovereign is irresponsible for acts performed within the legitimate sphere of the duties prescribed to him by the "British North America Act," which was clearly introduced to confer local self-government on the Provinces, and make the Representative of the Crown, in the person of the Lieutenant-Governor, practically independent during the fixed period of his incumbency.

To effect this object, I pray that it may please his Excellency the Governor-General to ascertain from the Imperial authorities, and to cause to be communicated to me, when it will best suit them, to grant an audience to one or two persons to represent the views which I have set forth in this memorandum, as well as the whole case generally.

I feel confident that no decision will be arrived at until all parties shall have had that "fair play" which is the great characteristic of the British nation.

I have, &c.

The Hon. J. C. Aikins,
Secretary of State, Ottawa.

Enclosure 2. in No. 5.

Assembly Bill No. 86.

An Act respecting the Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa, and Occidental Railway.

Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Legislature of Quebec, enacts as follows:

1. The Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa, and Occidental Railway shall be built in a direct line from Terrebonne to Montreal; "the place at which that portion of the road heretofore "known as the North Shore Railway will connect with the road heretofore known as "the Montreal, Ottawa, and Western Railway, shall be within the eastern boundary of "the City of Montreal, and the main terminus of the said North Shore Railway shall be "in the City of Montreal," in accordance with the eighth resolution submitted by the City of Montreal, accepted by the Government, and adopted by the Council of the said City on the seventeenth day of September eighteen hundred and seventy-five.

A repair shop for the Western Section of the said Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa, and Occidental Railway shall be built within the eastern limits of the City of Montreal.

2. The stipulations and conditions submitted by the City of Montreal to the Government of this Province, by which the said City bound itself to pay over to the Government the balance of the million dollars voted in favour of the Montreal Northern Colonization Railway Company, as amended by the Government, and subsequently adopted by the Council of the said City on the 17th September 1875, are declared valid, legal, and binding.

All taxes or assessments imposed and collected, or to be imposed and collected under bylaw No. 59 of the said City, intituled, "Byelaw to authorise the Corporation of the "Mayor, Aldermen, and Citizens of the City of Montreal to take shares in the Montreal "Northern Colonization Railway Company, to the extent of one million dollars "currency, and to pay the said amount in money or in bonds or debentures, and to levy "an annual assessment to pay the interest thereon and provide a sinking fund," are also declared valid, legal, and binding.

The resolution adopted by the Council of the City of Quebec on the 20th August 1875, by which the said City bound itself to pay to the Government of the Province the balance due on its subscription to the capital stock of the North Shore Railway Company, is declared valid, legal, and binding; and the byelaw under which this subscription was originally made, as well as all taxes or assessments imposed and collected, or to be imposed and collected, for the payment of interest on the debentures issued or to be issued under the said byelaw, are also declared valid, legal, and binding.

3. The municipalities or corporations mentioned in the Schedule A. hereunto annexed are and shall be bound to execute and hand over to the Treasurer of the Province their debentures for the amount or the balance of their subscriptions appropriated to the construction of the Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa, and Occidental Railway by the Act 39 Vict. cap. 2., as follows:

The City of Montreal being required to deliver the balance of its subscription in money or debentures in four instalments, as follows: "one fourth as soon as the road "shall be opened from Montreal east to St. Thérese; one fourth when the road shall "be opened to Grenville; one fourth when the road shall be opened to Papineauville; "and the remaining fourth when the road shall be opened to Hull; this does not neces-"sarily include the completion of stations, sheds, repair shops, &c. on the line," in accordance with the third resolution proposed by the Council of the City of Montreal, amended by the Government, and adopted by the said Council on the 17th September 1875.

The City of Quebec being required to deliver the balance in debentures of its subscription, in accordance with the resolution passed by the Council of the said City, on the 25th August 1875, that is to say, as they may become due as provided by law; but in no case shall the said corporation be called on for the payment of interest on the debentures issued or to be issued in virtue of the said subscription before the road shall have been completed throughout the whole distance between the cities of Quebec and Montreal, and put into such perfect order as to be open to traffic, the whole pursuant to the conditions of the said subscription.

And the other municipalities or corporations being required to deliver the amount, in debentures of their subscriptions, at the dates of maturity mentioned in the byelaws authorising their subscriptions.

4. The Lieutenant-Governor in Council may, on the sworn report of a competent engineer, establishing the extent to which the conditions of the subscriptions of the different municipalities have been fulfilled, in regard to the advancement and quality of work performed, as also to the localisation of the road, determine the date of the maturity of a part or the whole of such subscriptions, as the case may be; a copy of the said report shall be forwarded to the municipalities interested at least fifteen days before the said report shall be taken into consideration by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council.

5. No objection, exception, reason, plea, or opposition shall avail to justify any of the municipalities or corporations mentioned in the said Schedule A., in refusing to sign, execute, and deliver to the Treasurer of the Province its debentures appropriated to the construction of the said road by the Act 39 Vict. cap. 2., or to pay over to him, if it should prefer to do so, the said amount or the said balance in money, as soon as the Lieutenant-Governor in Council shall have declared that these debentures may be exacted.

6. If any one of these municipalities or corporations refuses or neglects to pay its subscription or to sign and execute its aforesaid debentures for the amount or the balance due, anything to the contrary notwithstanding, the mayor or wardens of such municipality or corporation, as the case may be, is hereby authorised to sign and execute such debentures, without incurring any personal liability thereby, for the amount or the balance of the subscription of the municipality or corporation of which he is the chief officer or head; and these said debentures so signed and executed by the mayor or warden, shall have the same effect as if they had been signed and executed with the consent and upon the order of the municipality or corporation itself; and such mayor or warden shall be bound to deliver the said debentures to the Treasurer of the Province at his request in accordance with the dates of maturity determined by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, and such debentures shall form part of the consolidated railway fund.

7. In default of any one of the said municipalities or corporations, or of its mayor or warden, as the case may be, so signing and executing the said debentures for the amount or balance of the said subscription, and of delivering them to the Treasurer of the Province as aforesaid, the Lieutenant-Governor in Council may authorise a syndic to sign and execute the said debentures on behalf of the said municipality or corporation; and such debentures so signed and executed by the syndic shall have the same effect as if they had been signed and executed by the authorised persons or officers belonging to the said municipality or corporation.

8. The Lieutenant-Governor in Council shall, for the execution of the provisions of the above section if need there be, appoint a syndic, who shall be known by the name of "Syndic of (name of the city, town, county, parish, or village for which he shall sign), "appointed in virtue of the Act 41 Vict. c. ." Whenever the said syndic shall sign or execute any debenture in virtue of this Act, he shall do so by reciting, beneath his signature, the special quality and the Act under which he signed, and in so doing he shall incur no personal responsibility.

9. The debentures signed under the authority of the present Act by a mayor, warden, or syndic, as the case may be, shall supply and take the place of the debentures which the municipality or corporation was bound to execute and deliver to the Treasurer of the Province, for the amount or the balance due on its subscription appropriated to the construction of the said road by the Act 39 Vict. c. 2.

10. The form of the debentures executed under the authority of the present Act by a mayor, warden, or syndic, as the case may be, and the amount of each of such debentures in sterling money or currency, may be determined by the Lieutenant-Govenor in Council, who may also prescribe the manner of executing the coupons which are to be attached to the said debentures.

11. If, at any time, any one of the municipalities or corporations mentioned in the said Schedule A, whose debentures shall have been signed and executed by its mayor or warden or by the syndic, in virtue of this Act, shall neglect during 30 days to pay interest thereon or on portion thereof, as it may be bound to do, the sheriff of the district in which such municipality or corporation is situated is and shall be bound, on the simple written declaration of a holder of such debentures or of his agent, supported by an affidavit establishing the fact that the said interest is due to give notice in "The Quebec Official Gazette," during 15 days that such municipality or corporation has neglected to pay the interest due on its said debentures or portions thereof, and to require the holders of such debentures to produce in his office a sworn statement of the amount due to them for interest.

In default of payment on the expiration of such notice, the sheriff shall issue his warrant for the total amount of the claims so filed, and he shall at once proceed to impose and levy, upon the taxable property situated in such municipality or corporation in proportion to the value as shown on the valuation roll, a sum sufficient to cover the amount due with interest and costs of delivery and levying.

12. If any one of the said municipalities or corporations is bound to provide a sinking fund, for the redeeming of its debentures, signed and executed in virtue of this Act by its mayor or warden or by a syndic, as the case may be, neglects to provide annually for such sinking fund, the sheriff of the district as aforesaid, on the written declaration of a holder of such debentures or of his agent, supported by an affidavit establishing the fact, shall inform such municipality or corporation that such declaration has been made; and in default of its proving, to the sheriff within a delay of 15 days, that it has provided for such sinking fund, the sheriff shall issue his warrant for the amount required to provide for the sinking fund due, and shall at once proceed to impose and levy, on the taxable property situated within such municipality or corporation in proportion to the value shown on the valuation roll, an amount sufficient to provide for the said sinking fund, with interest and costs of levying.

13. The sheriff shall have free access to the registers, rolls, and other documents or archives of the council of every municipality or corporation where he shall levy monies, and may exact the services of the municipal officers of such council.

He shall cause to be delivered to him all documents or archives which to him may appear necessary, and in the event of opposition, neglect, or refusal, he is authorised to take possession of them himself.

In default of payment of the amount required from a ratepayer, the sheriff shall first proceed to levy this amount by seizure and sale of the moveable property of such ratepayer observing the formalities prescribed by the code of civil procedure for the seizure and sale of moveables; and if the proceeds thereof be sufficient, he shall pay over at once, to the holders of debentures who shall have filed their claims, on receiving the interest coupons or a receipt, as the case may be, the amount which is due to them; and if the sheriff has proceeded under the authority of the preceding section, the sum so levied, after deducting the costs of levying, shall be deposited in the hands of the Treasurer of this Province to be disposed of in accordance with the byelaw under which the said sinking fund is due.

If there is no moveable property or if it is insufficient, the sheriff shall proceed to the seizure and sale of the immoveables levied upon, observing the formalities required by the code of civil procedure for the seizure and sale of immoveables; he shall then make a return of the sale to the Superior Court, and the distribution of moneys will there be made as in an ordinary suit, the amount levied by the sheriff to pay the interest and provide for the sinking fund retaining the same rank as these claims would have had if they had been levied and collected by the corporation or municipality itself.

14. As soon as the construction of that portion of the Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa, and Occidental Railway extending from Quebec to Aylmer shall allow, the number of commissioners composing the commission created by the Act 39 Vict. chapter 2 shall be reduced to one commissioner only, who will be selected from among the members of the Executive Council. This change shall be made by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, and to that effect a proclamation shall be issued and published in the "Quebec Official Gazette;" the incumbent of this office may be changed from time to time by Order in Council.

15. The commissioner so selected shall have and may exercise all the rights, powers, and attributes which were conferred by the Act 39 Vict., cap. 2, on the three commissioners composing the said commission.

16. The Act 39 Vict. cap. 2. is in consequence amended.

17. The present Act shall come into force on the day of the sanction thereof.

No. 6.

H. G. JOLY, Esq., to the Right Hon. Sir M. E. HICKS BEACH, Bart.

Brunswick Hotel, Jermyn Street, London,
May 6, 1879.

Sir,

In the interview which you did me the honour to grant me this afternoon, you suggested that I should send you a draft of the points that might be submitted to the Honourable the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, should it be decided by the Government to refer the matter to that high tribunal, as requested by his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec.

I will begin, with your leave, by making a few brief remarks upon the events connected with this matter.

The Lieutenant-Governor dismissed the De Boucherville Ministry, who were supported by a majority of the Legislature, and called in a new ministry, who assumed the responsibility of his act.

He gave at once to the Province the occasion of pronouncing upon that act by dissolving the House.

The verdict of the Province, with a full knowledge of the causes of dismissal of the late ministry, was an approval of the Lieutenant-Governor's act, for the elections resulted favourably to the new ministry, who were supported through the following session by the House newly elected.

While those elections were pending a motion was brought in the House of Commons at Ottawa, on the 11th April 1878, to censure the Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec.

That motion was defeated on the ground that it was not judicious to interfere into a matter which was just then in the hands of the electors of the Province of Quebec, who were called to pronounce judgment upon it.

Later on, in September last, the Federal elections took place, and upon a new issue (quite foreign to this matter) the power changed hands. In the new House of Commons the motion of censure of the 11th April 1878 was brought up once more, in the very same words, after an interval of nearly one year, and was carried.

The Federal ministers, who had allowed so many months to elapse without acting, under the pressure of that strong party vote, advised his Excellency the Governor-General to dismiss the Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec; such appears to have been their first step.

Subsequently they advised his Excellency to refer the matter to the Imperial Government, or they consented to its being referred. Whatever obscurity may exist on that point, it is clear the matter has been referred.

If the grounds for dismissal were so strong, and the power to dismiss so clear, why was not the Lieutenant-Governor dismissed without referring the matter to the Imperial Government.

What is the Imperial Government called upon to decide? Is it whether the Lieutenant-Governor had the power to dismiss his ministers, or not? No one appears to entertain any doubt on that point.

Is it whether the Lieutenant-Governor has exercised his power with wisdom, or not, in taking the administration of the affairs of the Province out of the hands of one ministry to place it in the hands of another? I respectfully submit that the Province of Quebec is the only party directly interested on this point, and therefore the best judge of it.

In the absence of any direct information on the subject, I must suppose that the questions submitted to the Imperial Government relate to the following points, and those are the points which I take the liberty of proposing as fit subjects for the consideration of the Honourable the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

1. With whom does the power of dismissal rest? In making a distinction between the authority that appoints and the authority that can dismiss the Lieutenant-Governors, had not the framers of the British North America Act the intention of placing the Lieutenant-Governors in such a position as to enable them to discharge their duties irrespective of the changes of party governments that might take place at Ottawa during the five years of their tenure of office?

2. Can a Lieutenant-Governor be dismissed by the Federal Government for an act in which he has not exceeded his powers and jurisdiction, such as defined by the British North America Act of 1867, an Act which his Province has ratified, and which does not interfere in any way with Federal interests?

Who can throw more light on those questions than the Honourable the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, whose decisions are received in Canada, as in every other part of the British Empire, with profound respect and perfect confidence?

I have, &c.

The Right Hon. Sir M. E. Hicks Beach, M.P., Colonial Secretary.

(Signed) H. G. JOLY.

April 24, 1879.

My dear Sir,

As you have been selected by the Executive Government of the Province of Quebec to proceed to England for the protection of the autonomy of that Province, in the matter of the reference made by the Government of the Dominion of Canada to the Imperial authorities, regarding the proposed dismissal of the Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec, I hereby authorise you, in so far as I am personally interested in that reference, to represent me or to have me represented before the Imperial Government, the Honourable the Privy Council of Her most Gracious Majesty, or before the Honourable the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

As it would be desirable that a judicial decision should be arrived at in a matter so deeply affecting the interests of this Province, I feel that it would be more gratifying to the people of Canada were this case referred to that high tribunal.

I have, &c.

The Hon. Henri Gustave Joly, Commissioner of Agriculture and Public Works, and Premier, Quebec.

H. G. JOLY, Esq., to COLONIAL OFFICE.

Brunswick Hotel, Jermyn Street, S.W.,
London, May 13, 1879.

Sir,

Since addressing you my Memorandum of the 6th instant,* by which I requested that the Letellier matter might be referred to the Honourable the Judicial Committee of Her Majesty's Privy Council, it has occurred to me that the same course might be followed as was adopted last year in the case of a dispute between the Governments of Ontario and Quebec, as to the validity of an award affecting the financial relations existing between the two Provinces. This was referred to the Honourable the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council under the 4th section of 3rd and 4th William the Fourth, cap. 41, which enacts as follows:—

"That it shall be lawful for His Majesty to refer to the said Judicial Committee for hearing and consideration any such other matters whatsoever as His Majesty shall think fit, and such Committee shall thereupon hear and consider the same, and shall advise His Majesty thereon in manner aforesaid."

I will sum up the two points to be referred in a very few words.

First. In whom does the power of dismissal of the Lieutenant-Governor rest under sections 58 and 59 of the British North America Act; and Second. Whether the dismissal by the Lieutenant-Governor of the ministers, was, as alleged in the resolution of the Dominion Parliament, cause for removal of the said Lieutenant-Governor from office sufficient within the meaning of the above-mentioned 59th section.

I have, &c.

The Right Hon. Sir M. Hicks Beach, Colonial Secretary.

No. 8.

H. G. JOLY, Esq., to COLONIAL OFFICE.

Brunswick Hotel, Jermyn Street,
London, May 15, 1879.

Sir,

In the Letellier matter, since our interview of the 6th instant I had the honour to send you a Memorandum dated the same day, stating the points for reference to the Honourable the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and on the 13th instant, a letter quoting a precedent for such reference, and the law under which it could be made (enclosed please find printed copies of those two documents).

I respectfully submit that since the power to refer to the Judicial Committee exists there can be but little doubt as to the opportunity of exercising that power.

In our interview of the 6th instant we did not enter into the merits of the case, and did not discuss the justice or wisdom of the Lieutenant-Governor when he exercised his undoubted right to dismiss his ministers.

You will doubtless remember telling me that you had been compelled to blame the Governor of one of the Colonies, for sanctioning a measure of his ministers which interfered with vested rights, viz., with those of members of the Civil Service.

You will not blame the Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec for refusing to sanction a measure of his ministers which interfered most violently with vested rights (as their Railway Bill did), and for dismissing those ministers who introduced it and carried it on without his consent.

Allusion has been made to our small majority in the new House, as not showing a very strong verdict of the Province in favour of the Lieutenant-Governor.

Since my arrival in England I have been informed by cable message, that two of the Opposition members, whose election was contested, but who nevertheless voted against the Lieutenant-Governor, have been unseated; in a small House like ours, consisting of only 65 members, this is an important change, and must have due weight in appreciating the verdict rendered in favour of the Lieutenant-Governor.

The arguments brought against Mr. Letellier in Canada have been answered in the documents laid before you. But if any new arguments have been brought here which you consider of sufficient importance to require an answer, I will be grateful if the occasion is offered me to answer them.

I have, &c.

COLONIAL OFFICE to H. G. JOLY, Esq.

Downing Street, May 20, 1879.

Sir,

I am directed by the Secretary of State for the Colonies to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 15th instant,* which, with those previously addressed to him by you on the 6th and 13th instant,† has received his attentive consideration.

2. In your letter of the 13th instant you quoted, as a precedent for referring to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council certain questions affecting the case of Mr. Letellier, the course adopted last year in referring to that Committee the dispute between the Governments of Ontario and Quebec, in the matter of an arbitration and award under the 142nd section of the British North America Act, 1867.

3. Sir Michael Hicks Beach desires me to remind you that in this instance there was not only a mutual agreement between the two Provincial Governments that the question should be submitted for the opinion of the Judicial Committee, but a statement of the facts in the form of a special case was adopted by both Governments, and Her Majesty having been pleased to refer this special case to the Judicial Committee for hearing and consideration, the questions of law upon which a judicial decision was desired were duly argued by counsel before the Committee, and the proceedings followed the usual course of the appellate tribunal.

4. The present circumstances are very different. No special case has been agreed upon; a reference to the Judicial Committee is only desired on behalf of Mr. Letellier, and, looking to these facts, and to the nature of the questions which you have proposed, the course which was followed last year does not appear to Sir Michael Hicks Beach to justify similar action in the present case.

* No. 8. † Nos. 6 and 7.

5. There is, however, a precedent very closely resembling in its circumstances the question now at issue. In 1872 the House of Commons of Canada resolved that if possible the opinion of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council should be obtained as to the right of the New Brunswick Legislature to make certain changes in the school law, with the view of ascertaining whether the case came within the terms of the 4th subsection of the 93rd clause of the British North America Act, 1867, which authorise the Parliament of Canada to enact remedial laws for the due execution of the provisions respecting education in the said Act.

6. My predecessor referred this resolution to the Lord President of the Privy Council, with a request that he might be informed whether it was one on which the opinion of the Judicial Committee might properly be obtained; and it was then decided that, there being nothing in the case which gave the Queen in Council any jurisdiction over the question, Her Majesty could not with propriety be advised to refer to a Committee of the Privy Council a question which the Queen in Council had no authority to determine, and on which the opinion of the Privy Council would not be binding on the parties in the Dominion of Canada.

7. Having regard to the decision come to after careful consideration on that occasion, Sir Michael Hicks Beach is unable to adopt your suggestion that the case of Mr. Letellier should be referred to the Judicial Committee.

No. 10.

H. G. JOLY, Esq., to to the Right Hon. Sir M. E. HICKS BEACH, Bart.

Brunswick Hotel, Jermyn Street, London,
May 22, 1879.

Sir,

I have been notified by your letter of the 20th inst.,* received yesterday, that you are unable to adopt my suggestion that the case of Mr. Letellier should be referred to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

In making that suggestion, I did not intend to express any doubt as to the wisdom and justice of Her Majesty's Government in dealing with the question. I feel certain that since they have decided to deal directly with it, they will render full justice to all parties concerned.

The reasons assigned by Sir John A. Macdonald in the House of Commons at Ottawa for his Excellency the Governor-General wishing to have the case referred to Her Majesty's Government are as follows:—

"That as the Federal system introduced by the British North America Act of 1867 was until then unknown in Great Britain and her Colonies, there were no precedents to guide him to a decision in the present case, and as it would settle the future relations between the Dominion and Provincial Governments, so far as the office of Lieutenant-Governor was concerned, he deemed it expedient to submit the advice offered him and the whole case and attendant circumstances to Her Majesty's Government for their consideration and instructions."

You will notice that it is expressly admitted, in Sir John Macdonald's declaration to the House, that, "the decision in the present case will settle the future relations "between the Dominion and Provincial Governments so far as the office of Lieutenant-"Governor is concerned."

So this is a question the decision of which affects both the Federal and the Provincial Governments, consequently in justice the decision of it cannot be left with the Federal Government, one of the two parties interested.

I have come over to England in a double capacity, as representing the Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec, and as representing the Province of Quebec, and I enclose the two documents under which I am so authorised to act (documents A. and B.).

I take the liberty of referring you to document B. as it will show you from what point of view the majority of the Province of Quebec considers this question.

It concerns that Province (and all the other Provinces in the Dominion) much more than it does the present Lieutenant-Governor, in fact threats have already been uttered by the press which supports the present Federal Government against Lieutenant-Governors of other Provinces.

---

The 71st clause of the British North America Act of 1867 enacts that :—

"There shall be a Legislature for Quebec consisting of the Lieutenant-Governor and of two Houses, styled the Legislative Council of Quebec and the Legislative Assembly of Quebec."

What is the use of granting to the Province of Quebec (or any other) self-government, and a Legislature of its own, if the Lieutenant-Governor, one of the three branches of that Legislature, is to be removed at every change that takes place in the Federal Government at Ottawa.

This would undoubtedly lead to a system of reprisals, the result of which it is not difficult to foresee, and would unsettle completely the Government of the Provinces and of the Dominion.

If we enjoy what is called responsible government in the Province of Quebec, the first principle of that form of government is that its head can do no wrong. There are always ministers responsible for his acts.

My colleagues and I, in accepting office we assumed that responsibility. Let those who complain turn their attacks against us.

They did so at first, throwing all the onus of the Lieutenant-Governor's act upon us, and calling upon the Province to condemn us. The Province has supported us.

And now that we have successfully resisted their attack, they turn away from us and attack the Lieutenant-Governor himself at Ottawa (who they declared at one time was not responsible), because there is now at Ottawa a new ministry hostile to the Lieutenant-Governor.

When they attempted to censure him in the House of Commons on the 11th April 1878 (and were defeated), the majority of the House would then have asserted by a direct vote the principle of non-intervention by the Federal Government in provincial affairs, and an amendment embodying those views would have been made to Sir John A. Macdonald's motion of censure, and carried, had he not resorted to one of those parliamentary tactics (of which he is a master), by introducing his motion as an amendment to the motion that the Speaker do now leave the chair, to go into committee of supplies, which precluded any amendment, so that the majority could only vote in the negative, instead of asserting the principle of non-intervention by a clear and precise motion.

The official report of the debates in the Canadian Hansard shows how bitterly the majority complained of the means taken to prevent a solemn expression of opinion upon that point.

The same spirit characterises the proceedings of the same party, when the last vote of censure was taken nearly twelve months afterwards. They were then in the majority (owing to the commercial depression that induced the electors to adopt their policy of protection at the general elections of September last), and they raised the previous question immediately after the motion of censure had been placed in the Speaker's hands so as to preclude once more a frank and direct expression of opinion on the question of non-intervention in provincial affairs.

But if we are not to be ruled by the principles of responsible government in the Province of Quebec, if the Lieutenant-Governor (and not his Cabinet) is to be held directly responsible for his acts, will anyone pretend that he is to be dismissed if he has committed no wrong ?

I respectfully maintain that he did nothing more than his duty in dismissing the DeBoucherville ministry. He would have deserved censure had he sanctioned measures of his ministers which interfered with vested rights, acquired by solemn contracts and protected by the laws of the country.

I now enclose an authentic copy of the Railway Bill, introduced by the De Boucherville Government without the consent of the Lieutenant-Governor, and which, with the help of their majority, they forced through the House (document C.).

You will see that this measure was intended to deprive the cities and municipalities, who had undertaken to pay considerable sums of money towards the building of the Government Railways under certain conditions, from the right of withholding payment until those conditions had been fulfilled, and of appealing to the courts of justice for protection.

That Bill enacts that the Government itself will decide when it has fulfilled the conditions under which it can claim the payment of the municipal subscriptions, and "no "objection, exception, reason, plea, or opposition shall avail to justify any of the muni- "cipalities or corporations" (see section 5) in refusing to deliver its debentures. Provisions of the most arbitrary nature are contained in the following sections of the Bill, for the purpose of enforcing the payment of the said debentures.

It was asserted by the De Boucherville ministry, as an apology for such legislation (as will appear by the official correspondence in your hands), that a similar measure had been passed in Ontario.

I deny that most emphatically, the case was quite a different one. The Ontario law was a beneficial one, facilitating in every way, and on the most advantageous terms, the reimbursement of sums advanced long ago by the Government to the municipalities for local improvements; this measure, on the contrary, had only one object in view, viz., enabling the Government to obtain by force from the municipalities moneys to which the Government had then no right, and preventing those municipalities from appealing to the courts of justice.

The explanations given by Mr. De Boucherville himself to the Lieutenant-Governor, in his letter of the 27th February 1878, (page 5 of the Blue Book entitled Return to an Address of the House of Commons at Ottawa), show under what a strange delusion he must have been labouring when he says: "I humbly submit to your Excellency that a law "devised for the better securing of the execution of a contract cannot have a retroactive "effect. It enacts for the future, and its objects are the respective interests of the parties."

It enacts for the future it is true, but only in so far as it compels the payment of moneys which could only be claimed in virtue of solemn contracts passed years ago (and by which both contracting parties were bound), under special conditions that have not been fulfilled, and it deprives one of the parties of the protection of the courts of justice, when it claims the fulfilment of those conditions. The municipalities affected by that measure strongly protested, but to no purpose.

Since the new Government has come in satisfactory arrangements have been made between the Government and the municipalities, without any recourse, on the part of the Government, to any coercive measures, merely by dealing fairly with them.

I have commented at length upon that point in order to show that the Lieutenant-Governor, in exercising the power vested in him of dismissing his ministers and appointing others in their stead, had acted with strict justice and done but his duty.

His immediate appeal to the Province of Quebec by a dissolution of the House resulted in a verdict in his favour. Within the last few weeks two of the members of the present Opposition, who voted in the last session of the Legislature to condemn the act of the Lieutenant-Governor, while the right to their seats was contested, have been unseated by the courts of justice, which, in a small House like ours, increases materially the vote in favour of the Lieutenant-Governor; one of them is declared disqualified by the court.

As, in the reference to Her Majesty's Government, it was proposed to submit the whole case and attendant circumstances, I hope I will be excused for having entered into those details.

There are several other points which deserve to be submitted to Her Majesty's Government in order that it should become possessed of the whole case. Prejudices may have been created in the minds of those who are to pronounce judgment, which they will not refuse me the occasion to try and dispel; the opponents of the Lieutenant-Governor may have hinted at the sacrifice of the Lieutenant-Governor as the easiest mode of getting out of this difficulty. Her Majesty's Government is too generous to follow such advice, if it has been given.

I respectfully trust that I shall be allowed to give full explanations, or, in my absence (as I am compelled to return to Canada next week for the meeting of our Legislature in June), that Her Majesty's Government will grant a hearing to such person as I may authorise to represent me, in virtue of the powers given me by his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor and by the Government of the Province of Quebec.

Enclosure A.

My Dear Sir, Quebec, April 24, 1879.

As you have been selected by the Executive Government of the Province of Quebec to proceed to England for the protection of the autonomy of that Province in the matter of the reference made by the Government of the Dominion of Canada to the Imperial authorities regarding the proposed dismissal of the Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec, I hereby authorise you, in so far as I am personally interested in that reference, to represent me or to have me represented before the Imperial Government, the Honourable the Privy Council of Her most gracious Majesty, or before the Honourable the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

As it would be desirable that a judicial decision should be arrived at in a matter so deeply affecting the interests of this Province I feel that it would be more gratifying to the people of Canada were this case referred to that high tribunal.

I am, &c.

The Hon. Henri Gustave Joly, Commissioner of Agriculture and Public Works, and Premier, Quebec.

Enclosure B.

To the Hon. Luc Letellier de St. Just, Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec, &c.

Report of a Committee of the Executive Council on Matters referred to their consideration.

Present:—The Hon. Mr. Ross, in the Chair.
The Hon. Messrs. Joly, Marchand, Starnes, Lawgelier, Chauveau, in Council.

On Matters of State.

May it please your Excellency,

The Honourable the Treasurer of the Province, in a report dated the 24th of April instant (1879), sets forth that the dismissal of his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor was demanded of his Excellency the Governor-General because of the removal from office by his Honour of the Cabinet of M. De Boucherville.

That the Cabinet of his Excellency the Governor-General recommended the said dismissal, but that his Excellency has referred the whole question of the said dismissal to Her Majesty's Government.

That in the declaration by which Sir John A. Macdonald communicated to the Commons of Canada, the said decision of his Excellency the Governor-General, he said that he and his colleagues of the cabinet of his Excellency the Governor-General had considered it their duty to advise his Excellency to dismiss his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor for the reason that after the vote of censure upon the conduct of his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor, adopted last year by the Senate, and this year by the Commons of Canada, the usefulness of his Honour as such Lieutenant-Governor was gone.

That if a Lieutenant-Governor could be dismissed by a vote or a censure of the Senate and House of Commons, the result would be that the duty of a Lieutenant-Governor would be so to govern as to obtain the approval not of the local but of the federal legislature.

That the adoption of such a principle would entirely destroy the autonomy and the independence guaranteed to the Province by the British North America Act of 1867.

That the maintenance of the said local and provincial autonomy and independence imperiously demand that questions of purely local and provincial interest should not be subjected to the control and influence of the Federal Legislature and the Federal Government.

That the removal from office of the De Boucherville Ministry is one of those questions of purely local interest, the settlement of which one way or the other can produce no effect either on Imperial or Federal interests.

That the houses of the Local Legislature alone are competent to appreciate the said removal from office of the De Boucherville Ministry.

That it is of the greatest importance for the maintenance of the institutions and autonomy of the province that the Imperial authorities should refuse to sanction such a principle as that which is submitted for their approval.

That the Executive of the Province to whom is confided its interests between the sessions of the Legislature, are bound to adopt all legitimate means for preventing such a result.

The Honorable the Treasurer therefore recommends that the Honorable Henri Gustave Joly, Premier of the Province of Quebec, should, in the name of the said Province, be delegated to the Imperial authorities to uphold the rights of the Province of Quebec in the matter of the said question of the dismissal of his Honor the Lieutenant-Governor, and that he be authorised to adopt and take all necessary measures to secure the success of his mission.

The Committee concur in the foregoing report, and submit the same for the Lieutenant-Governor's approval.

Chairman of Committee.

Approved, 24th April, 1879.

All which is respectfully submitted. (Signed)

Enclosure C.

PROVINCE OF QUEBEC.

By His Excellency the Honorable LUC LETELLIER DE ST. JUST, Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec.

To all to whom these Presents shall come—GREETING :

THESE are to certify that George Boucher de Boucherville, Esquire, of Quebec, in the Province of Quebec, in the Dominion of Canada, and whose name is subscribed to the annexed Bill, is Clerk of the Legislative Council of the Province of Quebec, in and for that part of the Dominion of Canada called Province of Quebec, and that full faith and credence are due and ought to be given to such signature and act in all places.

Given under my hand and seal at arms, at the City of Quebec, this twenty-fourth day of April, in the year of Our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-nine, and of Her Majesty's reign, the forty-second. By command,

SIR, Downing Street, May 23, 1879.

I AM directed by the Sectretary of State for the Colonies to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 22nd instant,* stating certain circumstances connected with the case of Mr. Letellier, the Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec, and enclosing certain documents relating thereto and to your mission to this country.

Sir Michael Hicks Beach desires me to assure you that full consideration will be given to your letter now under acknowledgment, and to any other statement on the subject which you or any person whom in your absence you may authorise to represent you may desire to place before Her Majesty's Government.

Sir,

Before leaving England allow me to thank you for the kind and courteous reception you have given me whenever I have been called upon to communicate with you, either verbally or by letter, in the Letellier matter.

When I requested, yesterday, your leave to enter into the merits of the case, and to establish the truth of what I have always asserted, and still do assert, "that the Lieutenant "Governor was fully justified in dismissing his ministers, and committed no wrong in "doing so," you stopped me by declaring that you would not enter into the merits of the case, but would limit yourself to consider as purely abstract questions (irrespective of persons and facts) the two following points:—

1st. With whom does the power of dismissal of a Lieutenant-Governor over one of the Provinces of the Dominion of Canada rest?

2nd. Can the Lieutenant-Governor of a Province be dismissed for an official act which affects only his Province?

Your promise that no charge brought against the Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec would be allowed to weigh in the balance, and that no attention whatever would be paid by you to the merits or demerits of his act, was in strict accordance with what I had a right to expect from your sense of justice, since you would not allow me to refute those charges nor to substantiate my assertion (repeated in my letter of the 22nd inst.)* that the Lieutenant-Governor had done no wrong.

In that same letter (to which I take the liberty of referring you) I have given reasons why the case should be decided here, and not referred back to the Federal Government, who have acknowledged themselves as one of the parties interested in its decision, and I hope those reasons will carry some weight in your mind.

I now return home with full confidence in your desire to render justice, and in your due appreciation of the importance of this question, the settlement of which will so materially affect the future relations between the Dominion and Provincial Governments, and the permanency of the system of self-government which it was contemplated by the British North America Act of 1867 to secure to each of the Provinces of the Dominion of Canada.

Batt's Hotel, London, May 31, 1879.

Sir,

I have the honour to state that I have received intimation that the Quebec Legislature will probably meet for despatch of business on the 19th of June next, and I and my colleague, Mr. Abbott, have thought it our duty to inform you of that fact, as bearing upon the importance of an immediate settlement of the question now before the Imperial Government. We venture to point out that it is now more than two months since the House of Commons of Canada, as the Senate had previously done, pronounced the conduct of the Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec to be unwise, and subversive of the position accorded to the advisers of the Crown under responsible government; and since the Canadian ministry, in consequence of that declaration, recommended his dismissal, and that the reference to the Imperial Government of the question as to what step his Excellency the Governor-General should take under the circumstances, has suspended further action in Canada. We would add that any material additional delay in deciding upon that reference will result in the renewed exercise by the Lieutenant-Governor of the highest functions of his office, after an emphatic condemnation of his conduct by both Houses of the Dominion Parliament, and after the responsible Ministry of the Dominion, supported by an unusually large majority of the House of Commons, has determined that his usefulness had ceased, and has advised his dismissal. In addition to the other reasons for an early decision which we have already had the honour to suggest, we would therefore also submit that, having regard to the effective administration of the Government of Canada, to the respect which it should command from its people, and to the good government of one of its greatest Provinces, it is highly important that a decision should reach Canada in time to enable appropriate action to be taken upon it before the opening of the Quebec Legislature.

No. 14.

The Right Hon. Sir MICHAEL HICKS BEACH, Bart., to Governor-General the MARQUIS OF LORNE, K.T.

My Lord, Downing Street, July 3, 1879.

Her Majesty's Government have given their attentive consideration to your request for their instructions with reference to the recommendation made by your ministers that Mr. Letellier, the Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec, should be removed from his office.

It will not have escaped your observation, in making this request, that the constitutional question to which it relates is one affecting the internal affairs of the Dominion, and belongs to a class of subjects with which the Government and Parliament of Canada are fully competent to deal. I notice with satisfaction that, owing to the ability and patience with which the new Constitution has been made by the Canadian people to fulfil the objects with which it was framed, it has very rarely been found necessary to resort to the Imperial authority for assistance in any of those complications which might have been expected to arise during the first years of the Dominion; and I need not point out to you that such references should only be made in circumstances of a very exceptional nature.

I readily admit, however, that the principles involved in the particular case now before me are of more than ordinary importance. The true effect and intent of those sections of the British North America Act, 1867, which apply to it, have been much discussed; and as this is the first case which has occurred under those sections, there is no precedent for your guidance. For this reason, though regretting that any cause should have arisen for the reference now made to them, Her Majesty's Government approve of the course which you have taken on the responsibility and with the consent of your ministers, and I will now proceed to convey to you the views which they have formed on the question submitted for their consideration.

The several circumstances affecting the particular case of Mr. Letellier have been fully stated in Sir J. A. Macdonald's memorandum of 14th April, in Lieutenant-Governor Letellier's letter of 18th April, and in communications which I have since received from Mr. Langevin, who, accompanied by Mr. Abbott, has come to this country for the purpose of supporting the advice given by the Government of which he is a member, and from Mr. Joly, who was similarly empowered to offer any explanations that might be required on the part of Mr. Letellier. If it had been the duty of Her Majesty's Government to decide whether Mr. Letellier ought or ought not to be removed, the reasons in favour of and against his removal would, I am confident, have been very ably and thoroughly put before them by Messrs. Langevin and Abbott, and by Mr. Joly. I have not, however, had occasion to call for any arguments from either side on the merits of Mr. Letellier's case. The law does not empower Her Majesty's Government to decide it, and they do not therefore propose to express any opinion with regard to it. You are aware that the powers given by the British North America Act, 1867, with respect to the removal of a Lieutenant-Governor from office, are vested, not in Her Majesty's Government, but in the Governor-General; and I understand that it is merely in view of the important precedent which you consider may be established by your action in this instance, and the doubts which you entertain as to the meaning of the statute, that you have asked for an authoritative expression of the opinion of Her Majesty's Government on the abstract question of the responsibilities and functions of the Governor-General in relation to the Lieutenant-Governor of a province under the British North America Act, 1867.

The main principles determining the position of the Lieutenant-Governor of a province in the matter now under consideration are plain. There can be no doubt that he has an unquestionable constitutional right to dismiss his provincial ministers if, from any cause, he feels it incumbent upon him to do so. In the exercise of this right, as of any other of his functions, he should, of course, maintain the impartiality towards rival political parties which is essential to the proper performance of the duties of his office; and for any action he may take he is, under the 59th section of the Act, directly responsible to the Governor-General.

This brings me at once to the point with which alone I have now to deal, namely, whether in deciding whether the conduct of a Lieutenant-Governor merits removal from office, it would be right and sufficient for the Governor-General, as in any ordinary matter of administration, simply to follow the advice of his ministers, or whether he is placed by the special provisions of the Statute under an obligation to act upon his own individual judgment. With reference to this question it has been noticed that while under section 58 of the Act the appointment of a Lieutenant-Governor is to be made "by the Governor-General in Council by instrument under the Great Seal of Canada," section 59 provides that "a Lieutenant-Governor shall hold office during the pleasure of the Governor-General"; and much stress has been laid upon the supposed intention of the Legislature in thus varying the language of these sections. But it must be remembered that other powers vested in a similar way by the Statute in the Governor-General, were clearly intended to be, and in practice are, exercised by him by and with the advice of his ministers; and though the position of a Governor-General would entitle his views on such a subject as that now under consideration to peculiar weight, yet Her Majesty's Government do not find anything in the circumstances which would justify him in departing in this instance from the general rule, and declining to follow the decided and sustained opinion of his ministers, who are responsible for the peace, and good government of the whole Dominion to the Parliament to which, according to the 59th section of the Statute, the cause assigned for the removal of a Lieutenant-Governor must be communicated.

Her Majesty's Government therefore can only desire you to request your ministers again to consider the action to be taken in the case of Mr. Letellier. It will be proper that you should, in the first instance, invite them to inform you whether their views, as expressed in Sir J. A. Macdonald's memorandum, are in any way modified after perusal of this despatch, and after examination of the circumstances now existing, which since the date of that memorandum may have so materially changed as to make it in their opinion no longer necessary for the advantage, good government, or contentment of the province, that so serious a step should be taken as the removal of a Lieutenant-Governor from office. It will, I am confident, be clearly borne in mind that it was the spirit and intention of the "British North America Act, 1867," that the tenure of the high office of Lieutenant-Governor should, as a rule, endure for the term of years specifically mentioned, and that not only should the power of removal never be exercised except for grave cause, but that the fact that the political opinions of a Lieutenant-Governor had not been, during his former career, in accordance with those held by any Dominion Ministry who might happen to succeed to power during his term of office, would afford no reason for its exercise.

The political antecedents and present position of nearly all the Lieutenant-Governors now holding office prove that the correctness of this view has been hitherto recognized in practice; and I cannot doubt that your advisers, from the opinions they have expressed, would be equally ready with the late Government to appreciate the objections to any action which might tend to weaken its influence in the future.

I have directed your attention particularly to this point, because it appears to me to be important that, in considering a case which may be referred to hereafter as a precedent, the true constitutional position of a Lieutenant-Governor should be defined. The whole subject may, I am satisfied, now be once more reviewed with advantage, and I cannot but think that the interval which has elapsed (and which has from various causes been unavoidable) may have been useful in affording means for a thorough comprehension of a very complicated question, and in allowing time for the strong feelings, on both sides, which I regret to observe have been often too bitterly expressed, to subside.

SIR, Quebec, July 28, 1879.

WITH reference to my Despatch of the 9th of April 1879,* and your reply, of the 3rd of July 1879,† conveying the opinion of Her Majesty's Government on the case of Mr. Letellier, the former Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec, I have now the honour to transmit for your information:

1. A copy of the memorandum with which I referred your Despatch to my ministers.
2. Their reply, informing me that after careful and anxious consideration they adhered to their original decision that Mr. Letellier should be removed from his office of Lieutenant-Governor.
3. My assent to that decision conveyed by telegraph.
4. An approved Order in Council, based on the Resolution passed in the Dominion House of Commons on the 14th day of March 1879, recommending that Mr. Letellier be removed from his office of Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec.

I have, &c.
(Signed) LORNE,
Governor-General.

The Right Hon. the Secretary of State for the Colonies,

MEMORANDUM to the PRIVY COUNCIL.

Citadel, Quebec, July 14, 1879.

The Governor-General having, with the assent of the Prime Minister, referred the question involved in the proposed removal from his office of Monsieur Letellier, the Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec, to the Imperial Government, herewith forwards for the consideration of the Cabinet a copy of the Despatch in which the Secretary of State for the Colonies gives the views of the Imperial Government.

The Cabinet will observe that the 39th section of the British North America Act is not held by the Imperial Government to confer on the Governor-General the individual right to maintain a Lieutenant-Governor in office.

The Governor-General is by the Despatch informed that in the view of Her Majesty's Government he would not be justified in departing "in this instance from the general "rule, and declining to follow the decided and sustained opinion of his ministers."

He has, therefore, now to request the Cabinet to state if the opinion given by them to the effect that they advise the dismissal of the Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec be still their decided opinion, and if that opinion be sustained after full weight and due consideration has been given by the Cabinet to the support afforded in the Province of Quebec to M. Joly, the minister who is by constitutional practice responsible for the action of the Lieutenant-Governor.

In requesting the Cabinet to reconsider their advice, the Governor-General asks that special attention be directed to the fifth paragraph, and those numbered seven, eight, and nine of the Despatch of the Secretary of State.

To the Despatch from Her Majesty's Government he desires to add nothing on his own part, the Cabinet having been already confidentially placed in possession of his views.

It is to be desired that the opinion of the Cabinet as reconsidered be assented to by all its members, and that the ministers now absent in England be communicated with by telegraph for this purpose.

MEMORANDUM from Sir JOHN MACDONALD to HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL.

Ottawa, July 21, 1879.

THE undersigned, on behalf of himself and colleagues, has the honour to acknowledge the receipt of the Despatch from the Secretary of State for the Colonies of the 3rd July instant, and of the memorandum addressed to the Privy Council from his Excellency with reference to it.

* No. 3. † No. 14.

The Governor-General's advisers, having fully considered the Despatch and his Excellency's minute, desire to state that after anxious consideration they adhere to the advice previously tendered to him by the undersigned on their behalf for the removal of Lieutenant-Governor Letellier. They have not failed to give full weight and due consideration to the support afforded in the Province of Quebec to M. Joly, and have given their special attention to the fifth, seventh, eighth, and ninth paragraphs of the Despatch as desired by his Excellency. This subject was fully considered by his Excellency's advisers immediately before the departure of Sir Leonard Tilley and Sir Charles Tupper for England. These gentlemen concurred with the rest of their colleagues in the opinion that in case the subject should be referred back by Her Majesty's Government, the advice should be renewed; and this is therefore the unanimous advice of the Cabinet.

(Signed) JOHN A. MACDONALD.

TELEGRAM sent to Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD 23rd July 1879.

SHALL consent to act on advice given after reconsideration of case by Cabinet. Order in Council should be so drawn as to make clear sole responsibility of Cabinet for action taken.

(Signed) LORNE.

COPY of a REPORT of a Committee of the Honourable the Privy Council approved of by his Excellency the Governor-General on the 25th day of July 1879.

THE Committee of Council have had under consideration a memorandum, dated 23rd July 1879, from Sir John A. Macdonald, to whom was referred the Despatch of the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for the Colonies, dated 3rd of July 1879, on the subject of the reference to Her Majesty of the recommendation made by your Excellency's advisers that Mr. Letellier, the Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec, should be removed from his office, reporting that on the 14th March 1879 the House of Commons of Canada passed the following resolution: "That the dismissal by the Lieutenant-"Governor of Quebec of his ministers on the 2nd day of March 1878, was under the "circumstances unwise and subversive of the position accorded to the advisers of the "Crown since the concession of the principle of responsible government to the British "North American Colonies."

That a few days afterwards he, Sir John A. Macdonald, as first minister, waited on your Excellency and informed you that after the resolution of the Senate in the last session of Parliament, and the resolution of the House of Commons just referred to, it was the opinion of your Excellency's advisers that the usefulness of Mr. Letellier as Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec was gone, and they advised that in the public interest it was expedient that he should be removed from office. That your Excellency was thereupon pleased to state that as the federal system introduced by the British North American Act of 1867 was until then unknown in Great Britain or her Colonies, there were no precedents to guide us; that the decision on the present case would settle for the future the relations between the Dominion and Provincial Governments as far as the office of Lieutenant-Governor is concerned, and that your Excellency therefore deemed it expedient to submit the advice tendered to you, and the whole case, with all the attendant circumstances, to Her Majesty's Government for their consideration and instructions.

That this decision of your Excellency was made with the assent of the Cabinet, who then assumed and still assume the responsibility of the reference.

That he begs further to state that the Despatch from the Secretary for the Colonies has been carefully reconsidered, and that it is the decided and sustained opinion of your Excellency's ministers that it is expedient and necessary that Mr. Letellier should be removed from his office of Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec.

He further begs to report that the cause to be assigned for such removal according to the provisions of the 59th section of the British North American Act, 1867, is that after the vote of the House of Commons during last session and that of the Senate during the previous session Mr. Letellier's usefulness as a Lieutenant-Governor was gone.

That your Excellency's advisers are fully aware of the responsibility of making this recommendation, and they feel it their duty to accept it in every sense.

The Committee concur in the foregoing report, and submit the same for your Excellency's approval.

Certified,
W. A. Himsworth,
Clerk Privy Council, Canada.

RETURN to an Address of the Honourable The House of Commons, dated 21 March 1879;—for,

COPY "of ADDRESS to the CROWN from the CATHOLIC BISHOPS of the Dominion of CANADA, in relation to the present position of UNIVERSITY EDUCATION in IRELAND."

Colonial Office, 7 April 1879.

M. E. HICKS BEACH.

To Her Most Gracious Majesty, VICTORIA, Queen of Great Britain and Ireland.

The Petition of the undersigned humbly showeth:

THAT we approach the foot of the Throne with sentiments of profound homage and devoted loyalty.

That your Majesty's Canadian subjects are contented and happy because they enjoy the blessings of civil and religious liberty and are devotedly loyal, not only because loyalty is a matter of conscientious obligation but also because it is a duty springing from the heart's devotion, since here the just rights of all are equally respected and protected.

That the undersigned are deeply interested in the welfare and happiness of your Majesty's Irish subjects.

That the undersigned consider a complete system of education primary intermediate and collegiate based upon religion to be a most powerful means of promoting the welfare and happiness of the Irish people.

That the undersigned regard the system of intermediate education recently granted to Ireland by your Majesty's Government as being greatly calculated to promote the reign of peace and contentment in that section of the Empire and to be blessed with the promise of the most beneficial and far-reaching results.

That the undersigned humbly submit that a Roman Catholic University duly chartered the logical development and completion of the scheme of intermediate education already granted is a crying want of their co-religionists in Ireland and that its establishment would be regarded with the heartfelt gratitude and rewarded with the unwavering loyalty of your Majesty's Roman Catholic subjects in that kingdom.

That in the age in which we live when the masses under the destructive influences of irreligion and impiety threaten the overthrow of law and order and menace the security and stability of every Throne in Continental Europe it would be wise statesmanship to place the education of the people under the blessed and saving influences of religion, which is the unfailing prop of civil order, the firm foundation of the social fabric and the unshaken support of the Throne.

That as your Majesty graciously vouchsafed to grant a charter to the Roman Catholic University of Quebec in this Dominion,

Your Petitioners humbly and earnestly pray—

That your Majesty may be graciously pleased to grant the same great and long-wished for boon to the institution known as the Catholic University of Dublin and your Petitioners as in duty bound will for ever pray.

Correspondence respecting Occurrences at Fortune Bay, Newfoundland, in January 1878.

No. 1.

Mr. Malcolm to Lord Tenterden.—(Received March 12.)

Sir, Downing Street, March 12, 1878.

I AM directed by the Secretary of State for the Colonies to transmit to you, to be laid before the Earl of Derby, a copy of a despatch from the Governor of Newfoundland, reporting certain differences which had arisen between British and United States' fishermen in Fortune Bay in that island, resulting in the destruction of a seine belonging to an American subject.

Inclosure 1 in No. 1.

Governor Sir J. Glover to the Earl of Carnarvon.

My Lord, Government House, February 11, 1878.

I REGRET to have to report the destruction of an American seine by our fishermen in Fortune Bay on the 6th ultimo, the news of which only reached me through a cable telegram from London on the 4th instant.

2. On receipt of this intelligence I at once caused an inquiry to be instituted to ascertain the truth of the report, but the result of the inquiry has not yet reached me from Fortune Bay. I have the honour to inclose the only information I have as yet been able to obtain, viz., the deposition of the master of a vessel who was present at the time.

3. It would appear that the Americans were guilty of three illegal acts, viz.:—

1st. As regards the time in which a seine may be used.

(See Acts 1876, cap 6, in Amendment of Consolidated Statutes, 1872, cap. 102).

2nd. In barring (same Act).

3rd. By putting out nets or seines between 12 o'clock on Saturday night and 12 o'clock on Sunday night.

4. As two out of the five seines were removed by our people without injury or damage, and two by the Americans themselves, I conclude that opposition was raised on the part of the American owner to the removal of the fifth.

5. I inclose the opinion of the Attorney-General, which that gentleman has placed in my hands, and I hope to be enabled to send full information by the next mail.

I have, &c.

Deposition of Alfred Noel.

Newfoundland, Central District, St. John's, to wit.

The examination of Alfred Noel, of St. John's aforesaid, master-mariner, taken upon oath, and who saith:—I am master of the schooner "Nautilus" of this port, and on the 19th day of December last I was at Long Harbour, in Fortune Bay, in the "Nautilus," which was anchored off Woody Island. I had a crew of seven men, and I was there engaged in the herring fishery. There were several American schooners; seven of them were lying off Woody Island, and two French vessels. This island forms the harbour within half a mile of the narrows of Long Harbour; and other American schooners and Newfoundland fishing craft were inside Woody Island, which is the inside part of Long Harbour. All the craft there, English and American, were hauling herrings in seines and nets, and the Americans were purchasing herring from the English. Everything went off quietly, and the greatest harmony prevailed until Sunday, the 6th day of January, when about half-past two o'clock in the afternoon five seines, belonging to the American schooners, were put into the water by their crews at the beach on the north-east side of Long Harbour. I know two of the captains by name, Dago and Jacobs, belonging to Gloster, United States, but do not know the names of their schooners. The whole five seines were barred full of herrings, when the English crews of the crafts belonging to Fortune Bay ordered them to take their seines up or they would take them up for them; and the Fortune Bay men, finding they would not do as they were requested, then hauled up two of the American seines, but without any damage or injury, and two were at the same time taken up by the Americans; and at the same time a seine belonging to Captain Dago was taken up by the Fortune Bay men, the herrings thrown out, and the seine was torn up and destroyed. Before this occurrence on the said Sunday, one of the American schooners had a seine barred with herrings on the beach at Long Harbour for seven days, and it was not at any time meddled with by the Fortune Bay men or any one. Some of the Fortune Bay men had nets out in the water on that Sunday, and the same had been there during the week, but none of the Newfoundland fishermen attempted to haul herrings on Sunday at any time while I was at Long Harbour. The Americans' practice had been until lately to purchase herring from the Newfoundland fishermen in Fortune Bay, but this year and last year the Americans have brought their own seines to haul herring for themselves. The American seines are 30 fathoms deep and 200 fathoms long, whilst those used by our fishermen are 12 or 13 fathoms deep and 120 fathoms long. These American seines are used for barring herring in deep water, such as the Fortune Bay Harbours, viz., Long Harbour, Bay de Nord, and Rencontre. Our fishermen never bar herrings, and herrings have never been barred in Fortune Bay, to my knowledge, until the Americans brought the large seines I have alluded to into Fortune Bay and used them there to the disadvantage of our fishermen. This mode of barring herrings in such harbours as I have mentioned is most destructive and ruinous to the herring fishery in those localities. I do not know the names of the persons who destroyed the seine; there were about eighty vessels from different harbours of Fortune Bay at Long Harbour at the time, and the seine was destroyed by a great lot of people. I left Long Harbour for St. John's on the 31st day of January and arrived here on the 4th instant.

Memorandum by the Attorney-General.

BY the Treaty of Washington the United States' citizens have the right to take, &c., fish on our coasts, irrespective of distance from the shore, in common with the subjects of Her Britannic Majesty (Article XVIII).

By Act, cap. 6, 1876, in amendment of the Consolidated Statutes (1872), cap. 102, "No person shall haul, catch, or take herrings in a seine or such contrivance between the 20th October and 25th April in any year, or at any time use a seine or such contrivance for catching herrings, except by way of shooting and forthwith hauling. Proviso: nets may be used, set as usual, and not used for barring or inclosing herrings in a cove, inlet, or other place."

By this same Act, 1876, sec. 4, "No person shall between 12 o'clock Saturday night and 12 o'clock Sunday night haul, &c., herring, &c., with nets, seines, bunts, or any such contrivance, or set or put out the same for the purpose of such hauling, &c."

This deposition discloses, and others may be had in corroboration, that the United States citizens have been guilty of illegal acts.

1st. As regards time in which a seine may be used (see above).

2nd. In barring (see above).

3rd. Hauling on a Sunday (see above).

The United States' citizens have made no complaint to any official in the Colony of having been improperly obstructed in rights under the Treaty, and the first that I heard of any disturbance was in a cable message from London a day or two since.

My Lord, Washington, March 4, 1878.

I HAVE the honour to transmit herewith copy of a note which I have received from Mr. Evarts, informing me of complaints which have been recently made to his Department of interference with American fishermen engaged in the herring fishery on the coast of Newfoundland. Mr. Evarts states that the United States' Consuls at St. John's and and other ports have been instructed to collect and forward more detailed and specific information upon the subject to the State Department, which he promises to transmit to me as as soon as he shall receive it.

In the meantime I have to-day forwarded a copy of Mr. Evarts' note to the Governor of that Colony, for his Excellency's information, and for any observations which he may think proper to make.

Your Lordship will perceive that Mr. Evarts states that the President has deemed it proper to bring the subject directly to the attention of Her Majesty's Government, through the Minister of the United States at London.

I also inclose two copies of an article upon the same subject published in the "New York Herald" of the 26th ultimo, as well as of a long extract from the same paper, purporting to be a communication from Gloucester, a fishing town on the coast of Massachusetts. The latter contains several affidavits of American fishermen, which are probably some of those alluded to by Mr. Evarts in his note.

It is not improbable that the American fishermen had committed some infraction of the fishery laws of Newfoundland, of which they are not always strict observers. If that be the case, however, it is to be regretted that the authorities should not have prevented such proceedings rather than that the native fishermen should have taken the law into their own hands. But it is doubtful whether it would not be in accordance with the custom of the United States' Government to refer the complaints to the Courts of Justice of Newfoundland for redress.

Inclosure 1 in No. 3.

Mr. Evarts to Sir E. Thornton.

Sir, Department of State, Washington, March 2, 1878.

I HAVE the honour to bring to your notice the fact that complaints have been recently made to this Department of interference with American fishermen engaged in the herring fishery on the coast of Newfoundland. In some instances these complaints have been forwarded to the Department through the United States' Consuls at St. John's and other ports of that Colony. The representations made by the Consuls are, however, of a general nature based upon statements made to them by the fishermen immediately interested, and consequently the officers in question have been instructed to collect and forward more detailed and specific information, and such further information I will do myself the honour to transmit to you so soon as the reports from the Consuls shall have been received.

Still more recently similar complaints have been received through the collector of the port of Gloucester, Massachusetts, supported by the sworn statements of the masters of eight fishing schooners of that port, and from the statements thus forwarded it appears that in January of the present year those vessels had reached the neighbourhood of Long Harbour, and were actively engaged in the herring fishery, and that most of the seines were full of fish and ready for landing, when, in one instance, two seines belonging to the schooners "Ontario" and "New England" respectively were cut by an enraged crowd of over 200 men, and the whole catch, estimated at not less than 5,000 barrels of herring suffered to run out to sea. Other instances are given, only less in quantity and value, the proceedings resulting in the vessels—eight in number—being obliged to abandon the fishing-grounds on that coast and return to their home port in ballast. When it is remarked at what considerable expense the preparations are made for a season's fishing in these waters, many of the men-mariners, as well as the masters, embarking their all in the enterprise, the serious character of their losses may be partially understood.

The President has deemed it proper, in view of the possible complications to which a continuance of these lawless proceedings might give rise, to bring the subject directly to the attention of Her Majesty's Government with a view to an early investigation of the facts and the adoption of such measures on its part as may be deemed advisable to prevent a recurrence of the acts complained of; and the Minister of the United States at London has been accordingly instructed to take the necessary steps in that direction. Meantime, I have deemed it right to transmit the facts, so far as they are already known, for your information.

I have, &c.

Testimony on the Outrage.

The following are the depositions of masters of schooners who were present during the trouble at Long Harbour. Others will be taken as fast as they come in, and a deputation will wait on Secretary Evarts and present formal claims :—

Charles Dagle.

"Gloucester, February 19, 1878.

"I, Charles Dagle, master of the American schooner 'Lizzie and Namari,' of Rockport, do on oath depose and say:—

"That I sailed from Gloucester on the 6th December, 1877, for Fortune Bay, Newfoundland, for a load of herring. The last year (1877) I had sold a seine and boat to parties in Newfoundland, and they were to supply me with herring in payment for the seine and boat. I arrived at Fortune Bay about the 19th December. I was at Long Harbour, Newfoundland, with my vessel on the 6th January. Saw the seines of the American schooners 'New England' and 'Ontario' destroyed by the fishermen of Newfoundland. There is a decided objection to using netted or gill-net herring for freezing purposes, as these herring die in a short time after being taken in gill-nets. When they are seined they can be kept alive on the radius of the seine and taken out alive when the weather is suitable for freezing, while the netted herring, being dead, must be salted or spoil; consequently the seined herring are the best for our purposes and are what the American vessels want for our market. Knowing this fact, the Newfoundland fishermen had endeavoured to obstruct in every way the taking of herring with seines, as they use principally gill-nets; they placed their nets, which are set permanently, so as to hinder the using of seines. On the 6th January, 1878, the herring had come inshore, so that they were inside the gill-nets, thus giving our people an opportunity to seine them without interfering with the gill-nets. On the Americans attempting to put their seines in the water the Newfoundland fishermen threatened to destroy them, and when our fishermen had taken their seines full of herring, the Newfoundlanders came down to the number of 200, seized and destroyed the seines, letting out the fish, and afterwards stole and carried off the remnants of the seines. On account of this violence and the obstructions placed in the way of my men operating the seine, I was unable to procure a cargo, and have returned without a herring. If I had been allowed the privilege guaranteed by the Washington Treaty, I could have loaded my vessel and all the American vessels could have loaded. The Newfoundland people are determined that the American fishermen shall not take herring on their shores. The American seines being very large and superior in every respect to the nets of the Newfoundlanders, they cannot compete with them. These seines are the mackerel seines which are used in summer for mackerel and are setting for herring. When they are plentiful we can take from 2,000 to 5,000 barrels. The seines and boats we use cost 1,200 dollars when new, and are too expensive for the generality of Newfoundland fishermen, and they would have no use for seines only during the herring season, while we can use them both summer and winter, and thus make them pay for their great cost.

"My loss by these acts of violence, and being deprived of my rights under the Washington Treaty, is fully 5,000 dollars, which I claim as indemnity. The netted herring are strangled while caught by the head in the net, and the eyes turn red from suffocation. They will not keep so long as seined herring, which are free to swim inside the seine and are dipped out alive. The netted herring will not sell in the New York market, while the seined herring preserve their bright appearance and sell readily.

William H. McDonald.

"Gloucester, February 19, 1878.

"I, William H. McDonald, master of the American schooner 'William E. McDonald,' of Gloucester, do on oath depose and say:—

"That I have just returned from Newfoundland, where I have been for a load of herring. I was at Long Harbour, Newfoundland, when the seines of schooners 'New England' and 'Ontario' were destroyed. I had gone on shore and was on the beach at the time. The Newfoundlanders were much excited because of our use of the large seines, which for the first time were used last winter there. The Newfoundland fishermen had sunk large rocks off the beach in order to catch the seines and tear them, and had put their 'gill-nets' where they would obstruct the use of the seines. These means failing, as the herring were close in shore, they took to personal violence and destroyed one seine completely, and made the others take them up and release the fish. I had a seine, but was not allowed to use it. The nets they placed in the way and kept there only for the purpose of obstructing our operations with seines, as they took no herring there, but let the nets remain till they rotted. I can fully endorse the statement of Captain Dagle in all particulars. My vessel is a first-class vessel, and with the time and expense, and with the loss of herring, I have sustained a loss of fully 5,000 dollars to myself and owners, and I claim that, under the Treaty of Washington, I have a right to the herring fisheries and claim indemnity for this severe loss."

(Signed) "WILLIAM H. McDONALD.

"Personally appeared William H. McDonald and subscribed and made oath to the above statement.

"Before me,

(Signed) "AARON PARSONS, Justice of the Peace."

James McDonald.

"Gloucester, February 19, 1878.

"I, James McDonald, master of the American schooner 'F. A. Smith,' of Gloucester, do on oath depose and say:—

"That the said schooner was chartered by George W. Plumer and others, of Gloucester, for a voyage to Newfoundland for herring. I sailed from Gloucester on the 29th November, 1877, and arrived at Long Harbour, Newfoundland, on or about the 15th December, 1877. I carried a large purse seine, such as is used to take mackerel. The seine will take 4,000 barrels of fish. I employed Newfoundland fishermen to operate the seine. I set my seine twice, but without catching anything, as my seine was torn by rocks that had been left off the beach. On the 6th January the herring made their appearance in great numbers, and the opportunity to take a large haul was improved by my men, and we took at least 1,000 barrels, enough to load my vessel and one other. The Newfoundland fishermen came off in their boats and told me to take my seine up, or they would take it up for me, and that they would cut it up. There were about 200 men engaged in this violence, and my own crew consisting of six men I could not resist, but was obliged to take up my seine. I saw the seines of the schooners 'New England' and 'Ontario' destroyed, and knew that mine also would be destroyed if I did not take it up. My seine was not attached to the shore when they came off, and the attack on me was made in boats. After destroying the other seines they all made for me, and my only safety was to gather up my seine. I lost all my fish, and the Newfoundland fishermen put all the obstructions they could in the way, to prevent the use of our seines after that. From my knowledge of the facts I do say that the Newfoundland fishermen are determined to prevent American fishermen from using the shore fisheries. I consider that the loss to the vessel and the charter party at not less than 5,000 dollars, and under the Treaty of Washington I have been deprived of my rights as an American citizen, and full indemnity should be allowed for the outrage. I have read the statement of Captain Dagle, and know it to be true in all its particulars. The effect of this treatment will be to destroy the American fishing for herring at Newfoundland. There are annually about 100 voyages by American vessels made for herring to Newfoundland. The Newfoundland fishermen were taking herring on the same day the outrages before stated occurred.

"Gloucester, February 19, 1878.

"I, Charles H. Nute, master of the American schooner 'Edward E. Webster,' of Gloucester, do on oath depose and say:—

"That I have just returned from Newfoundland, where I have been for a load of herring. I went for the purpose of co-operating with other American vessels in the use of their seines in taking herring. I was at Long Harbour and saw the destruction of the seines of the American schooners 'New England' and 'Ontario.' I have seen the statement of Captain Dagle, of the American schooner 'Lizzie and Namari,' and substantiate all he has stated. I have returned without a herring for the same reasons. My actual loss in time of vessel and crew, with herring I should have bought had I not been prevented by the inhabitants of Newfoundland, is fully 5,000 dollars; and, owing to being deprived of my rights under the Washington Treaty, I hereby claim that amount as indemnity for the wrong done me and the owners of the vessel.

"Gloucester, February 20, 1878.

"I, David Malanson, Master of the American schooner 'Crest of the Wave,' of Gloucester, Massachusetts, do on oath depose and say:—

"That I sailed from Gloucester on the 8th December, 1877, on a voyage to Newfoundland for herring. I arrived at Long Harbour, Newfoundland, on the 23rd December, 1877. I was interested in a seine carried by the schooner 'New England and Ontario.' I was at Long Harbour on the 6th January, 1878, and was on the beach when the Newfoundland fishermen destroyed the seine belonging to these vessels. The herring did not strike inshore until that day, and as it is very uncertain how long they will remain, it is imperative, for successful prosecution of the business, to take them when they are inshore. By means of our large purse seines we can inclose the herring and keep them alive a month, if necessary, as we need to have freezing weather when we take them out, to freeze them, to keep them fresh until we get them to market. On this occasion the herring were entirely inshore of the Newfoundland gill-nets, and, as the sequel proved, if we did not take them then and there we should lose the season catch. The seines were set in no way interfering or injuring the gill-net fishing, and inclosed and held certainly 2,000 barrels of herring, enough to load four vessels. Over 200 men came down to the beach, seized the seine, let out the fish, pulled the seine on shore, tearing and cutting it to pieces with knives. The crews operating the seines were powerless against so many; and after they had destroyed this seine they went for the other American seines, shouting and gesticulating, saying: 'Tear up the damned American seines.' All of the vessels would have been loaded with herring if the Americans could have used their seines.

"My loss by this outrage is not less than 5,000 dollars, which has been taken from me despite the provisions of the Washington Treaty, and which I claim as indemnity.

"The Newfoundland fishermen have for years been in the habit of selling all the herring to American vessels. I have been there eight years, and I have always bought my herring, or engaged the Newfoundlanders to take them for me, paying them in cash. This has been the universal practice of American vessels. This year we carried the large mackerel seines, which we use in summer for taking mackerel. These seines will take from 2,000 to 5,000 barrels at a haul, and the herring are better taken in this way. As most of the Newfoundlanders fish with gill-nets, our manner of seining would take away from them the monopoly of the herring trade, and hence the feeling which produced the outrage on our vessels. It is apparent that they will obstruct any American fishery on their shores, and are not men who would know much about rights or privileges under a Treaty. I should say that there are at least 100 cargoes of herring taken from Newfoundland yearly by American vessels, and as things are now it would be useless for American vessels to go there for herring unless they bought the herring from the inhabitants at whatever price they may see fit to ask. This American trade has been a great benefit to Newfoundland, and the change in the manner of taking herring will greatly reduce the amount of money paid them for herring. Only three vessels of eighteen that were there got any herring whatever. Captain Jacobs, of the 'Moses Adams,' held his seine with revolvers, and being a native of Newfoundland was allowed to take in the herring he had taken. The feeling was very intense and bitter against the Americans. The Newfoundland fishermen were catching and taking herring with their nets and boats on the same day.

"Gloucester, February 21, 1878.

"I, Edward Stapleton, master of the American schooner 'Hereward,' of Gloucester, do, on oath, depose and say:—

"That I have just arrived from Newfoundland, where I have been for a load of herring. I was at Long Harbour, Newfoundland, when the Newfoundland Fishermen destroyed the seines of the American schooners 'New England' and 'Ontario,' and saw the whole transaction. I carried a seine with me, and employed Newfoundland fishermen to operate it for me. The first time they set it for me they put it out in a strong tide-way, and utterly destroyed it, and after that I had to depend on the other American seines. This was the understanding among the American Captains, that we were to work together and load all our vessels. The setting of the seines on the 6th January did not interfere in any way with their nets or fishing. I think there is a local regulation that does not allow the Newfoundland fishermen to fish on Sundays; but the first seine (a small one) set on that day was one owned and operated by the natives, and they were picking their nets and boating their herring ashore all day. On the arrival of the American fleet the Newfoundlanders put their nets where they would obstruct our seining, but on this day the herring were away inside of their nets, giving us the first chance and only opportunity we had to seine or get herring. Enough were taken, and could have been taken, that day to have loaded the fleet. After that day there was no opportunity to take any. Newfoundland nets were placed where they never took a fish, and placed only for the purpose of preventing our seining. My loss to vessel and owners is not less than 5,000 dollars, and I claim indemnity to that amount. This loss is owing entirely to the hostile acts of the Newfoundland fishermen.

No. 4.

My Lord, Legation of the United States, London, March 19, 1878.

I HAVE the honour to acquaint your Lordship that complaints have reached the Department of State at Washington of serious interference with American fishermen, engaged during the present season in the herring fishery on the coast of Newfoundland, especially in the neighbourhood of Long Harbour. The complaints come through various sources—first from the United States' Consuls in that Province—the Consuls confining themselves, however, to general statements based on representations made to them by fishermen immediately affected at the time of the occurrences, which form the grounds of complaints. Still more recently, however these complaints have been preferred in a more specific manner, supported by affidavits of the masters of several fishing vessels, owned and fitted out at Gloucester, Massachusetts. From these statements it appears that about the 6th January last no less than eight schooners from the above-named port, while engaged in the herring fishery, at and in the neighbourhood of Long Harbour, were attacked by the inhabitants, to the number, in one instance, of sixty men, and in another 200 or more, and their seines, which were set, and in most cases full of fish, cut and destroyed, and the fish in one case, to the amount of 5,000 barrels, and in others, only less in quantity and value, run out to sea—resulting, beside the great loss of property, in the vessels being obliged to return to their home port in ballast, and also to abandon their fishing enterprise for the season. When it is remembered at what considerable expense the preparations are made for a season's fishing in these northern latitudes, and that very many of the men, both masters and mariners, embark their all in the enterprise, the serious character of these losses may be partially understood.

Instructions have been sent to the Consuls to transmit fuller information on the subject, and I am advised that this will be furnished to me so soon as it shall have been received by the Department of State.

In the meantime I am instructed to bring the matter to the attention of Her Majesty's Government, and to request that it will cause an investigation to be made into the alleged facts of the case, and adopt such measures as may be found necessary, not only to put an end to the evil, but also to prevent a recurrence of acts which, in addition to the injuries and losses to individuals, may have a tendency to complicate the good relations which so happily subsist between the Government of the United States and that of Her Britannic Majesty.

Inclosure 1 in No. 8.

Sir J. Glover to Sir M. Hicks Beach.

Sir Government House, February 25, 1878.

I HAVE the honour to inform you that, since writing my despatch of the 11th instant, I have obtained the inclosed sworn statement of the master of a Newfoundland schooner, who was in the harbour when the destruction of the American nets, at Long Harbour, in Fortune Bay, took place. It would appear that he witnessed the destruction of the net, and may have assisted thereat, but does not commit himself, for he states, "I was informed" of what took place, and "I saw the seine next day, Monday."

2. I also inclose copy of a deposition on oath, copied from the "Toronto Globe" of the 14th February, made by "Naus," master of the schooner "Moro Castle," who, it would appear, was one of those who took up his seine, but states he witnessed the destruction of two American seines, and not that of one seine, as stated in the accompanying deposition.

3. This, in some measure, confirms the opinion contained in paragraph four of my previous despatch, viz., that two seines were taken up by their American owners, two without opposition from the American owners by the Newfoundland fishermen, and that the lifting of the fifth being refused or opposed by the American owner, it was taken up and destroyed. There is some discrepancy between the English and American depositions as to whether the destruction of the net or nets took place on Sunday, the 6th January, or Sunday, the 13th January.

4. I consider it very doubtful that I shall be enabled to obtain any further corroborative evidence as to the destruction of one or more seines, until the arrival of the ships-of-war in the spring, when I would suggest that orders should be issued by the Admiral for full particulars to be obtained for the information of Her Majesty's Government.

5. I shall not fail to impress upon my Government the necessity of obtaining, without loss of time, the fullest possible information on the subject.

Deposition of John Rumsey.

Central District, St. John's, to wit.

THE examination of John Rumsey, of St. John's, master mariner, taken upon oath, who saith:—

"On or about the 14th November last I sailed from St. John's to Fortune Bay for a cargo of herring. I arrived in Long Harbour, Fortune Bay, about Christmas last. I found about 200 schooners there looking for herring; twelve of the schooners were Americans; my schooner was called the 'Briton,' six hands all told. I got most of my herring between Christmas and the 8th January. Most all the schooners in Long Harbour lay inside of Woody Island. Woody Island is about three miles from the entrance of Long Harbour. On the northern side, rather above the island, there is a fine beach about a mile long. This is the best hauling place in Long Harbour, and most all the herrings were taken there. It is only this year and last year that the American schooners have brought down very large seines for catching herring. I have been informed that some of these seines were 250 fathoms long and 35 fathoms deep. The seines which our Newfoundland fishermen use are about 120 fathoms long and from 8 to 13 fathoms deep. In the first week in January there were four or five American schooners who had the beach above mentioned barred for herring. The mode of inbarring for herring is as follows: when a place is selected, generally a smooth beach with deep water outside free from rocks, a party is sent ashore with a long line from one end of the seine; the seine-boat then goes off with the seine, makes a long sweep, and the other end of the seine is then brought into the beach also; then the crew begin to haul together on both ends of the seine with long seine lines running fore and aft up and down the beach, four or five seines thus barring herring would cover all the hauling ground on this long beach I have spoken of, and would occupy all the best ground for hauling herring in Long Harbour. On the first Sunday in January the beach was barred by four or five large American seines. On that day, after dinner, a large number of people belonging to the crews of the Fortune Bay schooners then in Long Harbour went over to the beach, and I was informed there were 600 or 700 Newfoundland fishermen there. The Americans had barred the herring, and were hauling on their seines on the Sunday morning. The Newfoundland fishermen told the American captain to take up their seines or they would take them up for them. All the American seines were then taken up which were set on a Sunday except one; this one the American captain, who owned it, refused to take up. The Newfoundland fishermen then hauled it ashore, took the herrings out of the seine, and according as they hauled the seine out of the water they tore it up. I saw the seine the next day, Monday, on the beach, and it was completely destroyed; it was an old second-hand seine and very rotten. I have been for thirteen or fourteen years carrying on the herring fishery in Fortune Bay, and during that time I have never known our Newfoundland fishermen to haul herrings on Sunday. If the American fishermen were permitted to bar herrings in the way that they were doing at Long Harbour Beach, all the rest of the craft would be deprived of the best place in the harbour to haul herrings; and such a mode of fishing for herrings is most injurious to the fishery, and must in time ruin the herring fishery there. The Americans in hauling their long seines often removed the Newfoundland fishermen's nets when they came in their way. I have known the Americans last year to have herrings barred in for a fortnight. Barring kills a great many herring, and makes those who are barred in very poor. I have seen the bottom covered with dead herring after the seine had been barred for a week. The American schooners heave out their ballast in the Channel between Woody Island and the shore, and if not prevented, will soon destroy the anchorage there.

Extract from the "Toronto Daily Globe" of February 14, 1878.

THE NEWFOUNDLAND HERRING CASE.

Affidavit of the Gloucester Captain.

THE Gloucester, Massachusetts, fisherman who alleges that he was recently attacked by Newfoundland fishermen and compelled to abandon the herring fishery, has transmitted the affidavit printed below to the United States' Government at Washington.

A telegram printed in yesterday's "Globe" from Fortune Bay, at the head of which is situated Long Harbour, where the outrage is said to have been committed, denies that the trouble occurred. Pending the arrival of details from Newfoundland, it would be well to withhold judgment. The Gloucester skipper says :—

"I, Loring B. Naus, on oath, depose and say, that I am master of the schooner 'Moro Castle,' of Gloucester, and was with my vessel at Long Harbour, Newfoundland, the whole of last month, January 1878, having gone there for a cargo of herring; I saw the destruction of the seines of the schooners 'Ontario' and 'New England' at that place by the inhabitants of Newfoundland. This occurred on the 13th ultimo. The facts are as follows:—I went, in company with Captain Jacobs, of the schooner 'Moses Adams,' Captain Poole, of the schooner 'Maud and Effie,' Captain German, of the schooner 'Fred. P. Faye,' Captain Dago of the schooner 'New England, and others, together with our several crews in our seine-boats for the purpose of setting our seines to haul herring. Some 150 and upwards of the inhabitants had collected on the beach, but did not molest us in any way until they found our seine were full of herring, when I heard some of the crowd on shore exclaim, 'Let's tear up the Yankee seines,' and immediately set to work destroying our seines, which they did most effectually by cutting and tearing them up. There were at the same time two other American seines set which we estimated had in them at least 1,500 barrels of herring. In each case the owners were obliged to let the herring out and take the seines up, as the crowd threatened their destruction if they were not immediately taken up. The setting of our seines did not interfere in any way with their fishing, and they (the inhabitants) were engaged in tending and picking the stationary nets on this day, and landing the herring in the boats. The antipathy of the inhabitants towards us seemed to be occasioned by the fact of our having larger seines and being more successful than themselves. In years past we have always bought our herrings of the inhabitants paying from 1 dollar to 1 dol. 50 c. per barrel for them, and the catching of herring is the principal business of the inhabitants, and they depend upon the American vessels for their trade. If we take our herring with our own crews and our own seines, the cost to us is merely nominal, and they are deprived of one of the principal means of support. Under the Treaty of Washington I regard that I have a right to take herring in the manner which we did, and the interference of the inhabitants was a gross violation of the Treaty stipulations and privileges of that Treaty on the coast of Newfoundland. The inhabitants effectually prevented me from securing my cargo of herring, after I had actually caught them, and I was obliged to return in ballast, at a loss of at least 5,000 dollars to the owners and crew of my vessel.

I therefore claim the protection of the Government of the United States, and indemnity for the loss I have sustained.

Mr. Malcolm to Lord Tenterden.—(Received April 26.)

Sir, Downing Street, April 26, 1878.

I AM directed by the Secretary of State for the Colonies to acknowledge the receipt of your letters of the 23rd and 25th March, inclosing among other papers representations addressed respectively to Her Majesty's Minister at Washington by Mr. Evarts, and to the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs by the United States' Minister at this Court, together with depositions of American fishermen relating to the alleged destruction of seines belonging to United States' subjects in Fortune Bay, on the coast of Newfoundland.

Sir Michael Hicks Beach has forwarded copies of these papers to the Admiralty, with a suggestion that they should be communicated to the naval officer who may be instructed to inquire into this matter, in pursuance of the request made to the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, of which you were apprised by my letter of the 28th March.

Sir Michael Hicks Beach regrets extremely that, under any circumstances, recourse should have been had to violence, or to any measures which could impair the good relations existing between Her Majesty's Government and that of the United States of America; but, pending the result of the inquiries which are being made in the Colony, and which are also to be made by the Senior Naval Officer of the station, it is not possible to return a definite answer to the representations of the United States' Government.

The Marquis of Salisbury will, no doubt, direct Sir E. Thornton to apprize Mr. Evarts of the inquiries which are being made, and will inform the United States' Minister to the same effect.

I am desired to take this opportunity to transmit to you copy of a despatch addressed by Her Majesty's Minister at Washington to the Governor of Newfoundland on the 4th March, together with the reply returned to Sir E. Thornton by Sir John Glover.

Your Excellency will perceive that Mr. Evarts has directed the United States' Consuls at St. John's and other ports to furnish him with further information upon the subject, which he promises to forward to me, and which I shall have the honour to transmit to your Excellency.

Mr. Evarts also states that the President has considered it advisable to bring the subject directly to the attention of Her Majesty's Government through the United States' Minister in London.

As it may be useful that your Excellency should know what sort of evidence has probably been submitted to Mr. Evarts, I inclose a copy of the "New York Herald" of the 26th ultimo, containing affidavits purporting to have been signed and sworn to by American fishermen, as well as a leading article upon the subject.†

My Lord, Admiralty, July 11, 1878.

I AM commanded by my Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty to transmit, for the information of the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, copies of two letters from Captain Sulivan, of Her Majesty's ship "Sirius," reporting the results of his inquiries into the circumstances connected with the quarrel between the English and American fishermen in Fortune Bay, in January last.

(Signed) THOS. WOLLEY.

Inclosure 1 in No. 13.

Captain Sulivan to Vice-Admiral Sir E. Inglefield.

Sir, "Sirius," St. John's, Newfoundland, June 19, 1878.

I HAVE the honour to inform you that, in obedience to your orders, I left Halifax on Saturday the 8th instant, and proceeded to Fortune Bay, for the purpose of inquiring into the circumstances connected with the quarrel between the English and American fishermen in Long Harbour in January last, arriving off Brunet Island on the evening of Monday the 10th. I anchored there for the night, the weather being thick with fogs gathering; and on the evening of the 11th weighed and proceeded to Long Harbour, at the entrance of which the same afternoon I learnt that the "Pert" was at the head of the harbour (about 9 miles off). I therefore proceeded through the narrows and anchored in 6 fathoms about 7 miles from the entrance, and observed the "Pert" anchored about 3 miles further in, when I recalled her, and on the following day anchored in company with her 4 miles further down off Tickle Beach, where we found the disturbance of January last had taken place.

2. On this beach are two huts occupied by fishermen who witnessed the affair, and having taken their evidence, which, with other evidence subsequently taken, will be forwarded with my Report hereafter, we proceeded to Metter's Cove, where a fisherman named Tharnell and another were examined on the same subject.

3. From information given by them I proceeded to St. Jacques the same afternoon where, from Mr. Snellgrove, Sub-Collector of Customs, who was present at Tickle Beach shortly after the disturbance, and others who had witnessed the whole transaction, I obtained further important evidence, which, with my Report, will be forwarded at the earliest opportunity when complete.

4. There have been at these places several complaints made to me on various subjects by some of the witnesses, disputes relative to land property and reports of barring herring, one being that a seine had been laid for this illegal purpose, and had been so for some days, in consequence of which I directed Captain Aitchison to proceed to the spot said to be barred and ascertain the truth of the information.

5. The "Pert" rejoined at St. Jacques, and reported having found the seine as described, and taken possession of it. In other cases of complaint I was only able to take the evidence of those witnesses present at the time; but in the absence of others away fishing, I had to postpone the cases until my return from St. John's.

6. On Monday the 17th I directed the "Pert" to proceed to St. John's to coal, prior to her leaving for the East Coast, and the same afternoon I left St. Jacques in this ship for St. John's, where I arrived yesterday at 7 P.M., the mail from England for Halifax arriving a few hours afterwards, and leaving early this morning.

7. I am unable to forward more than this letter, as the Report on the subject of the American outrage is not complete; but the evidence is most complete, the witnesses corroborating each other, and goes completely to prove the Americans were entirely in the wrong, and brought the quarrel on themselves, first by illegally fishing and then by threatening them with a revolver.

8. I found on arrival the "Contest" at anchor, and the "Pert" arrived this morning to await further orders.

Inclosure 2 in No. 13.

Captain Sulivan to Rear-Admiral Sir E. Inglefield.

Sir, "Sirius," St. John's, June 21, 1878.

IN obedience to your orders dated the 8th instant, in which I am directed to inquire into the differences which arose between British and United States' fishermen in Fortune Bay in January last, I have the honour herewith to inclose the evidence obtained from several witnesses, together with my Report on the subject; and in further remarking thereon desire to call your attention to those points in the evidence which have led me to the conclusions contained in that Report.

It will be seen therein that there are four Statutes which bear on the subject, and which have been infringed by the American fishermen, viz., Act cap. 6, 1876, in Amendment of Consolidated Statutes (1872), cap. 102, the proviso of the same as regards barring.

By the same Act, 1876, Sec. 4 and Art. 18 of the Treaty of Washington—

1. With respect to the first of these, the witness, Silas Fudge, says:—"I witnessed the disturbance at Long Harbour on Sunday the 6th January last: I am certain it was the 6th; I saw the seines in the water, two of them Americans, again. He (i.e., Jacobs, an American) had his in the boat; he had shot once and discharged his seine into Farrel's, who was working for him."

John Cluett stated that he was in Long Harbour on Sunday in January last. "They (the Americans) commenced hauling herring on Sunday about mid-day; the first American seine shot was that of Jacobs; there were two more American seines shot. He (Jacobs) had just hauled herring and shot them into Farrel's seine, who was working for him; we remonstrated about breaking the law and fishing Sundays."

All the evidence of the other witnesses is corroborative of the above; and the fact is even acknowledged by the Americans in their own evidence, as appears by the statements inclosed in the correspondence on this subject. It is therefore evident that they were illegally fishing, using seines, and hauling herring in January last contrary to the above quoted statute, which prohibits the same between the 20th October and 25th April in any year.

2. That the American Captains were setting and putting out seines and hauling and taking herring on Sunday the 6th January, in direct violation of Sec. 4, cap. 6. This is proved by the evidence of all the witnesses.

John Saunders says:—"In January last—one Sunday, I don't know the date—the Americans laid out their seines, assisted by the English employed by them; the Newfoundlanders told them to take them up, as it was not legal their fishing on Sundays; there was no other reason for destroying nets but for fishing on Sundays. They went to McCauley, who had laid his seine out for barring herring; the Newfoundlanders said it should not be done on a Sabbath-day."

3. That the Americans were barring herring, that is, confining them in the seines for a considerable time, instead of forthwith hauling them. By the evidence of Silas Fudge—"He (Captain Jacobs) had shot once, and discharged his seine into Tom Farrel's, who was working for him."

John Saunders says:—"Jacobs upset his seine into Farrel's seine, who was employed by him. Farrel was barring for the Americans, and was not allowed by Jacobs to haul his seine.

Mark Bolt says:—"The Americans do not bar fish; this was the first time I ever knew them to do so."

Richard Hendriken says:—

"Samuel Jacobs would persist in hauling, and hauled once and barred them in Farrel's net. Farrel was working for them, and had been barring herring for several pays, perhaps about a fortnight, by the Americans' orders. I believe it is illegal barring herring, but we have no power to stop it; it is no good telling a magistrate; they take no notice of him."

4. That they were interfering with the rights of British fishermen in their peaceable use of that part of the coast occupied by them, &c. By all the evidence given, it occurred on Tickle Beach, Long Harbour, on which, as was seen by us, was a Newfoundland fishing settlement, the land being granted by Government, as stated by Mark Bolt, who says:—

"I have been in the neighbourhood fourteen or fifteen years. The ground I occupy, 150 feet, was granted me for life by Government, and for which I now pay a fee; there are two families on the beach; there were three in the winter; our living is dependent on our fishing off this settlement."

The above are the main points in the evidence on which my Report is founded.

In conclusion, I beg to inform you that I have forwarded a copy of the Report to his Excellency the Governor of Newfoundland, and the duplicate direct to their Lordships, in order to insure their receiving it at the same time as the Colonial Office will.

I have, &c.

Report on Differences that arose between British and United States' Fishermen in January 1878, by Captain Sulivan, of Her Majesty's ship "Sirius."

HAVING carefully weighed the evidence given on oath before me by Newfoundland fishermen present at the time, together with that inclosed in the correspondence forwarded for my perusal, I am of opinion—

1. That the Americans were using seines for catching herring on the 6th January, 1878, in direct violation of Title XXVII, chap. 102, sec. 1, of the Consolidated Statutes of Newfoundland, viz.: "No person shall haul or take herring by or in a seine or other such contrivance on or near any part of the coast of this Colony or of its dependencies, or in any of the bays, harbours, or other places therein, at any time between the 20th day of October and the 25th day of April."

2. That the American Captains were setting and putting out seines, and hauling and taking herring on Sunday the 6th January, in direct violation of sec. 4, chap. 7, of the Act passed 26th April, 1876, entitled "An Act to amend the law relating to the Coast Fisheries," viz.: "No person shall, between the hours of 12 o'clock on Saturday night and 12 o'clock on Sunday night haul or take any herring, caplin, or squid, with net seines, bunts, or any such contrivance, or set or put out any such net seine, bunt, or contrivance, for the purpose of such hauling or taking."

3. That they were barring fish in direct violation of the continuance of the same Act, Title XXVII, chap. 102, sec. 1, of the Consolidated Statutes of Newfoundland, "or at any time use a seine or other contrivance for the catching or taking of herrings except by way of shooting and forthwith hauling the same."

4. That, contrary to the terms of the Treaty of Washington, in which it is expressly provided that they do not interfere with the rights of private property, or with British fishermen, in the peaceable use of any part of the said coasts in their occupancy for the same purpose (see Article XVIII of the above-named Treaty), they were fishing illegally, interfering with the rights of British fishermen, and their peaceable use of that part of the coast then occupied by them, and of which they were actually in possession, their seines and boats, their huts, gardens, and land granted them by Government being situated thereon (see Mark Bolt's evidence).

5. It is distinctly shown in the evidence that the cause of the difference commenced with the Americans by their persisting in shooting their seines on the Sunday, as the Englishmen who worked for them would not do it on that day, not only on account of its being illegal, but of their religious regard for the Sabbath, which is always strictly kept by them; and although it must be observed that the result of this illegal fishing would have been that the Americans would have secured the whole of the herring in the bay on that day to the exclusion of the rights and fair chances of all the others during the week, yet there is no evidence to prove that this, or anything else but the fact of its being Sunday, and the law and custom among themselves regarding it, prompted them to demand that the seines should be withdrawn.

6. It is shown by the evidence of all those witnesses present at the time that the Americans were remonstrated with, and told to take their seines up prior to any serious steps being taken, and it is also distinctly proved that no violence was resorted to until after the exasperating conduct of Captain Jacobs, the American master of a schooner, concerned in this illegal fishing, who threatened them with a revolver if they prevented him or interfered with his seine.

7. It does not appear that the native fishermen were aware of the illegality of hauling a seine in the month of January; it is, therefore, to be presumed that the Americans were also ignorant of that law, although their ignorance cannot exonerate them from the breach, nor does it exonerate John Hickey, an Englishman, who is charged with the same offence, and whom it is my intention to summons before me to answer to that charge.

8. The statement of the Americans, that they were compelled to leave the harbour and leave off fishing, is entirely without foundation, which is proved by the evidence of those examined before me, among whom was Mr. Snellgrove, Collector of Customs, who was there a week after the occurrence, and communicated with them, and by the evidence of others to the effect that they remained for about a fortnight or more, "until the herrings slacked," and with respect to their loss of the haul of herring by the seine being emptied, the fish were not their lawful property, having been illegally caught.

In support of this view of the conduct of the Americans, I am not only borne out by the evidence of the Fortune Bay fishermen, who made their statements in a remarkably frank and straightforward manner, but by the self-convicting evidence of those very Americans themselves, whose depositions, given on oath, show them to have been illegally fishing, and who were liable thereby to the forfeiture of their seines, nets, &c., by chap. 102, sec. 12, of the Consolidated Statutes.

Inclosure 4 in No. 13.

Deposition of John Saunders.

THE examination of John Saunders, of Tickle Beach, Long Harbour, taken upon oath, and who saith:—

In January last there were a great number, close on 100, schooners and boats fishing for herring, both American and Newfoundlanders. The Americans were employing the English to haul their seines for them. There were some English schooners who had seines also. One Sunday, I do not know the date, John Hickey laid out a seine and was told by the English or Newfoundlanders to take it up, as it was Sunday, which he did. The Americans laid out their seines, assisted by the English employed by them. The Newfoundlanders told them to take them up, as it was not legal their fishing on that day, being Sunday; J. McDonald took his up. Jacobs upset his net into Farrel's seine, who was employed by him. Farrel was barring for the Americans, and was not allowed by Jacobs to haul his seine until the hard weather came. After Jacobs had upset his seine into Farrel's he took it up to shoot again, and threatened with the revolver anyone who interfered. Then they told McCauley to take his up, but he didn't, so the people hauled it in and tore it up.

I don't know any man concerned in the destruction of the net that I could swear to but one, John Pitman, a servant to Samuel Pardy, who was at "Jack Fountain."

There was no other reason that I know of destroying nets but for fishing on Sunday, and because they would not take them up when they were told. The Americans never hauled a seine before that day; they always employed the English to use their seines and bought fish from the English. The only reason that the Americans laid their seines out that day was because there were plenty of herrings, and no Englishman would haul them, being Sunday, excepting Hickey, who had been compelled to take his seine up.

Q. Where does Philip Farrel live?—A. In Bay-de-North, and so does Thomas Farrel.

Q. Was any obstruction or hindrance placed in the way of the Americans before or after that Sunday?—A. No.

Q. Did they remain in the harbour until the close of the season: until the herrings slacked away were any Americans compelled to leave the coast after this circumstance?—A. No; there was nothing to prevent their remaining, and they remained for some days, until the weather become soft, and there were no more herrings in the bay. Most of them left, but one American schooner remained about three weeks after that, when another lot of herrings came into the bay, and he filled up and went away the next fair wind. Jim Boy was the Captain's name.

Q. Do you know any American of the name of Dago?—A. Yes; he has part in this seine. The Americans hauled their seine on the beach immediately in front of my property.

Q. Do you know the names of the schooners?—A. No.

Q. Do you know the names of the owners of the seine?—A. Yes; Captain Dago and McCauley.

Q. Do you know anything the Americans did by way of revenge?—A. The Americans, in revenge for the destruction of the net, afterwards drifted their vessels all about the bay or river with their anchors hanging, and so hooked and destroyed many nets, about fifty or sixty I should think. The name of one of these Captains was Smith—but I dont't know the name of his vessel—and the other was Pool. We all believe that this was done in revenge. They were pretending to be at anchor, where there was about fifty fathoms of water, but were drifting all over the bay and hooking the nets; there was no weather to cause them to drift. Our small boats were anchored off the beach. We had never any difficulty with the Americans before this, but were always on good terms with them.

Deposition of Mark Bolt.

THE examination of Mark Bolt, of Tickle Beach, Long Harbour, taken upon oath, and who saith:—I am a native of Dorsetshire, England. I have been in this country twenty-one years, and have been fishing all that time. I have lived in this neighbourhood fourteen or fifteen years, and at Tickle Beach since last fall. The ground I occupy (150 feet) was granted me for life by Government, and for which I have to pay a fee. There are two families on the beach; there were three in the winter. Our living is dependent on our fishing off this Settlement. If these large American seines are allowed to be hauled, it forces me away from the place.

One Sunday in January last, John Hickey, Newfoundlander, came first, and hove his seine out. Five Newfoundlanders came and told him to take it up, and he did not; then others came and insisted upon it; then he took it up. If he had then refused to take it up it would have been torn up.

Then Jacobs, an American, came and laid his seine out and hauled about 100 barrels of herring in the big American seine, and capsized into Tom Farrel's seine—a Newfoundland fisherman employed by Jacobs and fishing for him.

Philip Farrel was also fishing for the Americans, being master of McCauley's seine. The Newfoundlanders then capsized Tom Farrel's seine of fish, who was only fishing for the Americans. After this Jim Macdonald, another American, threw out his seine. Then the people went and told Macdonald that he was not allowed to fish on Sundays, and he must take his seine up, and he took up his seine and carried it on board his vessel. Jacobs would not allow his seine to be touched, but drew a revolver. They then went to McCauley, an American, who had laid his seine out for barring herring; this American also employed a Newfoundlander to lay his seine out. The Newfoundlanders said it should not be done on a Sabbath-day, and they resolved to tear up all the seines they could get hold of. They managed to seize McCauley's and tore it up. They would have torn up any they could have got at if laid out, whether English or American, because it was Sunday. The Americans do not bar fish. This was the first time I ever knew them to do so; they usually buy the fish from the Newfoundlanders, and also barter flour and pork for them, and I have never known anything to complain of against them previous to this.

Q. Did the American schooners continue to fish after the destruction of McCauley's seine?—A. Yes.

They (the Americans) continued to fish, and left about the usual time, the 10th March. I do not know any reason for the conduct towards the Americans except that they were fishing on Sunday. I do not know what become of the nets that were torn up; it was left on the beach for some days and then taken away. I do not know who took it away; the Americans, perhaps, but I don't know.

The Americans were often set afterwards, but not on Sunday; the Americans did not leave off catching herring after this on other days. The English did not prevent the Americans hauling their seines, but the Americans usually employed the English to haul them, as their crews were not sufficient in number and are not acquainted with the work. The American crews are employed salting and freezing the fish, while the English employed by them with the American seines are catching them. The seine torn up was being worked by an Englishman for McCauley, the American, namely, Philip Farrel.

Jacobs' seine was in the water a night and a day. I was not aware that it was illegal to haul or catch herring by or in a seine at that time of the year, nor that barring is prohibited at all seasons, nor that the seine must be shot and forthwith hauled, but have heard some reports to that effect.

The nearest magistrate is at St. Jacques, about 25 or 30 miles from this, and there is no means of communicating with him excepting by a sailing boat.

The seine that was destroyed belonged to men called Dago and McCauley, who I believe were each of them Captains of schooners, but the names of the vessels I do not know.

Deposition of Richard Hendriken.

THE examination of Richard Hendriken, of Hope Cove, Long Harbour, taken upon oath, and who saith :—

I have been nine years in Long Harbour. I was here in January last, when the American seine was destroyed. It was destroyed on account of barring herring on Sunday. I was watching their proceedings from the point opposite; they laid their seine out and went to haul it in because the English would not haul it in on Sunday, and the bay was full of fish. The fish would have remained. The Americans generally employ some Englishmen to work with their own crew; they don't generally lay out their own seines. Captain Dago and Samuel Jacobs would persist in hauling, and hauled once and barred them in Farrel's net. Farrel was working for him, and had been barring herrings for several days, perhaps about a fortnight, by the Americans' orders. I believe it is illegal to bar herrings; it destroys the fish, but we have no power to stop it. It is no good telling a magistrate; the Americans take no notice of them. The nearest magistrate to this place is at Harbour Briton, twenty-five or thirty miles off. The only thing to let people know what is right and what is wrong is to have a notice board in each harbour, and some heavy fine imposed on law-breakers.

James Tamel is harbour-master.

I don't know if he is a special constable or not; but Mr. Enburn told me he was to see the Yankees did not heave their ballast over, and that their measures were correct, but they would not listen to him. They hove their ballast overboard, and had tubs 22 inches in depth instead of 16 inches; in these tubs they measured the fish they bought from the Newfoundlanders, and they would not alter them. The fish are sold to the Americans by the barrel; for 100 barrels it is usual to pay for 90, which is considered fair, but a flour barrel cut down to 16 inches in depth is the proper measure; they only cut them to 22 inches or more, and insist on having them filled. The vessels from St. John's and Halifax always take the proper size tubs, but the Americans constantly overreach us, and choose the most ignorant to deal with, or those who are not so sharp as themselves. They generally otherwise behave well, and we have never had any quarrel with them before, but have always been on good terms. If the natives did not see the laws carried out themselves there might as well be no laws, for there is often no one else to enforce it. It is the only way I know, and is pretty well understood by both foreigners and natives.

Deposition of Ambrose Pope.

THE examination of Ambrose Pope, of Stone Cove, Long Harbour, taken upon oath, and who saith :—I was at Tickle Beach on a Sunday in January last. I don't know the date. I saw the Newfoundlanders hauling a seine and leave it on the beach; it was torn in hauling it on shore. It was evening when I saw the seine hauled on the beach, and it was laying there when I left the beach.

I don't know if any was carried away. I don't know anything more about it. The Americans we thought had no right to haul their seines on Sunday.

Deposition of James Tharnell.

THE examination of James Tharnell, of Anderson's Cove, Long Harbour, taken upon oath, and who saith :—I am a special constable for this neighbourhood. I did not see anything of the alleged outrage last January, but I heard something about it. I believe some of the men named Pope were on the beach, but which I do not know.

Q. Have you formed any opinion as constable as to the cause of the dispute ?—A. Mr. Snellgrove, of the Customs, and myself, from what we were informed of the circumstances, were of opinion that the Americans were acting illegally in shooting their seines, but notwithstanding that nothing would have been said to them for that had it not been on the Sabbath day. The men forbid them hauling seines on the Sabbath day, and told them to take them up or they would take them up for them, and what annoyed them so much was that the Americans drew their revolvers; probably if it had not been for the threat of the revolvers, the seines would only have been taken up and not torn. They asked him three times to take them up before they did so themselves.

The people were not aware that it was illegal to set the seines that time of the year, and were only prompted to their act by the fact that it was Sunday. We all consider it to be the greatest loss to us for the Americans to bring those large seines to catch herring. The seines will hold 2,000 or 3,000 barrels of herring, and, if the soft weather continues, they are obliged to keep them in the seines for, sometimes, two or three weeks, until the frost comes, and by this means they deprive the poor fishermen of the bay of their chance of catching any with their small nets, and then, when they have secured a sufficient quantity of their own, they refuse to buy of the natives.

If the Americans had been allowed to secure all the herrings in the bay for themselves, which they could have done that day, they would have filled all their vessels, and the neighbouring fishermen would have lost all chance on the following week-days. The people believed that they (the Americans) were acting illegally in thus robbing them of their fish. If the natives had not defended themselves by enforcing the law, there was no one else to do it. I was sworn in as a special constable by Mr. Herbert, the magistrate of Harbour Briton, last October.

On the arrival of the Americans I showed my authority, signed by Mr. Herbert, and they laughed at it, and said it had no stamp, and they didn't, therefore, recognize it.

I told them the lawful size of a tub—sixteen gallons—and they said they required a brand on it. I have no means of branding tubs; there is no means to brand on the coast, and it is not the custom. I don't know if it is the custom at St. John's to brand them. I have cautioned the Americans about throwing ballast out inside Hoodey's Island, where it is very shallow; but they have continually done so notwithstanding up to this. There are now several shallow places there and in the cove, where the Americans have been in the habit of throwing out their ballast, and small vessels now, of twenty-eight to thirty tons, repeatedly ground on this ballast there thrown out by the Americans. I believe there was less thrown out last winter after I spoke to them about it; but I have no power, moral or otherwise, to enforce any Rules, and they don't seem to care much about me.

Deposition of George Snellgrove.

THE examination of George Snellgrove of St. Jacques, Fortune Bay, taken upon oath, and who saith:—I am sub-collector of Customs for the district of Fortune Bay. I went to Long Harbour on the 8th January, two days after the dispute between the Americans and Newfoundland fishermen had taken place.

Captains Jacobs and Dago informed me that an American seine had been taken up by the Newfoundland fishermen on the Sunday previous and destroyed; that the seine belonged to Dago and McCauley, and that they had other seines out, but they had taken them up when they found that the other was destroyed. One of these Captains said that the fishermen had threatened to take up the seine if they didn't themselves. Captain Jacobs showed me a revolver, and said that he had threatened them with it. I remonstrated with him for doing so, when he replied that I couldn't suppose that he was really going to use it; that he only did it to frighten them; he had taken care there were no charges in it. I said to him, "Do you suppose that you would have got off that beach alive if you had used it;" and he said he never intended to use it.

Captain Warren told me that on the fishermen coming to haul in the seine that Captain Dago hailed them to say that they would take the seine in themselves if they waited; and that he (Warren) said to Dago, "It is too late now; you ought to have done it when they told you first; they are too excited now."

I then communicated with the natives of the place, who related the circumstances, and gave their reasons that the Americans were fishing illegally, and would have secured the whole of the fish which they considered part of their property; and that they would have been distressed for the winter. They told me that they had at first told them to take up their seines, and they refused; that Captain Jacobs had threatened them with a revolver, but, notwithstanding this, they had taken up one and destroyed it.

I saw Captain Jacobs several times afterwards, and in the course of conversation with him I said, if I had been there you would not have been allowed to shoot your seine. "What!" he said, "could you prevent me?" I said "Yes;" I should have seen the law carried out and taken your seine and boat, which you forfeited for breaking the law, and I told him I would take the fine as well of 200 dollars, at which he said--"Do you think I care about paying the fine; I could pay the fine," by which I understood him to mean that the fine was not worth considering, as the quantity of fish would have more than paid for it.

Q. Was there anyone in Long Harbour on the Sunday referred to who could have enforced the law, and protected the interests of the fishermen?—A. No.

Q. Is it not illegal shooting seines at all at that time of the year?—A. There is an Act to that effect, but it has never been carried out in Fortune Bay, nor are the natives aware of its illegality at that time of the year, nor would they have molested the Americans had it not been Sunday, and which they knew it to be not only the law but the infallible custom to desist from fishing on that day.

Q. Has there ever been, to your knowledge before, quarrelsome disputes or ill-feeling between the Americans and native fishermen?—A. No, never; always on the best terms.

Q. How long did you remain in Long Harbour?—A. I remained till the 12th January.

Q. Did you observe during your stay in Long Harbour whether the three American Captains remained and continued to fish or not?—A. I did, and I know that they continued to fish; they were not molested as far as I know.

Q. Was there anything to cause them to leave the harbour, or to cease fishing?—

A. No, and they had not left it when I left; there were no further disputes to my knowledge afterwards.

Deposition of Silas Fudge.

THE examination of Silas Fudge, of Bellaram, Fortune Bay, taken upon oath, and who saith:—

I am mate of my father's schooner. I witnessed the disturbance at Long Harbour on Sunday the 6th January last. I am certain that it was on the 6th January it happened.

I saw the seines in the water; two of them American and one English. We told them to take them up.

John Hickey, the Englishman, took his up; McCauley, the American, who owned the other, refused to take his up. There was another seine, which I did not see, in the water, belonging to Captain Jacobs. He had his in the boat at the time. He had shot once and discharged his seine into Thomas Farrel's, who was working for him, and was going to shoot his seine out again. I saw it in the boat ready for shooting when the crowd came over. The first spoke to McDonald, and asked him if he would take his seine up, and he said, "Yes, if I am forced;" and they then went to Hickey, and told him to take his up, and he took it up; then they went to McCauley and asked him to take his up, and he said he would not. They then told him that if he didn't they would take it up for him. They then went to Jacobs, and told him they would let go the herring out of the seine of Tom Farrel, who was an Englishman. Jacobs then drew a revolver, and threatened to shoot any man who touched his property. The crowd were very excited. I saw them haul McCauley's seine in, and tear it up. That was the end of the row that day. Farrel had, during the previous week, secured herring in the American seine, and then had placed his own round them, and taken up the American's. This was done before Sunday. It was in this seine of Farrel's that Jacobs emptied his own seine.

Q. You knew that the American fish were in the Englishman's seine; why was Farrel's seine allowed to remain?—A. Because he had not shot it on the Sunday, but on the week-day.

Q. Are you aware that it was illegal to use seines to catch herrings that time of the year?—A. No; I don't know.

Q. Did you believe it to be lawful to use seines for herring that time of the year?—A. Yes, I thought so, as far as I could understand. I suppose the Americans thought, with reference to the destruction of the seine, that we did it in envy of them, but it wasn't; but it was from regard to the Sabbath, on which day we never fish.

Q. How far from the beach were the American seines shot?—A. Close to the beach; the hauling lines were on the beach.

The Americans remained in the bay after the occurrence for several days; they were never molested or interfered with afterwards; they continued to fish until they left the harbour; they were not compelled to leave the harbour, but I believe they were unsuccessful on account of the bad weather and for want of frost.

Deposition of John Cluett.

THE examination of John Cluett, of Belloram, Fortune Bay, taken upon oath, and who saith:—

I was in Long Harbour one Sunday in January last.

Q. Did you see anything of the quarrel between the Americans and other fishermen?—A. I did.

Q. Tell me what you know of it.—A. They commenced hauling herrings on Sunday, about mid-day. The first American seine shot was Captain Jacob's; there were two more American seines shot. There was an Englishman working for the Americans who had a seine moored there for several days, but it was not shot or attempted to be hauled on the Sunday.

The first seine we came to was Captain McDonald's; they asked him if he was going to take his seine up. He said, "If we are forced to take it up we will;" and we told him if he didn't take it up we would take it up for him.

The next we came to was a man belonging to Fortune Bay, called John Hickey, an Englishman, and we told him to take up the seine, and he said he would take it up and he did. The next we came to was Peter McCauley, and we told him the same as the others, and he refused to take it up. Then we went on to Captain Jacobs, and when we got to him he was in his skiff, a little off the shore: he had just hauled herring and shot them into Farrel's seine, who was working for him; they remonstrated about breaking the law and fishing on Sunday; there was an altercation between us; he said he would defend his seine if they touched it in a threatening way. I don't know what he said: there was a great crowd, and he was in an awful rage, and I heard that he drew a revolver, but I didn't see it; he then took his seine on board; then all the seines were taken up but Farrel's and McCauley's. Farrel's seine was not touched because it was not laid on that day, and they therefore let it alone, although Jacobs' fish were in it; but McCauley's seine was taken up and destroyed, and that is all I know.

Q. Did the American Captain remain in the harbour after?—A. Yes; I think about a fortnight, but perhaps more. They continued to fish and haul herring on week-days but not on Sunday again.

Q. Were they ever molested or interfered with in any way subsequently or not?—A. Not to my knowledge; they remained there as long as they chose, and there was never any more dispute. I don't know that it is illegal to haul seines that time of the year. I have heard of the law, but I have never seen it carried out; it had nothing to do with this dispute. The only cause of it was on account of its being Sabbath. I never saw herrings hauled on a Sunday before, either by American or Englishman.

The Americans, by hauling herring that day when the Englishmen could not, were robbing them of their lawful and just chance of securing their share in them, and, further, had they secured all they had barred they could have, I believe, filled every vessel of theirs in the bay. They would have probably frightened the rest away, and it would have been useless for the English to stay, for the little left for them to take they could not have sold.

The Americans would have a better chance than the English any day on account of the size of their nets, but the English would have had their fair chance the next day, and they thought they were justified, in the absence of any proper authority or power to enforce the law, to defend their rights themselves. There is no power or authority to enforce the law on all parts of the coast, and none nearer to Long Harbour than about 30 or 40 miles.

If there was not a good feeling and mutual understanding between all fishermen, whether foreigners or Englishmen, there would be no law carried out or upheld at all, but there was always prior to this a very good feeling and a mutual understanding between the Americans and ourselves, and I don't know anything to prevent the same in future. After the destruction of McCauley's seine some of the American schooners, one of which was Peter Smith's, drifted about the harbour among the fishermen's nets when blowing hard, with their anchors hanging to their bows, and destroyed several nets. I don't know if this was done out of revenge or not. I don't think it was done purposely.

WITH reference to the letter from this Department of the 26th April and to previous correspondence, respecting the interference with United States' fishermen by fishermen of Newfoundland which took place in January last at Long Harbour, Fortune Bay, I am directed by the Secretary of State for the Colonies to transmit to you, to be laid before the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, a copy of a further despatch from the Governor of Newfoundland on the subject, inclosing a Report from Captain Sulivan, R.N., the Senior Naval Officer on that station, of the result of his inquiry into the matter, together with copies of the depositions on which the Report is founded.

I am also to inclose copies of two letters from Captain Sulivan to the Commander-in-chief on the North American station in explanation of the Report, which have been communicated to this Department by the Admiralty. Sir Michael Hicks Beach desires me to suggest, for the consideration of the Marquis of Salisbury, that such of the papers in the case as his Lordship may think proper should now be communicated to the United States' Minister, in answer to the representation which he has made to Her Majesty's Government on the subject, and that it should be pointed out to him that on the occasion referred to the United States' fishermen would appear to have been committing three distinct breaches of the laws of the Colony, but that, nevertheless, no violence was used by the fishermen of Newfoundland, except in the case of one vessel, whose master refused to comply with the request which was made to him that he would act in accordance with the law of the Colony, which prohibits fishing on Sunday.

HER Majesty's Government have had under their consideration your letter of the 19th March, making representations relative to certain disturbances which occurred in January last between British and United States' fishermen at Fortune Bay on the coast of Newfoundland, and requesting, in accordance with the instructions of your Government, that an investigation might be made into the alleged facts of the case; and I have now the honour to transmit to you, for your information and for communication to your Government, the accompanying copy of a Report drawn up by Captain Sulivan, R.N., of Her Majesty's ship "Sirius," the officer entrusted with the duty of instituting an inquiry into the matter on the spot.*

You will perceive that the Report in question appears to demonstrate conclusively that the United States' fishermen on this occasion had committed three distinct breaches of the law, and that no violence was used by the Newfoundland fishermen except in the case of one vessel, whose master refused to comply with the request which was made to him, that he should desist from fishing on Sunday in violation of the law of the Colony and of the local custom, and who threatened the Newfoundland fishermen with a revolver, as detailed in paragraphs 5 and 6 of Captain Sulivan's Report.

Mr. Evarts to Mr. Welsh.—(Communicated to the Marquis of Salisbury by Mr. Welsh, October 12.)

Sir, Department of State, Washington, September 28, 1878.

I RECEIVED in due course your despatch of the 24th August ultimo, inclosing Lord Salisbury's reply of the British Government to the representations that had been made to it as early as March last by you, under instructions from the Department.

I must understand Lord Salisbury's note accompanying the copy of Captain Sulivan's Report, which he communicates to this Government, as adopting that naval officer's conclusions of fact respecting the violent injuries which our fishing fleet suffered at the hands of the Newfoundland fishing population at Fortune Bay in January of this year, as the answer which Her Majesty's Government makes to the representations laid before it on our part, verified by the sworn statements of numerous and respectable witnesses.

His Lordship has not placed in our possession the proofs or depositions which form the basis of Captain Sulivan's conclusions of fact, and I am unable, therefore, to say whether, upon their consideration, the view which this Government takes of these transactions, upon the sworn statements of our own respectable citizens, would be at all modified. In the absence of these means of correcting any mistakes or false impressions which our informants may have fallen into in their narrative of the facts, it is impossible to accept Captain Sulivan's judgment upon undisclosed evidence as possessing judicial weight.

You will, therefore, lay before Her Majesty's Government the desire which this Government feels to be able to give due weight to this opposing evidence, before insisting upon the very grave view of these injuries which, at present, its unquestionable duty to the interests which have suffered them, and its confidence in the competency and sobriety of the proofs in our possession, compels this Government to take. Should Her Majesty's Government place a copy of the evidence upon which Captain Sulivan bases his Report in your hands, you will lose no time in transmitting it for consideration. I regret that any further delay should thus intervene to prevent an immediate consideration of the facts in the matter by the two Governments in the presence of the same evidence of those facts for their scrutiny and judgment.

But, a careful attention to Lord Salisbury's note discovers what must be regarded as an expression of his views, at least of the authority of Provincial legislation and administrative jurisdiction over our fishermen within the three-mile line, and of the restrictive limitations upon their rights in these fishing-grounds under the Treaty of Washington. Upon any aspect of the evidence, on one side and the other, as qualifying the violent acts from which our fishing fleet has suffered at the hands of the Newfoundland coast fishermen, the views thus intimated seem to this Government wholly inadmissable, and do not permit the least delay, on our part, in frankly stating the grounds of our exception to them.

The Report of Captain Sulivan presents, as a justificatory support of the action of the Newfoundland shore fishermen in breaking up the operations of our fishing fleet inside the three-mile line, at the times covered by these transactions, the violation of certain municipal legislation of the Newfoundland Government which, it is alleged, our fishermen were in the act of committing when the violent interruption of their industry occurred.

I do not stop to point out the serious distinction between the official and judicial execution of any such laws and the orderly enforcement of their penalties after solemn trial of the right, and the rage and predominant force of a volunteer multitude driving off our peaceful occupants of these fishing grounds pursuing their industry under a claim of right secured to them by Treaty. I reserve this matter for a complete examination when the conflicting proofs are in my possession. I shall assume, for my present purpose, that the manner of exerting this supposed provincial authority was official, judicial, and unexceptionable.

I will state these justifications for the disturbance of our fishing fleet in Captain Sulivan's own language, that I may not even inadvertently impute to Lord Salisbury's apparent adoption of them any greater significance than their very language fairly imports.

Captain Sulivan assigns the following violations of law by our fishermen as the grounds of rightful interference with them on the occasion in question:—

"1. That the Americans were using seines for catching herring on the 6th January, 1878, in direct violation of title xxvii, chap. 102, sect. 1 of the Consolidated Statutes of Newfoundland, viz., 'No person shall haul or take herring by or in a seine, or other such contrivance, on or near any part of the coast of this Colony or of its dependencies, or in any of the bays, harbours, or other places therein, at any time between the 20th day of October and the 25th day of April.'

"2. That the American captains were setting and putting out seines, and hauling and taking herring, on Sunday, the 6th day of January, in direct violation of sect. 4, chap. vii of the Act passed 26th April, 1876, entitled 'An Act to amend the Law relating to the Coast Fisheries,' viz., 'No person shall, between the hours of 12 o'clock on Saturday night and 12 o'clock on Sunday night, haul or take any herring, caplin, or squid with net seines, bunts, or any such contrivances for the purpose of such hauling or taking.'

"3. That they were barring fish, in direct violation of the continuance of the same Act—title xxvii, chap. 102, sect. 1 of the Consolidated Statutes of Newfoundland—'or at any time use a seine or other contrivance for the catching or taking of herrings, except by way of shooting and forthwith hauling the same.'

"4. That, contrary to the terms of the Treaty of Washington, in which it is expressly provided that they do not interfere with the rights of private property, or with British fishermen in the peaceable use of any part of the said coasts in their occupancy for the same purpose (see Article XVIII of the above-named Treaty), they were fishing illegally, interfering with the rights of British fishermen and their peaceable use of that part of the coast then occupied by them, and of which they were actually in possession, their seines and boats, their huts, gardens, and land granted by Government, being situated thereon."

The facts which enter into the offences imputed under the first, second, and third heads of Captain Sulivan's statement, and such offences thus made out, would seem to be the only warrant for his conclusion under his fourth head, that the United States' fishermen have exceeded their Treaty right, and, in their actua prosecution of their fishing, were, when interrupted by the force complained of, interfering with the rights of private property, or with British fishermen in the peaceable use of that part of the coast then being in their occupancy for the same purpose, contrary to the proviso of Article XVIII of the Treaty of Washington.

It is no part of my present purpose to point out that this alleged infraction o. the reserved rights of the local fishermen does not justify the methods of correction or redress used to drive off our fishermen and break up their prosecution of the fishing. This may be reserved also for discussion when both Governments have a fuller knowledge of the actual circumstances of the transaction.

In transmitting to you a copy of Captain Sulivan's Report, Lord Salisbury says: "You will perceive that the Report in question appears to demonstrate conclusively that the United States' fishermen on this occasion had committed three distinct breaches of the law, &c."

In this observation of Lord Salisbury this Government cannot fail to see a necessary implication that Her Majesty's Government concedes that in the prosecution of the right of fishing accorded to the United States by Article XVIII of the Treaty, our fishermen are subject to the local regulations which govern the coast population of Newfoundland in their prosecution of their fishing industry, whatever those regulations may be, and whether enacted before or since the Treaty of Washington.

The three particulars in which our fishermen are supposed to be constrained by actual legislation of the province cover in principle every degree of regulation of our fishing industry within the three-mile line which can well be conceived. But they are in themselves so important and so serious a limitation of the right secured by the Treaty as practically to exclude our fishermen from any profitable pursuit of the right, which, I need not add, is equivalent to annulling or cancelling, by the Provincial Government, of the privilege accorded by the Treaty with the British Government.

If our fishing fleet is subject to the Sunday laws of Newfoundland, made for the coast population; if it is excluded from the fishing-grounds for half the year, from October to April; if our "seines and other contrivances" for catching fish are subject to the regulation of the Legislature of Newfoundland, it is not easy to see what firm or valuable measures for the privilege of Article XVIII as conceded to the United States, this Government can promise to its citizens under the guarantee of the Treaty.

It would not, under any circumstances, be admissible for one Government to subject the persons, the property, and the interests of its fishermen to the unregulated regulations of another Government, upon the suggestion that such authority will not be oppressively or capriciously exercised, nor would any Government accept as an adequate guarantee of the proper exercise of such authority over its citizens by a foreign Government, that presumptively regulations would be uniform in their operation upon the subjects of both Governments in similar case. If there are to be regulations of a common enjoyment, they must be authenticated by a common or a joint authority.

But, most manifestly, the subject of the regulation of the enjoyment of the shore fishery by the resident Provincial population, and of the inshore fishery by our fleet of fishing-cruizers, does not tolerate the control of so divergent and competing interests by the domestic legislation of the Province. Protecting and nursing the domestic interest at the expense of the foreign interest, on the ordinary motives of human conduct, necessarily shape and animate the local legislation. The evidence before the Halifax Commission makes it obvious that, to exclude our fishermen from catching bait, and thus compel them to go without bait, or buy bait at the will and price of the Provincial fishermen, is the interest of the local fishermen, and will be the guide and motive of such domestic legislation as is now brought to the notice of this Government.

You will, therefore, say to Lord Salisbury that this Government cannot but express its entire dissent from the view of the subject that his Lordship's note seems to indicate. This Government conceives that the fishery rights of the United States, conceded by the Treaty of Washington, are to be exercised wholly free from the restraints and regulations of the Statutes of Newfoundland, now set up as authority over our fishermen, and from any other regulations of fishing now in force or that may hereafter be enacted by that Government.

It may be said that a just participation in this common fishery by the two parties entitled thereto, may, in the common interest of preserving the fishery and preventing conflicts between the fishermen, require regulation by some competent authority. This may be conceded. But should such occasion present itself to the common appreciation of the two Governments, it need not be said that such competent authority can only be found in a Joint Convention, that shall receive the approval of Her Majesty's Government and our own. Until this arrangement shall be consummated, this Government must regard the pretension that the legislation of Newfoundland can regulate our fishermen's enjoyment of the Treaty right as striking at the Treaty itself. It asserts an authority on one side, and a submission on the other, which has not been proposed to us by Her Majesty's Government, and has not been accepted by this Government. I cannot doubt that Lord Salisbury will agree that the insertion of any such element in the Treaty of Washington would never have been accepted by this Government, if it could reasonably be thought possible that it could have been proposed by Her Majesty's Government. The insertion of any such proposition by construction now is equally at variance with the views of this Government.

The representations made to this Government by the interests of our citizens affected, leave no room to doubt that this assertion of authority is as serious and extensive in practical relations as it is in principle. The rude application made to the twenty vessels in Fortune Bay of this asserted authority, in January last, drove them from the profitable prosecution of their projected cruizes. By the same reason the entire inshore fishery is held by us upon the same tenure of dependence upon the Parliament of the Dominion or the Legislatures of the several Provinces.

I cannot but regret that this vital question has presented itself so unexpectedly to this Government, and at a date so near the period at which this Government, upon a comparison of views with Her Majesty's Government, is to pass upon the conformity of the proceedings of the Halifax Commission with the requirements of the Treaty of Washington. The present question is wholly aside from the considerations bearing upon that subject, and which furnishes the topic of my recent despatch.

In the opinion of this Government it is essential that we should at once invite the attention of Lord Salisbury to the question of Provincial control over the fishermen of the United States, in their prosecution of the privilege secured to them by the Treaty. So grave a question, in its bearing upon the obligations of this Government under the Treaty, makes it necessary that the President should ask from Her Majesty's Government a frank avowal or disavowal of the paramount authority of Provincial legislation to regulate the enjoyment by our people of the inshore fishery, which seems to be intimated, if not asserted, in Lord Salisbury's note.

Before the receipt of a reply from Her Majesty's Government it would be premature to consider what should be the course of this Government should this limitation upon the Treaty privileges of the United States be insisted upon by the British Government as their construction of the Treaty.

You will communicate this despatch to Lord Salisbury by reading the same to him, and leaving with him a copy.

I am, &c.

No. 20.

The Marquis of Salisbury to Mr. Welsh.

Sir, Foreign Office, November 7, 1878.

HER Majesty's Government have had under their consideration the despatch from Mr. Evarts, dated the 28th September, and communicated to me on the 12th ultimo, respecting the complaints made by the Government of the United States of the injuries sustained by American fishermen in Fortune Bay in January last.

This despatch is in reply to my letter of the 23rd August, in which I forwarded a copy of the Report furnished by Captain Sulivan, of Her Majesty's ship "Sirius," on the occurrences in question. Mr. Evarts now remarks that the United States' Government have not been put in possession of the depositions which form the basis of that Report, and are unable, therefore, to say whether, upon their consideration, the view which the Government of the United States takes of these transactions upon the sworn statements of their own citizens would be at all modified.

Her Majesty's Government have not had the opportunity of considering the statements in question; but the depositions which accompanied Captain Sulivan's Report, and which I now have the honour to forward,* appeared to them, in the absence of other testimony, to be conclusive as regards the facts of the case.

* Inclosures 2 to 11 in No. 13.

Apart, however, from the facts, in respect to which there appears to be a material divergence between the evidence collected by the United States' Government and that collected by the Colonial authorities, Mr. Evarts takes exception to my letter of the 23rd on the ground of my statement that the United States' fishermen concerned have been guilty of breaches of the law. From this he infers an opinion on my part that it is competent for a British authority to pass laws, in supersession of the Treaty, binding American fishermen within the three-mile limit. In pointing out that the American fishermen had broken the law within the territorial limits of Her Majesty's dominions, I had no intention of inferentially laying down any principles of international law; and no advantage would, I think, be gained by doing so to a greater extent than the facts in question absolutely require.

I hardly believe, however, that Mr. Evarts would in discussion adhere to the broad doctrine which some portions of his language would appear to convey, that no British authority has a right to pass any kind of laws binding Americans who are fishing in British waters; for if that contention be just, the same disability applies à fortiori to any other Power, and the waters must be delivered over to anarchy. On the other hand, Her Majesty's Government will readily admit—what is, indeed, self-evident—that British sovereignty, as regards those waters, is limited in its scope by the engagements of the Treaty of Washington, which cannot be modified or affected by any municipal legislation. I cannot anticipate that with regard to these principles any difference will be found to exist between the views of the two Governments.

If, however, it be admitted that the Newfoundland Legislature have the right of binding Americans who fish within their waters by any laws which do not contravene existing Treaties, it must further be conceded that the duty of determining the existence of any such contravention must be undertaken by the Governments, and cannot be remitted to the discretion of each individual fisherman. For such a discretion, if exercised on one side can hardly be refused on the other. If any American fisherman may violently break a law which he believes to be contrary to Treaty, a Newfoundland fisherman may violently maintain it if he believes it to be in accordance with Treaty. As the points in issue are frequently subtle, and require considerable legal knowledge, nothing but confusion and disorder could result from such a mode of deciding the interpretation of the Treaty.

Her Majesty's Government prefer the view that the law enacted by the Legislature of the country, whatever it may be, ought to be obeyed by natives and foreigners alike who are sojourning within the territorial limits of its jurisdiction; but that if a law has inadvertently been passed which is in any degree or respect at variance with rights conferred on a foreign Power by Treaty, the correction of the mistake so committed, at the earliest period after its existence shall have been ascertained and recognized, is a matter of international obligation.

It is not explicitly stated in Mr. Evart's despatch that he considers any recent Acts of the Colonial Legislature to be inconsistent with the rights acquired by the United States under the Treaty of Washington. But if that is the case, Her Majesty's Government will, in a friendly spirit, consider any representations he may think it right to make upon the subject, with the hope of coming to a satisfactory understanding.

Correspondence respecting the Award of the Halifax Fisheries Commission.

No. 1.

Sir, Department of State, Washington, September 27, 1878.

I AM directed by the President to present to the attention of Her Majesty's Government the sentiments of this Government respecting the result of the deliberations of the Commission, lately sitting at Halifax, for the determination of the question submitted to it under the Articles of the Treaty of Washington relating to the fisheries. It is the purpose of the present communication to put you fully in possession of these sentiments that you may impart them to Lord Salisbury with the same frankness that they are disclosed to yourself.

It is a matter of sincere regret to the President that the actual result of the deliberations of this Commission has been such as to require from this Government the course of observation upon the same, which it becomes my duty to submit to the consideration of Her Majesty's Government. For reasons of paramount importance to the interests of the two countries, in their future treatment of the subject of the fisheries, a candid statement of the views of this Government, as to the position in which the action of the Commission has placed those interests, is due alike to the British Government and ourselves. Nor are these views expressive only of the sentiments of the Executive Department of the Government. Upon the papers being laid before Congress for its necessary action, upon the question of making an appropriation from the Treasury to meet what should prove to be the proper obligations of the Government under the Treaty, Congress, with great unanimity, concurred with the Executive in the opinion that the attention of the British Government should be invited to the subject of the Award, as looked upon by this Government, in advance of the final action of the Executive in reference to its payment. Accordingly the sum appropriated by Congress to meet the Award is, by the "Appropriation Act" "placed under the direction of the President of the United States with which to pay the Government of Her Britannic Majesty the amount awarded by the Fisheries Commission, lately assembled at Halifax, in pursuance of the Treaty of Washington, if, after correspondence with the British Government on the subject of the conformity of the Award to the requirements of the Treaty, and to the terms of the question thereby submitted to the Commission, the President shall deem it his duty to make the payment without further communication with Congress."

The occasion for this correspondence with the British Government arises from the great importance of reaching a complete and explicit understanding between the two Governments, as to the conformity of the Award made by the Commission to the terms of the Treaty of Washington by which its authority and jurisdiction are communicated and defined. If the Award in respect to the fisheries had relation only to the sum of the payment involved, considerable as that is, the Government might prefer to waive any discussion which could affect no continuing and permanent interests of the two countries, and would, therefore, comprehend only such considerations as would touch the principles or elements of computation applied by the Commission in arriving at a pecuniary amount, the payment of which carried no consequences. It is true, even in such case, the indisputable right of the parties to an arbitration public or private, to examine an award in respect of its covering only the very matter submitted, should not be too readily relinquished from mere repugnance to question, a result which, at least, if undisturbed, serves the good purpose of closing the controversy. If the benevolent method of arbitration between nations is to commend itself as a discreet and practical disposition of international disputes, it must be by a due maintenance of the safety and integrity of the transaction in the essential point of the Award, observing the limits of the submission.

But this Government is not at liberty to treat the Fisheries Award as of this limited interest and operation in the relations of the two countries to the important, permanent, and difficult contention on the subject of the Fisheries, which for sixty years has at intervals pressed itself upon the attention of the two Governments, and disquieted their people. The temporary arrangement of the Fisheries by the Treaty of Washington is terminable, at the pleasure of either party, in less than seven years from now. The Fisheries Award, upon such termination of the Treaty arrangements, will have exhausted its force as compensation for a supposed equivalent and terminated privilege. If the Government by silent payment of the Award should seem to have recognized the principles upon which it proceeds, as they may then be assumed or asserted by Her Majesty's Government, it will at once have prejudiced its own rights, when it shall become necessary to insist upon them, and seem to have concealed or dissembled its objections to the Award when Great Britain was entitled to an immediate and open avowal of them.

Upon these considerations the President and Congress have required that the sentiments of this Government respecting the Fisheries Award should be set before Her Majesty's Government, to the end that a full interchange of views, in a friendly spirit, between the two Governments, should leave no uncertainty as to the degree of concurrence or of difference in their respective estimates of this transaction.

It is greatly to be regretted that the Protocols of the Commission make no record of the steps by which the majority reached the conclusion which they announced as the Award of the Commission, and the dissenting Commissioner, on the other hand, arrived at so widely different a result. Had the record disclosed the methods of reasoning on the processes of calculation respecting either of the privileges which, under the submission of the Treaty, were to be measured and compared, upon which these divergent results of their deliberations were reached, the task of exposing the manner and extent in which, in the opinion of the Government, the Award transcends, the submission of the Treaty would be much simpler. Indeed, in the view which this Government takes of the narrow and well-defined question submitted to the Commission by the Treaty, and of the indisputable result of the evidence pertinent thereto, there seems little reason to doubt that if the Protocols exhibited a trace even, of the elements of computation by which the two concurring Commissioners made up their judgment, they would inevitably disclose the infirmity of the actual Award, and make any careful demonstration of the same superfluous.

I desire that you will first call Lord Salisbury's attention to the nature of the question submitted to the Halifax Commission as adjusted through the diplomatic Conferences of the Joint High Commission, and expressed in the Treaty.

In the first place, the United States, in the Fishery Articles of the Treaty of Washington, did not intend to, and did not, waive or curtail in the least, the construction of the fishery and appurtenant privileges accorded in the Ist Article of the Convention of 1818, as claimed by them and actually possessed and enjoyed by them under such claim, at and before the negotiation of the Treaty of Washington. Neither the Protocols of the Conferences of the Joint High Commissioners, nor the text of the Treaty negotiated by them, indicate any intention of submitting to the interpretation of the Halifax Commission the degree of privilege accorded to the United States by the Convention of 1818. On the other hand, it is manifest from the instructions to Her Majesty's High Commissioners, as well as from the Protocols of the Conferences, that a settlement of the disputed interpretation of the Convention of 1818 was contemplated as possible only by the diplomatic deliberations of the Joint High Commission, and such conclusions thereon as they might find it in their power to embody in the Treaty of Washington. This task, however, they did not undertake, but provided only for a temporary possessory privilege that should supersede, during its continuance, any determination of such disputed interpretation. In this disposition of the subject, it would seem quite beyond the scope of the jurisdiction of the Halifax Commission to include in any measure of the additional privilege accorded to the United States by Article XVIII of the Treaty of Washington, any contribution for the enjoyment of the privileges accorded to the United States by the Convention of 1818, as claimed and actually possessed by them, at the time of the negotiation of the Treaty of Washington. A reference to document No. 15, filed with the Halifax Commission, in support of the case of Her Britannic Majesty's Government, and found at page 238 of the Congressional publication of the proceedings of the Halifax Commission, will substantiate this proposition.

I do not regard this point of serious importance in the exposition of the subject, except that I desire to preclude, in behalf of the United States, any implication or argument hereafter to be drawn from my passing over, without criticism, this possible element in the admeasurement of the Award. The United States still maintains its interpretation of the privilege secured by the Convention of 1818, and protests against any implication from the magnitude of the Award of the Halifax Commission, or otherwise, from its proceedings under the Treaty of Washington, that the United States have sanctioned or acquiesced in, or by payment of that Award would sanction or acquiesce in any lesser measure of the privileges secured to the United States under the Convention of 1818, than, as is well known to Her Majesty's Government, they have always insisted upon.

In the next place the United States did not submit to the Halifax Commission under the Fishery Articles of the Treaty of Washington any valuation of any general economic or political advantages, which grow out of access to fishing grounds for the development of a mercantile or naval marine, and which, therefore, it might be argued, would be enhanced by adding the area of the inshore fisheries of the Gulf of St. Lawrence to the fields for that enterprise, from the earliest period, open to, and occupied by, the bold and hardy seamen of this country. Still less did the United States submit to that Commission a pecuniary measurement of the removal of occasions of strife between the fishermen, or misunderstanding between the Governments of the two countries, by the temporary obliteration of a restrictive line, dividing the inshore from the deep-sea fisheries on portions of the coast of British North America.

Both of these subjects are cousiderations, Governmental in their nature, suitable to be entertained, with many others, in the diplomatic negotiations which ended in the Treaty. They are neither of them computable in money. That which relates to the maintenance of good understanding and good neighbourhood between the United States and the British North American Provinces can, least of all things, be admitted as an estimable element in a pecuniary computation. The importance of such maintenance of good understanding and good neighbourhood the United States will never under-value. In this interest large fiscal concessions were made by the United States in the adjustments of the Treaty of Washington. After such concessions the superadded submission to the Halifax Commission of the question of equalizing, by a pecuniary measure, those concessions with supposed equivalent concessions by Her Majesty's Government, was entertained and agreed to by the United States, mainly, if not entirely, in the disposition to meet any just interest of the British North American Provinces to be assured of the equality of these intended equivalents. But the maintenance of these good relations is of common interest to the two countries, and can never be made the occasion of pecuniary tribute, as if of more importance to one than to the other. No such calculation entered into the enlightened and conciliatory motives which animated and shaped the important series of negotiations which produced the Treaty of Washington. In the definition of whatever unadjusted computation was referred, for pecuniary settlement, to the Halifax Commission, care was taken to include nothing which, suitably to the honour of both countries, was not measurable by a scale of industrial and commercial profits.

If these plain considerations shall be viewed in this light by Her Majesty's Government, it is hoped that a concurrence of opinion as to the nature of the question actually submitted to a pecuniary measure by the Halifax Commission may be easily reached.

It cannot be very material to recall Lord Salisbury's attention to the historical attitude of the two Governments towards the subject in contention as to the fisheries, by any present exposition of the matter. The sources of knowledge on this subject are common to the public cognizance of the two Governments. Our diplomatic intercourse has unfolded the views of successive British and American Cabinets upon the conflicting claims of mere right, on the one side and the other, and at the same time evinced on both sides, an amicable preference for practical and peaceful enjoyment of the fisheries compatibly with a common interest, rather than a sacrifice of such common interest to a purpose of insisting upon extreme right, at a loss, on both sides, of what was to each the advantage sought by the contention. In this disposition the two countries have inclined, more and more, to retire from irreconcileable disputations as to the true intent covered by the somewhat careless, and certainly incomplete text of the Convention of 1818, and to look at the true elements of profits and prosperity in the fisheries themselves, which alone, to the one side or the other, made the shares of their respective participation therein worthy of dispute. This sensible and friendly view of the matter in dispute was greatly assisted by the experience of the provincial populations of a period of common enjoyment of the fisheries without attention to any sea-line of demarcation, but with a certain distribution of industrial and economical advantages in the prosecution and the product of this common enjoyment. The form of this experience was two-fold. First, for a period of twelve years under the Reciprocity arrangement of trade between the United States and those provinces; and, second, for a briefer period after the termination of the Reciprocity Treaty, under a system of licences, which obliterated the sea-line of circumscription to our fishery fleet upon the payment of fees deemed adequate by the provincial Governments.

In this disposition and with this experience, the negotiations of the Treaty of Washington were taken up and produced the Fishery Articles of that comprehensive Treaty. The results of this experience, and the influence of this disposition, are plainly marked in the pertinent Protocol, and in the text of the Articles.

At the outset it was apparent that neither a confirmation or rectification of the old sea-line of exclusion, or the adoption of a new one, had any place in the counsels or purposes of Her Majesty's Government, or in the interests or objects of Her Majesty's provincial subjects. It had become thoroughly understood, that the line of the Convention of 1818 had become inapplicable, and in some respects insufferable to the common interests.

The mackerel, which, always an inshore as well as a deep sea fish, off our coasts, at the date of the Convention of 1818, and for twenty years after, as an object of pursuit to our fishermen, was confined to the coast of the United States, and that fishery was substantially unknown, in any commercial sense, in the provincial waters. Either a change of habits in the fish, or an extension of the enterprize of our fishermen, had opened up the mackerel fishery of the Gulf of St. Lawrence to our pursuit. The gradual increase of the fishing coast population of the provinces had supplied the fishermen and excited the local interests, for the prosecution from the shore, as the base of its operations, of the new industry of inshore mackerel fishery.

Upon the concurrence of these circumstantial changes it was natural enough for the coast population and the public men of the provinces to conclude that the territorial authority which, under the Convention of 1818, gave the provinces the monopoly of the inshore mackerel fishery, only needed to be insisted upon, by a vigorous exclusion of our fishermen, to be fruitful of great local prosperity.

These calculations were disappointed. It was soon found that the provinces themselves were comparatively valueless as a market for mackerel, and that the quality of the fish, as respects the methods of its preparation for export, excluded it from the general foreign market which was open to the products of the cod fisheries. The near market of the United States was essential to the local prosperity of the inshore mackerel fishermen of the provinces. The political control of that market by the United States quite overreached the provincial control of the inshore fishing-grounds. Fish that cannot find a market will not long be pursued for gain; and the fishing-coast population and the statesmen of the provinces alike, saw that a participation in the mackerel market of the United States was the indispensable condition of prosperity to their inshore fishery. Experience confirmed the logic of this reasoning. While the Reciprocity Treaty endured, settlements throve and wealth increased. When it was withdrawn, population shrunk and wealth declined; and, but for the hope of its renewal, a destruction of this industry seemed imminent.

Upon the other hand, the mackerel fishermen of the United States felt that a participation in the inshore fisheries of the Gulf of St. Lawrence was no equivalent for a surrender of our mackerel market to the participation of the inshore fishermen of the provinces. They justly reasoned that this arrangement, in respect of the mackerel catch within the line, instead of placing the provincial fishing industry upon an equal footing with ours, really put us at quite a disadvantage. Ordinarily, home products have a certain measure of advantage over duty-free competing imports in freight, ocean or inland—insurance, and interest, and factorage. But here, what passes for our home product is acquired upon the very shore of our foreign competitor. Its pursuit is at the expense of an extended voyage, with costly outfit and large investment, at great risk, with long delay, measured by heavy insurance and accruing interest. Bringing it to what is called the home market involves return voyage and the attendant burdens of expense. The farmer fishermen of the provincial coasts leave the plough in the furrow and the hay-cart in the field, and take to the simple implements and open boats, with which fishing from the shore is prosecuted, when the mackerel show themselves. They cure their catch as a part of their home labour, and ship it at low rates to our market by bottoms which make a returning commercial freight. At these odds, the share of the inshore mackerel fishery of the Gulf of St. Lawrence seemed to our fishermen but a poor addition to their former extensive rights to be purchased by so great a disadvantage in their general fishing industry, on our own coasts and in the deep sea, as well as inshore fisheries of the provincial waters.

These views, too, were confirmed by our experience during the Reciprocity arrangement, and after its close. Both periods unmistakeably marked the policy of an open market for the products of the provincial fisheries as disastrous to our fishing industry.

With these opinions and these experiences, on the one side and on the other, the High Commissioners undertook an adjustment of the opposing interests upon the principle of obliterating the sea-line between the fishermen of the two countries, and finding such compensation for this concession as might seem equal and just.

In the Conferences of the Joint High Commission, it is very apparent that our High Commissioners regarded the obliteration of the sea-line as of no great pecuniary value to our fishing industry. Accordingly, they offered but 1,000,000 dollars for this concession in perpetuity. No doubt politically, and in the interest of good neighbourhood, this Government did regard, and at all times would regard, the restoration of the relations between the two countries in the common enjoyment of these fisheries, to the ancient footing of the Treaty of 1783, as most grateful in sentiment and as a most valuable guarantee against any renewal of strife. These considerations, for reasons already stated, could not be worthily entertained upon either side as an element of the pecuniary measure of the privileges to be accorded.

In these Conferences it is not less apparent that Her Majesty's High Commissioners recognized the possession of our market for the product of the provincial fisheries as the one thing essential to the prosperity of those fisheries, which could not be dispensed with or replaced by any money purchase. This commercial advantage was, of course, both practically and suitably to the dignity of the negotiation measurable in money. It seemed to our High Commissioners to exceed in value to the provinces, as it unquestionably did in loss to us, any reasonable estimate of the value of the privilege our fishermen were to acquire. This basis, however, of freedom of the fishing grounds to our fishermen, and freedom of our market to the fishermen of the provinces, in simplicity and national equivalency, presented advantages which might well have dispensed with any nice calculation of comparative pecuniary values in the exchange.

Her Majesty's High Commissioners, however, thought that this exchange of privileges, even with the added concession on our part, of throwing open to the provincial fishermen unrestricted participation in the valuable inshore fisheries of our own coasts above the thirty-ninth parallel, left still a claim for a pecuniary make-weight in favour of the provinces in the nature of owelty of partition. This led to the constitution of the Halifax Commission to consider and decide the single question whether, and how much, the pecuniary measure of the new fishing privilege opened to the United States fishermen exceeded the pecuniary measure of the new fishing privilege opened to the provincial fishermen, and of the possession of our market, free of duty, for all the products of the provincial fisheries. This difference between the two pecuniary valuations was in the nature of the problem no less than by the terms of the Treaty to be expressed and paid in money.

Upon the conclusion of the labours of the Halifax Commission, and the communication of the concurring judgment of the two Commissioners, awarding the sum of 5,500,000 dollars as the amount to be paid by the United States under the Fishery Articles of the Treaty, and the judgment of the dissenting Commissioner that no sum whatever was payable by the United States under those Articles, it became the duty of this Government to compare this result with the authority imparted to the Commission by the Treaty, and to determine whether it comported with, or transcended, such authority.

It will not, I think, be questioned by Her Majesty's Government that, upon the proofs and arguments, in whatever form submitted by the two Governments to the Commission, the practical measure of the concession to the United States under Article XVIII of the Treaty was simply of a free and equal right to take part in the fisheries of the Gulf of St. Lawrence within the three miles line, instead of being excluded therefrom, as we were under the Convention of 1818. Nor do I anticipate that you will find any dissent on the part of Lord Salisbury from the proposition, that the proofs fully show that the fishery thus opened to us was the mackerel fishery within that line. While both Governments must regret that the sure footing for a concurrence of views between them, which might have been furnished by a careful system of Protocols of the Conferences of the Commission, is wanting, yet the proofs on both sides leave this proposition in no doubt. Indeed, since the publication by Parliament of the "Correspondence respecting the Halifax Fisheries Commission" has disclosed the advices given from time to time to Her Majesty's Government by Mr. Ford, the very intelligent and circumspect British Agent in attendance upon the Commission, of the developments of the real subject for valuation, there seems to be no room for any difference of views between the two Governments on this point. Thus, in his despatch of September 10th, 1877, presenting the position upon the completion of the British evidence, and before the opening of the proofs on the part of the United States, Mr. Ford says, "the mackerel fishery being that most extensively pursued by the Americans in British waters, is the branch of the inquiry to which the greatest attention was devoted." In giving, too, in the same despatch, the general result of any pecuniary measure of benefit to the United States fishermen from the concession of Article XVIII of the Treaty, which the completed British proofs had presented as a basis for an Award, Mr. Ford makes it very apparent that the mackerel catch within the three-mile line was the only item of appreciable importance. He says, "according to the evidence adduced on the British side it seems beyond doubt that at least three-quarters of the mackerel taken on the British North American coast is caught within the three-mile limit, while, owing probably to the existence of sandy shoals at some distance from the shore, the catch of this fish in the United States waters, north of the 39th parallel of north latitude, is principally beyond that distance." Mr. Ford, also, upon the mere British proofs, no less distinctly excludes the cod fishery as an element of the computation of the value to us of the concession of Article XVIII. He says, "the cod fishery is pursued to a limited extent only by United States fishermen within British territorial waters, and this is probably the case with regard to hake, haddock, pollock, &c;" and, again, "the evidence is somewhat vague as to the proportion of cod fish taken by Americans in British inshores, and it does not probably amount to anything considerable, except on certain portions of the north shore of the Gulf of St Lawrence."

Mr. Ford's despatch, upon a survey of the counterproofs of the United States, which had just been completed, under the date of 30th October, 1877, presents the contention between the parties, and as recognized by both sides, in the same light. He says, "78 witnesses, in all, have been examined, and 280 affidavits filed on the United States' side; and, as was the case on the British side, the main part of it has been directed to the mackerel fishery, with regard to which the United States' Counsel have sought to establish the following salient points:—

"1. That the fishing grounds principally resorted to by the United States' fishermen in the Gulf of St. Lawrence are on the banks situated outside the three-mile limit, and at the Magdalene Islands, to which they had access previous to the conclusion of the Treaty of Washington.

"2. That the fishing business is at the best an unprofitable one, as regards its net results to the owners or charterers of vessels. A mass of statistics has been put in evidence with a view to prove this assertion, and to show that the Canadian inshore fisheries can hardly be pursued by the United States' citizens except at a loss; while those on their own shore yield a greater prospect of remunerative results.

"3. That the remission of duties on Canadian fish is a great benefit to the producer, inasmuch as the chief market for mackerel is the United States."

In the same despatch Mr. Ford, in certain observations of his own upon the countervailing force of the proofs of the United States, as a whole, against the British proofs as a whole, shows that the valuation of the inshore mackerel fishery of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, opened to our fishermen, was the whole matter of contention before the Commission in respect of the concession of Article XVIII of the Treaty. He remarks, "I may, however, observe that, as it has never been denied, even by the British side, that a certain portion of the mackerel taken by the United States in the Gulf of St. Lawrence is caught outside the three-mile limit, there could be no difficulty in producing a considerable number of fishermen who would truthfully depose that the majority of their successful trips had been made outside the limit of British territorial jurisdiction. The main fact, however, remains practically intact, viz., that without access to the inshores it would be impossible for the general business of mackerel fishing by United States' vessels in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, to be pursued with profitable results."

It seems to this Government quite certain, then, that upon a correct exposition of the submission of the Treaty, and the concurring action of the two Governments in the production and application of what they deemed appropriate proofs, what the pecuniary value of our participation in the inshore mackerel fishery of the Gulf of St. Lawrence was fairly estimated at, constituted the extreme limit of any possible pecuniary award by the Halifax Commission against the United States. If, upon any rational view of the criteria of this value before the Commission, the Award of the two concurring Commissioners of 5,500,000 dollars as a twelve years' purchase of the privilege can be maintained, it may be fairly conceded that the imputation of invalidity to the award for transcending the submission of the Treaty will fail of adequate demonstration. If, on the other hand, the candid exploration of the evidence shall show that there exists no rational proportion between this award and the unquestionable limits of value which any view of the testimony must assign to the subject submitted for valuation by the Treaty, as correctly interpreted, then by the very statement of the proposition it is demonstrated that the concurring Commissioners have passed their judgment of valuation upon some other subject than that defined in Article XVIII of the Treaty, and have transcended the submission to their decision. In such case, the antecedent authority imparted to the Commission by the two Governments fails to justify the Award, and the subject of the Fisheries remains at the arbitrament of the two Governments, unconstrained though perhaps enlightened by the deliberations of the Halifax Commission.

In proceeding to apply the proposed test of conformity or nonconformity between the Award and the submission, I disclaim all right to trench upon the range of discretion, or to dispute the entire freedom in comparing, weighing, and extracting the true results from evidence which belongs to such special Tribunals as the Halifax Commission. I shall not seek in the least to impose any views of my Government upon the evidence in the place of any that may be assumed even to have been taken by the concurring Commissioners. I do, however, insist that upon any question of fact within the submission, the record of the evidence cannot be surpassed by spontaneous conjectures or imaginations of the Commissioners. I have no difficulty in saying that the error of the concurring Commissioners, if error they have fallen into, does not seem to me of this nature. That error is not of mistaking the evidence adduced upon the subject submitted to them, but of mistaking the subject submitted to them, and thus liberating their judgments from obedience to the evidence as thus adduced.

Fortunately, there are trustworthy criteria for determining the value of the concession of Article XVIII, as I have defined that concession to be. They are resorted to upon one side and the other, and, confessedly, furnish the material upon which the appraisement, if confined to the subject as truly defined, must turn. If, then, upon the evidence, if found conflicting or divergent, the largest measure of valuation deducible therefrom be given in favour of the concession of Article XVIII, and that extreme value shall show no rational or approximate relation to the sum awarded, there would seem to be no escape from the conclusion that the concurring Commissioners accepted some other subject for their appraisement than that submitted to them.

It happened that, before the Halifax Commission had concluded its labours, five fishing seasons of the Treaty period had already elapsed, and the actual experience of the enjoyment by the United States' fishermen of the privilege conceded, replaced any conjectural estimate of its value by reliable statistics of its pecuniary results. These statistics disclosed that the whole mackerel catch of the United States for these five seasons in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, both within and without the three-mile line, was 167,945 barrels. The provincial estimates claimed that three-quarters of this catch was within the three-mile line, and so to be credited to the privilege conceded by Article XVIII. The United States' estimates placed the proportion at less than a quarter. Upon the provincial claim of three-quarters, the product to our fishermen of these five years of inshore fishing would be 125,961 barrels. It was established, upon provincial testimony, that the price which mackerel bore in the provinces, cured and packed ready for exportation, was 3 dol. 75 c. per barrel, and this would give as the value, cured and packed, of the United States' inshore catch for five years, the sum of 472,353 dollars. But in this value are included the barrel, the salt, the expense of catching, curing, and packing, which must be deducted before the profit, which measures the value of the fishery privilege, is reached. Upon the evidence 1 dollar a barrel would be an excessive estimate of net profit, and this would give a profit to our fishermen from the enjoyment for these five seasons of the fishery privilege, conceded under Article XVIII, of but 25,000 dollars a-year, or, for the whole Treaty period of twelve years, of 300,000 dollars.

Although there would seem to be no reason for distrusting this commercial and pecuniary measure of the privilege in question, yet, if it should be pretended that the provincial value should not be taken, but the value in the market of the United States; and, further, that an extravagant rate of 10 dollars per barrel should be assumed as that value; and, again, beyond all bounds of even capricious estimate, a conjectural profit of 50 per cent. should be assigned to the fishing adventures, we should have but 125,000 dollars a-year, or 1,500,000 dollars for the twelve years of the Treaty, for the gross valuation of the concession to the United States by Article XVIII, undiminished by a penny, for the counter-concessions of the United States of Articles XIX and XXI. Yet this sum, thus reached, is but little more than one-quarter of the Award of the concurring Commissioners, after taking into account the deductions required for the privileges of Articles XIX and XXI.

The proofs disclose another wholly independent criterion of the value of the privilege conceded to our fishermen by Article XVIII of the Treaty, drawn from the experience of some years intervening between the abrogation of the Reciprocity Treaty and the negotiation of the Treaty of Washington. The Provincial Government in these years adopted a licence system, by which vessels of the United States were admitted to the inshore fishery upon the payment of fees for the season, rated by the ton. The experience of this system showed that under an exaction of 50 cents per ton, our fishing fleet took out licences; that when the fee was raised to 1 dollar per ton, the number of licences fell off about one-half, and when a fee of 2 dollars per ton was exacted, but few licences were taken out. The fairness of this measure of the value of the privilege is obvious. It furnishes a compensatory rate between opposing interests, suggested and acted upon by them without coercion, and by concurring consent.

The tonnage taking out licences under the first and lowest rate was about 32,000 tons. Assuming, contrary to experience, that this tonnage would have borne the highest rate of 2 dollars per ton, the sum of 64,000 dollars per annum would have measured the value of the privilege in question, and would have yielded for the Treaty period of twelve years 768,000 dollars. By this method of valuation of the privilege of Article XVIII (without deducting a penny for the counter-privileges of Articles XIX and XXI) would be but about 14 per cent. of the Award of the concurring Commissioners, after they had taken into account these privileges.

You will say then, to Lord Salisbury, that with every anxiety to find some rational explanation of the enormous disparity between the pecuniary computations of the evidence and the pecuniary measure announced by the concurring Commissioners, this Government has been unable to do so upon any other hypothesis than that the very matter defined in Article XVIII, and to which the proofs on both sides were applied, and the very matter measured by the Award of the concurring Commissioners, were not identical nor even similar, and that such Award, upon this reason, transcends the submission.

The demonstration at which I have aimed appears so conclusive upon the mere consideration of the concession of Article XVIII, as to supersede, so far as the immediate argument goes, an exhibition of the reduction even of the moderate sum above assigned, as the true appraisal of the concession of that Article, by the pecuniary value, as laid before the Commission, of the counter-concessions of Articles XIX and XXI. But a brief statement of the views of this Government on the treatment of these counter-concessions in the deliberations of the Halifax Commission, is requisite both to the completeness and the frankness of this exposition.

In brief, it may be said that Her Majesty's Government formally insisted in their "Case" and in their "Reply" laid before the Commission, that the concession of Article XIX, whereby British subjects are admitted to the freedom of our coast fisheries north of the thirty-ninth parallel, is, to quote the language of the "Case," "absolutely valueless;" and that the concession of Article XXI, admitting fish and fish-oil, the product of the provincial fisheries, to our markets duty-free, to quote the language of the "Reply," "has not resulted in pecuniary profit to the British fishermen, but, on the contrary, to the American dealer or consumer,"

If I have been at all successful in showing the enormous disproportion between the sum of 5,500,000 dollars announced as their award by the concurring Commissioners, and the pecuniary value which the evidence assigns to the concessions of Article XVIII by itself considered, I need spend little time in showing that these Commissioners must have accepted the views of Her Majesty's Government that nothing was to be allowed for countervailing value to the concessions of Articles XIX and XXI, or, that these Commissioners had in their minds a measure for the concession of Article XVIII still more inconsistent with the true Treaty definition of the subject described in that Article and submitted to the appraisement of the Commission.

If the concession of Article XIX was held by the Commissioners to be "absolutely worthless," as asserted in the "Case" of Her Majesty's Government, it must have been because the pecuniary profit to the provincial fishermen of the privilege as actually enjoyed by them was the true measure of estimation of the value of the concession. In this view the immense value of these fisheries, as shown in the evidence, all went for nothing, because the population, capital or enterprise in the provinces, could not carry on, what to them were remote fisheries in competition with our own coast population. Without insisting upon the unreasonableness of measuring the value of our fishing grounds by the incompetency of provincial resources to engage in the fishery opened to them, this disposition of the value of the concession of Article XIX recognizes the whole force and result of the reasoning by which I have assigned the true criteria of value for the privilege of Article XVIII, under the experience of the actual five years' enjoyment thereof by our fishermen, who were able to take advantage of the privilege and did so, to the furthest extent compatible with profit. The view of the reasoning by which a right of fishery, valuable in its own capacity, is measured by the tenants' incapacity to fish, is obvious. It furnishes no true criterion of the rent value of a fishery, which is what needed to be got at both under Article XVIII and Article XIX. Under Article XVIII we are furnished a true criterion by the experience of a tenant, confessedly willing and able to improve the fishery to the utmost, and actually doing so.

I now desire you to present to Lord Salisbury's attention the subject of the concession of a free market in the United States for the products of the provincial fisheries, as made by Article XXI. The value of this privilege to the provinces was required by the Treaty to be measured by the Halifax Commission, and deducted from their appraisement of the concession of Article XVIII in favour of the United States.

The statistics of the importation under this privilege showed that at the rate of duty prevalent before that concession, a revenue of about 200,000 dollars per annum on mackerel alone, and of more than 300,000 dollars on all kinds of fish (mackerel included) and fish-oil would have accrued to the United States. For the purpose of argument, conceding that but one-half of this annual sum of 300,000 dollars should be set down as pecuniary profit to the Provincial interests, the sum of 1,800,000 dollars would need to be deducted, on the score of Article XXI, from the true valuation of the privilege conceded by Article XVIII. If I have assigned correctly the highest possible measure of the privilege of Article XVIII, upon the evidence, as not being more than 1,500,000 dollars, this low valuation of the privilege of Article XXI more than extinguishes it.

Whatever disposition the concurring Commissioners made of this countervailing concession of Article XXI—whether they gave it a value commensurate with the statistical evidence of the revenue loss to the United States, and market gain to the Provincial interest, or considered it absolutely valueless—the matter is one of much moment.

If these concurring Commissioners gave the sum of 5,500,000 dollars as the appraisement of the concession of Article XVIII, after deducting some 2,000,000 dollars for the countervailing concession of Article XXI, the argument, as it seems to this Government, adequate before, becomes still more conclusive that the measurement, thus enhanced to some 7,500,000 dollars, was not applied and confined to the very subject submitted to the appraisement of the Commission by Article XVIII.

But, it may be said, these concurring Commissioners may have treated the concession of Article XXI as absolutely valueless to the Provincial interests, and it was competent for them to do so. But this alternative is little consistent with the whole tenour of the views of Her Majesty's Government, as maintained by successive Cabinets, and insisted upon in responsible negotiations, by their most eminent Representatives through a long course of years. Certainly, ever since 1851, when Lord Elgin, as Governor-General of Canada, communicated, through the British Minister at Washington, Sir Henry Bulwer, to Mr. Webster, Secretary of State, the opinion of the British Government that the admission of the product of the Provincial fisheries duty free to our market was the one indispensable condition to our participation in the inshore fisheries of the Provinces, down to the negotiation of the Treaty of Washington, the attitude of the British Government on this point has been explicit and unequivocal.

Lord Elgin declared, "Her Majesty's Government are prepared, on certain conditions and with certain reservations, to make the concession to which so much importance seems to have been attached by Mr. Clayton, viz., to throw open to the fishermen of the United States the fisheries in the waters of the British North-American Colonies, with permission to those fishermen to land on the coasts of those Colonies for the purpose of drying their nets and curing their fish, provided that in so doing they do not interfere with the owners of private property, or with the operations of British fishermen.

"Her Majesty's Government would require, as an indispensable condition in return for this concession, that all fish, either fresh or cured, imported into the United States from the British North-American possessions, in vessels of any nation or description, should be admitted into the United States duty free, and upon terms in all respects of equality with fish imported by citizens of the United States."

The deliberations of the Joint High Commission, as preserved in the Protocols of their Conferences on the fisheries, exhibit, with perfect distinctness, the British opinion as to a free market for the product of the Provincial fisheries being a value to the Provincial interests which could not be missed, or replaced by a pecuniary substitute, in any settlement of the question. Thus our High Commissioners stated "that if the value of the inshore fisheries could be ascertained, the United States might prefer to purchase for a sum of money the right to enjoy, in perpetuity, the use of these inshore fisheries in common with British fishermen, and mentioned 1,000,000 dollars as the sum they were prepared to offer." The British High Commissioners replied "that this offer was, they thought, wholly inadequate, and that no arrangement would be acceptable of which the admission into the United States, free of duty, of fish, the produce of British fisheries, did not form a part." After a consideration of commercial equivalents, in which the offers of our High Commissioners were not accepted by the British High Commissioners, all such propositions on our part were withdrawn, and our Commissioners renewed their proposal to pay a money equivalent for the use of the inshore fisheries, and further proposed that, "in case the two Governments should not be able to agree upon the sum to be paid as such equivalent, the matter should be referred to an impartial Commission for determination." To this the British High Commissioners replied, "that it would not be possible for them to come to any arrangement except one for a term of years, and involving the concession of free fish and fish-oil by our High Commissioners; but that, if free fish and fish-oil were conceded, they would inquire of their Government whether they were prepared to assent to a reference to arbitration as to money payment." Our High Commissioners replied "that they were of opinion that free fish and fish-oil would be more than an equivalent for those fisheries, but that they were also willing to agree to a reference to determine that question, and the amount of any money payment that might be found necessary to complete an equivalent." Hereupon, as stated in the Protocol, "the British Commissioners having referred the last proposal to their Government, and received instructions to accept it," the fishery Articles of the Treaty were agreed to.

These opinions of Her Majesty's Government were entirely in accord with the views of the leading Provincial statesmen. Mr. Stewart Campbell, of Nova Scotia, declared that "under the Reciprocity Treaty the total exemption from duty of all fish exported from the maritime Provinces to the markets of the United States was also a boon of inestimable value to the very large class of British subjects directly and indirectly connected with our fisheries and its resulting trade." Sir John Macdonald said, in the Parliament of the Dominion, "the only market for the Canadian No. 1 mackerel in the world is the United States. That is our only market, and we are practically excluded from it by the present duty. The consequence of that duty is that our fishermen are at the mercy of the American fishermen; they are made the hewers of wood and drawers of water for the Americans. They are obliged to sell their fish at the Americans' own price. The American fishermen purchase their fish at a nominal value, and control the American market. The great profits of the trade are handed over to the American fishermen or the American merchants engaged in the trade, and they profit to the loss of our own industry and our own people."

It may be that Her Majesty's Government has surrendered these opinions, and that the statesmen of the Dominion and the people of the provinces now think that the possession of our market for the products of the provincial fisheries is of no pecuniary advantage to these provincial interests. In such case, in any future negotiation respecting the fisheries, this Government would expect no stress to be laid upon the question of the possession of our own markets. If Her Majesty's Government accepts the award of these concurring Commissioners as carrying the necessary consequence that the concession of Article XXI is of no value to British or provincial interests, that element of calculation will disappear from any possible exchange of equivalents that the exigencies of any future friendly negotiations may need to find at their service. A privilege that is valueless when granted to and enjoyed by a beneficiary may well be reserved and withheld, without the charge of its being ungracious to do so.

If, on the other hand, Her Majesty's Government adheres to the views of the value of our market for the product of the Provincial fisheries, so often and so earnestly pressed upon the attention of this Government, and asserts that the Award of the concurring Commissioners must be held, upon necessary reasoning, to have measured and deducted this great value of free market from the appraisement of the concession of free fishing to us, made by them under Article XVIII, this Government will expect the more ready acceptance by Her Majesty's Government of the proposition, that these concurring Commissioners, in their Award, mistook the subject submitted by Article XVIII to their pecuniary measurement, and exceeded the authority under which the Commission acted.

You will, however, very earnestly press upon Lord Salisbury's attention, in advance of any declaration from Her Majesty's Government of their present views of the value of our markets for the products of the Provincial fisheries, that this Government has not changed or at all modified its opinions on this subject. To dissemble or conceal from Her Majesty's Government this fact would be uncandid, and, by silence on our part now, breed mischief for future contentions or negotiations. This Government holds now, as it did by the mouth of its High Commissioners in the Conferences on the subject of the fisheries which produced the pertinent Articles of the Treaty, "That free fish and fish-oil would be more than an equivalent for those fisheries." The measure of pecuniary value which I have drawn from the revenue loss to the United States, calculated with extreme moderation, is an inadequate expression of the benefit to the Provincial interests and injury to our own from their free importations. It is still the opinion of this Government that the possession of our market is of vital importance to the maritime provinces, and such possession a formidable menace, if not a fatal wound, to our own fishing interests. I do not think that I misunderstand or misrepresent those interests when I say that, standing as we now do, midway in the Treaty-period, it would be better for those interests to surrender the enjoyment of the fishing privilege of Article XVIII for the remaining six years of the twelve, upon a resumption by the Government of the control of our own market for this unexpired period.

If Her Majesty's Government and the Provincial statesmen are firm in the opinion that the concession of Article XVIII parts with so much to us, and the concession of Article XXI is valueless to British and Provincial interests, it may be well worth while for the two Governments to consider whether a mutual resumption of these exchanged interests may not be desirable. In the future, as in the past, this Government will go very far in concessions to remove occasions of strife between the fishermen of the two nations. But these contributions to goodwill, as I have before insisted, are not to be confounded with pecuniary tribute on one side or the other.

It was in this spirit that the free importation of coal, salt, and lumber, which was in debate as a measure of wholly domestic interest to ourselves, but with divided opinions, was proposed to the British Government for reciprocal arrangements in respect of these Articles to be incorporated in the Treaty of Washington. The proposal was rejected by the British Government and the Provincial interests, doubtless, upon a measuring cast as to whether this reciprocity carried more benefit or injury to Provincial interests, and what we thought an appreciably greater advantage to the Provinces than to ourselves, was rejected as unimportant to them. The contrast between this indifference to a free market for coal, salt, and lumber, and the inexorable demand for a free market for fish and fish-oil, speaks volumes for the pecuniary value of this latter to Provincial interests.

Her Majesty's Government, it may reasonably be assumed, has given to this Award of the concurring Commissioners its careful attention, and subjected it, in the light of the diplomatic negotiations which established the Halifax Commission, and the evidence before that Commission, to a comparison with the authority imparted by the Treaty, to determine whether it conforms to that authority and is valid, or transcends that authority and, for that reason, is void. Whatever opinion Her Majesty's Government may have formed on this point has not, so far as this Government is aware, been made public at home, and has not been communicated to this Government. In inviting a full exposition of the views of Her Majesty's Government upon the matter, as now brought into consideration between the two Governments, you will say to Lord Salisbury that, wholly unsupportable as the pecuniary measure of the single and fragmentary matter, not embraced in the diplomatic concurrence of the High Commissioners, and thus left by them to impartial appraisement, seems to this Government, it will receive and examine with entire candour any opposing views in maintenance of the validity of the Award which Her Majesty's Government may present. If, as I shall not cease to anticipate, Her Majesty's Government shall agree that the subject submitted to the Halifax Commission has not been adequately disposed of by the concurring Commissioners, the way will seem to this Government to be thereby opened for a more permanent and comprehensive settlement of the fishery interests of the two countries than was reached by the Treaty of Washington. If the present correspondence shall not result in this desired agreement, and even if the opposing views which may be communicated by Her Majesty's Government should affect our present judgment in the very matter of the validity of the Award, I cannot, in all candour, hold out any expectation that this Government can ever recognize the valuation of the countervailing concessions of Articles XVIII, XIX, and XXI, involved in this Award, as a guide even, much less a standard, for any future treatment of the fishery contentions, which the exigencies of the situation as now left may require.

Passing from the grave question which touches the essential elements of the Award, upon considerations vital to the whole system of arbitration, I desire you, further, to call Lord Salisbury's attention to a particular point in the actual Award; that is to say, the failure of the three Commissioners to agree in any result, and the consequent announcement of that inability, and the promulgation of the widely different conclusions which the two concurring Commissioners and the dissenting Commissioner had reached.

The question presented on the face of the Award of the Halifax Commission, viz., whether the concurrence of the three Commissioners in their Award was required by the Treaty, was made a matter of public discussion, both in Great Britain and in the Provinces, before and during the sitting of the Commission. In this discussion, so far as it has fallen under my notice, the legal, political, and popular organs of opinion seemed quite positive that this unanimity was required by the Treaty. In this country the matter was little considered, either because the British view of the subject was accepted, or because complete confidence in our Case, on its merits, supervaded any interest in the question. The point comes up now, for the first time, for consideration between the two Governments, and will need attention from either, only, in case Her Majesty's Government sho ld fail to concur in the views of this Government which condemn the Award on the grave grounds already presented.

The question involves nothing more than the interpretation of the Treaty, and is quite clear of any intermixture with the substance of the Award as satisfactory or unsatisfactory to either party. It turns, first, upon the mere text of the Treaty; and, second, upon the surrounding circumstances and the different subjects to be treated by the various Boards of Arbitration framed by the Treaty of Washington, so far as they may be rightly resorted to in aid of a just construction of the text.

By the Treaty of Washington four Boards are constituted for the determination of certain matters to be submitted to their respective decisions.

1. The Geneva Arbitration was composed of five members, in regard to whose deliberations and conclusions Article II of the Treaty expressly provides that "all questions considered by the Tribunal, including the final Award, shall be decided by a majority of all the Arbitrators."

2. A Board of Assessors under the Geneva Arbitration, in case the Tribunal should not award a gross sum, was to be composed of three members. In the action of this Board, Article X of the Treaty declares that "a majority of the Assessors in each case shall be sufficient to a decision."

3. A Commission of three members to determine reciprocal claims between the two countries arising during the Civil War. Article XIII provides that "a majority of the Commissioners shall be sufficient for an award in each case."

4. The Halifax Commission, composed of three members, undistinguished, among themselves, by any description of umpirage to either, and with no provision in any form for an award by less than the whole number. The Treaty expressly accepts awards, signed by the assenting Arbitrators, or Assessors, or Commissioners under the other Articles, while, in the case of the Halifax Commission, this provision takes the place of such acceptance: "The Case on either side shall be closed within a period of six months from the date of the organization of the Commission, and the Commissioners shall be requested to give their award as soon as possible thereafter."

The argument from this comparison is obvious. The High Contracting Parties possessed a common system of jurisprudence, according to which a reference to Arbitrators ex vi termini required the Award to be the act of the Arbitrators, that is, of all of them. The parties to an arbitration, public or private, might accord to any lesser number the power of award, but express stipulations in the submission alone could carry that authority. Acting in full view of this rule, to which a desired exception needed to be expressed, in three cases, in the same deliberate and solemn instrument, the High Contracting Parties imparted the authority to a majority by careful and solicitous provisions to that end. In the case of the Halifax Commission, last in the order of the Treaty, and with the previous arrangements, in this regard, in their minds and under their eyes, this power is withheld. It is impossible, because it is plainly irrational, to say that a Treaty provision containing power to a majority to bind, and a Treaty provision expressing no such authority, mean one and the same thing. The High Contracting Parties have excluded any such conclusion, by the sedulous discrimination which the text of the Treaty discloses.

To the countervailing suggestion that this variation from the system of the Treaty in the case of the Halifax Commission is most reasonably accounted for by inadvertence on the part of the High Joint Commissioners, the answer is obvious. If either of the High Contracting Parties should so allege, which it certainly would not do without much deliberation, the suggestion would not affect the argument as to the meaning of the Treaty as it stood, but would be in the nature of an appeal to the other High Contracting Party to waive the objection and reform the Treaty. No doubt cases may exist where such appeals should be frankly responded to, though against interest.

But, you will say to Lord Salisbury that the suggestion of inadvertence in the negotiations, never to be lightly indulged in, overlooks an adequate and presumptively the real reason for the requirement of unanimity in the case of the Fisheries Commission, while it was expressly waived in the other submissions of the Treaty.

In the matters of computation submitted in the several other references of the Treaty, two circumstances distinguished them from that subjected to the Award of the Halifax Commission. First, they were wholly matters of determinate proof, an appraisement of the ships and cargoes destroyed by the "Alabama" and her consorts, an estimation of damages to persons or property suffered by individual British subjects or American citizens for which reparation should be made—these were matters of definite affirmative proof in pounds or dollars before any award could be asked, and were subject to correction by equally definite opposing proofs before any award could be granted. Second, the assessments carried no measurement of any still subsisting interests between the High Contracting Parties which would survive the payment of the several awards. It was then quite suitable to these references to accept the judgment of a majority and dispense with the concurrence of both parties, as represented in the Commissions, in the results of the contentions before them.

The matter submitted to the Halifax Commission was different in nature, and in the relations of the High Contracting Parties to the subject of contention. Both these traits of this dispute conspired to urge upon the High Contracting Parties the need of every possible guaranty against unreasonable or illusory estimates on the part of the Commission to the prejudice of one party or the other. Besides, this computation touched a matter in which large classes and interests of either community felt a concern, and it was essential that dissatisfaction with results should be alleviated by confidence in the judgment. So vague a subject of valuation as the twelve years' prospective catch of mackerel within three miles of the shore on the coasts of the United States and of the Provinces, so diffuse a problem as the distribution of the burdens of duties between producer and consumer, gave too large a range for floating speculations, unless anchored to sober sense by the requirement of unanimity. The permanent importance of these valuations in future negotiations of the two countries, forbade their submission to any Commission uncontrolled by the necessary concurrence of the Representatives of both countries, in any award. The interests and feeling of the large populations, on the one side and the other, dependent for prosperity, if not for livelihood, on these fisheries, made the two Governments careful to secure them, in any result, against a sense of injustice as well as of disappointment, by the conservative requirement of unanimity.

In submitting to Her Majesty's Government the failure of the Commissioners to come to the agreement which, in this interpretation of the Treaty, is requisite to the validity of the Award, the Government wishes to lay no undue stress upon this objection. If Her Majesty's Government concurs in this construction of the authority conferred upon the Halifax Commission, this agreement between the Governments will enable them, presently, to make more complete, as well as more satisfactory, arrangements for the reciprocal interests of the industry and commerce of the Provinces and of the United States than at present exist. If, on the other hand, Her Majesty's Government shall announce to this Government their construction of the Treaty to be that the concurrence of a majority of the Commissioners warrants a valid award, notwithstanding the declared dissent of the third Commissioner, this Government will not refuse to accord to that opinion, thus expressed, all the weight which it desires for its own views. You will therefore say to Lord Salisbury that, upon such a declared disagreement upon the true interpretation of the Treaty in respect of unanimity of the Commissioners, this Government will regard the maintenance of entire good faith and mutual respect in all dealings under the beneficent Treaty of Washington as of paramount concern, and will not assume to press its own interpretation of the Treaty, on this point, against the deliberate interpretation of Her Majesty's Government to the contrary.

You will promptly communicate these views to Her Majesty's Government by delivering a copy of this despatch to Lord Salisbury, and requesting an early attention to its contents.

I am, &c.
(Signed) WM. M. EVARTS.

No. 2.

The Marquis of Salisbury to Mr. Welsh.

Sir, Foreign Office, November 7, 1878.

HER Majesty's Government have given their attentive consideration to the despatch relating to the proceedings of the Halifax Fisheries Commission, addressed to you by Mr. Evarts, the Secretary of State of the United States, a copy of which you were good enough to place in my hands on the 10th ultimo; and I have now the honour to make the following observations in reply, which I shall feel greatly obliged by your communicating to Mr. Evarts with the least possible delay :—

Her Majesty's Government fully appreciate the frankness with which Mr. Evarts has requested you to communicate to them the views of the Government of the United States on this question, and it is their desire to reciprocate in the fullest degree the wish expressed by Mr. Evarts to come to a complete and explicit understanding between the two Governments as to the conformity of the Award made by the Commission to the terms of the Treaty of Washington.

I must, in the first instance, recall to your recollection the circumstances which led to the organization of the Halifax Commission.

The Reciprocity Treaty of the 5th June, 1854, between Great Britain and the United States, terminated in 1866, not from any desire on the part of Her Majesty's Government to put a period to its stipulations, but in consequence of the notice provided for in Article V of that Treaty having been given by the United States' Government. The mutual privileges in respect to free fishing and free trade in certain productions, which had under its operation been enjoyed by the inhabitants of the United States and of Her Majesty's North American Possessions, thus came to an end. The effect of this determination of the Reciprocity Treaty was to revive the difficulties incidental to the Fisheries question; difficulties so well known to both Governments that it is needless for me to enlarge upon them on the present occasion.

The danger, however, of collision between the fishermen of the two nations began to manifest itself soon after the termination of the Reciprocity Treaty; and Her Majesty's Government were anxious to come to a speedy and satisfactory solution of the question. With this view Her Majesty's Minister at Washington addressed, on the 26th January, 1871, a note to Mr. Fish, in which he stated that Her Majesty's Government deemed it of importance to the good relations which they were ever anxious should subsist and be strengthened between the United States and Great Britain that a friendly and complete understanding should be come to between the two Governments as to the extent of the rights belonging to the citizens of the United States and Her Majesty's subjects respectively with reference to the Fisheries on the coasts of Her Majesty's Possessions in North America, and as to any other questions between them affecting the relations of the United States towards those Possessions.

As the consideration of these matters would, however, involve investigations of a somewhat complicated nature, and as it was very desirable that they should be thoroughly examined, he was directed by Lord Granville to propose to the Government of the United States the appointment of a Joint High Commission which should be composed of members to be named by each Government, should hold its sessions at Washington, and should treat of and discuss the mode of settling the different questions arising out of the Fisheries, as well as all those affecting the relations of the United States towards Her Majesty's Possessions in North America.

To this note Mr. Fish replied on the 30th January of the same year, and whilst stating that the President shared with Her Majesty's Government the appreciation of the importance of a friendly and complete understanding between the two Governments with reference to the subjects specially suggested for the consideration of the proposed Joint High Commission, he added that it would be desirable to include in the deliberations of that Commission a consideration of the other questions then at ssue between the two Governments, particularly those known as the "Alabama" claims.

It was, thus, owing to the importance attached by Her Majesty's Government to the Fisheries question, and to their anxiety to come to a satisfactory settlement of the difficulties connected with it, that the negotiations were commenced which led to the organization of the Joint High Commission and ultimately to the Treaty of Washington. A large portion of the deliberations of that Commission was devoted to the difficult and long-standing question now under consideration, and after many proposals and counter-proposals, including offers on the part of the United States' Commissioners to grant commercial privileges far in excess of the mere remission of duty on fish and fish oil, in order that they might acquire for United States fishermen unrestricted access to the inshore waters of British North America, Articles XVIII to XXV and XXXII and XXXIII were at length agreed to, and constitute the authority under which the Halifax Commission acted.

Article XXII provided that—

"Inasmuch as it is asserted by the Government of Her Britannic Majesty that the privileges accorded to the citizens of the United States under Article XVIII of this Treaty are of greater value than those accorded by Articles XIX and XXI of this Treaty to the subjects of Her Britannic Majesty, and this assertion is not admitted by the Government of the United States, it is further agreed that Commissioners shall be appointed to determine, having regard to the privileges accorded by the United States to the subjects of Her Britannic Majesty, as stated in Articles XIX and XXI of this Treaty, the amount of any compensation which, in their opinion, ought to be paid by the Government of the United States to the Government of Her Britannic Majesty in return for the privileges accorded to the citizens of the United States under Article XVIII of this Treaty; and that any sum of money which the said Commissioners may so award shall be paid by the United States' Government, in a gross sum, within twelve months after such Award shall have been given."

The Acts necessary to enable the several Articles of the Treaty relating to the fisheries to be carried into effect were passed by the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain on the 6th August, 1872; by the Parliament of Canada on the 14th June, 1872; by the Legislature of Prince Edward Island (which did not at that time form part of the Dominion) on the 29th June, 1872, by the Colony of Newfoundland on the 28th March, 1874; and by the United States' Congress on the 25th February, 1873. So scrupulous, moreover, were Her Majesty's Government that United States' citizens should enjoy in the fullest degree the benefits secured to them under the Treaty, that United States' fishermen were admitted to the practical use of the inshore fishing grounds in advance of the formal Legislative Acts necessary for that purpose, and this concession was acknowledged by the Government of the United States as a "liberal and friendly act." Her Majesty's Government consider that it is important, in examining this subject, to bear in mind the distinction between that part of the Treaty relating to Fishery rights in British waters and the part relating to claims then pending on other heads. As regards the Fishery rights, the citizens of the United States were, by the Treaty, put into actual possession and enjoyment of them. That enjoyment has been had and cannot be recalled. Whether any and what sum was to be paid by the Government of the United States for the rights thus conceded was to be determined, and determined without appeal, by the Tribunal constituted under the Treaty.

United States fishermen having entered into the enjoyment of the privileges thus secured to them, it became necessary to take immediate steps for the constitution of the Commission appointed to meet at Halifax in the manner prescribed by the Treaty.

Various circumstances, however, with which your Government are familiar, contributed to occasion delay in the complete organization of the Commission, and it was not, therefore, until the 1st March, 1877, that an identic note was addressed to the Austro-Hungarian Ambassador in London by the Earl of Derby and by the United States' Minister in London, requesting that his Excellency would be pleased to name the third Commissioner in the manner provided for by Article XXIII of the Treaty. His Excellency thereupon named M. Maurice Delfosse, the Belgian Minister at Washington, and apprized the Governments of Great Britain, the United States, and Belgium of the selection thus made.

Her Britannic Majesty's Government having previously appointed Sir Alexander T. Galt to be their Commissioner, and Francis Clare Ford, Esq., to be their Agent, and the Government of the United States having similarly appointed the Honourable Ensign H. Kellogg to be their Commissioner, and the Honourable Dwight Foster to be their Agent, the constitution of the Commission was complete in accordance with the terms of the Treaty; and after previous communication between the three Commissioners, the 15th June, 1877, was fixed for the first day of meeting.

The Commission was accordingly organized by holding the first conference at the City of Halifax on that day, when all the Commissioners were present and produced their respective powers. The Honourable Dwight Foster and Mr. Ford were also present as Agents of their respective Governments.

M. Delfosse was then, upon the proposal of the United States' Commissioner, elected President of the Commission, and a Secretary having been appointed by him, the three Commissioners proceeded, in accordance with the XXIIIrd Article of the Treaty, to make and sign a solemn declaration that they would impartially and carefully examine and decide the matters referred to them to the best of their judgment and according to justice and equity.

The Commission then, after a meeting on the next day for the purpose of approving and signing the Protocol of the previous day's proceedings, adjourned until the 28th day of July, 1877.

The Commission having met pursuant to adjournment on the 28th day of July, the United States Agent named the Counsel retained on behalf of the United States, and at the next Conference, held on the 30th day of July, the Case of Her Majesty's Government was opened, and was concluded on the 18th day of September; that of the United States of America was opened on the 19th of the same month, and closed on the 24th day of October.

It is unnecessary that I should here recite each step in these lengthened proceedings: it will be sufficient to note that eighty-four witnesses in all were examined on behalf of Her Britannic Majesty's Government and seventy-eight on the part of the United States of America. These witnesses were subjected to the most searching cross-examination by Counsel of the greatest ability; and amongst those examined were to be found the names of many persons who, from their special knowledge of the subject, both practically and generally, were well qualified to express an opinion, and whose evidence was entitled to the greatest weight in the investigation of the matter.

Three hundred and nineteen affidavits were produced in support of the Case of Her Britannic Majesty's Government, and 280 in support of that of the United States; the deponents comprising those who were also in a position to give valuable and convincing testimony with regard to the Fisheries, but who from various causes were unable to give oral evidence before the Commission.

A voluminous mass of documentary and statistical matter was produced and submitted to the Commission on either side, and about fourteen entire days were devoted to the arguments of Counsel upon the whole case.

The Commission held in all seventy-eight sittings, of about four hours' duration each, and the proceedings terminated on the 23rd day of November, 1877, by the announcement of the following Award:—

"The undersigned Commissioners appointed under Articles XXII and XXIII of the Treaty of Washington of the 8th May, 1871, to determine, having regard to the privileges accorded by the United States to the subjects of Her Britannic Majesty, as stated in Articles XIX and XXI of said Treaty, the amount of any compensation which in their opinion ought to be paid by the Government of the United States to the Government of Her Britannic Majesty, in return for the privileges accorded to the citizens of the United States, under Article XVIII of the said Treaty;

"Having carefully and impartially examined the matters referred to them according to justice and equity, in conformity with the solemn declaration made and subscribed by them on the fifteenth day of June, one thousand eight hundred and seventy-seven;

"Award the sum of five millions five hundred thousand dollars, in gold, to be paid by the Government of the United States to the Government of Her Britannic Majesty, in accordance with the provisions of the said Treaty.

"Signed at Halifax, this twenty-third day of November, one thousand eight hundred and seventy-seven.

(Signed) "Maurice Delfosse.
"A. T. Galt."

"The United States' Commissioner is of opinion that the advantages accruing to Great Britain under the Treaty of Washington are greater than the advantages conferred on the United States by the said Treaty, and he cannot, therefore, concur in the conclusions announced by his colleagues.

"And the American Commissioner deems it his duty to state further that it is questionable whether it is competent for the Board to make an Award under the Treaty, except with the unanimous consent of its members.

(Signed) "E. H. Kellogg,
"Commissioner."

It was thus assuredly not without the most thorough and laborious investigation of the question submitted to their appreciation that a majority of the Commissioners arrived at the decision above quoted; and it must be observed that the whole of the proceedings were held in strict conformity with the terms of the Treaty of Washington, whilst the Award was given by a majority of the Commissioners in the very terms contained in Article XXII of the Treaty.

In the despatch which has been communicated to Her Majesty's Government, Mr. Evarts seeks to invalidate the Award, which is the result of this exhaustive investigation, upon the ground that, in estimating the claims of Great Britain, the Commissioners must be assumed to have taken into consideration circumstances which the Treaty of Washington had not referred to them. There is nothing upon the face of the Award which gives any countenance to the supposition that the Commissioners travelled beyond the limits assigned to them by the Treaty. Mr. Evarts' argument in favour of this contention is entirely deduced from what he considers to be the magnitude of the sum awarded. It is, he contends, so far in excess of what the United States' Government believe to be the true solution of the problem submitted by the Treaty, that some factor which the Treaty has not recognized must necessarily, in his opinion, have been imported into the calculation.

Mr. Evarts proceeds to give in detail the considerations by which, in his judgment, the result arrived at should be tested. He gives his reasons for believing that mackerel is the only fish to whose capture in the waters opened by Great Britain any value should be assigned, and that no account is to be taken of herring, halibut, cod, hake, pollack, or bait fishes. He computes the number of mackerel which the United States' fishermen have caught within a three-mile line from the shore during the years of the Treaty period which have expired; and infers from it the number which they are likely to catch within the same area during the interval that remains; and he concludes this branch of his argument by estimating, on various hypotheses, the profit which the United States' fisherman is likely to have made from the mackerel which he has probably caught. On the other side, he estimates at a high value the profit which the British fishermen have derived from the opening of the markets of the United States; and concludes that the sum fixed by the Award is so much larger than these considerations would have justified, that the United States' Government can only explain its magnitude on the assumption that the Commission has mistaken the question that was referred to it.

That Mr. Evarts' reasoning is powerful it is not necessary for me to say; nor, on the other hand, will he be surprised to hear that Her Majesty's Government still retain the belief that it is capable of refutation. But, in their opinion, they would not be justified in following him into the details of his argument. These very matters were examined at great length and with conscientious minuteness by the Commission whose Award is under discussion. The decision of the majority was given after full hearing of all the considerations that either side was able to advance; and that decision, within the limits of the matter submitted to them, is, under the Treaty, without appeal. The argument of Mr. Evarts amounts to a review of their Award upon the questions of fact and of pecuniary computation referred to them. He contends that the sum awarded is excessive; and that therefore the Award must have been arrived at by some illegitimate process. But to argue against the validity of an Award, solely on the ground that the conclusion arrived at by the Arbitrators on the very point referred to them is erroneous, is in effect the same thing as to dispute the judgment which they have formed upon the evidence.

Her Majesty's Government do not feel that it is their duty to put forward any opinion, adverse or favourable, to the decision which the majority of the Commissioners have passed upon the affidavits and depositions which they had to consider. Her Majesty's Government could not do so without undertaking the same laborious investigation as that which was performed by the Commission, a task for which the interval which has been left between October 10, the day on which Mr. Evarts' despatch was delivered to me, and November 23, the day on which the payment awarded is to be made, would certainly not suffice.

But they are precluded from passing in review the judgmen of the Commission by a far more serious disqualification. They cannot be judges of appeal in this cause, because they have been litigants. As litigants they have expressed the view upon the facts which they felt bound in that capacity to maintain. Their computations have been totally different in method and result from those which the American Counsel sustained, and which, in part, Mr. Evarts reiterates in his despatch. The interpretation which they have given to the data laid before the Tribunal has been in complete antagonism to his. They have been of opinion, and have insisted with all the force of argument that their Agents could command, that 15,000,000 dollars was the legitimate compensation which, under the Treaty, was their due. The majority of the Commissioners has decided to reduce that claim nearly by two-thirds. Having formally engaged to submit the matter to this arbitration, they do not think that it is open to them to inquire how it was that the Commission came to form an opinion upon their claims so widely different from their own. Still less can they admit that either side is entitled to treat this difference as ground for assuming that the Arbitrators have imported into their judgment considerations which the Treaty did not authorize them to entertain. Her Majesty's Government can only accept now, as on similar occasions they have accepted before, the decision of the Tribunal to which they have solemnly and voluntarily submitted.

At the close of his despatch Mr. Evarts refers to a consideration, which I ought not to pass over without observation, though he does not place it in the first rank among the objections which he raises against the Award. He calls attention to the fact that the Award of the Commission was not unanimous, and that in the Treaty of Washington no stipulation is, in this case, made that the decision of the majority is to be binding.

The opinion that, according to the Treaty of Washington, the Fishery Commission was incapable of pronouncing any decision unless its members were unanimous, is one in which Her Majesty's Government are unable to concur.

It is not difficult to produce from text-books, even of very recent date, authority for the doctrine that in International Arbitrations the majority of the Arbitrators binds the minority unless the contrary is expressed.

"Halleck's International Law," edited by Sir Sherstone Baker, 1878, says (Chap. xiv, Sect. 6) :—

"The following Rules, mostly derived from the Civil Law, have been applied to International Arbitrations where not otherwise provided in the Articles of Reference. If there be an uneven number the decision of a majority is conclusive."

Bluntschli (Sect. 493) says :—

"La décision est prise à la majorité des voix."

Calvo (i, p. 791), lays down :—

"A défaut d'obligations nettement tracées dans l'acte de compromis, les arbitres, pour s'acquitter de leur mandat, se guident d'après les règles tracées par le droit civil : ainsi ils doivent procéder conjointement, discuter et délibérer en commun, décider à la majorité."

I am not aware of any authorities who, in respect to International Arbitrations, could be quoted in the contrary sense; and it would not be difficult to show, by a reference to cases in the American as well as in the English Courts, that the same rule has always been judicially applied in the case of Arbitrations of a public nature.

The language and stipulations of the Treaty itself, so far as they are explicit upon the subject, point to a similar conclusion. Mr. Evarts, indeed, argues that the requirement of unanimity was intended, because, while it is not disclaimed in the case of the Fishery rights, it is disclaimed in the case of three other Arbitrating Tribunals set up by the Treaty. It is evident that, at most, this omission would have left the matter in uncertainty. The suggestion that the framers of the Treaty meant by their silence to prescribe a mode of proceeding which, before a Tribunal thus constituted, is unexampled, can only be accepted on the hypothesis that they were deliberately preparing an insoluble controversy for those by whom the Treaty was to be executed.

It appears to me that if the language employed in the case of the other Tribunals set up by the Treaty be examined carefully a more probable solution of the difficulty may be found. The words used in each case are somewhat peculiar, and lend themselves to the supposition that what the draftsman was thinking of when he employed them was not the question whether unanimity should or should not be required, but under what circumstances the Tribunal should be held to be fully constituted for the purpose of giving a decision. It was obvious that in the course of a protracted and manifold inquiry, in which questions would constantly come up for decision, it was a matter of great practical importance to lay down whether for each decision the presence of the whole Tribunal was required, or whether any condition might be prescribed under which, in spite of the absence of any one member from illness or other cause, a valid decision might yet be given.

The difficulty of conducting, on the more rigid rule, a lengthened inquiry, involving frequent decisions, is a matter of ordinary experience. A common mode of escape from it is to fix some number, short of the entire complement, as the quorum or minimum number which must be present to give validity to a decision. The framers of the Washington Treaty adopted an arrangement somewhat different in form, but similar in effect. They laid down that the decisions should be valid so long as they were adopted by a number not less than the majority of the whole body. That this is the meaning of the three passages in which the word majority appears may be gathered both from the expressions themselves and from the connection in which they are found. The following is a portion of the first paragraph of Article XIII on the Commission of Civil War Claims :—

"They shall be bound to receive and consider all written documents or statements which may be presented to them by or on behalf of the respective Governments in support of, or in answer to, any claims; and to hear, if required, one person on each side, on behalf of each Government, as Counsel, or Agent for such Government, on each and every separate claim. A majority of the Commissioners shall be sufficient for an Award in each case."

Here it is evident that the multiplicity of the claims was the matter specially under consideration; and that "the sufficiency of a majority of the Commission for an Award" was stipulated with a view to the possible delay which the requirement of a full Tribunal in each case might cause. That the majority should be sufficient for an Award in the case of one member being absent was a rule which it was necessary to lay down; for where frequent decisions are not required, provisions of the kind are not customary. On the other hand, it is a universal practice that upon public Arbitrations thus constituted, in case of difference of opinion, the majority shall prevail. It is, therefore, consistent with sound principles of interpretation, to assume that the phrase was meant to apply to the point on which a provision was necessary, and not to the point on which a provision was superfluous.

The same reasoning is applicable to the case of the Geneva Tribunal, which had to decide on the alleged failure of neutral duty in Great Britain as to seventeen different ships, besides questions arising in respect to damages. The Board of Assessors which was provided in case the Geneva Tribunal had not awarded a gross sum was a Commission of Claims which would have had to adjudicate upon a very large number of individual losses. In these cases, therefore, as in that which has been just adverted to, the Joint High Commission took a natural and a judicious course in providing that a decision should not be invalid by reason of the absence of a member of the Tribunal, so long as a majority concurred in the Award.

On the other hand, no such provision was necessary in the case of the Halifax Commission, which, beyond questions of procedure, had but one issue before it, and but one decision to pronounce. In this case it was not necessary to lay down, as in the other cases, that "a majority of the Commissioners should be sufficient for an Award," or that "all questions should be decided by a majority of all the Arbitrators."

This construction of the Treaty appears to Her Majesty's Government more natural and more respectful to the Joint High Commission than the assumption that, having resolved to leave one particular case to a mode of Arbitration which was entirely novel, and wholly unlikely to issue in a decision, they carefully abstained from the use of any words to indicate the unusual resolution they had formed.

It further appears to Her Majesty's Government that a distinct intimation of the true meaning of the Joint High Commission in respect to the Fishery Award is to be found in the composition of the Tribunal which they adopted. This constitution is consistent with the intention that the majority should decide; it is not consistent with the supposed intention that the dissent of one Commissioner should prevent any decision from being pronounced. The XXIIIrd Article of the Treaty makes the following provision for the constitution of the Tribunal:—

"The Commissioners referred to in the preceding Article shall be appointed in the following manner, that is to say:—

"One Commissioner shall be named by Her Britannic Majesty, one by the President of the United States, and a third by Her Britannic Majesty and the President of the United States conjointly; and in case the third Commissioner shall not have been so named within a period of three months from the date when this Article shall take effect, then the third Commissioner shall be named by the Representative at London of His Majesty the Emperor of Austria and King of Hungary. In case of the death, absence, or incapacity of any Commissioner, or in the event of any Commissioner omitting or ceasing to act, the vacancy shall be filled in the manner hereinbefore provided for making the original appointment, the period of three months in case of such substitution being calculated from the date of the happening of the vacancy.

"The Commissioners so named shall meet in the City of Halifax, in the Province of Nova Scotia, at the earliest convenient period after they have been respectively named, and shall, before proceeding to any business, make and subscribe a solemn declaration that they will impartially and carefully examine and decide the matters referred to them to the best of their judgment, and according to justice and equity; and such declaration shall be entered on the record of their proceedings.

"Each of the High Contracting Parties shall also name one person to attend the Commission as its Agent, to represent it generally in all matters connected with the Commission."

This is the ordinary form of Arbitration in which each side chooses an Arbitrator, and an umpire is chosen by an indifferent party to decide between the two. The appointment of the umpire is of no utility, the precautions for securing his impartiality are unmeaning, if the adverse vote of one of the Arbitrators may deprive his decision of all force and effect.

In ordinary phraseology the decision of a body of members means a decision come to by a majority of voices. In the common use and understanding of language, this is the interpretation which suggests itself to every reader, when it is stated that a number of men have expressed an opinion or have arrived at a determination. The requirement of unanimity is the exception, and therefore can only be conveyed by an explicit statement. There are, of course, well-known exceptions, as in the case of trial by jury. But in such cases the constitution of the deciding body is diametrically opposed to that adopted in the case of the Fishery Commission. Instead of a provision that two-thirds shall be named by the parties to the suit, the most elaborate precautions are taken that the whole body shall be unbiassed. It is obvious that when unanimity is to be required, when any one member of the deciding body is to have the power of nullifying all the proceedings and preventing a decision, such an arrangement will only be endurable on the condition that each member shall be so chosen as to be as far as possible free from any inclination to exercise that power on one side rather than on the other. If a jury were constituted on the principle that the Plaintiff should choose one-third of it and the Defendant another third, very few persons would be found to expose themselves to the cost of an action at law. Had it been known five years ago that an Award would be prevented by the dissent of one of the members of an arbitration constituted on the same principle, though I do not venture to conjecture what the course of the United States' Government would have been, I feel confident that England would have declined to enter upon so unfruitful a litigation.

Her Majesty's Government may appeal to a cogent proof that in accepting this Arbitration they did not contemplate that the Award was liable to be prevented by the requirement of unanimity. Believing, in agreement with the majority of the Commission, that they were heavy losers by the exchange of concessions contained in Articles XVIII, XIX, and XXI of the Treaty, they nevertheless have for five years allowed those concessions to come into force, trusting to the compensation which the Commission would give to them. That they have done so is a sufficient proof that they did not anticipate a construction of the Treaty which would make the delivery of an Award almost impossible. A valuable property has actually passed into the enjoyment of others, and cannot be recalled The price to be paid for it was to be determined later by a Tribunal agreed upon between the parties. Is it conceivable that they should have deliberately constituted a Tribunal for this purpose, in which a decision could be wholly prevented by the dissent of a member nominated by the party to whom the property had passed?

Reciprocating cordially the courteous and friendly sentiments by which Mr. Evarts' language is inspired, Her Majesty's Government feel confident that the United States' Government will not, upon reflection, see in the considerations which have been advanced any sufficient reason for treating as a nullity the decision to which the majority of the Commission have arrived.

My Lord,

I HAVE been instructed by the President of the United States to tender to Her Majesty's Government the sum of 5,500,000 dollars in gold coin, this being the sum named by the two concurring members of the Fisheries Commission (lately sitting at Halifax under authority imparted thereto by the Treaty of Washington), to be paid by the Government of the United States to the Government of Her Britannic Majesty.

I am also instructed by the President to say that such payment is made upon the ground that the Government of the United States desires to place the maintenance of good faith in Treaties, and the security and value of arbitration between nations, above all question in its relations with Her Britannic Majesty's Government, as with all other Governments.

Under this motive, the Government of the United States decides to separate the question of withholding payment from the considerations touching the obligation of this payment which have been presented to Her Majesty's Government in correspondence, and which it reserves and insists upon.

I am, besides, instructed by the President to say that the Government of the United States deems it of the greatest importance to the common and friendly interests of the two Governments, in all future treatment of any questions relating to the North American Fisheries, that Her Britannic Majesty's Government should be distinctly advised that the Government of the United States cannot accept the result of the Halifax Commission as furnishing any just measure of the value of a participation by our citizens in the inshore fisheries of the British provinces; and it protests against the actual payment now made being considered by Her Majesty's Government as, in any sense, an acquiescence in such measure, or as warranting any inference to that effect.

Commission appointing the Honorable Sir A. T. Galt, K.C.M.G., to be High Commissioner for Canada.

Correspondence between the Imperial and Canadian Governments relative to the Appointment of Sir A. T. Galt as High Commissioner to represent Canada in England and to reside in London.

No. 1.

THE RIGHT HON. SIR MICHAEL HICKS BEACH, BART., to THE MARQUIS OF LORNE, K.T.

MY LORD, Downing Street, November 1, 1879.

I RECEIVED from your Ministers, during their recent visit to England, a confidential memorandum, of which I enclose a printed copy, urging the necessity of providing further means for constant and confidential communication between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of Canada, and recommending that a representative of the latter Government should be appointed to reside permanently in London, and that he should be granted a quasi-diplomatic position.

2. Her Majesty's Government are very sensible of the advantage which might result from the appointment by the Dominion Government of a gentleman who, residing in this country, would be fully empowered to explain their views on the various important questions connected with Canada, which, from time to time, demand consideration, and which might often be more satisfactorily, as well as more expeditiously, dealt with, if such means of oral communication were provided. Looking, however, to the position of Canada as an integral portion of the empire, the relations of such a person with Her Majesty's Government would not be correctly defined as being of a diplomatic character, and while Her Majesty's Government would readily accord to him a status in every way worthy of his important functions, his position would necessarily be more analogous to that of an officer in the home service, than to that of a Minister at a foreign court.

3. He would therefore primarily communicate with this Department on the various subjects which might be entrusted to him, and while Her Majesty's Government would readily avail themselves of any information he might afford, and give the fullest consideration to any representations he might make on behalf of the Canadian Government, it would, of course, rest with the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs to determine in each case in what precise capacity his services might best be rendered in the event of any negotiations with a foreign court, on subjects affecting the interests of the Dominion. In some instances, for example, it might be desirable for him to remain in London and advise with Her Majesty's Government there, while in other cases he might, in accordance with the precedents which have been quoted, be more usefully engaged in assisting Her Majesty's representatives abroad.

4. I have deemed it necessary to refer to these details because it is desirable that there should be no misunderstanding as to the precise position which could be accorded by Her Majesty's Governments to an officer holding an appointment which the Government of Canada propose to establish, but I do not anticipate that the views which I have expressed will be felt by your Ministers as placing any insuperable difficulty in the way of the practical realization of their wishes; and I would only add that if such an appointment should be decided upon, it would seem, for the reasons I have stated, more appropriate that the officer should be designated by the title of "Dominion" or "Canadian Commissioner" than by any title implying a diplomatic status or position.

Enclosure in No. 1.

MEMORANDUM.

The policy of the Empire having devolved upon Canada the administration of the whole of British North America, and the care and protection of British interests therein, experience is daily showing the necessity of providing the means of constant and confidential communication between Her Majesty's Government and Her local advisers in Canada, in extension of the more formal relations subsisting through the correspondence of the Secretary of State for the Colonies with the Governor General.

Canada has ceased to occupy the position of an ordinary possession of the Crown. She exists in the form of a powerful Central Government, having already no less than seven subordinate local executive and legislative systems, soon to be largely augmented by the development of the vast regions lying between Lake Superior and the Rocky Mountains. Her Central Government is becoming even more responsible than the Imperial Government for the maintenance of international relations towards the United States, a subject which will yearly require greater prudence and care, as the populations of the two countries extend along, and mingle across the vast frontier line, three thousand miles in length.

The Canadian Government has, in short, become the trustee for the Empire at large, or half the continent of North America, and is bound to administer the trust not only for the benefit of the present limited population, but with the intention and policy of making the great resources of the Dominion in the highest measure promotive of the interests of the British people and the dignity of the Crown.

The organisation, government, and settlement of the vast regions of British North America are all subjects which the Canadian Government must desire to deal with in the common interest of all, while in trade and commerce it is daily becoming more evident that advantage would arise in definitely settling such arrangements between the United Kingdom and her vast dependency as may produce more thorough identity of interest and more uniform policy towards each other, and towards foreign nations.

It appears to the Canadian Government eminently desirable to provide for the fullest and most frank interchange of views with Her Majesty's Government, and for the thorough appreciation of the policy of Canada on all points of general interest. Otherwise there appears to be danger of a feeling growing up of indifference, if not of actual antagonism and irritation on both sides. The idea must be avoided that the connection of Canada with the British Empire is only temporary and unabiding, instead of being designed to strengthen and confirm the maintenance of British influence and power.

It is now being found in practice that there are constantly questions arising, connected with the administration of affairs in Canada, requiring discussions in a mode, and to an extent wholly impracticable by the ordinary channel of correspondence through the Governor General; and periodical visits have to be made to London for this purpose by the important members of the Canadian Government, entailing serious inconvenience. At this moment the following subjects are thus under consideration: The Pacific Railway, and important collateral subjects—Treaties of Commerce with France and Spain—Esquimault Graving Dock—Military defence of Canada generally, and of British Columbia more especially—while the fishery and commercial clauses of the Washington Treaty may, at any moment, be re-opened by the United States; with many other matters of importance connected with the better organisation of the military force of the Dominion.

It is manifestly impossible that the views of the Canadian Government on such subjects can be submitted for the intelligent consideration of Her Majesty's Government in any other mode that that of personal communication; and as the subjects themselves relate to different departments of administration, the necessity arises for the absence from their posts at this moment of not less than three Ministers.

It is further submitted that the very large and rapidly augmenting commerce of Canada, and the increasing extent of her trade with foreign nations, is proving the absolute need of direct negotiations with them for the proper protection of her interests. In most of the treaties of commerce entered into by England, reference has only been had to their effect on the United Kingdom; and the Colonies are excluded from their operation, a fact which has been attended with most unfortunate results to Canada, as relates to France. This is, to a certain extent, unavoidable, in consequence of the control of all customs having been granted to Canada; but a necessity has thus arisen for providing separate and distinct trade conventions with all foreign powers with whom Canada has distinct trade. With the different views held by the Parliament of Canada on such subjects, from those of Her Majesty's Government, there is a manifest difficulty in asking the latter to become responsible for the representations required to be made, and foreign governments find it difficult to understand our present system. The Canadian Government therefore submit that when occasion requires such negotiations to be undertaken, Her Majesty's Government should advise Her Majesty specially to accredit the representative of Canada to the foreign court, by association for the special object, with the resident Minister or other Imperial negotiator.

The suggestion is merely asking Her Majesty's Government to establish as a rule the precedent which was created in 1871, when Sir John A. Macdonald was made a member of the Joint High Commission to Washington, and later, in 1874, when

Mr. George Brown was officially associated with Sir Edward Thornton, at the instance of the Canadian Government, for the purpose of negotiating a Treaty of Commerce between Canada and the United States.

With the view of giving effect to the foregoing policy, the Government of Canada suggests that Her Majesty's Government should consent to receive an official representative from Canada for the purpose of securing the most early and confidential communication of their views on all subjects; and that, when so requested, the proposed Minister should be duly accredited to Foreign Courts in the manner above mentioned.

The Canadian Government desires to surround the proposed appointment with all the importance which should attach to an official charged with such high duties. He should, therefore, be selected from the Queen's Privy Council for Canada, and specially entrusted with the general supervision of all the political, material and financial interests of Canada in England, subject to instructions from his Government.

The dignity of the office, and the advantage of its proper recognition, especially at Foreign Courts, appear to require a more expressive title than that of Agent-General; it is therefore suggested that the designation should be Resident Minister, or such other name of equal import as Her Majesty's Government may suggest.

The Canadian Government attaches great importance to this matter, and hopes that Her Majesty's Government will see no insuperable difficulty in giving the Canadian Representative a quasi-diplomatic position at the Court of St. James, with the social advantages of such a rank and position.

SIR,

I HAVE the honour to transmit herewith, for your consideration, a copy of an approved report of a Committee of the Privy Council respecting the appointment of a Canadian Representative to reside in England, to be styled "High Comissioner of Canada," to confer with Her Majesty's Government on all important matters affecting the Dominion, which formed the subject of your despatch of the 1st November last.*

Enclosure in No. 2.

COPY of a REPORT of a COMMITTEE of the HONOURABLE THE PRIVY COUNCIL for CANADA, approved by HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR GENERAL, on the 22nd December 1879.

The Committee of Council have had under consideration the despatch from the Right Honourable the Secretary of State for the Colonies, dated 1st November last, upon the confidential memorandum of Sir John Macdonald, Sir Leonard Tilley, and Sir Charles Tupper, urging the necessity of providing further means for constant and confidential communication with Her Majesty's Government, and also for the representation of Canada in the future negotiation of Treaties of Commerce with foreign nations.

The Committee desire to express their gratification at the manner in which their views have been met by Her Majesty's Government, and they share in the conviction of Sir Michael Hicks Beach, that no insuperable difficulty exists in the realization of their wishes.

The Committee recognise the fact that Canada cannot, as an integral portion of the Empire, maintain relations of a strictly diplomatic character. But they respectfully submit that while this is true as respects foreign nations, it does not accurately represent the actual state of facts in regard to the United Kingdom. Her Majesty's Government is unquestionably the supreme governing power of the Empire, but, under the British

* No. 1.

North America Act, self-governing powers have been conferred upon Canada in many most important respects, and Her Majesty's Government may on these points be more correctly defined as representing the United Kingdom than the Empire at large. In considering many questions of the highest importance, such as the commercial and fiscal policy of the Dominion as affecting the United Kingdom, the promotion of Imperial interests in the administration and settlement of the interior of the Continent, and on many other subjects, indeed on all matters of internal concern, the Imperial Government and Parliament have so far transferred to Canada an independent control that their discussion and settlement have become subjects for mutual assent and concert, and thereby have, it is thought, assumed a quasi-diplomatic character as between Her Majesty's Government representing the United Kingdom per se and the Dominion, without in any manner derogating from their general authority as rulers of the entire Empire.

The Committee would further respectively submit, in elucidation of the views contained in the memorandum, that the Government of Canada, in respect of negotiations with foreign powers, in no respect desire to be placed in the position of independent negotiators. On the contrary, they are fully convinced that it is through the influence and support of Her Majesty's Government, and by the effective use of their carefully trained and thorough diplomatic service that they can alone look for any measure of success. And it is with the view most thoroughly to satisfy foreign governments of the identity of interests of Her Majesty with themselves that they have so strongly sought the most official recognition possible for their representative. And in making their suggestion on this point, the Committee have had in mind the position assigned to the delegates from Canada in 1865 and 1866, which was that of belonging to the diplomatic corps, taking precedence after the foreign Ministers.

As the representative of Governor General and Executive Government of Canada, and especially when dealing with negotiations with any foreign powers, the duties of the proposed officer will, the Committee consider, be of a nature more analogous to diplomatic than to home service, but they confidently leave this subject in the hands of Her Majesty's Government, resting on the assurances conveyed in the despatch under consideration that Her Majesty's Government will accord to their representative a status in every way worthy of his important functions.

The officer will certainly primarily communicate with the Secretary of State for the Colonies on the various subjects on which he may receive instructions to address Her Majesty's Government, and the Committee do not doubt that every consideration will be given to such representations as he may make on behalf of the Canadian Government.

The Committee entirely agree that it will rest with the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs to determine in each case in what precise capacity the services of the Canadian Officer can be best rendered in the event of negotiations with Foreign Courts on subjects affecting the interests of the Dominion. Manifestly it would not be the desire of the Canadian Government, that in every case their representative should be personally associated with the British Minister at the Foreign Courts, but only in such cases as might from their importance require it. On this point the Committee are fully assured that the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs will meet their reasonable wishes as has been done in the cases cited.

The Committee understand, however, that in all cases of commercial treaties Her Majesty's Government will direct early communication to be made to the Canadian representative so as to permit him to take the instructions of his Government, and to make such representations as may be called for to Her Majesty's Government.

With reference to the designation of the proposed officer the Committee desire to accept the suggestion of Her Majesty's Government. As, however, Commissioners are very frequently appointed for special services of minor importance, it is considered desirable to make the appointment to London distinctive by styling the officer "High Commissioner of Canada in London," the Committee on this point being convinced that in reference especially to Foreign Governments the designation and status are of real importance.

It is intended to create the office under statute at the next Session of the Canadian Parliament; but should the public service require an earlier appointment, the Committee confidently rely on Her Majesty's Government giving immediate effect to the views expressed in the despatch from the Secretary of State for the Colonies, which, it is believed, are correctly understood by the Canadian Government.

Ottawa, May 12, 1880.

I Robert Le Moine, Esquire, Clerk of the Parliaments, and Custodian of the Statutes of the Parliament of the Dominion of Canada, certify the subjoined to be a true copy of the original enactment passed by the Senate and House of Commons in the 2nd Session of the fourth Parliament, held in the forty-third year of Her Majesty's Reign, and assented to in the Queen's name, by the Governor General, on Friday the 7th day of May 1880.

Clerk of the Parliaments.

Cap. 11.

An Act for the Appointment of a Resident Representative Agent for Canada in the United Kingdom.

Whereas the growing and varied interests of the Dominion render it expedient that Canada should appoint a Representative Agent in the United Kingdom, to watch over those interests, who shall be duly accredited to Her Majesty's Imperial Government; therefore Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:—

1. The Governor may, under the Great Seal of Canada, from time to time appoint an officer to be called "The High Commissioner for Canada," who shall hold office during pleasure.

2. It shall be the duty of the High Commissioner:

(1.) To act as Representative and Resident Agent of the Dominion in the United Kingdom, and in that capacity to execute such powers and to perform such duties as may from time to time be conferred upon and assigned to him by the Governor in Council:

(2.) To take the charge, supervision and control of the immigration offices and agencies in the United Kingdom, under the Minister of Agriculture:

(3.) To carry out such instructions as he may from time to time receive from the Governor in Council respecting the commercial, financial and general interests of the Dominion in the United Kingdom and elsewhere.

3. The High Commissioner shall receive a salary of not more than $10,000 per annum, and the same shall be payable out of any unappropriated moneys forming part of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

COMMISSION appointing the Honourable SIR ALEXANDER TILLOCH GALT, G.C.M.G., to be High Commissioner for Canada.

(L.S.)

VICTORIA, by the grace of God, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland Queen, Defender of the Faith, &c. &c. &c.

To the Honourable Sir Alexander Tilloch Galt, Knight Grand Cross of our Most Distinguished Order of Saint Michael and Saint George.

Greeting.

WHEREAS it is in and by an Act of the Parliament of Canada, passed in the forty-third year of our reign, chaptered eleven, and intituled "An Act for the appointment of a Resident Representative Agent for Canada in the United Kingdom," amongst other things, in effect enacted that the Governor may under the Great Seal of Canada from time to time appoint an officer to be called "The High Commissioner for Canada," who shall hold office during pleasure. And further, that it shall be the duty of the High Commissioner to act as Representative and Resident Agent of the Dominion in the United Kingdom, and in that capacity to execute such powers and to perform such duties as may from time to time be conferred upon and assigned to him by the Governor in Council. To take the charge, supervision, and control of the Immigration Offices and Agencies in the United Kingdom, under the Minister of Agriculture. To carry out such instructions as he may from time to time receive from the Governor in Council respecting the commercial, financial, and general interests of the Dominion in the United Kingdom and elsewhere.

Know you, that reposing trust and confidence in the loyalty, integrity, and ability of you the said Sir Alexander Tilloch Galt, We do hereby nominate and appoint you the said Sir Alexander Tilloch Galt to be the High Commissioner for Canada,

To have, hold, exercise, and enjoy the said office unto you the said Sir Alexander Tilloch Galt, with all and every the duties, powers, rights, authority, privileges, emoluments, and advantages unto the said office of right and by law appertaining during pleasure.

CHAPTER 16.

AN ACT respecting the Traffic in INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

[Assented to 10*th May* 1878.]

WHEREAS it is very desirable to promote temperance in the Dominion, and that there should be uniform legislation in all the Provinces respecting the traffic in intoxicating liquors. Preamble.

Therefore Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:

PRELIMINARY.

1. This Act may be cited as "The Canada Temperance Act, 1878." Short title.

2. In this Act, the expression "intoxicating liquor" means and comprehends any and every spirituous or malt liquor, and every wine, and any and every combination of liquors or drinks that is intoxicating; and the word "county" includes every town, township, parish, and other division or municipality, except a city, within the territorial limits of the county, and also a union of counties where united for municipal purposes. Interpretation.

3. Sections one, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, and ten of the Act of the Legislature of the late Province of Canada, passed in the Session thereof held in the twenty-seventh and twenty eighth years of Her Majesty's Reign, and chaptered eighteen, and to be cited as "The Temperance Act of 1864," are hereby repealed from and after the passing of this Act, as to every municipality within the limits of the said late Province of Canada in which no bye-law passed and approved, or adopted and passed, under the authority and for the enforcement of the said Act. Repeal of certain sections of Act of the Province of Canada, 27 & 28 Vict. c. 18, as to municipalities in which no bye-law has been passed.

(a.) Is then in force, or

(b.) Is then only not in force for want of the delivery of a copy thereof to the proper officer, or

(c.) Is then suspended as to its operation until the expiration of the then existing licenses.

2. And as to every municipality within the limits of the said late Province of Canada in which a by-law passed and approved, or adopted and passed, under the authority and for the enforcement of the said Act is at the time of the passing of this Act. And as to municipalities in which a bye-law has been passed.

(a.) In force, or

(b.) Only not in force for want of the delivery of a copy thereof to the proper officer, or

 (c.) Suspended

(c.) Suspended as to its operation until the expiration of the then existing licenses;

the said sections one, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, and ten of the said Act shall be repealed upon, from and after the day next following the day on which such bye-law is repealed under the provisions of the said Act, or of this Act;

Proviso: if such a municipality is included in a county or city in which the second part is brought into force.

Provided always that if such municipality be included in the limits of, or have the same limits as any county or city in which the second part of this Act is brought into force before the repeal of such bye-law, then such bye-law shall thereupon ipso facto become and be null and void and of no effect whatever, and the said sections one, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, and ten of the said Act shall be repealed upon, from and after the day on which the said second part of this Act comes into force and takes effect in such county or city; but no repeal of the said Act under the provisions of this section shall affect any act done or any right or right of action existing, accruing, accrued or established, or any proceedings commenced, or any penalty or forfeiture incurred under its provisions before the time when such repeal takes effect.

FIRST PART.

Proceedings for bringing the Second Part of this Act into Force.

Form of petition to Governor General.

4. Any petition to the Governor General in Council for the bringing of the second part of this Act into force in any county or city may be in the form in Schedule A. to this Act, or in words to the same effect.

Form of notice of desire to have votes of electors taken.

5. Such petition may be embodied as in Schedule A. to this Act, in a notice in writing addressed to the Secretary of State for Canada, and signed by electors qualified and competent to vote at the election of a member of the House of Commons in the county or city, to the effect that the signers desire that the votes of all such electors, hereinafter termed electors, be taken for and against the adoption of the petition.

Evidence of notice being given by one-fourth of electors.

6. Together with, or in addition to, every such notice, there shall be laid before the Secretary of State evidence that there are appended to it the genuine signatures of at least one-fourth in number of all the electors in the county or city named in it, and that such notice has been deposited in the office of the sheriff or registrar of deeds of or in the county or city, for public examination, by any parties, for ten days preceding its being laid before the Secretary of State; and that two weeks' previous notice of such deposit had been given in two newspapers published in or nearest to the county or city, and by at least two insertions in each paper.

In that case a proclamation may issue.

7. In case it appears by evidence to the satisfaction of the Governor General in Council that any such notice has appended to it the genuine signatures of one-fourth or more of all the electors in the county or city named in it, and has been duly deposited as aforesaid, after notice as aforesaid, his Excellency in Council may issue a proclamation under this part of this Act.

Proclamation to be published.

8. Such proclamation shall be inserted at least three times in the "Canada Gazette," and three times in the Official Gazette of the Province in which the county or city is situated.

What to be set forth in proclamation.

9. In such proclamation there may be set forth:—

(a.) The notice in full, with the proposed petition embodied in it;

(b.) The number of the signatures to the notice;

(c.) The day on which the poll for taking the votes of the electors for and against the petition will be held;

(d.) That such votes will be taken between the hours of nine o'clock in the forenoon and five o'clock in the afternoon of that day, and by ballot;

(e.) The name of the sheriff, registrar, or other person appointed returning officer for the purpose of taking, on that day, the votes of the electors for for and against the petition, and of afterwards summing up the same and making a return of the result to the Governor General in Council;

(f.) The power of the returning officer to appoint a deputy returning officer at and for each polling place or station;

(g.) The place where, and the day and hour when, the returning officer will appoint persons to attend at the various polling stations, and at the final summing up of the votes on behalf of the persons interested in, and promoting or opposing respectively, the adoption of the petition;

(h.) The place where, and the day and hour when, the votes of the electors will be summed up, and the result of the polling declared by the returning officer;

(i.) The day on which, in the event of the petition being adopted by the electors, the second part of this Act will go into force in the county or city in question;

And any such further particulars with reference to the taking and summing up of the votes of the electors as the Governor General in Council may see fit to insert therein:

No polling on certain days.

2. But no polling of votes under this Act shall be held in any city, county, or district on the same day that any election may take place in such city, county or district for members to serve in the Parliament of Canada or in any of the local legislatures of the Dominion.

Who may be appointed returning officers.

10. Either the sheriff or the registrar of deeds, or one of the sheriffs, or one of the registrars of deeds for the county or city, or for a portion of the county or city in which the poll is to be held, or the nearest sheriff or registrar, or any other person may be appointed returning officer in any case under this part of this Act; and the naming of any person in any proclamation issued under this Act shall be a sufficient appointment, and sufficient evidence of the appointment of such person as returning officer for the purposes mentioned in the proclamation.

Returning officer to take oath of office.

11. On receiving a copy of the proclamation, the returning officer shall forthwith endorse thereon the date at which he shall have received the same; and before taking any further action thereon he shall take before a justice of the peace the oath of office in the form of Schedule B. to this Act.

12. All persons qualified to vote at the election of a member of the House of Commons in the county or city to which any proclamation issued under this Act relates on the day on which a poll is held in compliance with such proclamation, and no others, shall be qualified to vote and to have their votes polled on that day, for or against the adoption of the petition mentioned in such proclamation.

Returning officer to ascertain who are qualified to vote.

13. The returning officer shall ascertain from the lists of voters, which, under the provisions of this Act, are to be used at the polling of votes—and, in any county or city where there are voters entitled to vote but there are no lists of voters, from such other information as may be within his reach—the number of, or probable number of persons qualified to vote in each town, parish, township, local municipality, or other locality in the county or ward in the city where voters are so entiled to vote; and if such town, parish, township, local municipality, or other locality, or such ward, has not been subdivided for electoral purposes into polling districts by the Legislature, or by the local authorities under the legislation of the Province wherein such county or city is situate, or by the returning officer at the then last election of a member of the House of Commons in the county or city, he shall subdivide such town, parish, township, local municipality, or other locality in the county, or ward in the city, into polling districts in a convenient manner, so that there shall be at least one polling district for every 200 voters; and he shall also fix a polling station in a central and convenient place in each polling district; and the returning officer may in his discretion grant such additional polling places in such polling districts as the extent of the district and the remoteness of any body of its voters from the polling place may render necessary, although the voters thereof may be less than the number above specified:

To subdivide localities into polling districts.

And fix a polling station, or more, in each polling district.

Returning officer to post up notices indicating polling stations and limits of polling districts.

2. The returning officer shall then, eight days at least before the day on which the poll for taking the votes of the electors for and against the petition is to be held, by a notice under his hand, indicate, with reference to the holding of such poll, the several polling stations fixed by him, and the territorial limits to which they shall respectively apply, and shall cause the said notice to be posted up at four of the most prominent and conspicuous places in each polling district.

Further duties of returning officer.

14. It shall further be the duty of every person so appointed returning officer :—

Deputies.

Firstly. To appoint, by a commission under his hand, in the form Schedule C. to this Act, one deputy returning officer for each polling district comprised in the county or city, who shall, before acting as such, take before the returning officer, or a justice of the peace, the oath of office in the form Schedule D. to this Act ;

Lists of voters.

Secondly. To furnish each deputy returning officer with a copy of the list, or of such portion of the list of voters, as contains the names, arranged alphabetically, of the electors qualified to vote at the election of a member of the House of Commons at the polling station for which he is appointed, such copy being first certified by himself, or by the proper custodian of the lists from which such copies are taken ;

Ballot boxes.

Thirdly. To deliver to each deputy returning officer, eight days at least before the polling day, a ballot box to receive the ballot papers of the voters, which ballot box shall be made of some durable material, with one lock and key, and a slit or narrow opening in the top, and so constructed that the ballot papers may be introduced therein, but cannot be withdrawn therefrom without the box being unlocked ;

Ballot papers.

Fourthly. To furnish each deputy returning officer with a sufficient number of ballot papers (all being of the same description, and as nearly as possible alike), to supply the number of voters on the list of such polling district, and with the necessary materials for voters to mark their ballot papers ;

Directions.

Fifthly. To furnish to each deputy returning officer at least ten copies of printed directions for the guidance of voters in voting, which printed directions the deputy returning officer shall, before or at the opening of the poll, on the day of polling, cause to be posted up in some conspicuous places outside of the polling station, and also in each compartment of the polling station.

Obtaining lists of voters.

15. The returning officer shall obtain the different lists of voters, or copies or extracts thereof, from the registrars, city or town clerks, clerks of the peace, or such other officers as may by law be the proper custodians of such lists, or of duly certified duplicates or copies thereof ; and the list of voters which would be used at an election of a member of the House of Commons in the same district at the same time shall be the lists of voters which shall be used at every polling of votes under the provisions of this Act ; and every such officer who shall omit or refuse to furnish such lists, copies or extracts of the voters' lists within a reasonable time to the returning officer requiring the same, shall incur a penalty of not less than 200 and not exceeding 2,000 dollars.

Penalty for refusing to furnish lists.

If ballot box be not furnished.

16. Whenever the returning officer fails to furnish to the deputy returning officer in any polling district the ballot box, within the time prescribed by this Act, it shall be the duty of such deputy returning officer in such polling district to cause one to be made.

Form of ballot papers.

17. The ballot of each voter shall be a printed paper, in this Act called a ballot paper, with a counterfoil, and the ballot paper and counterfoil shall be according to the form of Schedule E. to this Act.

Form of directions.

18. The printed directions to be furnished to the deputy returning officers shall be according to the form of Schedule F. to this Act.

Appointment of agents in each interest.

19. At the place and time named for that purpose in the proclamation, the returning officer shall, by an instrument in writing signed by him, appoint from and out of such persons as may apply to him to be so appointed, one person to attend at each polling station, and two persons to attend at the final summing up up of the votes, as agents on behalf of the persons interested in and desirous of promoting the adoption of the petition, and one person to attend at each polling station, and two persons to attend at the final summing up of the votes as agents on behalf of the persons interested in and desirous of opposing the adoption of the petition.

Form of oath of person to be appointed agent.

20. Before any person is so appointed he shall make and subscribe, before the returning officer or any deputy returning officer, a declaration, in the form of Schedule G. to this Act, to the effect that he is interested in and desirous of promoting, or of opposing (as the case may be) the adoption of the petition.

Agent to produce appointment.

21. Every person so appointed, before being admitted to the polling station, or to the final summing up of the votes, as the case may be, shall produce to the deputy returning officer his written appointment.

Appointment and oath of substitute for agent.

22. In the absence of any person authorised as aforesaid to attend at any polling station, or at the final summing up of the votes, any elector in the same interest as the person so absent may, upon making and subscribing before the deputy returning officer at the polling station, or the returning officer at the final summing up of the votes, as the case may be, a declaration in the Form G. to this Act, be admitted to the polling station, or to the final summing up of the votes, as the case may be, to act for the person so absent.

Provision respecting attendance of agents.

23. Where in this part of this Act any expressions are used requiring or authorising any act to be done, or inferring that any act or thing is to be done in the presence of the agents of the persons interested, such expressions shall be deemed to refer to the presence of such agents as may be authorised to attend, and as have, in fact, attended at the time and place where such act or thing is being done; and the non-attendance of any agents or agent at such time and place shall not, if the act or thing be otherwise duly done, invalidate in any wise the act or thing done.

Polls to be held, votes by ballot.

24. On the day and at the hour fixed by proclamation as aforesaid, a poll shall be held at each polling station in the county or city, and the votes shall be taken by ballot.

Description of buildings in which polls are to be held.

25. The poll shall be held in each polling district in a room or building of convenient access, with an outside door for the admittance of the voters, and having, if possible, another door through which they may leave after having voted. One or two compartments shall be made within the room, so arranged that each voter may be screened from observation, and may, without interference or interruption, mark his ballot paper.

Hours for opening and closing polls.

26. Each deputy returning officer shall open the poll assigned to him at the hour of nine of the clock in the morning, and keep the same open until five of the clock in the afternoon; and shall, during that time, receive, in the manner hereinafter prescribed, the votes of the electors duly qualified to vote at such polling place.

Who may be present at the giving of votes.

27. In addition to the deputy returning officer such persons as may have been appointed or admitted under this Act as agents, and no others, shall be permitted to remain in the room where the votes are given during the time the poll remains open.

Agent's oath of secrecy.

28. Every agent on being admitted to the polling station shall take the oath to keep secret the space in which any of the voters may have marked his ballot paper in his presence, as hereinafter required; such oath shall be in the form of Schedule H. to this Act.

Opening, examining, and locking ballot box.

29. At the hour fixed for opening the poll the deputy returning officer shall, in the presence of such of the electors and agents as may be present, open the ballot box and ascertain that there are no ballots or other papers in the same, after which the box shall be locked, and the deputy returning officer shall keep the key thereof.

Calling voters.

30. Immediately after the ballot box shall have been locked, as above provided, the deputy returning officer shall call upon the electors to vote.

Where electors shall vote.

31. Each elector shall vote at the polling station of the polling district in which he is qualified to vote and no other; and it shall be the duty of the deputy returning officer to secure the admittance of every elector into the polling station, and to see that he is not impeded or molested at or about the polling station.

Provision as to deputy returning officer or agent entitled to vote.

32. The returning officer, on the request of any elector entitled to vote at one of the polling stations, who shall be appointed deputy returning officer, or who shall be appointed to attend as agent at a polling station other than the one where he is entitled to vote, shall give to such elector a certificate that such elector is entitled to vote at such polling of votes at the polling station where such elector shall be stationed during the polling day, and on the production of such certificate such elector shall have the right to vote at the polling station where he shall be placed during the polling day, instead of at the polling station of the polling district where he would otherwise have been entitled to vote; but no such certificate shall entitle any such elector to vote at such polling station unless he has been actually engaged as such deputy returning officer, or agent during the day of polling.

Proviso.

Proceedings preparatory to voting.

33. Each elector, being introduced, one at a time for each compartment, into the room where the poll is held, shall declare his name, surname, and addition, which shall be entered or recorded in the voters' list to be kept for that purpose by the deputy returning officer, and, if the same be found on the list of electors for the polling district of such polling station, he shall receive from the deputy returning officer a ballot paper on the back of which such deputy returning officer shall have previously put his initials, so placed that when the ballot is folded they can be seen without opening it; and on the counterfoil to which he shall have placed a number corresponding to that opposite the voters' name on the voters' list: provided that such elector, if required by the deputy returning officer, or by any elector or agent, as aforesaid, present, shall, before receiving his ballot paper, take the oath or oaths of qualification required by the laws in force in the Province where the election is held, from a voter at the election of a member of the House of Assembly of that Province; the words "House of Commons of Canada" being in such case substituted for "House of Assembly" or such other change being made to make the oath applicable to the election of a member of the House of Commons of Canada.

Proviso: elector may be sworn.

Declaration and form of oath of voter where no lists of voters are required by law.

34. If the county or city be one in or for which the election law of the Province where such county or city is situate does not require lists of voters to be made to entitle them to vote, then in such case any elector claiming his ballot paper, shall declare his name, surname, addition and qualification, which shall be entered on a list kept for that purpose by the deputy returning officer; and before receiving his ballot paper such elector may be required by the deputy returning officer, or by any elector or agent present to take the oath of qualification required by the law in force in such Province from a voter at the election of a member of the House of Assembly; the words "House of Commons of Canada" being in such case substituted for "House of Assembly," or such other change being made as may be required to make the oath applicable to the election of a member of the House of Commons of Canada.

Mode of voting.

35. The elector, on receiving the ballot paper, shall forthwith proceed into one of the compartments of the polling station and there mark his ballot paper, making a cross in any part of the upper space if he votes for the petition, and in any part of the lower space if he votes against the petition, after which he shall fold it up so that the initials on the back can be seen without opening it, and hand it to the deputy returning officer, who shall, without unfolding it, ascertain by examining his initials and the number upon the counterfoil, that it is the same that he furnished to the elector, and shall first detach and destroy the counterfoil, and shall then immediately, and in the presence of the elector, place the ballot paper in the ballot box.

Electors to vote without delay.

36. Every elector shall vote without undue delay, and shall quit the polling station so soon as his ballot paper has been put into the ballot box.

Ballot paper not to be taken out of station.

37. No elector shall be allowed to take his ballot paper out of the polling station; and whoever shall do so shall thereby incur a penalty not exceeding 200 dollars, and not less than 50 dollars.

38. The

38. The deputy returning officer, on the application of any voter who is unable to read or incapacitated by blindness or other physical cause from voting in the manner prescribed by this Act, shall assist such voter by marking his ballot paper in the manner directed by such voter, in the presence of the sworn agents in the polling station, and of no other person, and by placing such ballot paper in the ballot box. Case of voter who cannot mark ballot paper.

39. And the returning officer shall cause a list to be kept of the names of voters whose ballot papers have been so marked, in pursuance of the next preceding section, with the reason why each ballot paper was so marked. And whenever the deputy returning officer shall not understand the language spoken by any elector claiming to vote, he shall swear an interpreter, who shall be the means of communication between him and such elector, with reference to all matters required to enable such elector to vote. List of such voters to be kept. Interpreter.

40. The deputy returning officer shall enter on the voters' list, to be kept by him (in the form of Schedule I. to this Act), opposite the name of each elector voting, the word "Voted," as soon as his ballot paper shall have been deposited in the ballot box. He shall also enter on the same list the word "Sworn" or "Affirmed" opposite the name of each elector to whom the oath or affirmation of qualification shall have been administered, and the words "Refused to be sworn" or "Refused to affirm" opposite the name of each elector who has refused to take the oath or to affirm. Entry of names of electors voting on voters' lists.

41. When no lists of voters are required by the law in force in the county or city for which the voting takes place, then the deputy returning officer shall cause the name, surname, and addition of every voter to be entered on a list to be made and kept for that purpose; upon which list shall be entered the word "Voted," opposite the name of each voter who shall have voted; or, "Sworn," or "Affirmed," or "Refused to be sworn," or "Refused to affirm," as the case may be, as above provided. Where no voters' lists required by law such names to be entered on a list made for the purpose.

42. No voter having refused to take the oath or affirmation of qualification required as aforesaid by this Act, when requested so to do shall receive a ballot paper or be admitted to vote. Case of voter refusing to swear or affirm.

43. No person shall vote more than once at the same polling of votes under the provisions of this Act. No elector to vote more than once.

44. If a person, representing himself to be a particular elector named on the register or list of voters, applies for a ballot paper after another person has voted as such elector, the applicant, upon taking the oath in the form of Schedule J. to this Act, and otherwise establishing his identity to the satisfaction of the deputy returning officer, shall be entitled to receive a ballot paper, on which the deputy returning officer shall put his initials, together with a number corresponding to a number entered on the list of voters opposite the name of such voter, and he shall thereupon be entitled to vote as any other elector: Case of elector in whose name another has voted.

The name of such voter shall be entered on the list of voters, and a note shall be made of his having voted on a second ballot issued under the same name, and of the oath or affirmation of qualification having been required and made, as well as of any objections made by any of the agents. Entry on list.

45. A voter who has inadvertently dealt with the ballot paper given him in such manner that it cannot be conveniently used, may, on delivering the same to the deputy returning officer, obtain another ballot paper in the place of that so delivered up. Elector spoiling his ballot paper may obtain another.

46. Immediately after the close of the poll, the deputy returning officer shall, in the presence of the agents, and if the agents are absent, then in the presence of at least three electors, open the ballot box and proceed to count the number of votes given for and against the petition. In doing so he shall reject all ballot papers which are not similar to those supplied by the deputy returning officer; and all those upon which there is any writing or mark by which the voter could be identified. Counting of votes by deputy returning officer.

47. The other ballot papers being counted, and lists kept of the number of votes given for and of the number of votes given against the petition, and of the number of rejected ballot papers, all the ballot papers indicating the votes given Duty of deputy returning officer after counting the votes.

given for and the votes given against the petition, respectively, shall be put into separate envelopes or parcels, and those rejected shall also be put into a different envelope or parcel; and all these parcels, being endorsed so as to indicate their contents, shall be put back into the ballot box.

Objection to ballot papers.

48. The deputy returning officer shall take a note of any objection made by any agent or any elector present to any ballot paper found in the ballot box, and shall decide any question arising out of the objection; and the decision of such deputy returning officer shall be final, subject only to reversal on a scrutiny as hereinafter provided.

To be numbered and initialed.

49. Each objection to a ballot paper shall be numbered, and a corresponding number placed on the back of the ballot paper, and initialed by the deputy returning officer.

Statement to be enclosed in ballot box for returning officer.

50. The deputy returning officer shall make out a statement of the accepted ballot papers, of the number of votes given each way, of the rejected ballot papers, of the spoiled and returned ballot papers, and of those unused and returned by him; and he shall make and keep by him a copy of such statement, and enclose in the ballot box the original statement, together with the voters' lists and a certified statement, at the foot of each list, of the total number of electors who voted on each such list, and such other lists and documents as may have been used at such election. The ballot box shall then be locked and sealed, and shall be delivered to the returning officer, who shall receive or collect the same, and in case of his being unable to do so, then to one or more persons specially appointed for that purpose by the returning officer, and who shall, on delivering the ballot boxes to the returning officer, take the oath in Schedule K. to this Act.

Delivery to returning officer.

Oath of person appointed to deliver ballot box.

Oath to be annexed to statement.

51. The deputy returning officer shall take the oath in form, Schedule L. to this Act, which shall be annexed to the statement above mentioned.

Certificates to agents.

52. The several deputy returning officers, on being requested so to do, shall deliver to each of the agents, or in the absence of such agents, to the electors present representing them, a certificate of the number of votes given in each interest, and of the number of rejected ballot papers.

Summing up of votes by returning officer.

53. The returning officer at the place, day, and hour appointed by the proclamation, and after having received all the ballot boxes, shall proceed to open them in the presence of the agents, if present, and of at least three electors if the agents are not present, and to add together the number of votes given in each interest, from the statements contained in the ballot boxes returned by the deputy returning officers.

Adjournment if ballot boxes are missing.

54. In case the ballot boxes should not have all been returned on the day fixed for adding up the number of votes given, the returning officer shall adjourn the proceedings to a subsequent day, such subsequent day not being more than a week later than the day originally fixed, for the purpose of adding up the votes.

Provision in case of loss of ballot boxes.

55. In case the ballot boxes or any of them have been destroyed or lost, or for any other reason are not forthcoming within the delay so fixed, the returning officer shall ascertain the cause of the disappearance of such ballot boxes, and shall call on each of the deputy returning officers whose ballot boxes are missing, or on any other person having the same, for the lists, statements, and certificates, or copies of the lists, statements, and certificates of the number of votes given in each interest required by this Act, the whole verified on oath—which oath the returning officer is hereby authorised to administer; and in case such lists or statements, or copies thereof, cannot be obtained, he shall ascertain by such evidence as he may be able to obtain, the total number of votes given in each interest at the several polling places, and he shall make his return accordingly, and shall mention specially in his report, to be sent with the return, the circumstances accompanying the disappearance of the ballot boxes, and the mode by which he ascertained the number of votes given in each interest.

Special mention in return.

Petition not adopted.

56. In case one-half or more of all the votes polled are against the petition, the same shall be held not to have been adopted; and the returning officer shall make his return to the Governor General in Council accordingly.

57. In Petition adopted.

57. In case more than half of all the votes polled are for the petition, the same shall be held to have been adopted; and the returning officer shall make his return to the Governor General in Council accordingly.

Return to be sent to Secretary of State.

58. Within two weeks after the summing up of the votes, if no judge has appointed a day or place within the county or city for entering into a scrutiny of the ballot papers, as hereinafter provided for, and in case of such a scrutiny being entered into, then forthwith after the judge has determined whether the majority of the votes given was or was not in favour of the petition, the returning officer shall transmit his return to the Secretary of State, and shall send with it a report of his proceedings, in which he shall make any observations he may think proper as to the state of the ballot boxes or ballot papers as received by him; and in the event of a judge having determined, after a scrutiny of the ballot papers, that the majority of the votes given was or was not in favour of the petition, such return shall be based upon, and shall be conformable to such decision.

What to be transmitted with return.

59. The returning officer shall also transmit to the Secretary of State, with his return, the original statements of the several deputy returning officers, referred to in section 50 of this Act, together with the voters' lists used in the several polling districts, and any other lists and documents used or required at such election, or which may have been transmitted to him by the deputy returning officers.

Transmission of return.

2. Such return and report shall be sent through the post office, after being registered.

Property of ballot boxes, &c.

60. The property of the ballot boxes, ballot papers, and marking instruments procured for, or used at, any polling of votes under this Act, shall be in Her Majesty.

Scrutiny.

A scrutiny may be had on application to a judge.

61. If, within one week after the returning officer has summed up the votes, and declared the result of the voting, any elector applies upon petition to any judge of the superior court sitting in the district, if in the province of Quebec, or to the judge of the proper district or county court, if in the province of British Columbia; or to the judge of the proper county court, if in any other province, after giving such notice of the application, and to such persons as the judge directs, and shows by affidavit to the judge reasonable grounds for entering into a scrutiny of the ballot papers, and the petitioner enters into a recognizance before the judge in the sum of 100 dollars, with two sureties (to be allowed as sufficient by the judge upon affidavit of justification) in the sum of 50 dollars each, conditioned to prosecute the petition with effect, and to pay the party against whom the same is brought any costs which may be adjudged to him against the petitioner; the judge shall appoint a day and place within the county or city for entering into the scrutiny.

Proceedings upon such application.

62. On the day and at the hour and place appointed, the returning officer shall attend before the judge with the ballot papers in his custody, and the judge, upon inspecting the ballot papers and hearing such evidence as he may deem necessary, and on hearing the parties, or such of them who may attend, or their counsel, shall, in a summary manner, determine whether the majority of the votes given was or was not in favor of the petition to the Governor General in Council:

Notice of scrutiny.

2. At least one week's notice of the scrutiny shall be given by the petitioner to such persons as the judge directs.

Decision final; costs.

63. The decision of the judge shall be final, and the costs shall be in his discretion, or he may apportion the costs as to him seems just.

Penalties.

64. No person shall—

Contravention misdemeanor, and how to be punished. Any contravention of this section shall be a misdemeanor; and any person found guilty thereof shall be punishable, if he be a returning officer, deputy returning officer, or other officer engaged at the polling, by a fine not exceeding 1,000 dollars, or by imprisonment for any term less than two years, with or without hard labour, in default of paying such fine; and if he be any other person, by a fine not exceeding 500 dollars, or by imprisonment for any term not exceeding six months, with or without hard labour, in default of paying such fine.

Contravention by election officer, how punished. 65. Every officer who is guilty of any wilful misfeasance or any wilful act or omission in contravention of this part of this Act, shall forfeit to any person aggrieved by such misfeasance, act, or omission, a penal sum not exceeding 500 dollars, in addition to the amount of all actual damages thereby occasioned to such person.

Provisions for maintenance of secrecy. 66. Every officer and agent in attendance at the polling place shall maintain and aid in maintaining the secrecy of the voting at such polling place; and shall not communicate before the poll is closed to any person any information as to whether any person on the voters' list has or has not applied for a ballot paper or voted at that polling place:

Interference. 2. No officer or agent, and no person whosoever, shall interfere with or attempt to interfere with a voter when marking his vote, or otherwise attempt to obtain at the polling place information as to how any voter at such polling place is about to vote or has voted:

Communicating information. 3. No officer, agent or other person shall communicate at any time to any person any information obtained at a polling place as to how any voter at such polling place is about to vote or has voted:

Secrecy at counting of votes. 4. Every officer and agent in attendance at the counting of the votes shall maintain and aid in maintaining the secrecy of the voting; and shall not attempt to ascertain at such counting, or communicate any information obtained at such counting, as to how any vote is given in any particular ballot paper:

Inducing voters to display their ballots. 5. No person shall, directly or indirectly, induce any voter to display his ballot paper after he has marked the same, so as to make known to any person how he has so marked his vote:

Punishment for contravention. 6. Any contravention of this section shall be punishable by a fine not exceeding 200 dollars, or by imprisonment for any term not exceeding six months, with or without hard labour, in default of paying such fine.

Personation defined. 67. A person shall, for all purposes of this Act, be deemed to be guilty of the offence of personation, who, at any polling of votes under this Act, applies for a ballot paper in the name of some other person, whether such name be that of a person living or dead, or of a fictitious person, or who having voted once at any such polling applies at the same polling for a ballot paper in his own name.

Punishment for personation. 68. The offence of personation, or of aiding, abetting, counselling or procuring the commisssion of the offence of personation by any person, shall be punishable by a fine not exceeding 200 dollars, and by imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months.

Personation a corrupt practice. 69. The offence of personation shall be deemed to be a corrupt practice within the meaning of this Act.

70. No

Mistakes of form only not fatal.

70. No polling of votes under this Act shall be declared invalid by reason of a non-compliance with the rules contained in this Act as to the taking of the poll or the counting of the votes, under the provisions of this Act, or of any mistake in the use of the forms contained in the schedules to this Act, if it appears to the tribunal having cognizance of the question that the polling of votes was conducted in accordance with the principles laid down in this Act, and that such non-compliance or mistake did not affect the result of the polling.

Preservation of the Peace.

Returning officer and deputy returning officer to be conservators of the peace.

71. Every returning officer, and every deputy returning officer, from the time he shall have taken the oath of office, until the day after the summing up of the votes, shall be a conservator of the peace, invested with all the powers appertaining to a justice of the peace.

May require assistance of special constables.

72. Such returning officer, or deputy returning officer, may require the assistance of justices of the peace, constables, or other persons present, to aid him in maintaining peace and good order at such polling; and may also, on a requisition made in writing by any agent, or by any two electors, swear in such special constables as he deems necessary.

May arrest disturbers of the peace.

73. Such returning officer, or deputy returning officer, may arrest, or cause to be arrested, by verbal order, and place in the custody of any constable, or other persons, any person disturbing the peace and good order at the polling, and may cause such person to be imprisoned under an order signed by him until any period not later than the close of the poll

May demand offensive weapons.

74. The returning officer, or deputy returning officer, may, during any day whereon any poll is begun, holden, or proceeded with, require any person, within half-a-mile of the polling station, to deliver to him any fire-arm, sword, staff, bludgeon, or other offensive weapon in the hands or personal possession of such person, and any person refusing to deliver such weapon shall be liable to a fine not exceeding 100 dollars, and to imprisonment not exceeding three months in default of payment of such fine.

Sale, &c., of liquor on polling day prohibited.

80. No intoxicating, spirituous, or fermented liquors or strong drink, shall be sold or given at any hotel, tavern, or shop, or other place, within the limits of any polling district, during the whole of any day on which any poll is begun, holden, or proceeded with, under a penalty of 100 dollars for every offence; and the offender shall be subject to imprisonment, not exceeding six months, at the discretion of the judge or court, in default of payment of such fine.

Punishment.

Prevention of Corrupt Practices.

Certain acts to be deemed bribery.

81. The following persons shall be deemed guilty of bribery, and shall be punishable accordingly:—

Giving or lending money.

(1.) Every person who, directly or indirectly, by himself or by any other person on his behalf, gives, or lends or agrees to give or lend, or offers or promises any money or valuable consideration, or promises to procure, or to endeavour to procure, any money or valuable consideration, to or for any voter, or to or for any person on behalf of any voter, or to or for any person, in order to induce any voter to vote, or refrain from voting, or corruptly does any such act as aforesaid on account of such voter having voted or refrained from voting at any poll under this Act.

Procuring office or employment.

(2.) Every person who, directly or indirectly, by himself or by any other person on his behalf, gives or procures, or agrees to give or procure, or offers or promises any office, place, or employment, or promises to procure, or to endeavour to procure, any office, place, or employment, to or for any voter, or to or for any other person, in order to induce such voter to vote, or refrain from voting, or corruptly does any such act as aforesaid, on account of any voter having voted or refrained from voting at any poll under this Act.

Gifts or promises to induce promotion or the contrary of adoption.

(3.) Every person who, directly or indirectly, by himself or by any other person on his behalf, makes any gift, loan, offer, promise, procurement, or agreement as aforesaid, to or for any person, in order to induce such person to procure, or endeavour to procure, or to prevent, or endeavour to prevent, the adoption of any petition under the provisions of this Act, or to procure, or endeavour to procure, the vote of any elector at any poll under this Act, or to prevent, or endeavour to prevent, any elector from voting at any poll under this Act.

Accepting the same.

(4.) Every person who, upon or in consequence of any such gift, loan, offer, promise, procurement, or agreement, procures or prevents, or engages, or promises or endeavours to procure or prevent, the adoption of any petition under the provisions of this Act, or the vote of any voter at any poll under this Act.

Paying money to be used in bribery.

(5.) Every person who advances or pays, or causes to be paid, any money to, or to the use of, any other person, with the intent that such money or any part thereof shall be expended in bribery or corrupt practices at any poll under this Act, or who knowingly pays, or causes to be paid, any money to any person in discharge, or repayment of any money wholly or in part expended in bribery or corrupt practices at any poll under this Act.

Punishment for bribery.

And any person so offending shall be guilty of a misdemeanour, and shall also be liable to forfeit the sum of 200 dollars, to any one who shall sue for the same, with full costs of suit: Provided always, that the actual personal expenses of any agent in either interest, his expenses for actual professional services performed, and bonâ fide payments for the fair cost of printing and advertising, shall be held to be expenses lawfully incurred, and the payment thereof shall not be a contravention of this Act.

82. The

Certain acts by voters to be deemed bribery.

82. The following persons shall also be deemed guilty of bribery, and shall be punishable accordingly:—

Receiving gifts or promises during polling.

(1.) Every voter who, before or during any polling of votes under this Act, directly or indirectly, himself or by any other person on his behalf, receives, agrees or contracts for any money, gift, loan, or valuable consideration, office, place, or employment, for himself or any other person, for voting or agreeing to vote, or for refraining or agreeing to refrain from voting at any poll under this Act.

And after the polling.

(2.) Every person who, after any poll under this Act, directly or indirectly, by himself or by any other person on his behalf, receives any money or valuable consideration for having voted or refrained from voting, or having induced any other person to vote or refrain from voting at any poll under this Act.

Punishment for such offences.

And any person so offending shall be guilty of a misdemeanour, and shall also be liable to forfeit the sum of 200 dollars to any person who shall sue for the same, together with full costs of suit.

Offence of treating defined.

83. Every person who corruptly, by himself or by or with any person, or by any other ways or means on his behalf, at any time either before or during any polling of votes under this Act, directly or indirectly gives or provides, or causes to be given or provided, or is accessory to the giving or providing, or pays wholly or in part any expenses incurred for any meat, drink, refreshment, or provision to or for any person, in order to procure or prevent, or for having procured or prevented, the adoption of any petition under the provisions of this Act, or for the purpose of corruptly influencing such person, or any other person, to give, or refrain from giving, his vote at such polling of votes, shall be deemed guilty of the offence of treating, and shall forfeit the sum of 200 dollars to any person who shall sue for the same, with full costs of suit, in addition to any other penalty to which he may be liable therefore under any other provision of this Act.

Penalty.

Giving meat or drink to electors to be deemed an unlawful act.

84. And the giving or causing to be given to any voter on the day of polling on account of such voter having voted or being about to vote, any meat, drink, or refreshment, or any money or ticket to enable such voter to procure refreshment, shall be deemed an unlawful act, and the person so offending shall forfeit the sum of 10 dollars for each offence to any person suing for the same, with full costs of suit.

Penalty.

Threats of violence, &c., forbidden.

85. Every person who, directly or indirectly, by himself or by any other person on his behalf, makes use of, or threatens to make use of any force, violence or restraint, or inflicts, or threatens the infliction by himself, or by or through any other person, of any injury, damage, harm or loss, or in any manner practises intimidation upon or against any person, in order to induce or compel such person to vote or refrain from voting, or on account of such person having voted or refrained from voting at any poll under this Act, or who by abduction, duress or any fraudulent device or contrivance, impedes, prevents or otherwise interferes with the free exercise of the franchise of any voter, or thereby compels, induces or prevails upon any voter either to give or refrain from giving his vote at any poll under this Act, shall be deemed to have committed the offence of undue influence, and shall be guilty of a misdemeanour, and shall also forfeit the sum of 200 dollars to any person suing for the same, with full costs of suit.

Undue influence.

Penalty.

Recital of doubts.

86. And whereas doubts may arise as to whether the hiring of teams and vehicles to convey voters to and from the polls, and the paying of railway fares and other expenses of voters, be or be not according to law, it is declared and enacted, that the hiring or promising to pay or paying for any horse, team, carriage, cab or other vehicle, by any agent or other person in either interest, to convey any voter or voters to or from the poll, or to or from the neighbourhood thereof, at any polling of votes under this Act, or the payment by any agent or other person in either interest, of the travelling and other expenses of any voter, in going to or returning from any polling of votes under this Act, are and shall be unlawful acts; and the person so offending shall forfeit the sum of 100 dollars to any person who shall sue for the same; and any voter hiring any horse, cab, cart, waggon, sleigh, carriage or other conveyance for any such agent, for the purpose of conveying any voter or voters to or from the polling place or places, shall, ipso facto, be disqualified from voting at such polling of votes under this Act, and for every such offence shall forfeit the sum of 100 dollars to any person suing for the same.

Penalty.

Subornation of perjury or personation.

87. Every agent or other person in either interest, who corruptly, by himself or by or with any other person on his behalf, compels or induces or endeavours to induce any person to personate any voter, or to take any false oath in any matter wherein an oath is required under this Act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanour, and shall in addition to any other punishment to which he may be liable for such offence, be liable to forfeit the sum of 200 dollars to any person suing for the same.

Certain offences to be corrupt practices.

88. The offences of bribery, treating, or undue influence, or any of such offences, as defined by this Act, personation or the inducing any person to commit personation, or any wilful offence against any one of the seven next preceding sections of this Act shall be corrupt practices within the meaning of the provisions of this Act.

No excuse of privilege, &c., allowed for not answering questions in proceedings touching polling of votes under this Act.

89. No person shall be excused from answering any question put to him in any action, suit, or other proceeding in any court, or before any judge, commissioner, or other tribunal touching or concerning any polling of votes under this Act, or the conduct of any person thereat, or in relation thereto, on the ground of any privilege, or on the ground that the answer to such question will tend to criminate such person; but no answer given by any person claiming to be excused on the ground of privilege, or on the ground that such answer will tend to criminate himself, shall be used in any criminal proceeding against such person other than an indictment for perjury, if the judge, commissioner, or president of the tribunal shall give to the witness a certificate that he claimed the right to be excused on either of the grounds aforesaid, and made full and true answers to the satisfaction of the judge, commissioner, or tribunal.

Contracts or promises relating to polling of votes under this Act to be void.

90. Every executory contract, or promise, or undertaking, in any way referring to, arising out of, or depending upon, any polling of votes under this Act, even for the payment of lawful expenses, or the doing of some lawful act, shall be void in law; but this provision shall not enable any person to recover back any money paid for lawful expenses connected with such polling.

Penalties and Punishments Generally.

Penalty for neglect of duty by an election officer.

91. Any returning officer or deputy returning officer, who refuses or neglects to perform any of the obligations or formalities required of him by this Act, shall for each such refusal or neglect, forfeit the sum of 200 dollars to any person suing for the same.

Enforcement of penalties.

92. All penalties and forfeitures (other than fines in cases of misdemeanour imposed by this part of this Act, shall be recoverable, with full costs of suit, by any person who will sue for the same by action of debt or information, in any of Her Majesty's Courts in the Province in which the cause of action arose, having competent jurisdiction; and in default of payment of the amount which the offender is condemned to pay, within the period fixed by the court, the offender shall be imprisoned in the common gaol of the place, for any term less than two years, unless such fine and costs be sooner paid.

What it shall suffice to state in declaration.

93. It shall be sufficient for the plaintiff, in any action or suit given by this Act, to state in the declaration that the defendant is indebted to him in the sum of money thereby demanded, and to allege the particular offence for which the action or suit is brought, and that the defendant hath acted contrary to this Act.

Time for bringing action or suit limited.

94. Every prosecution for any misdemeanour under this part of this Act, and every action, suit, or proceeding for any pecuniary penalty given by this Act to the person suing for the same, shall be commenced within the space of six months next after the act committed, and not afterwards (unless the same be prevented prevented by the withdrawal or absconding of the defendant out of the jurisdiction of the court), and being commenced shall be proceeded with and carried on without wilful delay.

Effects of Decisions by Votes of Electors.

Effect of non-adoption of petition.

95. When in any county or city one half or more of all the votes polled have been against the adoption of any petition, embodied as aforesaid in any notice and in any proclamation, under this the first part of this Act, no similar petition shall be put to the vote of the electors of such county or city for a period of three years from the day on which such vote was taken.

If petition be adopted, the second part of this Act may be brought into force by Order in Council.

96. When any petition, embodied as aforesaid in any notice and in any proclamation under this the first part of this Act, has been adopted by the electors of the county or city named therein, and to which the same relates, the Governor General in Council may at any time after the expiration of 60 days from the day on which the same was adopted, by Order in Council, published in the "Canada Gazette," declare that the second part of this Act shall be in force and take effect in such county or city upon, from, and after the day on which the annual or semi-annual licenses for the sale of spirituous liquors then in force in such county or city will expire; provided such day be not less than 90 days from the day of the date of such Order in Council; and if it be less, then on the like day in the then following year; and upon, from, and after that day the second part of this Act shall become and be in force and take effect in such county or city accordingly.

Proviso.

No such Order in Council to be revoked for three years, and then only on similar petition, notice, and other proceedings.

97. No Order in Council issued under the provisions of this Act shall be revoked until after the expiration of three years from the day of the coming into force under it of the second part of this Act, nor unless nor until a petition to the Governor General praying for such revocation has been embodied in a notice in writing, addressed to the Secretary of State for Canada, and signed by one-fourth or more of the whole number of the electors then qualified and competent to vote at the election of a member of the House of Commons in the county or city named in such Order in Council, and such proceedings have been had thereon as are by this Act required to be had on a notice and petition for the bringing of the second part of this Act into force, and more than one-half of the votes polled have been found to be for the petition for the revocation of such Order in Council; and each and all of the provisions of the preceding sections of this Act shall apply (mutatis mutandis) to every case of a petition and notice for the revocation of an Order in Council under this section, and to the proceedings to be had and taken thereon, and the powers to be exercised and the offences that may be committed, and the penalties that may be incurred, in the course of and in connection with such proceedings.

Application of provisions of the preceding sections.

Provision for the Repeal of By-laws passed under the Temperance Act of 1864.

Proceedings for repeal of by-law under 27 & 28 Vict. c. 18.

98. In case a petition to the Governor General in Council praying for the repeal of a by-law passed by the Council of any county or city in Ontario or Quebec, under the authority and for the enforcement of the said "The Temperance Act of 1864," is embodied in a notice addressed to the Secretary of State of Canada, and signed by one-fourth or more of the electors of such county or city, and such proceedings are had thereon as are by this Act required to be had on a notice and petition for bringing the second part of this Act into force, and more than one-half of the votes polled are found to be for the petition, the Governor General in Council may, by Order in Council, repeal such by-law, and, thereupon, such by-law shall become and be repealed upon, from, and after the day of the publication of such Order in Council in the "Canada Gazette," and each and all the provisions of the preceding sections of this Act shall apply (mutatis mutandis) to every case of a petition and notice for the repeal of a by-law under this section, and to the proceedings to be had and taken thereon, and the powers to be exercised, and the offences that may be committed, and the penalties that may be incurred in the course of and in connection with such proceedings.

Application of provisions of preceding sections.

SECOND PART.

Prohibition of Traffic in Intoxicating Liquors.

No liquor to be sold, &c., when and where this part of this Act is in force, except for certain purposes.

99. From the day on which this part of this Act comes into force and takes effect in any county or city, and for so long thereafter as the same continues in force therein, no person, unless it be for exclusively sacramental or medicinal purposes, or for bonâ fide use in some art, trade, or manufacture, under the regulation contained in the fourth sub-section of this section, or as hereinafter authorised by one of the four next sub-sections of this section, shall, within such county or city, by himself, his clerk, servant, or agent, expose or keep for sale, or directly or indirectly, on any pretence or upon any device, sell or barter, or in consideration of the purchase of any other property give, to any other person, any spirituous or other intoxicating liquor, or any mixed liquor capable of being used as a beverage, and part of which is spirituous or otherwise intoxicating:

Licenses to be of no effect.

2. And neither any license issued to any distiller or brewer; nor yet any license for retailing on board any steamboat or other vessel, brandy, rum, whisky, or other spirituous liquors, wine, ale, beer, porter, cider, or other vinous or fermented liquors; nor yet any license for retailing on board any steamboat or other vessel, wine, ale, beer, porter, cider, or other vinous or fermented liquors, but not brandy, rum, whisky, or other spirituous liquors; nor yet any other description of license whatever; shall in any wise avail to render legal any act done in violation of this section:

Proviso: sales for sacramental purposes.

3. Provided always that the sale of wine for exclusively sacramental purposes shall be made by druggists and vendors as hereinafter provided, only on the certificate of a clergyman affirming that the wine is required for sacramental purposes:

And for medicinal and mechanical purposes.

4. Provided also, that the sale of intoxicating liquor for exclusively medicinal purposes or for bonâ fide use in some art, trade, or manufacture, shall be lawful only by such druggists and other vendors as may be thereto specially licensed by the Lieutenant Governor in each Province, the number not to exceed one in each township or parish, nor two in each town; and in cities not exceeding one for every four thousand inhabitants; such sale, when for medicinal purposes, to be in quantities of not less than one pint, to be removed from the premises and to be made only on the certificate of a medical man having no interest in the sale by the druggist or vendor, affirming that such liquor has been prescribed for the person named therein; and when such sale is for its use in some art, trade, or manufacture, the same to be made only on a certificate signed by two justices of the peace of the bona fides of the application, accompanied by the affirmation of the applicant, that the liquor is to be used only for the particular purposes set forth in the affirmation; and it shall be the duty of the druggist or other vendor to file the certificates and keep a register of all such sales, indicating the name of the purchaser and the quantity sold, and to make an annual return of all such sales on the 31st day of December in every year, to the collector of inland revenue within whose revenue division the county or city is situated:

Certificate to be produced.

Annual return to be furnished.

Proviso; distiller or brewer, &c., may sell liquor of his own manufacture in wholesale quantities, and to certain persons only.

5. Provided also, that any producer of cider in the county, or any licensed distiller or brewer, having his distillery or brewery within such county or city, may thereat expose and keep for sale such liquor as he shall have manufactured thereat, and no other; and may sell the same thereat, but only in quantities not less than ten gallons, or in the case of ale or beer not less than eight gallons, at any one time, and only to druggists and others licensed as aforesaid, or to such persons as he has good reason to believe will forthwith carry the same beyond the limits of the county or city, and of any adjoining county or city in which the second part of this Act is then in force, and to be wholly removed and taken away in quantities not less than ten gallons, or, in case of ale or beer, not less than eight gallons at a time:

As to sales by vine-growing companies.

6. Provided also, that any incorporated company authorised by law to carry on the business of cultivating and growing vines, and of making and selling wine and other liquors produced from grapes, having their manufactory within such county or city, may thereat expose and keep for sale such liquor as they shall shall have manufactured thereat, and no other; and may sell the same thereat, but only in quantities not less than 10 gallons at any one time, and only to druggists and others, licensed as aforesaid, or to such persons as they have good reason to believe will forthwith carry the same beyond the limits of the county or city, and of any adjoining county or city in which the second part of this Act is then in force, and to be wholly removed and taken away in quantities not less than 10 gallons at a time:

As to sales by manufacturers of pure native wines.

7. Provided also, that manufacturers of pure native wines made from grapes grown and produced by them in the Dominion of Canada may, when authorised to do so by license from the municipal council, or other authority having jurisdiction where such manufacture is carried on, sell such wines at the place of manufacture in quantities of not less than 10 gallons at one time, except when sold for sacramental or medicinal purposes, when any number of gallons from one to ten may be sold:

Proviso: merchants and traders may sell liquor in wholesale quantities, and to certain persons only.

8. Provided also, that any merchant or trader exclusively in wholesale trade, and duly licensed to sell liquor by wholesale, having his store or place for sale of goods within such county or city, may thereat keep for sale and sell intoxicating liquor, but only in quantities not less than 10 gallons at any one time, and only to druggists and others licensed as aforesaid, or to such persons as he has good reason to believe will forthwith carry the same beyond the limits of the county or city, and of any adjoining county or city in which the second part of this Act is then in force, to be wholly removed and taken away in quantities not less than 10 gallons at a time.

Burthen of proof of reasons of belief.

9. In any prosecution against a producer, distiller, brewer, manufacturer, merchant or trader under this section, it shall be incumbent on the defendant to furnish satisfactory evidence of having good reason for believing that such liquor would be forthwith removed beyond the limits of the county or city, and of any adjoining county or city in which the second part of this Act is then in force, for consumption outside the same.

THIRD PART.

Penalties and Prosecutions for Offences against the Second Part.

Punishment of sale, &c., in violation of second part of this Act.

100. Whoever, by himself, his clerk, servant, or agent, exposes or keeps for sale, or directly or indirectly, on any pretence or by any device, sells or barters, or in consideration of the purchase of any other property, gives to any other person, any spirituous or other intoxicating liquor, or any mixed liquor capable of being used as a beverage and a part of which is spirituous or otherwise intoxicating, in violation of the second part of this Act, shall be liable, on summary conviction, to a penalty of not less than 50 dollars for the first offence, and not less than 100 dollars for the second offence, and to be imprisoned for a term not exceeding two months for the third and for every subsequent offence; and whoever, in the employment, or on the premises of another, so exposes or keeps for sale, or sells, or barters, or gives in violation of the said second part of this Act, shall be held equally guilty with the principal, and shall be liable on summary conviction to the same penalty or punishment. And all intoxicating liquors in respect to which any such offence has been committed, and all kegs, barrels, cases, bottles, packages, or receptacles of any kind whatever in which the same are contained shall be forfeited.

Forfeiture.

By whom penalties may be sued for.

101. Any prosecution for any such penalty or punishment may be brought by or in the name of the collector of Inland Revenue within whose official division the offence was committed, or by or in the name of any person.

Excise officer bound to prosecute.

102. It shall be the duty of such collector of Inland Revenue to bring such prosecution, whenever he shall have reason to believe that any such offence has been committed, and that a prosecution therefor can be sustained, and would not subject him to any undue measure of responsibility in the premises.

Before whom such prosecutions may be brought.

103. Such prosecution may be brought:—

In Quebec.

In the Province of Quebec, if the offence was committed in the city of Montreal, or in the city of Quebec, then before the recorder or judge of the sessions of the peace at Montreal or Quebec, as may be, or, if the offence was committed in any other part of the province, then before a stipendiary magistrate, or before any two other justices of the peace for the district wherein the offence was committed, or, if the district is other than that of Quebec or that of Montreal, before the sheriff of such district.

In Ontario. In the Province of Ontario before any stipendiary magistrate, or before any two other justices of the peace for the county, city, or district wherein the offence was committed; or, if the offence was committed in any county, city, or town having a police magistrate, then before such police magistrate, or in his absence, then before the mayor or any two justices of the peace; or if the offence was committed in any city or town not having a police magistrate, then before the mayor thereof, or before any two justices of the peace.

In Nova Scotia. In the Province of Nova Scotia before a stipendiary magistrate, or before any two other justices of the peace of the county in which the offence was committed.

In New Brunswick. In the Province of New Brunswick before any police, stipendiary, or sitting magistrate or commissioner of a parish court, or before any two other justices of the peace in and for the county in which the offence was committed.

In Manitoba. In the Province of Manitoba before the police magistrate within whose territorial jurisdiction the offence was committed, or before any two justices of the peace in and for the county in which the offence was committed.

In British Columbia. In the Province of British Columbia before any stipendiary magistrate or before any two other justices of the peace for the territorial division or jurisdiction within the limits of which the offence was committed.

In Prince Edward Island. In the Province of Prince Edward Island before the stipendiary magistrate for the city or town, or before any two other justices of the peace of or for the county in which the offence was committed.

If before a magistrate, no other justice to sit. 104. If such prosecution is brought before any such stipendiary magistrate, recorder, judge of the sessions of the peace, sheriff, police magistrate, sitting magistrate, commissioner or mayor, no other justice shall sit or take part therein.

If prosecution before two justices, summons shall be signed by one of them. 105. If such prosecution is brought before any two other justices of the peace, the summons shall be signed by one of them; and no other justice shall sit or take part therein, unless by reason of their absence, or the absence of one of them, nor yet in the latter case unless with the assent of the other of them.

Limitation of prosecution. 106. Every such prosecution shall be commenced within three months after the alleged offence, and shall be heard and determined in a summary manner, either upon the confession of the defendant or upon the evidence of a witness or witnesses.

Provisions of 32 & 33 Vict. c. 31, to be applicable to such prosecutions. 107. Every offence against the second part of this Act may be prosecuted in the manner directed by the "Act respecting the duties of Justices of the peace out of Sessions in relation to summary convictions and orders," so far as no provision is hereby made for any matter or thing which may be required to be done with respect to such prosecution; and all the provisions contained in the said Act shall be applicable to such prosecutions and to the judicial and other officers before whom the same are hereby authorised to be brought, in the same manner as if they were incorporated in this Act, and as if all such judicial and other officers were named in the said Act.

Magistrate, &c., may grant a warrant to search for liquor, on receiving certain information on oath. 108. In case a credible witness proves upon oath before the stipendiary, police or sitting magistrate, commissioner of a parish court, recorder, judge of the sessions of the peace, justices of the peace, sheriff or mayor, or before one of the justices of the peace before whom any prosecution for an offence against the provisions of the second part of this Act is brought, that there is reasonable cause to suspect that any intoxicating liquor, in respect to which such offence has been committed, is in any dwelling-house, store, shop, warehouse, outhouse, garden, yard, croft or other place or places, such stipendiary, police police or sitting magistrate, commissioner of a parish court, recorder, judge of the sessions of the peace, justices of the peace, sheriff or mayor, may grant a warrant to search such dwelling-house, store, shop, warehouse, outhouse, garden, yard, croft, or other place or places, for such intoxicating liquor, and if the same, or any part thereof, be then found, to bring the same before him; and any information to obtain a warrant under this section may be in the form of Schedule M. to this Act; and any search-warrant under this section may be in the form of Schedule N. to this Act.

Convicting magistrate, &c., may order that liquor seized on a search warrant be destroyed.

109. When any person is convicted of any offence against the provisions of the second part of this Act, the stipendiary, police or sitting magistrate, commissioner of a parish court, recorder, judge of the sessions of the peace, justices of the peace, sheriff or mayor, before whom such person is convicted, may adjudge and order, in addition to any other penalty or punishment, that the intoxicating liquor in respect to which the offence was committed, and which has been brought before him in virtue of a search-warrant as aforesaid (whether the same be or be not the property of such person), or not more than 20 gallons thereof, if there be more of it than 20 gallons, be forfeited, and that any and all kegs, barrels, cases, boxes, bottles, packages and other receptacles of any kind whatever found containing the same, or not more than 20 gallons thereof if there be more of it than 20 gallons, be broken up and utterly destroyed, and the said intoxicating liquor, or not more than 20 gallons thereof, if there be more of it than 20 gallons, poured out, spilled, wasted and utterly destroyed; and thereupon such barrels, kegs, cases, boxes, bottles, packages and other receptacles of any kind whatever, to the extent aforesaid, may be forthwith broken up and utterly destroyed, and the said intoxicating liquor, or not more than 20 gallons thereof if there be more of it than 20 gallons, poured out, spilled, wasted, and utterly destroyed by the constable or peace officer who executed the search-warrant under which the same was found, or in whose custody the same was afterwards placed by the convicting magistrate, commissioner, recorder, judge, justices, sheriff or mayor.

Penalty for tampering with witnesses.

110. Any person who, either before or after the summons of any witness in any such case, tampers with such witness, or by any offer of money, or by threat or otherwise, directly or indirectly, induces or attempts to induce any such person to absent himself or herself, or to swear falsely, shall be liable to a penalty of 50 dollars for each such offence.

Certiorari and appeal taken away in certain cases.

111. No conviction, judgment, or order in any such case shall be removed by certiorari or otherwise into any of Her Majesty's Superior Courts of Record; nor shall any appeal whatever be allowed from any such conviction, judgment or order, to any court of general quarter sessions, or other court whatever when the conviction has been made by a stipendiary magistrate, recorder, judge of the sessions of the peace, sheriff, police magistrate, sitting magistrate, or commissioner of a parish court.

Compounding offence and penalty therefor.

112. Any person who, having violated any of the provisions of this Act or of any provincial Act which is now or may be from time to time in force in any province respecting the issue of licenses for the sale of fermented or spirituous liquors, or of "The Temperance Act of 1864," compromises, compounds or settles, or offers or attempts to compromise, compound or settle, the offence with any person or persons with the view of preventing any complaint being made in respect thereof, or if a complaint has been made with the view of getting rid of such complaint, or of stopping or having the same dismissed for want of prosecution or otherwise, shall be guilty of an offence under this Act, and on conviction thereof, shall be imprisoned at hard labour in the common gaol of the county or district in which the offence was committed, for any period not exceeding three months.

Punishment of parties to compromise.

113. Every person who is concerned in, or is a party to, the compromise, composition, or settlement mentioned in the next preceding section, shall be guilty of an offence under this Act, and, on conviction thereof, shall be imprisoned in the common gaol of the county or district in which the offence was committed, for any period not exceeding three calendar months.

Penalty for tampering with witnesses.

114. Any person who, on any prosecution under any of the said Acts, tampers with a witness, either before or after he is summoned or appears as such witness witness on any trial or proceeding under any such Act, or by the offer of money, or by threats, or in any other way, either directly or indirectly, induces or attempts to induce any such person to absent himself or to swear falsely, shall be liable to a penalty of 50 dollars for each offence.

What it shall suffice to state in describing offences.

115. In describing offences respecting the sale or other unlawful disposal of spirituous, fermented or other intoxicating liquor, or the keeping thereof for sale, in any information, summons, conviction, warrant, or proceeding under the said Temperance Act or under this Act, it shall be sufficient to state the unlawful sale, barter, disposal or keeping of intoxicating liquor simply, without stating the name or kind of such liquor, or the price thereof, or any person to whom it was sold, bartered or disposed of; and it shall not be necessary to state the quantity of liquor so sold, bartered, disposed of, or kept, except in the case of offences where the quantity is essential, and then it shall be sufficient to allege the sale or disposal of more or less than such quantity, and it shall not be necessary, in any such summons, conviction, warrant or proceeding, to negative the circumstances, the existence of which would make the act complained of lawful, but upon any such circumstances being proved in evidence, the defendant shall be acquitted; and this provision shall apply whether such circumstances are stated by way of exception in the section under which the offence is laid or in a substantive section or otherwise.

Certain facts need not be alleged.

Amendment of information and adjournment.

116. In the event of any variance between the information and evidence adduced in support thereof, the justices or magistrate or other officer may amend or alter such information, and may substitute for the offence charged therein any other offence against the provisions of the said "Temperance Act of 1864," or of this Act; but if it appears that the defendant has been materially misled by such variance, the said justices or magistrate or other officer shall thereupon adjourn the hearing of the case to some future day, unless the defendant waives such adjournment.

Variance or defect of form not to affect conviction.

117. No conviction or warrant enforcing the same or other process or proceeding under either of the said Acts shall be held insufficient or invalid by reason of any variance between the information or conviction, or by reason of any other defect in form or substance, provided it can be understood from such conviction, warrant, process or proceeding that the same was made for an offence against some provision of such Act, within the jurisdiction of the justices or magistrate, or other officer who made or signed the same, and provided there is evidence to prove such offence, and no greater penalty is imposed than is authorised by such Act.

Application to quash conviction to be decided upon the merits.

118. Upon any application to quash such conviction or warrant enforcing the same, or other process or proceeding, or to discharge any person in custody under such warrant, whether such application is made in appeal or upon habeas corpus, or by way of certiorari, or otherwise, the court to which or judge to whom such appeal is made, or to which or to whom such application has been made upon habeas corpus or by way of certiorari or otherwise, shall dispose of such appeal or application upon the merits, notwithstanding any such variance or defect, as aforesaid, and such court or judge may in any case amend the same if necessary; and in all cases where it appears that the merits have been tried, and that the conviction, warrant, process or proceeding is sufficient and valid under this section or otherwise, such conviction, warrant, process or proceeding shall be affirmed, or shall not be quashed (as the case may be), and any conviction, warrant, process or proceeding so affirmed, or affirmed and amended, may be enforced in the same manner as convictions affirmed on appeal, and the costs thereof shall be recoverable as if originally awarded.

The keeping of liquor for sale shall be inferred under certain circumstances.

119. When, in any house, shop, room or other place in any municipality in which any prohibitory by-law passed under the provisions of "The Temperance Act of 1864," or of this Act, is in force, a bar, counter, beer pumps, kegs, or any other appliances or preparations similar to those usually found in taverns and shops where spirituous or fermented liquors are accustomed to be sold or trafficked in, are found, and spirituous, fermented or other intoxicating liquor is also found in such house, shop, room or place, such liquor shall be deemed to have been kept for sale contrary to the provisions of such Act, unless the contrary is proved by the defendant in any prosecution; and the occupant of such house, house, shop, room or other place shall be taken conclusively to be the person who keeps therein such liquor for sale.

Passing of money need not be proved.

120. In proving the sale or barter, or other unlawful disposal of liquor for the purpose of any proceeding relative to any offence under the said "Temperance Act of 1864," or under this Act, it shall not be necessary to show that any money actually passed, or any liquor was actually consumed, if the justices, magistrate, or other officer or court hearing the case is or are satisfied that a transaction in the nature of a sale or barter or other unlawful disposal actually took place.

What evidence shall be necessary for a conviction.

121. In any prosecution under the said Temperance Act, or under this Act, for the sale or barter, or other unlawful disposal of intoxicating liquor, it shall not be necessary that any witness should depose directly to the precise description of the liquor sold or bartered, or the precise consideration therefor, or to the fact of the sale or other disposal having taken place with his participation, or to his own personal and certain knowledge, but the justices or magistrate, or other officer trying the case, so soon as it appears to them or him that the circumstances in evidence sufficiently establish the infraction of law complained of, shall put the defendant on his defence, and in default of his rebuttal of such evidence, shall convict him accordingly.

Proceedings upon information for second or subsequent offence.

122. The proceedings upon any information for committing an offence against any of the provisions of this Act, in case of a previous conviction or convictions being charged, shall be as follows:—

Subsequent offence to be first inquired into, and then previous convictions.

1. The justices or magistrate or other officer shall, in the first instance, inquire concerning such subsequent offence only, and if the accused be found guilty thereof, he shall then, and not before, be asked whether he was so previously convicted, as alleged in the information, and if he answers that he was so previously convicted, he may be sentenced accordingly; but if he denies that he was so previously convicted, or stands mute of malice, or does not answer directly to such question, the justices or police magistrate, or other officer, shall then inquire concerning such previous conviction or convictions;

Proof of previous convictions.

2. The number of such previous convictions shall be provable by the production of a certiffcate under the hand of the convicting justices or magistrate, or officer, or of the clerk of the peace, without proof of his signature or official character, or by other satisfactory evidence;

Conviction may be for first offence only.

3. A conviction may in any case be had as for a first offence, notwithstanding that there may have been a prior conviction or convictions for the same or any other offence;

Conviction for several offences on same day.

4. Convictions for several offences may be made under this Act, although such offences may have been committed on the same day, but the increased penalty or punishment hereinbefore imposed shall only be recoverable in the case of offences committed on different days, and after information laid for a first offence;

Amendment of second conviction, in event of first being set aside.

5. In the event of any conviction for any second or subsequent offence becoming void or defective, after the making thereof, by reason of any previous conviction being set aside, quashed, or otherwise rendered void, the justices or magistrate, or other officer, by whom such second or subsequent conviction was made, may, by summons under his or their hand, require the person convicted to appear at a time and place to be named in such summons, and may thereupon, upon proof of the due service of such summons, if such person fails to appear, or on his appearance amend such second or subsequent conviction, and adjudge such penalty or punishment as might have been adjudged had such previous conviction never existed, and such amended conviction shall thereupon be held valid to all intents and purposes as if it had been made in the first instance;

What shall be deemed a conviction for a second or subsequent offence.

6. In case any person who has been convicted of a contravention of any provision of the second part of this Act is afterwards convicted of an offence against such provision, or against any other provision of the said part, such conviction shall be deemed a conviction for a second offence within the meaning of Section 100 of this Act, and may be dealt with and punished accordingly, although the two convictions may be for acts of different descriptions; and in case any such person is afterwards again convicted of a contravention of any provision of the said part, whether similar or not to the previous offences, such conviction shall in like manner be deemed a conviction for a third offence, within the meaning of Section 100 of this Act, and may be dealt with and punished accordingly.

Wife or husband competent witnesses.

123. On the trial of any proceeding, matter, or question under any of the Acts in the 112th section of this Act mentioned, or under this Act, the person opposing or defending, or the wife or husband of such person opposing or defending, shall be competent and compellable to give evidence in such proceeding, matter, or question.

Sect. 34 of 27 & 28 Vict. c. 18, repealed; new section.

124. Section 34 of the said Temperance Act is hereby repealed, and the following substituted therefor:

Application of penalty in Ontario.

"34. In Ontario all the said penalties, or any portion of them which may be recovered, shall be paid to the convicting justice, justices, or magistrate in the case, and shall by him or them, in case the inspector of licenses, or any officer appointed under the authority of the Lieutenant Governor, is the prosecutor or complainant, be paid to the inspector, and by him applied as the Lieutenant Governor may direct; and in case such inspector or officer is not the prosecutor or complainant, then the same shall be paid to the treasurer of the municipality wherein the offence was committed.

Formation of fund to enforce this Act.

"(2.) The council of every municipality shall set apart not less than one-third part of such fines or penalties received by the said municipality for a fund to secure the prosecution for infractions of this Act."

The voter will go into one of the compartments, and, with a pencil there provided, place a cross, thus ×, in the upper space if he votes for the adoption of the petition, and in the lower space if he votes against the adoption of the petition.

The voter will then fold the ballot, so as to show a portion of the back only, with the number and the initials of the deputy returning officer, and deliver it to the deputy returning officer, who will place it in the ballot box. The voter will then forthwith quit the polling station.

If a voter inadvertently spoils a ballot paper he can return it to the proper officer, who, on being satisfied of the fact, will give him another.

If the voter places on the ballot paper more than one mark, or places any mark on it by which he can afterwards be identified, his vote will be void, and will not be counted.

If the voter takes a ballot paper out of the polling station, or fraudulently puts any other paper into the ballot box than the ballot paper given him by the deputy returning officer, he will be subject to be punished by fine or by imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months, with or without hard labour.

Further Correspondence respecting the Occurrences at Fortune Bay, Newfoundland, in January 1878.

[In continuation of "North America No. 3 (1878)."]

No. 1.

Mr. Welsh to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received August 13.)

My Lord, Legation of the United States, London, August 13, 1879.

I HAVE just received a very important despatch from Mr. Evarts stating the claims for damages, amounting to 105,305 $\frac{2}{10}$ dollars, sustained by certain citizens of the United States, owners of twenty-two vessels in Fortune Bay, Newfoundland, in the month of January 1878, which claims have already formed the subject of a previous correspondence with your Lordship.

As the argument for the payment of these claims by Her Majesty's Government is presented by Mr. Evarts in a very full, clear, and forcible manner, I have thought it proper to submit his instruction to me in its original form to your Lordship, asking for it an early and favourable consideration.

I have, &c.
(Signed) JOHN WELSH.

Inclosure in No. 1.

Mr. Evarts to Mr. Welsh.

Sir, Department of State, Washington, August 1, 1879.

YOU will readily understand that the pressure of current business, especially during the regular and special sessions of Congress, has prevented so immediate attention to the claims of the Fortune Bay fishermen, as definitely laid before me in their proofs completed during the session, as would enable me to give in reply a full consideration to the despatch of Lord Salisbury of the date of the 7th November, 1878, in reply to mine to you of the 28th September, 1878.

But other and stronger reasons have also induced me to postpone until now any discussion of the questions arising out of the occurrences to which those despatches referred.

It so happened that the transactions of which certain citizens of the United States complain were brought fully to the attention of the Government about the same time at which it became my duty to lay before Her Britannic Majesty's Government the views of the United States' Government as to the award then recently made by the Commission on the Fisheries which had just closed its sittings at Halifax. While the character of the complaint and the interests of the citizens of the United States rendered it necessary that the subject should be submitted to the consideration of Her Britannic Majesty's Government at the earliest possible moment, in order to the prevention of any further and graver misunderstanding, and the avoidance of any serious interruption to an important industry, I was exceedingly unwilling that the questions arising under the award and those provoked by the occurrences in Newfoundland should be confused with each other, and least of all would I have been willing that the simultaneous presentment of the views of this Government should be construed as indicating any desire on our part to connect the settlement of these complaints with the satisfaction or abrogation of the Halifax award.

I also deemed it not unadvisable in the interests of such a solution as I am sure is desired by the good sense and good temper of both Governments that time should be allowed for the extinguishment of the local irritation, both here and in Newfoundland, which these transactions seem to have excited, and that another fishing season should more clearly indicate whether the rights to which the citizens of the United States were entitled under the Treaty were denied or diminished by the pretensions and acts of the Colonial authorities, or whether their infraction was accidental and temporary.

As soon as the violence to which citizens of the United States had been subjected in Newfoundland was brought to the attention of this Department, I instructed you, on the 2nd March, 1878, to represent the matter to Her Britannic Majesty's Government, and upon such representation you were informed that a prompt investigation would be ordered for the information of that Government. On the 23rd August, 1878, Lord Salisbury conveyed to you, to be transmitted to your Government, the result of that investigation in the shape of a Report from Captain Sulivan, of Her Majesty's ship "Sirius." In furnishing you with this Report, Lord Salisbury, on behalf of Her Britannic Majesty's Government, said: "You will perceive that the Report in question appears to demonstrate conclusively that the United States' fishermen on this occasion had committed three distinct breaches of the law, and that no violence was used by the Newfoundland fishermen, except in the case of one vessel whose master refused to comply with the request which was made to him that he should desist from fishing on Sunday, in violation of the law of the Colony and of the local custom, and who threatened the Newfoundland fishermen with a revolver, as detailed in paragraphs 5 and 6 of Captain Sulivan's Report."

The three breaches of the law thus reported by Captain Sulivan, and assumed by Lord Salisbury as conclusively established, were:—

1. The use of seines, and the use of them also at a time prohibited by a Colonial Statute.
2. Fishing upon a day, Sunday, forbidden by the same local law; and,
3. Barring fish, in violation of the same local legislation.

In addition, Captain Sulivan reported that the United States' fishermen were, contrary to the terms of the Treaty of Washington, "fishing illegally, interfering with the rights of British fishermen and their peaceable use of that part of the coast then occupied by them, and of which they were actually in possession; their seines and boats, their huts and gardens, and land granted by Government, being situated thereon."

Yours containing this despatch and the accompanying Report was received on the 4th September, 1878, and on the 28th of the same month you were instructed that it was impossible for this Government duly to appreciate the value of Captain Sulivan's Report until it was permitted to see the testimony upon which the conclusions of that Report professed to rest. And you were further directed to say that, putting aside for after examination the variations of fact, it seemed to this Government that the assumption of the Report was that the United States' fishermen were fishing illegally, because their fishing was being conducted at a time and by methods forbidden by certain Colonial statutes; that the language of Lord Salisbury in communicating the Report with his approval indicated the intention of Her Britannic Majesty's Government to maintain the position that the Treaty privileges secured to United States' fishermen by the Treaty of 1871 were held subject to such limitations as might be imposed upon their exercise by Colonial legislation; and "that so grave a question, in its bearing upon the obligations of this Government under the Treaty, makes it necessary that the President should ask from Her Majesty's Government a frank avowal or disavowal of the paramount authority of provincial legislation to regulate the enjoyment by our people of the inshore fishery which seems to be intimated, if not asserted, in Lord Salisbury's note."

In reply to this communication Lord Salisbury, on the 7th November, 1878, transmitted to you the depositions which accompanied Captain Sulivan's Report, and said: "In pointing out that the American fishermen had broken the law within the territorial limits of Her Majesty's domains, I had no intention of inferentially laying down any principles of international law, and no advantage would, I think, be gained by doing so to a greater extent than the facts in question absolutely require. . . . . Her Majesty's Government will readily admit what is, indeed, self-evident—that British sovereignty, as regards those waters, is limited in its scope by the engagements of the Treaty of Washington, which cannot be modified or affected by any municipal legislation." It is with the greatest pleasure that the United States' Government receives this language as "the frank disavowal," which it asked, "of the paramount authority of provincial legislation to regulate the enjoyment by our people of the inshore fishery." Removing, as this explicit language does, the only serious difficulty which threatened to embarrass this discussion, I am now at liberty to resume the consideration of these differences in the same spirit and with the same hopes so fully and properly expressed in the concluding paragraph of Lord Salisbury's despatch. He says: "It is not explicitly stated in Mr. Evarts' despatch that he considers any recent Acts of the Colonial Legislature to be inconsistent with the rights acquired by the United States under the Treaty of Washington. But, if that is the case, Her Majesty's Government will, in a friendly spirit, consider any representations he may think it right to make upon the subject, with the hope of coming to a satisfactory understanding."

It is the purpose, therefore, of the present despatch to convey to you, in order that they may be submitted to Her Britannic Majesty's Government, the conclusions which have been reached by the Government of the United States as to the rights secured to its citizens under the Treaty of 1871 in the herring fishery upon the Newfoundland coast, and the extent to which those rights have been infringed by the transactions in Fortune Bay on the 6th January, 1878.

Before doing so, however, I deem it proper, in order to clear the argument of all unnecessary issues, to correct what I consider certain misapprehensions of the views of this Government contained in Lord Salisbury's despatch of the 7th November, 1878. The Secretary for Foreign Affairs of Her Britannic Majesty says:—

"If, however, it be admitted that the Newfoundland Legislature have the right of binding Americans who fish within their waters by any laws which do not contravene existing Treaties, it must be further conceded that the duty of determining the existence of such contravention must be undertaken by the Governments, and cannot be remitted to the discretion of each individual fisherman. For such discretion, if exercised on one side, can hardly be refused on the other. If any American fisherman may violently break a law which he believes to be contrary to Treaty, a Newfoundland fisherman may violently maintain it if he believes it to be in accordance with Treaty." His Lordship can scarcely have intended this last proposition to be taken in its literal significance. An infraction of law may be accompanied by violence which affects the person or property of an individual, and that individual may be warranted in resisting such illegal violence, so far as it directly affects him, without reference to the relation of the act of violence to the law which it infringes, but simply as a forcible invasion of his rights of person or property. But that the infraction of a general municipal law, with or without violence, can be corrected and punished by a mob, without official character or direction, and who assume both to interpret and administer the law in controversy, is a proposition whith does not require the reply of elaborate argument between two Governments whose daily life depends upon the steady application of the sound and safe principles of English jurisprudence. However this may be, the Government of the United States cannot for a moment admit that the conduct of the United States' fishermen in Fortune Bay was in any—the remotest—degree a violent breach of law. Granting any and all the force which may be claimed for the Colonial Legislature, the action of the United States' fishermen was the peaceable prosecution of an innocent industry, to which they thought they were entitled. Its pursuit invaded no man's rights, committed violence upon no man's person, and if trespassing beyond its lawful limits could have been promptly and quietly stopped by the interference and representation of the lawfully-constituted authorities. They were acting under the provisions of the very statute which they are alleged to have violated, for it seems to have escaped the attention of Lord Salisbury that section 28 of the title of the Consolidated Acts referred to contains the provision that "Nothing in this chapter shall affect the rights and privileges granted by Treaty to the subjects of any State or Power in amity with Her Majesty." They were engaged, as I shall hereafter demonstrate, in a lawful industry, guaranteed by the Treaty of 1871, in a method which was recognized as legitimate by the award of the Halifax Commission, the privilege to exercise which their Government had agreed to pay for. They were forcibly stopped, not by legal authority, but by mob violence. They made no resistance, withdrew from the fishing grounds, and represented the outrage to their Government, thus acting in entire conformity with the principle so justly stated by Lord Salisbury himself, that "if it be admitted, however, that the Newfoundland Legislature have the right of binding Americans who fish within their waters by any laws which do not contravene existing Treaties, it must be further conceded that the duty of determining the existence of such contravention must be undertaken by the Governments, and cannot be remitted to the judgment of each individual fisherman." There is another passage of Lord Salisbury's despatch to which I should call your attention. Lord Salisbury says: "I hardly believe, however, that Mr. Evarts would, in discussion, adhere to the broad doctrine which some portion of his language would appear to convey, that no British authority has a right to pass any kind of laws binding Americans who are fishing in British waters; for if that contention be just, the same disability applies, a fortiori, to any other Powers, and the waters must be delivered over to anarchy." I certainly cannot recall any language of mine in this correspondence which is capable of so extraordinary a construction. I have nowhere taken any position larger or broader than that which Lord Salisbury says: "Her Majesty's Government will readily admit what is, indeed, self-evident—that British sovereignty, as regards those waters, is limited in its scope by the engagements of the Treaty of Washington, which cannot be affected or modified by any municipal legislation." I have never denied the full authority and jurisdiction either of the Imperial or Colonial Governments over their territorial waters, except so far as by Treaty that authority and jurisdiction have been deliberately limited by these Governments themselves. Under no claim or authority suggested or advocated by me could any other Government demand exemption from the provisions of British or Colonial law, unless that exemption was secured by Treaty; and if these "waters must be delivered over to anarchy," it will not be in consequence of any pretensions of the United States' Government, but because the British Government has, by its own Treaties, to use Lord Salisbury's phrase, limited the scope of British sovereignty. I am not aware of any such Treaty engagements with other Powers, but if there are, it would be neither my privilege nor duty to consider or criticize their consequences where the interests of the United States are not concerned.

After a careful comparison of all the depositions furnished to both Governments, the United States' Government is of opinion that the following facts will not be disputed:—

1. That twenty-two vessels belonging to citizens of the United States, viz., "Fred. P. Frye," "Mary and M.," "Lizzie and Namari," "Edward E. Webster," "W. E. McDonald," "Crest of the Wave," "F. A. Smith," "Hereward," "Moses Adams," "Charles E. Warren," "Moro Castle," "Wildfire," "Maud and Effie," "Isaac Rich," "Bunker Hill," "Bonanza," "H. M. Rogers," "Moses Knowlton," "John W. Bray," "Maud B. Wetherell," "New England," and "Ontario," went from Gloucester, a town in Massachusetts, United States, to Fortune Bay, in Newfoundland, in the winter of 1877-78, for the purpose of procuring herring.

2. That these vessels waited at Fortune Bay for several weeks (from about December 15th, 1877, to January 6th, 1878), for the expected arrival of schools of herring in that harbour.

3. That on Sunday, January 6th, 1878, the herring entered the Bay in great numbers, and that four of the vessels sent their boats with seines to commence fishing operations, and the others were proceeding to follow.

4. That the parties thus seining were compelled by a large and violent mob of the inhabitants of Newfoundland to take up their seines, discharge the fish already inclosed, and abandon their fishery, and that in one case at least the seine was absolutely destroyed.

5. That these seines were being used in the interest of all the United States' vessels waiting for cargoes in the harbour, and that the catch undisturbed would have been sufficient to load all of them with profitable cargoes. The great quantity of fish in the harbour, and the fact that the United States' vessels, if permitted to fish, would all have obtained full cargoes, is admitted in the British depositions.

"If the Americans had been allowed to secure all the herrings in the Bay for themselves, which they could have done that day, they would have filled all their vessels, and the neighbouring fishermen would have lost all chance on the following week-days." (Deposition of James Searwell.)

"The Americans, by hauling herring that day, when the Englishmen could not, were robbing them of their lawful and just chance of securing their share in them; and, further, had they secured all they had barred, they would, I believe, have filled every vessel of theirs in the Bay." (Deposition of John Cluett.)

See also affidavits of the United States' Captains.

6. That, in consequence of this violence, all the vessels abandoned the fishing grounds, some without cargoes, some with very small cargoes, purchased from the natives, and their voyages were a loss to their owners.

7. That the seining was conducted at a distance from any land or fishing privilege, or the occupation of any British subject. (See affidavits of Willard G. Rode, Charles Doyle, and Michael B. Murray.)

8. That none of the United States' vessels made any further attempts to fish, but three or four, which were delayed in the neighbourhood, purchased small supplies of herring. (See British depositions of John Saunders and Silas Fudge, wherein is stated that the United States' vessels only remained a few days, and that after January 6th no fish came into the harbour.) All the United States' affidavits show that the United States' vessels were afraid to use their seines after this, and that they left almost immediately, most of them coming home in ballast.

The provisions of the Treaty of Washington (1871), by which the right to prosecute this fishery was secured to the citizens of the United States, are very simple and very explicit.

The language of the Treaty is as follows:—

"XVIII. It is agreed by the High Contracting Parties that in addition to the liberties secured to the United States' fishermen by the Convention between the United States and Great Britain, signed at London on the 20th day of October, 1818, of taking, curing, and drying fish on certain coasts of the British North American Colonies, therein defined, the inhabitants of the United States shall have, in common with the subjects of Her Britannic Majesty, the liberty, for the term of years mentioned in Article XXXIII of this Treaty, to take fish of every kind, except shell-fish, on the sea-coast and shores, and in the bays, harbours, and creeks of the provinces of Quebec, &c."

"XXXII. It is further agreed that the provisions and stipulations of Articles XVIII to XXV of this Treaty, inclusive, shall extend to the Colony of Newfoundland, so far as they are applicable."

Title 27, chapter 102 of the Consolidated Acts of Newfoundland provides:—

Section 1. That no person shall take herring on the coast of Newfoundland, by a seine or other such contrivance, at any time between the 20th day of October and the 12th day of April in any year, or at any time use a seine except by way of shooting and forthwith hauling the same.

Sec. 2. That no person shall, at any time between the 20th day of December and the 1st day of April in any year, catch or take herring with seine of less than $2\frac{3}{8}$ inches mesh, &c.

Sec. 4. No person shall, between the 20th day of April and the 20th day of October in any year, haul, catch, or take herring or other bait, for exportation, within one mile measured by the shore or across the water of any settlement situate between Cape Chapeau Rouge and Point Emajer, near Cape Ray.

The Act of 1876 provides that "no person shall, between the hours of 12 o'clock on Saturday night and 12 o'clock on Sunday night, haul or take any herring, caplin, or squid with net, seine, bunts, or any such contrivance for the purpose of such hauling or taking."

It seems scarcely necessary to do more than place the provisions of the Treaty and the provisions of these laws in contrast, and apply the principle, so precisely and justly announced by Lord Salisbury as self-evident, "That British sovereignty, as regards those waters, is limited in its scope by the engagements of the Treaty of Washington, which cannot be modified or affected by any municipal legislation." For it will not be denied that the Treaty privilege of "taking fish of every kind, except shell-fish, on the sea coast and shores, in the bays, harbours, and creeks" of Newfoundland is both seriously "modified" and injuriously affected by "municipal legislation," which closes such fishery absolutely for seven months of the year, prescribes a special method of exercise, forbids exportation for five months, and, in certain localities, absolutely limits the three-mile area which it was the express purpose of the Treaty to open.

But this is not all. When the Treaty of 1871 was negotiated, the British Government contended that the privilege extended to United States' fishermen of free fishing within the three-mile territorial limit was so much more valuable than the equivalent offered in the Treaty that a money compensation should be added to equalize the exchange. The Halifax Commission was appointed for the special purpose of determining that compensation, and, in order to do so, instituted an exhaustive examination of the history and value of the Colonial fisheries, including the herring fishery of Newfoundland. Before that Commission the United States' Government contended that the frozen herring fishery in Fortune Bay, Newfoundland, the very fishery now under discussion, was not a fishery but a traffic; that the United States' vessels which went there for herring always took out trading permits from the United States' custom-houses, which no other fishermen did; that the herring were caught by the natives in their nets and sold to the vessels, the captains of which froze the herring after purchase and transported them to market; and that, consequently, this was a trade, a commerce beneficial to the Newfoundlanders, and not to be debited to the United States' account of advantages gained by the Treaty. To this the British Government replied that, whatever the character of the business had been, the Treaty now gave the United States' fishermen the right to catch as well as purchase herring; that the superior character of the United States' vessels, the larger capacity and more efficient instrumentality of the seines used by the United States' fishermen, together with their enterprise and energy, would all induce the United States' fishermen to catch herring for themselves, and thus the Treaty gave certain privileges to the United States' fishermen which inflicted upon the original proprietor a certain amount of loss and damage from this dangerous competition, which, in justice to their interests, required compensation. The exercise of these privileges, therefore, as stated in the British Case, as evidenced in the British testimony, as maintained in the British argument, for which the British Government demanded and received compensation, is the British construction of the extent of the liberty to fish in common, guaranteed by the Treaty.

Mr. Whiteway, then Attorney-General of Newfoundland, and one of the British Counsel before the Commission, said in his argument:—

"And now one word with regard to the winter herring fishery in Fortune Bay. It appears that from forty to fifty United States' vessels proceed there between the months of November and February, taking from thence cargoes of frozen herring of from 500 to 800 or 1,000 barrels. According to the evidence, these herrings have hitherto generally been obtained by purchase. It is hardly possible, then, to conceive that the Americans will continue to buy, possessing, as they now do, the right to catch."

The British Case states the argument as to the Newfoundland fisheries in the following language:—

"It is asserted, on the part of Her Majesty's Government, that the actual use which may be made of this privilege at the present moment is not so much in question as the actual value of it to those who may, if they will, use it. It is possible, and even probable, that the United States' fishermen may at any moment avail themselves of the privilege of fishing in Newfoundland inshore waters to a much larger extent than they do at present; but even if they should not do so, it would not relieve them from the obligation of making the just payment for a right which they have acquired subject to the condition of making that payment. The case may be not inaptly illustrated by the somewhat analogous one of a tenancy of shooting or fishing privileges; it is not because the tenant fails to exercise the rights, which he has acquired by virtue of his lease, that the proprietor should be debarred from the recovery of his rent.

"There is a marked contrast to the advantage of the United States' citizens between the privilege of access to fisheries the most valuable and productive in the world, and the barren right accorded to the inhabitants of Newfoundland of fishing in the exhausted and preoccupied waters of the United States north of the 39th parallel of north latitude, in which there is no field for lucrative operations, even if British subjects desired to resort to them; and there are strong grounds for believing that year by year, as United States' fishermen resort in greater numbers to the coasts of Newfoundland, for the purpose of procuring bait and supplies, they will become more intimately acquainted with the resources of the inshore fisheries, and their unlimited capacity for extension and development. As a matter of fact, United States' vessels have, since the Washington Treaty came into operation, been successfully engaged in these fisheries; and it is but reasonable to anticipate that, as the advantages to be derived from them become more widely known, larger numbers of United States' fishermen will engage in them.

"A participation by fishermen of the United States in the freedom of these waters must, notwithstanding their wonderfully reproductive capacity, tell materially on the local catch, and while affording to the United States' fishermen a profitable employment, must seriously interfere with local success. The extra amount of bait, also, which is required for the supply of the United States' demand for bank fishery, must have the effect of diminishing the supply of cod for the inshores, as it is well known that the presence of that fish is caused by the attraction offered by a large quantity of bait fishes, and as this quantity diminishes the cod will resort in fewer number to the coast.

"The effect of this diminution may not in all probability be apparent for some years to come, and whilst United States' fishermen will have the liberty of enjoying the fisheries for several years in their present teeming and remunerative state, the effects of over fishing may, after their right to participate in them has lapsed, become seriously prejudicial to the interests of the local fishermen.

"II. The privilege of procuring bait and supplies, refitting, drying, transhipping, &c.

"Apart from the immense value to United States' fishermen of participation in the Newfoundland inshore fisheries must be estimated the important privilege of procuring bait for the prosecution of the bank and deep-sea fisheries, which are capable of unlimited expansion. With Newfoundland as a basis of operations, the right of procuring bait, refitting their vessels, drying and curing fish, procuring ice in abundance for the preservation of bait, liberty of transhipping their cargoes, &c., an almost continuous prosecution of the bank fishery is secured to them. By means of these advantages United States' fishermen have acquired, by the Treaty of Washington, all the requisite facilities for increasing their fishing operations to such an extent as to enable them to supply the demand for fish food in the United States' markets, and largely to furnish the other fish markets of the world, and thereby exercise a competition which must inevitably prejudice Newfoundland exporters. It must be remembered, in contrast with the foregoing, that United States' fishing craft, before the conclusion of the Treaty of Washington, could only avail themselves of the Coast of Newfoundland for obtaining a supply of wood and water, for shelter, and for necessary repairs in case of accident, and for no other purpose whatever; they therefore prosecuted the bank fishery under great disadvantages, notwithstanding which, owing to the failure of United States' local fisheries, and the consequent necessity of providing new fishing grounds, the bank fisheries have developed into a lucrative source of employment to the fishermen of the United States. That this position is appreciated by those actively engaged in the bank fishery is attested by the statements of competent witnesses, whose evidence will be laid before the Commission."

And in the reply of the British Government, referring to the same Newfoundland fisheries, is the following declaration :—

"As regards the herring fishery on the Coast of Newfoundland, it is availed of, to a considerable extent, by the United States' fishermen, and evidence will be adduced of large exportations by them in American vessels, particularly from Fortune Bay and the neighbourhood, both to European and their own markets.

"The presence of United States' fishermen upon the Coast of Newfoundland, so far from being an advantage, as is assumed in the answer, operates most prejudicially to Newfoundland fishermen. Bait is not thrown overboard to attract the fish, as asserted; but the United States' bank fishing vessels, visiting the coast in such large numbers as they do, for the purpose of obtaining bait, sweep the coast, creeks, and inlets, thereby diminishing the supply of bait for local catch, and scaring it from the grounds, where it would otherwise be an attraction for cod."

In support of these views, the most abundant testimony was produced by the British Government, showing the extent of the United States' herring fishery, the character and construction of the seines used, the time when the vessels came and left, and the employment of the native fishermen by the United States' vessels; and it follows unanswerably that upon the existence of that fishery between the months of October and April (the very time prohibited by the Colonial law), and upon the use of just such seines as were used by the complainants in this case (the very seines forbidden by the Colonial law), and because the increasing direct fishery of the United States' vessels was interfering with native methods and native profits, the British Government demanded and received compensation for the damages thus alleged to proceed from "the liberty to take fish of every kind" secured by the Treaty. This Government cannot anticipate that the British Government will now contend that the time and the method for which it asked and received compensation are forbidden by the terms of the very Treaty under which it made the claim and received the payment. Indeed, the language of Lord Salisbury justifies the Government of the United States in drawing the conclusion that between itself and Her Britannic Majesty's Government there is no substantial difference in the construction of the privilege of the Treaty of 1871, and that, in the future, the Colonial regulation of the fisheries, with which, as far as their own interests are concerned, we have neither right nor desire to intermeddle, will not be allowed to modify or affect the rights which have been guaranteed to citizens of the United States.

You will therefore say to Lord Salisbury that the Government of the United States considers that the engagements of the Treaty of 1871 contravened by the local legislation of Newfoundland, by the prohibition of the use of seines, by the closing of the fishery with seines between October and April, by the forbidding of fishing for the purpose of exportation between December and April, by the prohibition to fish on Sunday, by the allowance of nets of only a specified mesh, and by the limitation of the area of fishing between Cape Ray and Cape Chapeau Rouge. Of course, this is only upon the supposition that such laws are considered as applying to United States' fishermen. As local regulations for native fishermen, we have no concern with them. The contravention consists in excluding United States' fishermen during the very times in which they have been used to pursue this industry, and forbidding the methods by which alone it can profitably be carried on. The exclusion of the time from October to April covers the only season in which frozen herring can be procured, while the prohibition of the seines would interfere with the vessels, who, occupied in cod fishing during the summer, go to Fortune Bay in the winter, and would consequently have to make a complete change in their fishing gear, or depend entirely upon purchase from the natives for their supply. The prohibition of work on Sunday is impossible under the conditions of the fishery. The vessels must be at Fortune Bay at a certain time, and leave for market at a certain time. The entrance of the schools of herring is uncertain, and the time they stay equally so. Whenever they come they must be caught, and the evidence in this very case shows that after Sunday, the 6th of January, there was no other influx of these fish, and that prohibition on that day would have been equivalent to shutting out the fishermen for the season.

If I am correct in the views hitherto expressed, it follows that the United States' Government must consider the United States' fishermen as engaged in a lawful industry, from which they were driven by lawless violence, at great loss and damage to them, and that as this was in violation of rights guaranteed by the Treaty of Washington between Great Britain and the United States, they have reasonable ground to expect, at the hands of Her Britannic Majesty's Government, proper compensation for the loss they have sustained. The United States' Government, of course, desires to avoid an exaggerated estimate of the loss, which has actually sustained, but thinks you will find the elements for a fair calculation in the sworn statement of the owners, copies of which are herewith sent.

You will find in the printed pamphlet which accompanies this, and which is the statement submitted to this Department on behalf of twenty of the vessels, the expense of each vessel in preparation for the fishery and her estimated loss and damage. The same statement with regard to the two vessels "New England" and "Ontario," not included in this list of twenty, you will find attached hereto, thus making a complete statement for the twenty-two vessels which were in Fortune Bay on the 6th January, 1878, and the Government of the United States sees no reason to doubt the accuracy of these estimates. I find upon examining the testimony of one of the most intelligent of the Newfoundland witnesses called before the Halifax Commission by the British Government, Judge Bennett, formerly Speaker of the Colonial House, and himself largely interested in the business, that he estimates the Fortune Bay business in frozen herring, in the former years of purchase, at 20,000 to 25,000 barrels for the season, and that it was increasing, and this is confirmed by others. The evidence in this case shows that the catch which the United States' fishing fleet had on this occasion actually realized was exceptionally large, and would have supplied profitable cargoes for all of them. When to this is added the fact that the whole winter was lost, and these vessels compelled to return home in ballast, that this violence had such an effect upon this special fishery that in the winter of 1878-79 it has been almost entirely abandoned, and the former fleet of twenty-six vessels has been reduced to eight, none of whom went provided with seines, but were compelled to purchase their fish of the inhabitants of Newfoundland, the United States' Government is of opinion that 105,305.02 dollars may be presented as an estimate of the loss as claimed, and you will consider that amount as being what this Government will regard as adequate compensation for loss and damage.

In conclusion, I would not be doing justice to the wishes and opinions of the United States' Government if I did not express its profound regret at the apparent conflict of interests which the exercise of its Treaty privileges appears to have developed. There is no intention on the part of this Government that these privileges should be abused, and no desire that their full and free enjoyment should harm the Colonial fishermen. While the differing interests and methods of the shore fishery and the vessel fishery make it impossible that the regulation of the one should be entirely given to the other, yet if the mutual obligations of the Treaty of 1871 are to be maintained, the United States' Government would gladly co-operate with the Government of Her Britannic Majesty in any effort to make those regulations a matter of reciprocal convenience and right, a means of preserving the fisheries at their highest point of production, and of conciliating a community of interest by a just proportion of advantages and profits.

I am, &c.

No. 2.

Mr. Welsh to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received August 13.)

My Lord, Legation of the United States, London, August 13, 1879.

REFERRING to my note of this day's date, transmitting a copy of Mr. Evarts' instruction to me on the subject of the claims of the Fortune Bay fishermen, I have the honour to inclose herewith, for your Lordship's information, the detailed statements of loss and damage incurred by these fishermen in respect to twenty-two vessels, and mentioned in Mr. Evarts' despatch.

I beg at the same time that your Lordship, at your entire convenience and after making such use of them as you may think proper, will kindly return these documents, as no duplicates of them are at hand, and to have them copied before asking your Lordship's attention to this subject would occasion a delay which I desire to avoid.

I have, &c.

Memorandum.

This schooner's seine was filled with herring when the mob tripped it, and they then endeavoured to destroy the seine, but were prevented by the captain and crew, at the peril of their lives.

We had this schooner built for mackerel fishing in summer and Newfoundland herring fishing in winter. She is all furnished with herring seines and boats for such business; but having been deprived the privilege of seining herring in Newfoundland, and by mobs, we have been obliged to abandon the enterprise, causing a great loss to us.

I, Charles Dagle, master of the American schooner "Lizzie and Namari," of Rockport, district of Gloucester, do, on oath, depose and say, that I know Mr. Bolt, who resided in a hut or shanty near Tickle Beach, Newfoundland; that I was there on the 6th January, 1878, and saw the hostile acts of the British fishermen. Mr. Bolt's hut is about 150 yards back from the beach. I have been to Newfoundland fourteen successive years, and never heard of any persons claiming any rights on the beach, everybody using it in common. The three huts there are in the nature of squatter property, used only in the winter. Mr. Bolt never made any claim that I knew of; and the American seines were not used within 300 yards of Bolt's place, except where the seines were hauled on the beach by British fishermen and destroyed. The seines that were obliged to be taken up were 500 yards or more from Bolt's place. The seine of the "F. A. Smith," Captain McDonald, was one-fourth of a mile away. Mr. Hickey, a resident of Fortune Bay, had his seine nearest to Bolt's house. Mr. Hickey's seine was the first seine set on the 6th January, 1878, and the British fishermen attacked him as well as the Americans.

I, Peter Smith, of Gloucester, master of the American schooner "Charles C. Warren," of Gloucester, do on oath depose and say that I was at Tickle Beach, Fortune Bay, Newfoundland, on the 6th January, 1878. That I had been to Labrador, from thence to Bay of Islands, and thence to Fortune Bay for a load of herring. On the morning of the 6th January, 1878, herring made their appearance in close proximity to the shore in great abundance. I was provided with two seines with which to take herring, and should have loaded my vessel and others on that day. I had my seine in the boat, and was preparing to use it when the attack was made on the other American seines, and I saw them destroyed, and I found that the mob of 200 or 300 of the British fishermen were determined to destroy every seine, and I did not dare put my seine in the water. After this time I bought of the British fishermen about 400 barrels of herring, paying 1 dol. 40 c. per barrel. My vessel would carry 1,300 barrels, all of which I could have taken on the 6th January at little or no cost to myself. I was about a fortnight buying 400 barrels of herring. I consider that my loss was at least 3,000 dollars, in addition to the expense of the voyage, by the hostile acts of the British fishermen.

*The Marquis of Salisbury to Mr. Hoppin.

Sir, Foreign Office, April 3, 1880.

IN the note which I had the honour to address to you on the 12th February last I explained the reason why a certain time has unavoidably elapsed before Her Majesty's Government were in a position to reply to Mr. Welsh's notes of the 13th August last, in which he preferred, on the part of your Government, a claim for 105,305 dols. 2 c. as compensation to some United States' fishermen on account of losses stated to have been sustained by them through certain occurrences which took place at Fortune Bay, Newfoundland, on the 6th January, 1878. The delay which has arisen has been occasioned by the necessity of instituting a very careful inquiry into the circumstances of the case, to which, in all its bearings, Her Majesty's Government were anxious to give the fullest consideration before coming to a decision. Her Majesty's Government having now completed that inquiry so far as lies within their power, I beg leave to request you to be so good as to communicate to your Government the following observations on the case.

In considering whether compensation can properly be demanded and paid in this case, regard must be had to the facts as established, and to the intent and effect of the Articles of the Treaty of Washington and the Convention of 1818 which are applicable to those facts.

The facts, so far as they are known to Her Majesty's Government, are disclosed by the affidavits contained in the inclosed printed paper, which, for convenience of reference, have been numbered in consecutive order. Nos. 1 and 2 were received by Her Majesty's Government from his Excellency the Governor of Newfoundland; Nos. 3 to 10, inclusive, were attached to the Report made by Captain Sulivan, of Her Majesty's ship "Sirius," who was instructed to make an inquiry into the case. These were communicated to Mr. Welsh with my note of the 7th November, 1878. Nos. 11 to 16, inclusive, are the affidavits of United States' fishermen, printed in the "New

* Copies of this letter were sent to Sir E. Thornton and to the Colonial Office.

York Herald" of the 28th January, 1878, and were received from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington. They have not been received officially from the Government of the United States, but Her Majesty's Government see no reason to doubt their authenticity. Nos. 17 to 22 were annexed to Mr. Welsh's note of the 13th August last.

A careful examination of the above evidence shows that on the day in question a large number of the crews of the United States' fishing vessels came on shore, and from the beach barred the herrings, the ends of their seines being secured to the shore. That the fishermen of the locality remonstrated against these proceedings, and upon their remonstrance proving unavailing, removed the nets by force.

Such being the facts, the following two questions arise:—

1. Have United States' fishermen the right to use the strand for purposes of actual fishing?

2. Have they the right to take herrings with a seine at the season of the year in question, or to use a seine at any season of the year for the purpose of barring herrings on the coast of Newfoundland?

The answers to the above questions depend on the interpretation of the Treaties.

With regard to the first question, namely, the right to the strand-fishery, I would observe that Article I of the Convention between Great Britain and the United States of the 20th October, 1818, secured to citizens of the United States the right, in common with British subjects, to take fish of every kind on certain specified portions of the coast of Newfoundland, and to use the shore for the purposes of purchasing wood and obtaining water, and for no other purpose whatever.

Articles XVIII and XXXII of the Treaty of Washington superadded to the above-mentioned privileges the right for United States' fishermen to take fish of every kind (with certain exceptions not relevant to the present case) on all portions of the coast of that island, and permission to land for the purpose of drying their nets and curing their fish, "provided that in so doing they do not interfere with the rights of private property or with British fishermen in the peaceable use of any part of the said coast in their occupancy for the same purpose."

Thus, whilst absolute freedom in the matter of fishing in territorial waters is granted, the right to use the shore for four specified purposes alone is mentioned in the Treaty Articles from which United States' fishermen derive their privileges, viz., to purchase wood, to obtain water, to dry nets, and cure fish.

The citizens of the United States are thus by clear implication absolutely precluded from the use of the shore in the direct act of catching fish. This view was maintained in the strongest manner before the Halifax Commission by the United States' Agent, who, with reference to the proper interpretation to be placed on the Treaty stipulations, used the following language: "No rights to do anything upon the land are conferred upon the citizens of the United States under this Treaty, with the single exception of the right to dry nets and cure fish on the shores of the Magdalen Islands, if we did not possess that before. No right to land for the purpose of seining from the shore; no right to the 'strand fishery' as it has been called; no right to do anything except, water-borne on our vessels, to go within the limits which had been previously forbidden."

"So far as the herring trade goes, we could not, if we were disposed to, carry it on successfully under the provisions of the Treaty; for this herring trade is substantially a seining from the shore—a strand fishing, as it is called—and we have no right anywhere conferred by this Treaty to go ashore and seine herring any more than we have to establish fish-traps."

Her Majesty's Government, therefore, cannot anticipate that any difference of opinion will be found to exist between the two Governments on this point.

The incident now under discussion occurred on that part of the shore of Fortune Bay which is called Tickle Beach, Long Harbour. On this Beach is situated the fishing settlement of Mark Bolt, a British fisherman, who, in his evidence taken upon oath, deposed as follows: "The ground I occupy was granted me for life by Government, and for which I have to pay a fee. There are two families on the Beach; there were three in winter. Our living is dependent on our fishing off this settlement. If these large American seines are allowed to be hauled it forces me away from the place."

John Saunders, another British fisherman of Tickle Beach, deposed that the United States' fishermen hauled their seine on the beach immediately in front of his property.

The United States' fishermen, therefore, on the occasion in question, not only exceeded the limits of their Treaty privileges by fishing from the shore, but they "interfered with the rights of private property and with British fishermen in the peaceable use of that part of the coast in their occupancy for the same purpose," contrary to the express provisions of Articles XVIII and XXXII of the Treaty of Washington. Further, they used seines for the purpose of in-barring herrings, and this leads me to the consideration of the second question, viz.: whether United States' fishermen have the right to take herrings with a seine at the season of the year in question, or to use a seine at any season of the year for the purpose of barring herrings on the coast of Newfoundland.

The in-barring of herrings is a practice most injurious, and, if continued, calculated in time to destroy the fishery; consequently it has been prohibited by Statute since 1862.

In my note to Mr. Welsh of the 7th November, 1878, I stated "that British sovereignty as regards these waters is limited in its scope by the engagements of the Treaty of Washington, which cannot be modified or affected by any municipal legislation;" and Her Majesty's Government fully admit that United States' fishermen have the right of participation on the Newfoundland inshore fisheries, in common with British subjects, as specified in Article XVIII of that Treaty. But it cannot be claimed, consistently with this right of participation in common with the British fishermen, that the United States' fishermen have any other, and still less that they have greater, rights than the British fishermen had at the date of the Treaty.

If, then, at the date of the signature of the Treaty of Washington certain restraints were by the municipal law imposed upon the British fishermen, the United States' fishermen were, by the express terms of the Treaty, equally subjected to those restraints; and the obligation to observe, in common with the British, the then existing local laws and regulations which is implied by the words "in common," attached to the United States' citizens as soon as they claimed the benefit of the Treaty.

That such was the view entertained by the Government of the United States during the existence of the Reciprocity Treaty, under which United States' fishermen enjoyed precisely the same rights of fishing as they do now under the Treaty of Washington, is proved conclusively by the Circular issued on the 28th March, 1856, to the Collector of Customs at Boston, which so thoroughly expressed the views of Her Majesty's Government on this point that I quote it here in extenso:—

"Mr. Marcy to Mr. Peaslee.

"(Circular.)

"Sir, "Department of State, Washington, March 28, 1856.

"It is understood that there are certain Acts of the British North American Colonial Legislatures, and also, perhaps, executive regulations intended to prevent the wanton destruction of the fish which frequent the coasts of the Colonies, and injuries to the fishing thereon. It is deemed reasonable and desirable that both United States' and British fishermen should pay a like respect to such laws and regulations, which are designed to preserve and increase the productiveness of the fisheries on those coasts. Such being the object of these laws and regulations, the observance of them is enforced upon the citizens of the United States in the like manner as they are observed by British subjects. By granting the mutual use of the inshore fisheries, neither party has yielded its right to civic jurisdiction over a marine league along its coasts.

"Its laws are as obligatory upon the citizens or subjects of the other as upon its own. The laws of the British provinces, not in conflict with the provisions of the Reciprocity Treaty, would be as binding upon the citizens of the United States within that jurisdiction as upon British subjects. Should they be so framed or executed as to make any discrimination in favour of British fishermen, or to impair the rights secured to American fishermen by that Treaty, those injuriously affected by them will appeal to this Government for redress. In presenting complaints of this kind, should there be cause for doing so, they are requested to furnish the Department of State with a copy of the law or regulation which is alleged injuriously to affect their rights, or to make an unfair discrimination between the fishermen of the respective countries, or with a statement of any supposed grievance in the execution of such law or regulation, in order that the matter may be arranged by the two Governments.

"You will make this direction known to the masters of such fishing-vessels as belong to your port in such manner as you may deem most advisable.

(Signed) "W. L. MARCY."

I have the honour to inclose a copy of an Act passed by the Colonial Legislature of Newfoundland, on the 27th March, 1862, for the protection of the herring and salmon fisheries on the coast, and a copy of Cap. 102 of the Consolidated Statutes of Newfoundland, passed in 1872. The first section of the Act of 1862 prohibited the taking of herrings with a seine between the 20th day of October and the 12th day of April, and further prohibited the use of seines at any time for the purpose of barring herrings. These Regulations, which were in force at the date of the Treaty of Washington, were not abolished, but confirmed by the subsequent Statutes, and are binding under the Treaty upon the citizens of the United States in common with British subjects.

The United States' fishermen, therefore, in landing for the purpose of fishing at Tickle Beach, in using a seine at a prohibited time, and in barring herrings with seines from the shore, exceeded their Treaty privileges and were engaged in unlawful acts.

Her Majesty's Government have no wish to insist on any illiberal construction of the language of the Treaty, and would not consider it necessary to make any formal complaint on the subject of a casual infringement of the letter of its stipulations which did not involve any substantial detriment to British interests, and to the fishery in general.

An excess on the part of the United States' fishermen of the precise limits of the rights secured to them might proceed as much from ignorance as from wilfulness; but the present claim for compensation is based on losses resulting from a collision which was the direct consequence of such excess, and Her Majesty's Government feel bound to point to the fact that the United States' fishermen were the first and real cause of the mischief by overstepping the limits of the privileges secured to them, in a manner gravely prejudicial to the rights of other fishermen.

For the reasons above stated Her Majesty's Government are of opinion that, under the circumstances of the case as at present within their knowledge, the claim advanced by the United States' fishermen for compensation on account of the losses stated to have been sustained by them on the occasion in question is one which should not be entertained.

Mr. Evarts will not require to be assured that Her Majesty's Government, while unable to admit the contention of the United States' Government on the present occasion, are fully sensible of the evils arising from any difference of opinion between the two Governments in regard to the fishery rights of their respective subjects. They have always admitted the incompetence of the Colonial or the Imperial Legislature to limit by subsequent legislation the advantages secured by Treaty to the subjects of another Power. If it should be the opinion of the Government of the United States that any Act of the Colonial Legislature subsequent in date to the Treaty of Washington has trenched upon the rights enjoyed by the citizens of the United States in virtue of that instrument, Her Majesty's Government will consider any communication addressed to them in that view with a cordial and anxious desire to remove all just grounds of complaint.

I am, &c.

Deposition of Alfred Noel.

Newfoundland, Central District, St. John's, to wit.

THE examination of Alfred Noel, of St. John's aforesaid, master mariner, taken upon oath, and who saith:—

I am master of the schooner "Nautilus" of this port, and on the 19th day of December last I was at Long Harbour, in Fortune Bay, in the "Nautilus," which was anchored off Woody Island. I had a crew of seven men, and I was there engaged in the herring fishery. There were several American schooners; seven of them were lying off Woody Island, and two French vessels. This island forms the harbour within half-a-mile of the narrows of Long Harbour; and other American schooners and Newfoundland fishing craft were inside Woody Island, which is the inside part of Long Harbour. All the craft there, English and American, were hauling herrings in seines and nets, and the Americans were purchasing herring from the English. Everything went off quietly, and the greatest harmony prevailed until Sunday, the 6th day of January, when about half-past

2 o'clock in the afternoon five seines, belonging to the American schooners, were put into the water by their crews at the beach on the north-east side of Long Harbour. I know two of the captains by name, Dago and Jacobs, belonging to Gloster, United States, but do not know the names of their schooners. The whole five seines were barred full of herrings, when the English crews of the crafts belonging to Fortune Bay ordered them to take their seines up or they would take them up for them; and the Fortune Bay men, finding they would not do as they were requested, then hauled up two of the American seines, but without any damage or injury, and two were at the same time taken up by the Americans; and at the same time a seine belonging to Captain Dago was taken up by the Fortune Bay men, the herrings thrown out, and the seine was torn up and destroyed. Before this occurrence on the said Sunday, one of the American schooners had a seine barred with herrings on the beach at Long Harbour for seven days, and it was not at any time meddled with by the Fortune Bay men or any one. Some of the Fortune Bay men had nets out in the water on that Sunday, and the same had been there during the week, but none of the Newfoundland fishermen attempted to haul herrings on Sunday at any time while I was at Long Harbour. The Americans' practice had been until lately to purchase herring from the Newfoundland fishermen in Fortune Bay, but this year and last year the Americans have brought their own seines to haul herring for themselves. The American seines are 30 fathoms deep and 200 fathoms long, whilst those used by our fishermen are 12 or 13 fathoms deep and 120 fathoms long. These American seines are used for barring herring in deep water, such as the Fortune Bay Harbours, viz., Long Harbour, Bay de Nord, and Rencontre. Our fishermen never bar herrings, and herrings have never been barred in Fortune Bay, to my knowledge, until the Americans brought the large seines I have alluded to into Fortune Bay and used them there to the disadvantage of our fishermen. This mode of barring herrings in such harbours as I have mentioned is most destructive and ruinous to the herring fishery in those localities. I do not know the names of the persons who destroyed the seine; there were about eighty vessels from different harbours of Fortune Bay at Long Harbour at the time, and the seine was destroyed by a great lot of people. I left Long Harbour for St. John's on the 31st day of January and arrived here on the 4th instant.

Deposition of John Rumsey.

Central District, St. John's, to wit.

The examination of John Rumsey, of St. John's, master mariner, taken upon oath, who saith:—

On or about the 14th November last I sailed from St. John's to Fortune Bay for a cargo of herring. I arrived in Long Harbour, Fortune Bay, about Christmas last. I found about 200 schooners there looking for herring; twelve of the schooners were Americans; my schooner was called the "Briton," six hands all told. I got most of my herring between Christmas and the 8th January. Most all the schooners in Long Harbour lay inside of Woody Island. Woody Island is about three miles from the entrance of Long Harbour. On the northern side, rather above the island, there is a fine beach about a mile long. This is the best hauling place in Long Harbour, and most all the herrings were taken there. It is only this year and last year that the American schooners have brought down very large seines for catching herring. I have been informed that some of these seines were 250 fathoms long and 35 fathoms deep. The seines which our Newfoundland fishermen use are about 120 fathoms long and from 8 to 13 fathoms deep. In the first week in January there were four or five American schooners who had the beach above mentioned barred for herring. The mode of inbarring for herring is as follows: when a place is selected, generally a smooth beach with deep water outside free from rocks, a party is sent ashore with a long line from one end of the seine; the seine-boat then goes off with the seine, makes a long sweep, and the other end of the seine is then brought into the beach also; then the crew begin to haul together on both ends of the seine with long seine lines running fore and aft up and down the beach, four or five seines thus barring herring would cover all the hauling ground on this long beach I have spoken of, and would occupy all the best ground for hauling herring in Long Harbour. On the first Sunday in January the beach was barred by four or five large American seines. On that day, after dinner, a large number of people belonging to the crews of the Fortune Bay schooners then in Long Harbour went over to the beach, and I was informed there were 600 or 700 Newfoundland fishermen there. The Americans had barred the herring, and were hauling on their seines on the Sunday morning. The Newfoundland fishermen told the American captains to take up their seines or they would take them up for them. All the American seines were then taken up which were set on a Sunday except one; this one the American captain who owned it refused to take up. The Newfoundland fishermen then hauled it ashore, took the herrings out of the seine, and according as they hauled the seine out of the water they tore it up. I saw the seine the next day, Monday, on the beach, and it was completely destroyed; it was an old second-hand seine, and very rotten. I have been for thirteen or fourteen years carrying on the herring fishery in Fortune Bay, and during that time I have never known our Newfoundland fishermen to haul herrings on Sunday. If the American fishermen were permitted to bar herrings in the way that they were doing at Long Harbour Beach, all the rest of the craft would be deprived of the best place in the harbour to haul herrings; and such a mode of fishing for herrings is most injurious to the fishery, and must in time ruin the herring fishery there. The Americans in hauling their long seines often removed the Newfoundland fishermen's nets when they came in their way. I have known the Americans last year to have herrings barred in for a fortnight. Barring kills a great many herring, and makes those who are barred in very poor. I have seen the bottom covered with dead herring after the seine had been barred for a week. The American schooners heave out their ballast in the channel between Woody Island and the shore, and if not prevented, will soon destroy the anchorage there.

Deposition of John Saunders.

The examination of John Saunders, of Tickle Beach, Long Harbour, taken upon oath, and who saith:—

In January last there were a great number, close on 100, schooners and boats fishing for herring, both American and Newfoundlanders. The Americans were employing the English to haul their seines for them. There were some English schooners who had seines also. One Sunday, I do not know the date, John Hickey laid out a seine, and was told by the English or Newfoundlanders to take it up, as it was Sunday, which he did. The Americans laid out their seines, assisted by the English employed by them. The Newfoundlanders told them to take them up, as it was not legal their fishing on that day, being Sunday; J. McDonald took his up. Jacobs upset his net into Farrel's seine, who was employed by him. Farrel was barring for the Americans, and was not allowed by Jacobs to haul his seine until the hard weather came. After Jacobs had upset his seine into Farrel's he took it up to shoot again, and threatened with the revolver any one who interfered. Then they told McCauley to take his up, but he didn't, so the people hauled it in and tore it up.

I don't know any man concerned in the destruction of the net that I could swear to but one, John Pitman, a servant to Samuel Pardy, who was at "Jack Fountain."

There was no other reason that I know for destroying nets but for fishing on Sunday, and because they would not take them up when they were told. The Americans never hauled a seine before that day; they always employed the English to use their seines, and bought fish from the English. The only reason that the Americans laid their seines out that day was because there were plenty of herrings, and no Englishman would haul them, being Sunday, excepting Hickey, who had been compelled to take his seine up.

Q. Where does Philip Farrel live?—A. In Bay-de-North, and so does Thomas Farrel.

Q. Was any obstruction or hindrance placed in the way of the Americans before or after that Sunday?—A. No.

Q. Did they remain in the harbour until the close of the season; until the herrings slacked away were any Americans compelled to leave the coast after this circumstance?—A. No; there was nothing to prevent their remaining, and they remained for some days, until the weather became soft, and there were no more herrings in the bay. Most of them left, but one American schooner remained about three weeks after that, when another lot of herrings came into the bay, and he filled up and went away the next fair wind. Jim Boy was the captain's name.

Q. Do you know any American of the name of Dago?—A. Yes; he has part in this seine. The Americans hauled their seine on the beach immediately in front of my property.

Q. Do you know the names of the schooners?—A. No.

Q. Do you know the names of the owners of the seine?—A. Yes; Captain Dago and McCauley.

Q. Do you know anything the Americans did by way of revenge?—A. The Americans, in revenge for the destruction of the net, afterwards drifted their vessels all about the bay or river with their anchors hanging, and so hooked and destroyed many nets, about fifty or sixty, I should think. The name of one of these captains was Smith—but I don't know the name of his vessel—and the other was Pool. We all believe that this was done in revenge. They were pretending to be at anchor, where there was about 50 fathoms of water, but were drifting all over the bay and hooking the nets; there was no weather to cause them to drift. Our small boats were anchored off the beach. We had never any difficulty with the Americans before this, but were always on good terms with them.

Deposition of Mark Bolt.

The examination of Mark Bolt, of Tickle Beach, Long Harbour, taken upon oath, and who saith:—

I am a native of Dorsetshire, England. I have been in this country twenty-one years, and have been fishing all that time. I have lived in this neighbourhood fourteen or fifteen years, and at Tickle Beach since last fall. The ground I occupy (150 feet) was granted me for life by Government, and for which I have to pay a fee. There are two families on the beach; there were three in the winter. Our living is dependent on our fishing off this Settlement. If these large American seines are allowed to be hauled, it forces me away from the place.

One Sunday in January last, John Hickey, Newfoundlander, came first, and hove his seine out. Five Newfoundlanders came and told him to take it up, and he did not; then others came and insisted upon it, then he took it up. If he had then refused to take it up it would have been torn up.

Then Jacobs, an American, came and laid his seine out and hauled about 100 barrels of herring in the big American seine, and capsized into Tom Farrel's seine—a Newfoundland fisherman employed by Jacobs, and fishing for him.

Philip Farrel was also fishing for the Americans, being master of McCauley's seine. The Newfoundlanders then capsized Tom Farrel's seine of fish, who was only fishing for the Americans. After this Jim Macdonald, another American, threw out his seine. Then the people went and told Macdonald that he was not allowed to fish on Sundays, and he must take his seine up; and he took up his seine, and carried it on board his vessel. Jacobs would not allow his seine to be touched, but drew a revolver. They then went to McCauley, an American, who had laid his seine out for barring herring; this American also employed a Newfoundlander to lay his seine out. The Newfoundlanders said it should not be done on a Sabbath-day, and they resolved to tear up all the seines they could get hold of. They managed to seize McCauley's, and tore it up. They would have torn up any they could have got at if laid out, whether English or American, because it was Sunday. The Americans do not bar fish. This was the first time I ever knew them to do so; they usually buy the fish from the Newfoundlanders, and also barter flour and pork for them, and I have never known anything to complain of against them previous to this.

Q. Did the American schooners continue to fish after the destruction of McCauley's seine?—A. Yes.

They (the Americans) continued to fish, and left about the usual time, the 10th March. I do not know any reason for the conduct towards the Americans except that they were fishing on Sunday. I do not know what became of the nets that were torn up; it was left on the beach for some days, and then taken away. I do not know who took it away; the Americans, perhaps, but I don't know.

The Americans were often set afterwards, but not on Sunday; the Americans did not leave off catching herring after this on other days. The English did not prevent the Americans hauling their seines, but the Americans usually employed the English to haul them, as their crews were not sufficient in number, and are not acquainted with the work. The American crews are employed salting and freezing the fish, while the English employed by them with the American seines are catching them. The seine torn up was being worked by an Englishman for McCauley, the American, namely, Philip Farrel.

Jacobs' seine was in the water a night and a day. I was not aware that it was illegal to haul or catch herring by or in a seine at that time of the year, nor that barring is prohibited at all seasons, nor that the seine must be shot and forthwith hauled, but have heard some reports to that effect.

The nearest magistrate is at St. Jacques, about 25 or 30 miles from this, and there is no means of communicating with him excepting by a sailing boat.

The seine that was destroyed belonged to men called Dago and McCauley, who, I believe, were each of them captains of schooners, but the names of the vessels I do not know.

Deposition of Richard Hendriken.

The examination of Richard Hendriken, of Hope Cove, Long Harbour, taken upon oath, and who saith:—

I have been nine years in Long Harbour. I was here in January last, when the American seine was destroyed. It was destroyed on account of barring herring on Sunday. I was watching their proceedings from the point opposite; they laid their seine out and went to haul it in because the English would not haul it in on Sunday, and the bay was full of fish. The fish would have remained. The Americans generally employ some Englishmen to work with their own crew; they don't generally lay out their own seines. Captain Dago and Samuel Jacobs would persist in hauling, and hauled once and barred them in Farrel's net. Farrel was working for him, and had been barring herrings for several days, perhaps about a fortnight, by the Americans' orders. I believe it is illegal to bar herrings; it destroys the fish, but we have no power to stop it. It is no good telling a magistrate; the Americans take no notice of them. The nearest magistrate to this place is at Harbour Briton, 25 or 30 miles off. The only thing to let people know what is right and what is wrong is to have a notice-board in each harbour, and some heavy fine imposed on aw-breakers.

James Tamel is harbour-master.

I don't know if he is a special constable or not; but Mr. Enburn told me he was to see the Yankees did not heave their ballast over, and that their measures were correct, but they would not listen to him. They hove their ballast overboard, and had tubs 22 inches in depth instead of 16 inches; in these tubs they measured the fish they bought from the Newfoundlanders, and they would not alter them. The fish are sold to the Americans by the barrel; for 100 barrels it is usual to pay for 90, which is considered fair, but a flour barrel cut down to 16 inches in depth is the proper measure; they only cut them to 22 inches or more, and insist on having them filled. The vessels from St. John's and Halifax always take the proper size tubs, but the Americans constantly overreach us, and choose the most ignorant to deal with, or those who are not so sharp as themselves. They generally otherwise behave well, and we have never had any quarrel with them before, but have always been on good terms. If the natives did not see the laws carried out themselves there might as well be no laws, for there is often no one else to enforce it. It is the only way I know, and is pretty well understood by both foreigners and natives.

Deposition of Ambrose Pope.

The examination of Ambrose Pope, of Stone Cove, Long Harbour, taken upon oath, and who saith:—I was at Tickle Beach on a Sunday in January last. I don't know the date. I saw the Newfoundlanders hauling a seine and leave it on the beach; it was torn in hauling it on shore. It was evening when I saw the seine hauled on the beach, and it was laying there when I left the beach.

I don't know if any was carried away. I don't know anything more about it. The Americans we thought had no right to haul their seines on Sunday.

Deposition of James Tharnell.

The examination of James Tharnell, of Anderson's Cove, Long Harbour, taken upon oath, and who saith:—I am a special constable for this neighbourhood. I did not see anything of the alleged outrage last January, but I heard something about it. I believe some of the men named Pope were on the beach, but which I do not know.

Q. Have you formed any opinion as constable as to the cause of the dispute?—A. Mr. Snellgrove, of the Customs, and myself, from what we were informed of the circumstances, were of opinion that the Americans were acting illegally in shooting their seines, but notwithstanding that nothing would have been said to them for that had it not been on the Sabbath day. The men forbid them hauling seines on the Sabbath day, and told them to take them up or they would take them up for them, and what annoyed them so much was that the Americans drew their revolvers; probably if it had not been for the threat of the revolvers, the seines would only have been taken up and not torn. They asked him three times to take them up before they did so themselves.

The people were not aware that it was illegal to set the seines that time of the year, and were only prompted to their act by the fact that it was Sunday. We all consider it to be the greatest loss to us for the Americans to bring those large seines to catch herring. The seines will hold 2,000 or 3,000 barrels of herring, and, if the soft weather continues, they are obliged to keep them in the seines for sometimes two or three weeks, until the frost comes, and by this means they deprive the poor fishermen of the bay of their chance of catching any with their small nets, and then, when they have secured a sufficient quantity of their own, they refuse to buy of the natives.

If the Americans had been allowed to secure all the herrings in the bay for themselves, which they could have done that day, they would have filled all their vessels, and the neighbouring fishermen would have lost all chance on the following week-days. The people believed that they (the Americans) were acting illegally in thus robbing them of their fish. If the natives had not defended themselves by enforcing the law, there was no one else to do it. I was sworn in as a special constable by Mr. Herbert, the magistrate of Harbour Briton, last October.

On the arrival of the Americans I showed my authority, signed by Mr. Herbert, and they laughed at it, and said it had no stamp, and they didn't, therefore, recognize it.

I told them the lawful size of a tub—sixteen gallons—and they said they required a brand on it. I have no means of branding tubs; there is no means to brand on the coast, and it is not the custom. I don't know if it is the custom at St. John's to brand them. I have cautioned the Americans about throwing ballast out inside Hoodey's Island, where it is very shallow; but they have continually done so notwithstanding up to this. There are now several shallow places there and in the cove, where the Americans have been in the habit of throwing out their ballast, and small vessels now, of twenty-eight to thirty tons, repeatedly ground on this ballast there thrown out by the Americans. I believe there was less thrown out last winter after I spoke to them about it; but I have no power, moral or otherwise, to enforce any Rules, and they don't seem to care much about me.

Deposition of George Snellgrove

The examination of George Snellgrove, of St. Jacques, Fortune Bay, taken upon oath, and who saith:—I am Sub-Collector of Customs for the district of Fortune Bay. I went to Long Harbour on the 8th January, two days after the dispute between the Americans and Newfoundland fishermen had taken place.

Captains Jacobs and Dago informed me that an American seine had been taken up by the Newfoundland fishermen on the Sunday previous and destroyed; that the seine belonged to Dago and McCauley, and that they had other seines out, but they had taken them up when they found that the other was destroyed. One of these captains said that the fishermen had threatened to take up the seine if they didn't themselves. Captain Jacobs showed me a revolver, and said that he had threatened them with it. I remonstrated with him for doing so, when he replied that I couldn't suppose that he was really going to use it; that he only did it to frighten them; he had taken care there were no charges in it. I said to him, "Do you suppose that you would have got off that beach alive if you had used it?" and he said he never intended to use it.

Captain Warren told me that on the fishermen coming to haul in the seine that Captain Dago hailed them to say that they would take the seine in themselves if they waited; and that he (Warren) said to Dago, "It is too late now; you ought to have done it when they told you first; they are too excited now."

I then communicated with the natives of the place, who related the circumstances, and gave their reasons that the Americans were fishing illegally, and would have secured the whole of the fish which they considered part of their property; and that they would have been distressed for the winter. They told me that they had at first told them to take up their seines, and they refused; that Captain Jacobs had threatened them with a revolver, but, notwithstanding this, they had taken up one and destroyed it.

I saw Captain Jacobs several times afterwards, and in the course of conversation with him I said, "If I had been there you would not have been allowed to shoot your seine." "What!" he said, "could you prevent me?" I said "Yes; I should have seen the law carried out and taken your seine and boat, which you forfeited for breaking the law," and I told him I would take the fine as well of 200 dollars, at which he said, "Do you think I care about paying the fine? I could pay the fine," by which I understood him to mean that the fine was not worth considering, as the quantity of fish would have more than paid for it.

Q. Was there any one in Long Harbour on the Sunday referred to who could have enforced the law, and protected the interests of the fishermen?—A. No.

Q. Is it not illegal shooting seines at all at that time of the year?—A. There is an Act to that effect, but it has never been carried out in Fortune Bay, nor are the natives aware of its illegality at that time of the year, nor would they have molested the Americans had it not been Sunday, and which they knew it to be not only the law but the infallible custom to desist from fishing on that day.

Q. Has there ever been, to your knowledge before, quarrelsome disputes or ill-feeling between the Americans and native fishermen?—A. No, never; always on the best terms.

Q. How long did you remain in Long Harbour?—A. I remained till the 12th January.

Q. Did you observe during your stay in Long Harbour whether the three American captains remained and continued to fish or not?—A. I did, and I know that they continued to fish; thay were not molested as far as I know.

Q. Was there anything to cause them to leave the harbour, or to cease fishing?—A. No, and they had not left it when I left; there were no further disputes to my knowledge afterwards.

Sub-Collector of Her Majesty's Customs.

Deposition of Silas Fudge.

The examination of Silas Fudge, of Bellaram, Fortune Bay, taken upon oath, and who saith:—

I am mate of my father's schooner. I witnessed the disturbance at Long Harbour on Sunday, the 6th January last. I am certain that it was on the 6th January it happened.

I saw the seines in the water; two of them American and one English. We told them to take them up.

John Hickey, the Englishman, took his up; McCauley, the American, who owned the other, refused to take his up. There was another seine, which I did not see, in the water, belonging to Captain Jacobs. He had his in the boat at the time. He had shot once and discharged his seine into Thomas Farrel's, who was working for him, and was going to shoot his seine out again. I saw it in the boat ready for shooting when the crowd came over. They first spoke to McDonald, and asked him if he would take his seine up, and he said, "Yes, if I am forced;" and they then went to Hickey, and told him to take his up, and he took it up; then they went to McCauley and asked him to take his up, and he said he would not. They then told him that if he didn't they would take it up for him. They then went to Jacobs, and told him they would let go the herring out of the seine of Tom Farrel, who was an Englishman. Jacobs then drew a revolver, and threatened to shoot any man who touched his property. The crowd were very excited. I saw them haul McCauley's seine in, and tear it up. That was the end of the row that day. Farrel had, during the previous week, secured herring in the American seine, and then had placed his own round them, and taken up the American's. This was done before Sunday. It was in this seine of Farrel's that Jacobs emptied his own seine.

Q. You knew that the American fish were in the Englishman's seine; why was Farrel's seine allowed to remain?—A. Because he had not shot it on the Sunday, but on the week-day.

Q. Are you aware that it was illegal to use seines to catch herrings that time of the year?—A. No; I don't know.

Q. Did you believe it to be lawful to use seines for herring that time of the year?—A. Yes, I thought so, as far as I could understand. I suppose the Americans thought, with reference to the destruction of the seine, that we did it in envy of them, but it wasn't; but it was from regard to the Sabbath, on which day we never fish.

Q. How far from the beach were the American seines shot?—Close to the beach; the hauling lines were on the beach.

The Americans remained in the bay after the occurrence for several days; they were never molested or interfered with afterwards; they continued to fish until they left the harbour; they were not compelled to leave the harbour, but I believe they were unsuccessful on account of the bad weather and for want of frost.

Deposition of John Cluett.

The examination of John Cluett, of Belloram, Fortune Bay, taken upon oath, and who saith :—

I was in Long Harbour one Sunday in January last.

Q. Did you see anything of the quarrel between the Americans and other fishermen ?—A. I did.

Q. Tell me what you know of it.—A. They commenced hauling herrings on Sunday, about midday. The first American seine shot was Captain Jacobs'; there were two more American seines shot. There was an Englishman working for the Americans who had a seine moored there for several days, but it was not shot or attempted to be hauled on the Sunday.

The first seine we came to was Captain McDonald's; they asked him if he was going to take his seine up. He said, "If we are forced to take it up we will;" and we told him if he didn't take it up we would take it up for him.

The next we came to was a man belonging to Fortune Bay, called John Hickey, an Englishman, and we told him to take up the seine, and he said he would take it up and he did. The next we came to was Peter McCauley, and we told him the same as the others, and he refused to take it up. Then we went on to Captain Jacobs, and when we got to him he was in his skiff, a little off the shore; he had just hauled herring and shot them into Farrel's seine, who was working for him; they remonstrated about breaking the law and fishing on Sunday; there was an altercation between us; he said he would defend his seine if they touched it in a threatening way. I don't know what he said; there was a great crowd, and he was in an awful rage, and I heard that he drew a revolver, but I didn't see it; he then took his seine on board; then all the seines were taken up but Farrel's and McCauley's. Farrel's seine was not touched because it was not laid on that day, and they therefore let it alone, although Jacobs' fish were in it; but McCauley's seine was taken up and destroyed, and that is all I know.

Q. Did the American captain remain in the harbour after ?—A. Yes; I think about a fortnight, but perhaps more. They continued to fish and haul herring on week-days but not on Sunday again.

Q. Were they ever molested or interfered with in any way subsequently or not ?—A. Not to my knowledge; they remained there as long as they chose, and there was never any more dispute. I don't know that it is illegal to haul seines that time of the year. I have heard of the law, but I have never seen it carried out; it had nothing to do with this dispute. The only cause of it was on account of its being Sabbath. I never saw herrings hauled on a Sunday before, either by American or Englishman.

The Americans, by hauling herring that day when the Englishmen could not, were robbing them of their lawful and just chance of securing their share in them, and, further, had they secured all they had barred they could have, I believe, filled every vessel of theirs in the bay. They would have probably frightened the rest away, and it would have been useless for the English to stay, for the little left for them to take they could not have sold.

The Americans would have a better chance than the English any day on account of the size of their nets, but the English would have had their fair chance the next day, and they thought they were justified, in the absence of any proper authority or power to enforce the law, to defend their rights themselves. There is no power or authority to enforce the law on all parts of the coast, and none nearer to Long Harbour than about 30 or 40 miles.

If there was not a good feeling and mutual understanding between all fishermen, whether foreigners or Englishmen, there would be no law carried out or upheld at all, but there was always prior to this a very good feeling and a mutual understanding between the Americans and ourselves, and I don't know anything to prevent the same in future. After the destruction of McCauley's seine some of the American schooners, one of which was Peter Smith's, drifted about the harbour among the fishermen's nets when blowing hard, with their anchors hanging to their bows, and destroyed several nets. I don't know if this was done out of revenge or not. I don't think it was done purposely.

Deposition of Charles Dagle.

Gloucester, February 19, 1878.

I, Charles Dagle, master of the American schooner "Lizzie and Namari," of Rockport, do on oath depose and say :—

That I sailed from Gloucester on the 6th December, 1877, for Fortune Bay, Newfoundland, for a load of herring. The last year (1877) I had sold a seine and boat to parties in Newfoundland, and they were to supply me with herring in payment for the seine and boat. I arrived at Fortune Bay about the 19th December. I was at Long Harbour, Newfoundland, with my vessel on the 6th January. Saw the seines of the American schooners "New England" and "Ontario" destroyed by the fishermen of Newfoundland. There is a decided objection to using netted or gill-net herring for freezing purposes, as these herring die in a short time after being taken in gill-nets. When they are seined they can be kept alive on the radius of the seine and taken out alive when the weather is suitable for freezing, while the netted herring, being dead, must be salted or spoil; consequently the seined herring are the best for our purposes, and are what the American vessels want for our market. Knowing this fact, the Newfoundland fishermen had endeavoured to obstruct in every way the taking of herring with seines, as they use principally gill-nets ; they placed their nets, which are set permanently, so as to hinder the using of seines. On the 6th January, 1878, the herring had come inshore, so that they were inside the gill-nets, thus giving our people an opportunity to seine them without interfering with the gill-nets. On the Americans attempting to put their seines in the water the Newfoundland fishermen threatened to destroy them, and when our fishermen had taken their seines full of herring, the Newfoundlanders came down to the number of 200, seized and destroyed the seines, letting out the fish, and afterwards stole and carried off the remnants of the seines. On account of this violence and the obstructions placed in the way of my men operating the seine, I was unable to procure a cargo, and have returned without a herring. If I had been allowed the privilege guaranteed by the Washington Treaty, I could have loaded my vessel and all the American vessels could have loaded. The Newfoundland people are determined that the American fishermen shall not take herring on their shores. The American seines being very large and superior in every respect to the nets of the Newfoundlanders, they cannot compete with them. These seines are the mackerel seines which are used in summer for mackerel and are setting for herring. When they are plentiful we can take from 2,000 to 5,000 barrels. The seines and boats we use cost 1,200 dollars when new, and are too expensive for the generality of Newfoundland fishermen, and they would have no use for seines only during the herring season, while we can use them both summer and winter, and thus make them pay for their great cost.

My loss by these acts of violence, and being deprived of my rights under the Washington Treaty, is fully 5,000 dollars, which I claim as indemnity. The netted herring are strangled while caught by the head in the net, and the eyes turn red from suffocation. They will not keep so long as seined herring, which are free to swim inside the seine, and are dipped out alive. The netted herring will not sell in the New York market, while the seined herring presevre their bright appearance and sell readily.

Deposition of William H. McDonald.

Gloucester, February 19, 1878.

I, William H. McDonald, master of the American schooner "William E. McDonald," of Gloucester, do on oath depose and say :—

That I have just returned from Newfoundland, where I have been for a load of herring. I was at Long Harbour, Newfoundland, when the seines of the schooners "New England" and "Ontario" were destroyed. I had gone on shore and was on the beach at the time. The Newfoundlanders were much excited because of our use of the large seines, which for the first time were used last winter there. The Newfoundland fishermen had sunk large rocks off the beach in order to catch the seines and tear them, and had put their gill-nets where they would obstruct the use of the seines. These means failing, as the herring were close in shore, they took to personal violence, and destroyed one seine completely, and made the others take them up and release the fish. I had a seine, but was not allowed to use it. The nets they placed in the way and kept there only for the purpose of obstructing our operations with seines, as they took no herring there, but let the nets remain till they rotted. I can fully endorse the statement of Captain Dagle in all particulars. My vessel is a first-class vessel, and with the time and expense, and with the loss of herring, I have sustained a loss of fully 5,000 dollars to myself and owners, and I claim that, under the Treaty of Washington, I have a right to the herring fisheries and claim indemnity for this severe loss.

Deposition of James McDonald.

Gloucester, February 19, 1878.

I, James McDonald, master of the American schooner "F. A. Smith," of Gloucester do on oath depose and say:—

That the said schooner was chartered by George W. Plumer and others, of Gloucester, for a voyage to Newfoundland for herring. I sailed from Gloucester on the 29th November, 1877, and arrived at Long Harbour, Newfoundland, on or about the 15th December, 1877. I carried a large purse seine such as is used to take mackerel. The seine will take 4,000 barrels of fish. I employed Newfoundland fishermen to operate the seine. I set my seine twice, but without catching anything, as my seine was torn by rocks that had been left off the beach. On the 6th January the herring made their appearance in great numbers, and the opportunity to take a large haul was improved by my men, and we took at least 1,000 barrels, enough to load my vessel and one other. The Newfoundland fishermen came off in their boats and told me to take my seine up, or they would take it up for me, and that they would cut it up. There were about 200 men engaged in this violence, and my own crew consisting of six men I could not resist, but was obliged to take up my seine. I saw the seines of the schooners "New England" and "Ontario" destroyed, and knew that mine also would be destroyed if I did not take it up. My seine was not attached to the shore when they came off, and the attack on me was made in boats. After destroying the other seines they all made for me, and my only safety was to gather up my seine. I lost all my fish, and the Newfoundland fishermen put all the obstructions they could in the way, to prevent the use of our seines after that. From my knowledge of the facts I do say that the Newfoundland fishermen are determined to prevent American fishermen from using the shore fisheries. I consider that the loss to the vessel and the charter party at not less than 5,000 dollars, and under the Treaty of Washington I have been deprived of my rights as an American citizen, and full indemnity should be allowed for the outrage. I have read the statement of Captain Dagle, and know it to be true in all its particulars. The effect of this treatment will be to destroy the American fishing for herring at Newfoundland. There are annually about 100 voyages by American vessels made for herring to Newfoundland. The Newfoundland fishermen were taking herring on the same day the outrages before stated occurred.

Deposition of Charles H. Nute.

Gloucester, February 19, 1878.

I, Charles H. Nute, master of the American schooner "Edward E. Webster," of Gloucester, do on oath depose and say:—

That I have just returned from Newfoundland, where I have been for a load of herring. I went for the purpose of co-operating with other American vessels in the use of their seines in taking herring. I was at Long Harbour and saw the destruction of the seines of the American schooners "New England" and "Ontario." I have seen the statement of Captain Dagle, of the American schooner "Lizzie and Namari," and substantiate all he has stated. I have returned without a herring for the same reasons. My actual loss in time of vessel and crew, with herring I should have bought had I not been prevented by the inhabitants of Newfoundland, is fully 5,000 dollars; and, owing to being deprived of my rights under the Washington Treaty, I hereby claim that amount as indemnity for the wrong done me and the owners of the vessel.

Deposition of David Malanson.

Gloucester, February 20, 1878.

I, David Malanson, master of the American schooner "Crest of the Wave," of Gloucester, Massachusetts, do on oath depose and say:—

That I sailed from Gloucester on the 8th December, 1877, on a voyage to Newfoundland for herring. I arrived at Long Harbour, Newfoundland, on the 23rd December, 1877. I was interested in a seine carried by the schooners "New England" and "Ontario." I was at Long Harbour on the 6th January, 1878, and was on the beach when the Newfoundland fishermen destroyed the seine belonging to these vessels. The herring did not strike inshore until that day, and as it is very uncertain how long they will remain, it is imperative, for successful prosecution of the business, to take them when they are inshore. By means of our large purse seines we can inclose the herring and keep them alive a month, if necessary, as we need to have freezing weather when we take them out to freeze them, to keep them fresh until we get them to market. On this occasion the herring were entirely inshore of the Newfoundland gill-nets, and, as the sequel proved, if we did not take them then and there we should lose the season catch. The seines were set in no way interfering or injuring the gill-net fishing, and inclosed and held certainly 2,000 barrels of herring, enough to load four vessels. Over 200 men came down to the beach, seized the seine, let out the fish, pulled the seine on shore, tearing and cutting it to pieces with knives. The crews operating the seines were powerless against so many; and after they had destroyed this seine they went for the other American seines, shouting and gesticulating, saying: "Tear up the damned American seines." All of the vessels would have been loaded with herring if the Americans could have used their seines.

My loss by this outrage is not less than 5,000 dollars, which has been taken from me despite the provisions of the Washington Treaty, and which I claim as indemnity.

The Newfoundland fishermen have for years been in the habit of selling all the herring to American vessels. I have been there eight years, and I have always bought my herring, or engaged the Newfoundlanders to take them for me, paying them in cash. This has been the universal practice of American vessels. This year we carried the large mackerel seines, which we use in summer for taking mackerel. These seines will take from 2,000 to 5,000 barrels at a haul, and the herring are better taken in this way. As most of the Newfoundlanders fish with gill-nets, our manner of seining would take away from them the monopoly of the herring trade, and hence the feeling which produced the outrage on our vessels. It is apparent that they will obstruct any American fishery on their shores, and are not men who would know much about rights or privileges under a Treaty. I should say that there are at least 100 cargoes of herring taken from Newfoundland yearly by American vessels, and as things are now it would be useless for American vessels to go there for herring unless they bought the herring from the inhabitants at whatever price they may see fit to ask. This American trade has been a great benefit to Newfoundland, and the change in the manner of taking herring will greatly reduce the amount of money paid them for herring. Only three vessels of eighteen that were there got any herring whatever. Captain Jacobs, of the "Moses Adams," held his seine with revolvers, and being a native of Newfoundland was allowed to take in the herring he had taken. The feeling was very intense and bitter against the Americans. The Newfoundland fishermen were catching and taking herring with their nets and boats on the same day.

Deposition of Edward Stapleton.

Gloucester, February 21, 1878.

I, Edward Stapleton, master of the American schooner "Hereward," of Gloucester, do on oath, depose and say :—

That I have just arrived from Newfoundland, where I have been for a load of herring. I was at Long Harbour, Newfoundland, when the Newfoundland fishermen destroyed the seines of the American schooners "New England" and "Ontario," and saw the whole transaction. I carried a seine with me, and employed Newfoundland fishermen to operate it for me. The first time they set it for me they put it out in a strong tide-way, and utterly destroyed it, and after that I had to depend on the other American seines. This was the understanding among the American captains, that we were to work together and load all our vessels. The setting of the seines on the 6th January did not interfere in any way with their nets or fishing. I think there is a local regulation that does not allow the Newfoundland fishermen to fish on Sundays; but the first seine (a small one) set on that day was one owned and operated by the natives, and they were picking their nets and boating their herring ashore all day. On the arrival of the American fleet the Newfoundlanders put their nets where they would obstruct our seining, but on this day the herring were away inside of their nets, giving us the first chance and only opportunity we had to seine or get herring. Enough were taken, and could have been taken, that day to have loaded the fleet. After that day there was no opportunity to take any. Newfoundland nets were placed where they never took a fish, and placed only for the purpose of preventing our seining. My loss to vessel and owners is not less than 5,000 dollars, and I claim indemnity to that amount. This loss is owing entirely to the hostile acts of the Newfoundland fishermen.

Deposition of Charles Dagle.

Gloucester, December 10, 1878.

I, Charles Dagle, master of the American schooner "Lizzie and Namari," of Rockport, district of Gloucester, do, on oath, depose and say, that I know Mr. Bolt, who resided in a hut or shanty near Tickle Beach, Newfoundland; that I was there on the 6th January, 1878, and saw the hostile acts of the British fishermen. Mr. Bolt's hut is about 150 yards back from the beach. I have been to Newfoundland fourteen successive years, and never heard of any persons claiming any rights on the beach, everybody using it in common. The three huts there are in the nature of squatter property, used only in the winter. Mr. Bolt never made any claim that I knew of; and the American seines were not used within 300 yards of Bolt's place, except where the seines were hauled on the beach by British fishermen and destroyed. The seines that were obliged to be taken up were 500 yards or more from Bolt's place. The seine of the "F. A. Smith," Captain McDonald, was one-fourth of a mile away. Mr. Hickey, a resident of Fortune Bay, had his seine nearest to Bolt's house. Mr. Hickey's seine was the first seine set on the 6th January, 1878, and the British fishermen attacked him as well as the Americans.

I, Willard G. which were hauled on to the beach by them (the British fishermen), and cut to pieces and destroyed.

I, Michael B. I never heard or knew of Mr. Bolt, or any other person, claiming any peculiar or particular rights on this beach, nor exercising any authority there, except the action of the mob on the 6th January, 1878. Mr. Bolt's shanty is about 150 yards from high-water mark. The American seines were operated more than 400 feet and due south along the beach from Bolt's hut.

In the year 1875 I made 5,300 dollars, clear of all expense, on my voyage to Newfoundland for herring. In 1874 I made 5,500 dollars, clear of all expense.

In the year 1876 I had a cargo of 1,445 barrels of salted herring, was very late in the season, and cleared only 2,000 dollars.

Deposition of Peter Smith.

Gloucester, February 5, 1878.

I, Peter Smith, of Gloucester, master of the American schooner "Charles C. Warren," of Gloucester, do on oath depose and say that I was at Tickle Beach, Fortune Bay, Newfoundland, on the 6th January, 1878. That I had been to Labrador, from thence to Bay of Islands, and thence to Fortune Bay for a load of herring. On the morning of the 6th January, 1878, herring made their appearance in close proximity to the shore in great abundance. I was provided with two seines with which to take herring, and should have loaded my vessel and others on that day. I had my seine in the boat, and was preparing to use it when the attack was made on the other American seines, and I saw them destroyed, and I found that the mob of 200 or 300 of the British fishermen were determined to destroy every seine, and I did not dare put my seine in the water. After this time I bought of the British fishermen about 400 barrels of herring, paying 1 dol. 40 c. per barrel. My vessel would carry 1,300 barrels, all of which I could have taken on the 6th January at little or no cost to myself. I was about a fortnight buying 400 barrels of herring. I consider that my loss was at least 3,000 dollars, in addition to the expense of the voyage, by the hostile acts of the British fishermen.

ANNO VICESIMO-QUINTO VICTORIÆ REGINÆ.

CAP. II.—An Act for the Protection of the Herring and Salmon Fisheries on the Coast of this Island, and for other Purposes.

[Passed, March 27, 1862.]

Preamble.

WHEREAS the breed and fry of herrings frequenting the coast of this island and the Labrador are often found to be greatly injured and destroyed by the using of seines and nets of too small size or mesh, and by other unwarrantable practices; and whereas complaints have been preferred to the local Government of alleged depredations committed by the fishermen frequenting these coasts upon each other: for remedy whereof,

Be it therefore enacted, by the Governor, Legislative Council, and Assembly, in Session convened :—

Herring not to be taken in seines from 20th October until 12th April.

I. That no person shall haul, catch, or take herrings in any seine, on or near any part of the coast of this island, or of its dependencies on the coast of Labrador, or in any of the bays, harbours, or any other places therein, at any time between the 20th day of October and the 12th day of April in any year; and no person shall, on or near the coast of this island or of its dependencies aforesaid on the coast of Labrador, or in any of the bays, harbours, or other places therein, at any time, use a seine or other contrivance for the catching and taking of herrings, except by way of shooting, and forthwith tucking and hauling the same: Provided that nothing herein contained shall prevent the taking of herrings by nets set in the usual and customary manner, and not used for in-barring or inclosing herrings in any cove, inlet, or other place.

Proviso as to the use of nets.

II. No person shall, at any time between the 20th day of December and the 1st day of April in any year, haul, catch, or take any herring on or near the coast of this island or of its dependencies aforesaid on the Labrador, or in any of the bays, harbours, or any other places therein, in any net having the meshes, mokes, or scales of less than two inches and three-eighths of an inch, at least, from knot to knot, or having any false or double bottom of any description; nor shall any person put any net, though of legal size of mesh, upon or behind any other net not of such size of mesh, for the purpose of catching or taking the fry of such herring passing through any single net of two inches and three-eighths of an inch mesh or scale.

Nets of 2 3-8 inch scale to be used from the 20th December until the 1st April.

Regulation as to nets with double bottom, &c.

III. No person shall wilfully remove, destroy, or injure any lawful net or seine, the property of another, set or floating on or near the coasts of this island or of its dependencies aforesaid on the Labrador, or in any of the bays, harbours, or other places therein, nor remove, let loose, or take any fish from or out of any such lawful net or seine.

No person shall interfere with the nets of others.

IV. No person shall, at any time, between the 20th day of April and the 20th day of October, haul, catch, or take any herring or other bait for exportation within one mile of any settlement situate on that part of the coast between Cape Chapeau Rouge and Point Rosey.

Herring not to be taken from the 20th April until the 20th October between Cape Chapeau Rouge and Point Rosey.

V. Any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this Act shall for every offence forfeit a sum not exceeding ten pounds; and, in addition, all seines, nets, and other contrivances used or employed in, about, or preparatory to the catching, hauling, taking, or in-barring of any herrings, in violation of any of the provisions hereof, shall be liable to forfeiture, and the same may be seized at once by any Justice, Sub-Collector of Customs, Preventive Officer, or Constable, on view or by virtue of a warrant issued by such Justice, Sub-Collector, or Preventive Officer, on oath to be administered by any of them, and detained until the trial of the offender, when they may be declared forfeited and ordered to be sold at public auction.

Penalty for violation of this Act.

VI. And whereas an Act was passed in the twenty-third year of the reign of Her present Majesty, entitled "An Act for the Protection of the Salmon Fishery, and for other purposes," whereby certain nets and seines were forbidden to be used, and certain weirs and other erections and contrivances were prohibited from being erected at certain times and under certain circumstances, in the said Act declared:

Prohibition for using salmon nets at certain times, and against erecting weirs, and penalty.

Be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful for any Justice, Sub-Collector, Preventive Officer, or Constable aforesaid, on view, and for any Constable or other person by virtue of a warrant to be issued as aforesaid, to seize any net or seine, and to destroy any weir or other erection or contrivance used or erected in contravention of the said recited Act, and all such nets and seines shall be forfeited and disposed of in manner provided by the Vth section of this Act.

VII. All forfeitures and penalties imposed by this or the said recited Act shall be recovered with costs, in a summary manner, before any Justice of the Peace, for which purpose such Justice shall have full power to summon or arrest the offender, and to compel all witnesses, either by summons or warrant, to appear before him on such trial; and upon conviction of such offender, such Justice shall issue his warrant to cause such seines, nets, or other contrivances so illegally used, to be sold at public auction, or, where permitted under the preceding section of this Act, destroyed; and in default of payment of such penalty as may be imposed, and costs, by the party convicted, such Justice shall issue his warrant to any constable or other person to arrest and imprison such convicted offender for a period not exceeding twenty days.

Manner of recovering penalties, and in default term of imprisonment.

VIII. All penalties and forfeitures under this or the said recited Act, and all proceeds thereof, when recovered, shall be paid to the party informing against and prosecuting such offender to conviction.

Disposal of penalties, and forfeitures.

IX. No conviction or proceeding by any Justice or other officer under this Act shall be quashed or set aside for want of form, so long as the same shall be substantially in accordance with the true intent and meaning of this Act.

Convictions not to be quashed for want of form, &c.

X. Provided always, That nothing in this Act contained shall in any way affect or interfere with the rights and privileges granted by Treaty to the subjects or citizens of any State or Power in amity with Her Majesty.

This Act not to interfere with rights protected by Treaty.

XI. The ninth section of the said recited "Act for the Protection of the Salmon Fishery" is hereby repealed.

Ninth section of the Salmon Fishery Act repealed.

TITLE XXVII. Consolidated Statutes of Newfoundland, 1872.

Cap. CII.—Of the Coast Fisheries.

Section.
1. Herring not to be caught between 20th October and 12th April. Seine, how to be used.
2. Time for use of and size of net.
3. Injuries to nets and seines.
4. Herring not to be hauled for bait between 20th April and 20th October.
5. Spearing or sweeping with nets and seines for salmon above tidal waters unlawful.
6. Stake, seine, or weir unlawful.
7. Mill-dams and other obstructions.
8. Mesh of salmon net.
9. Salmon bought or sold in close time forfeited.

Section.
10. Distance between salmon nets.
11. Time for taking salmon.
12. Penalties.
13. Weir, &c., erected contrary to law, may be destroyed.
14. Forfeitures and penalties, how recovered.
15. Appropriation of same.
16. Convictions not to be quashed for want of form.
17. Governor may appoint superintendent of fishery and fishery wardens.
18. Reservation of Treaty rights.

1. No person shall haul, catch, or take herrings by, or in, a seine or other such contrivance on or near any part of the coast of this Colony or of its dependencies, or in any of the bays, harbours, or other places therein, at any time between the 20th day of October and the 12th day of April in any year, or at any time use a seine or other contrivance for the catching and taking of herrings, except by way of shooting and forthwith hauling the same: Provided that nothing herein contained shall prevent the taking of herrings by nets set in the usual and customary manner, and not used for in-barring or inclosing herrings in a cove, inlet, or other place.

2. No person shall, at any time between the 20th day of December and the 1st day of April in any year, use any net to haul, catch, or take herrings on or near the coasts of this Colony or of its dependencies, or in any bays, harbours, or other places therein, having the mokes, meshes, or scales of such net less than two inches and three-eighths of an inch at least, or having any false or double bottom of any description; nor shall any person put any net, though of legal size mesh, upon or behind any other net not of such size mesh, for the purpose of catching or taking such herring or herring fry passing a single net of legal size mesh.

3. No person shall wilfully remove, destroy, or injure any lawful net or seine, the property of another, set or floating on or near the coast of this Colony or its dependencies, or any of the bays, harbours, or other places therein, or remove, let loose, or take any fish from such seine or net.

4. No person shall, between the 20th day of April and the 20th day of October in any year, haul, catch, or take herrings or other bait for exportation, within one mile, measured by the shore or across the water, of any settlement situate between Cape Chapeau Rouge and Point Enragee, near Cape Ray; and any person so hauling, catching, or taking, within the said limits, may be examined on oath by a Justice, officer of Customs, or person commissioned for the purpose, as to whether the herrings or other bait are intended for exportation or otherwise, and on refusal to answer or answering untruly, such person shall, on conviction, be subject to the provisions of the twelfth section of this chapter.

5. No person shall, by spearing or sweeping with nets or seines, take or attempt to take, any salmon, grilse, par, or trout, in any bay, river, stream, cove, or watercourse, above where the tide usually rises and falls, or in any pond or lake.

6. No stake, seine, weir, or other contrivance for taking salmon, except nets set or placed across, shall be set or placed in any river, stream, cove, lake, or watercourse. No net shall extend more than one-third of the distance in a straight line across, and all nets shall be set only on one side of such river, stream, cove, lake, or watercourse.

7. No person shall construct any mill-dam, weir, rack, frame, train-gate, or other erection or barrier in or across any river, stream, cove, lake, or watercourse, so as to obstruct the free passage of salmon, grilse, par, trout, or other fish resorting thereto for the purpose of spawning; and all mill-dams or other erections placed on, over, or across any watercourse, river, or stream, resorted to by fish for the purpose of spawning, shall have a waste gate opening, or slope sufficient to constitute a proper and sufficient fish way, which shall be kept in repair by the owner. No person shall permit any sawdust or mill rubbish to be cast into any such river, stream, cove, lake, or watercourse.

8. No person shall use any net for taking salmon, the mokes, meshes, or scales of which are less than four inches and a half inch.

9. No person shall buy or sell or have in his possession, salmon, knowing the same to have been taken contrary to the provisions of this chapter, and every salmon so taken, bought, or sold, shall be declared forfeited to the complainant by any Justice.

10. No net shall be moored or set in any harbour, cove, creek, or estuary, or on or near any part of the coast of this Colony, or its dependencies, for the purpose of taking salmon, nearer to any other net moored or set for a like purpose than one hundred yards for a single net, and three hundred yards for a double net or fleet of nets.

11. No salmon shall be taken before the 1st day of May or after the 10th day of September in any year: Provided that if the time limited in this section shall be found to operate injuriously in any part of this island, the Governor in Council may appoint any other time or times, and such time or times shall be as binding on all persons as if specially mentioned herein.

12. Any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this chapter shall be subject to a penalty not exceeding fifty dollars, and all seines, nets, and other contrivances used contrary to the provisions of this chapter shall be forfeited, and may be seized and detained until the trial of the offender by any Justice, Sub-Collector of Customs, Preventive Officer, Fishery Warden, or Constable, on view, or by virtue of a warrant issued by such Justice, Sub-Collector, or Preventive Officer, upon complaint made on oath to be administered by either of them, and, upon conviction, the same may be declared forfeited and ordered to be sold at public auction.

13. Any Justice, Sub-Collector, Preventive Officer, Fishery Warden, or Constable, may, on view, destroy any weir, rack, frame, train-gate, or other erection or barrier, used or erected contrary to the provisions of this chapter, or the same may be destroyed by virtue of a warrant issued by any Justice, Sub-Collector, or Preventive Officer, upon complaint made on oath to be administered by either of them.

14. All forfeitures and penalties imposed by this chapter shall be recovered, with costs, in a summary manner before any Justice, for which purpose such Justice may summon or arrest the offender, and compel witnesses, by summons or warrant, to appear before him; and upon conviction of the offender, such Justice shall cause all seines, nets, and other contrivances illegally used, to be sold by public auction, or, where permitted under the provisions of the preceding sections of this chapter, destroyed; and in default of the payment of any penalty imposed, and costs, such Justice shall issue his warrant and cause such offender to be arrested and imprisoned for any period not exceeding twenty days.

15. All penalties and forfeitures imposed by this chapter, and the proceeds thereof, shall be paid to the party informing against and prosecuting the offender to conviction.

16. No proceeding or conviction by any Justice or other officer under this chapter shall be quashed or set aside for any informality, provided the same shall be substantially in accordance with the intent and meaning of this chapter.

17. The Governor in Council may appoint the Collector of Revenue for Labrador, or other person, to be Superintendent of the Fisheries on the coast of this island and its dependencies, and may also appoint Fishery Wardens, and prescribe their duties for the purposes of this chapter. The compensation for the services of such officers to be provided by the Legislature.

18. Nothing in this chapter shall affect the rights and privileges granted by Treaty to the subjects of any State or Power in amity with Her Majesty.

Mr. Hoppin to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received April 6.)

My Lord, Legation of the United States, April 6, 1880.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Lordship's letter of the 3rd instant, in reply to Mr. Welsh's communications of the 13th August last, in relation to the claims of United States' fishermen for losses occasioned by certain occurrences at Fortune Bay, Newfoundland, in January 1878; and I have to acquaint your Lordship that I shall send a copy of your letter to the Honourable the Secretary of State at Washington by the earliest post.

I have, &c.

No. 10.

Sir E. Thornton to Earl Granville.—(Received May 16.)

My Lord, Washington, May 3, 1880.

I HAVE the honour to inform your Lordship that, on the 27th ultimo, Mr. Cox, a member from New York, submitted to the House of Representatives a Resolution to the effect that the President should be requested, if not inconsistent with public interest, to transmit to the House copies of all correspondence, not as yet communicated, with the British Government relating to the alleged interference with American fishermen in Fortune Bay on the 6th January, 1878.

The Resolution was adopted without a division.

On the following day, Mr. Blaine, a Senator from Maine, proposed to the Senate a very similar Resolution, which was also agreed to unanimously.

The papers asked for have not yet been transmitted to Congress.

I have, &c.

No. 11.

Sir E. Thornton to Earl Granville.—(Received May 30.)

My Lord, Washington, May 18, 1880.

I HAVE the honour to transmit herewith copies of a Message which was yesterday sent by the President to both Houses of Congress with regard to the Fortune Bay affair, including a Report made to him upon the subject by the Secretary of State.

In this Report Mr. Evarts reviews the correspondence which has passed between the two Governments, and maintains that United States' fishermen are entirely exempt from the operation of local laws, whether anterior or subsequent to the date of the Treaty of Washington.

At the end of his Report Mr. Evarts observes that the only consideration which the United States are now paying for the enjoyment of the fisheries is the remission of the customs duties on the products of those fisheries, and he recommends that Congress should re-enforce those duties, as they existed before the Treaty of Washington, until the two Governments shall have come to an agreement as to the interpretation and execution of the Fishery Articles of that Treaty.

The President, in his Message, concurs in the opinions expressed by Mr. Evarts as to the measures which should be taken by the United States' Government for the maintenance of the rights conceded to American fishermen by the Treaty, and recommends the adoption of those measures.

As soon as the whole of the documents which accompany the President's Message shall have been printed, I shall have the honour to forward copies of them to your Lordship.

I have, &c.

Inclosure in No. 11.

Extract from "Congressional Record" of May 18, 1880.

Outrage on American Fishermen.

Report from Mr. Evarts to the President.

THE Speaker, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the following Message from the President of the United States, together with the accompanying letter of the Secretary of State:—

To the House of Representatives:

In compliance with the Resolution of the House of Representatives of the 27th ultimo, calling for copies of the correspondence with the Government of Great Britain in regard to the alleged outrage upon American fishermen at Fortune Bay, in the Province of Newfoundland, I transmit herewith the correspondence called for and a Report from the Secretary of State on the subject.

In transmitting this correspondence and the Report, I respectfully ask the immediate and careful attention of Congress to the failure of accord between the two Governments as to the interpretation and execution of the Fishery Articles of the Treaty of Washington, as disclosed in this correspondence, and elucidated by the exposition of the subject by the Secretary of State.

I concur in the opinions of this Report as to the measures proper to be taken by this Government in maintenance of the rights accorded to our fishermen by the British concession of the Treaty and in providing for suitable action toward securing an indemnity for the injury these interests have already suffered.

Accordingly I recommend to Congress the adoption of these measures, with such attendant details of legislation as in the wisdom of Congress shall seem expedient.

(Signed) R. B. Hayes.

No. 29. Report of Messrs. Babson and Foster, Boston, September 29, 1879, with accompaniments.

To the President, Department of State, Washington, May 17, 1880.

The Secretary of State, to whom were referred the Resolution of the House of Representatives of the 27th April ultimo, requesting the President, "If not inconsistent with the public interest, to transmit to this House copies of all correspondence not now communicated with the English Government relating to the alleged interference with American fishermen in Fortune Bay on the 6th January, 1878," and a Resolution of the Senate of the 28th of the same month on the same subject, has the honour to lay before the President the correspondence as called for.

In connection with these papers, and for the better understanding of the subject to which this correspondence relates, I submit, for your consideration, the valuable Report of Collector F. J. Babson and Alfred D. Foster, Esq., of their visit on board the naval steam-ship "Kearsarge" to the provincial inshore fisheries, under the instructions of the Department, during the summer of last year, as well as their instructions under which this cruize of the "Kearsarge" was planned. This correspondence with the British Government, and this intelligent exposition of the attempted exercise by our fishermen of the freedom of the inshore fisheries as secured to them by the Treaty of Washington, whose violent interruption gave occasion to this discussion between the two Governments of the true measure of this Treaty right, will, it is believed, with the record of the proceedings of the Halifax Commission and the correspondence and protest which preceded and attended our payment of the Award, furnish complete materials upon which the judgment of Congress can be formed and its action determined in the juncture of this fishery contention now demanding its serious consideration.

The very grave occurrence at Fortune Bay in January 1878 was brought by me to the attention of the British Government in March of that year with the view of obtaining redress for our fishermen for the gross violence and serious loss they suffered in their expulsion from this inshore fishery which they were prosecuting under the Treaty of Washington. The reply of the British Government did not reach me until the 4th September of that year. It disclosed possible grounds for the rejection of our claims, which put upon our rights in the inshore fisheries such limitations of subserviency to British provincial or Imperial legislation as seemed to me wholly inadmissible. These grounds were that our fishermen were pursuing their industry on Sunday contrary to a law of Newfoundland passed subsequent to the Treaty of Washington; that they were using seines to take herring contrary to a law of Newfoundland proscribing that method of fishing for the six months of the year between October and April; that they were using such seines in a manner prohibited at any season of the year by a Statute which precluded catching herrings by means of seines "except by way of shooting and forthwith hauling the same."

In communicating the Report of the evidence, which was intended to show the time and manner at and in which our fishermen were pursuing their right, as a justification for their interruption in it, Lord Salisbury observed: "You will perceive that the Report in question appears to demonstrate conclusively that the United States' fishermen on this occasion had committed three distinct breaches of the law." To this intimation, even, that the freedom of the fishery, accorded by an Imperial Treaty, either had been subtracted by past, or could be curtailed by future, provincial legislation, I lost no time in opposing an explicit and unconditional rejection of such an interpretation of the Treaty. In a despatch to Mr. Welsh on the 28th September, I communicated to the British Government the views of this Government, as follows:—

* * * * * * *

"In this observation of Lord Salisbury this Government cannot fail to see a necessary implication that Her Majesty's Government conceives that in the prosecution of the right of fishing accorded to the United States by Article XVIII of the Treaty, our fishermen are subject to the local Regulations which govern the coast population of Newfoundland in their prosecution of their fishing industry, whatever those Regulations may be, and whether enacted before or since the Treaty of Washington.

"The three particulars in which our fishermen are supposed to be constrained by actual legislation of the province cover in principle every degree of regulation of our fishing industry within the three-mile line which can well be conceived. But they are, in themselves, so important and so serious a limitation of the rights secured by the Treaty as practically to exclude our fishermen from any profitable pursuit of the right, which, I need not add, is equivalent to annulling or cancelling by the Provincial Government the privilege accorded by the Treaty with the British Government.

"If our fishing fleet is subject to the Sunday laws of Newfoundland, made for the coast population; if it is excluded from the fishing-grounds for half the year, from October to April; if our 'seines and other contrivances' for catching fish are subject to the Regulations of the Legislature of Newfoundland, it is not easy to see what firm or valuable measure for the privilege of Article XVIII, as conceded to the United States, this Government can promise to its citizens under the guarantee of the Treaty.

"It would not, under any circumstances, be admissible for one Government to subject the persons, the property, and the interests of its fishermen to the unregulated regulation of another Government upon the suggestion that such authority will not be oppressively or capriciously exercised, nor would any Government accept, as an adequate guarantee of the proper exercise of such authority over its citizens by a foreign Government, that, presumptively, regulations would be uniform in their operation upon the subjects of both Governments in a similar case. If there are to be regulations of a common enjoyment they must be authenticated by a common or joint authority.

"But most manifestly the subject of the regulation of the enjoyment of the shore fishery by the resident provincial population, and of the inshore fishery by our fleet of fishing cruizers, does not tolerate the control of so divergent and competing interests by the domestic legislation of the provinces. Protecting and nursing the domestic interest at the expense of the foreign interest, on the ordinary motives of human conduct, necessarily shape and animate the local legislation. The evidence before the Halifax Commission makes it obvious that, to exclude our fishermen from catching bait, and thus compel them to go without bait, or buy bait at the will and price of the provincial fishermen, is the interest of the local fishermen, and will be the guide and motive of such domestic legislation as is now brought to the notice of this Government.

"You will, therefore, say to Lord Salisbury that this Government cannot but express its entire dissent from the view of the subject that his Lordship's note seems to indicate. This Government conceives that the fishery rights of the United States, conceded by the Treaty of Washington, are to be exercised wholly free from the restraints and regulations of the Statutes of Newfoundland now set up as authority over our fishermen, and from any other regulations of fishing now in force or that may hereafter be enacted by that Government.

"It may be said that a just participation in this common fishery by the two parties entitled thereto may, in the common interest of preserving the fishery and preventing conflicts between the fishermen, require regulation by some competent authority. This may be conceded. But should such occasion present itself to the common appreciation of the two Governments, it need not be said that such competent authority can only be found in a joint Convention that shall receive the approval of Her Majesty's Government and our own. Until this arrangement shall be consummated, this Government must regard the pretension that the legislation of Newfoundland can regulate our fishermen's enjoyment of the Treaty right as striking at the Treaty itself.

"It asserts an authority on one side and a submission on the other which has not been proposed to us by Her Majesty's Government and has not been accepted by this Government. I cannot doubt that Lord Salisbury will agree that the insertion of any such element in the Treaty of Washington would never have been accepted by this Government, if it could reasonably be thought possible that it could have been proposed by Her Majesty's Government. The insertion of any such proposition by construction now is equally at variance with the views of this Government.

"The representations made to this Government by the interests of our citizens affected leave no room to doubt that this assertion of authority is as serious and extensive in practical relations as it is in principle. The rude application made to the twenty vessels in Fortune Bay of this asserted authority, in January last, drove them from the profitable prosecution of their projected cruizes. By the same reason the entire inshore fishery is held by us upon the same tenure of dependence upon the Parliament of the Dominion or the Legislatures of the several provinces.

* * * * * *

"In the opinion of this Government, it is essential that we should at once invit the attention of Lord Salisbury to the question of provincial control over the fishermen of the United States in their prosecution of the privilege secured to them by the Treaty. So grave a question in its bearing upon the obligations of this Government under the Treaty makes it necessary that the President should ask from Her Majesty's Government a frank avowal or disavowal of the paramount authority of provincial legislation to regulate the enjoyment by our people of the inshore fishery which seems to be intimated, if not asserted, in Lord Salisbury's note.

"Before a receipt of a reply from Her Majesty's Government it would be premature to consider what should be the course of this Government should this limitation upon the Treaty privileges of the United State. be insisted upon by the British Government as their construction of the Treaty."

In answer to this unequivocal presentation both of the freedom of the fishery as this Government interpreted the concession of the Treaty, and of the absolute suppression of this Treaty right as a matter of practical value to our fishermen by this actual provincial legislation, Lord Salisbury replied with less distinctness, no doubt, but yet in a sense which I could not but regard as disclaiming any right to qualify the Treaty by municipal legislation previous or subsequent to its date. After intimating a dissent from the doctrine, if I had intended to assert it, "that no British authority has any right to pass any kind of law binding Americans who are fishing in British waters," Lord Salisbury says:

"On the other hand Her Majesty's Government will readily admit, what is indeed self-evident, that British sovereignty as regards these matters is limited in its scope by the engagements of the Treaty of Washington, which cannot be modified or affected by any municipal legislation. I cannot anticipate that with regard to these principles any difference will be found to exist between the views of the two Governments. If, however, it be admitted that the Newfoundland legislators have the right of binding Americans who fish within their waters, by any laws which do not contravene existing Treaties, it must further be conceded that the duty of determining the existence of any such contravention must be undertaken by the Governments, and cannot be remitted to the discretion of each individual fisherman, for such a discretion, if exercised on one side, can hardly be refused on the other."

* * * * * *

"Her Majesty's Government prefer the view that the law enacted by the Legislature of the country, whatever it may be, ought to be obeyed by natives and foreigners alike who are sojourning within the territorial limits of its jurisdiction, but that if a law has been inadvertently passed which is in any degree or respect at variance with rights conferred on a foreign Power by Treaty, the correction of the mistake as committed, at the earliest period after its existence shall have been ascertained and recognized, is a matter of international obligation."

This despatch was received by me in November, and on the 23rd of the same month the payment of the Award of the Halifax Commission was made at the date provided in the Treaty. The further consideration of the Fortune Bay claims seemed to require only the verification of the facts on the part of our claimants, so far as they were drawn in question by or were at variance with the report made to the British Government by its officers, and the communication to that Government of the results as finally insisted upon by us as the basis and measure of our claims. The correspondence called for by Congress, and now submitted, shows the entire rejection of the claims on the grounds set forth in Lord Salisbury's despatch of the 6th April last.

Before considering the main proposition of the British Government, by which a direct and flat denial of the freedom of the inshore fisheries as claimed by this Government is interposed, I need to bring to attention two subordinate pretensions of Lord Salisbury's despatch intended to fortify his main proposition.

It appeared that in the management of one, at least, of the seines at Fortune Bay, our fishermen had used the strand for a temporary service in the process of inclosing the school of herring within the seine. This incident in the operation, in the original correspondence as in the transaction itself, a mere subordinate feature of the process of seining complained of, is now made prominent in the despatch of Lord Salisbury. There being no allegation that this use of the strand violates any provincial regulation of the fisheries, the point is made that the freedom of the fisheries accorded by the Treaty itself, in terms, excludes our fishermen from this incidental use of the strand in the process of taking fish by seines. A true interpretation of the Treaty concession gives no support to this pretension. The concession of fishing is "to take fish of every kind, except shell-fish, on the sea-coasts and shores, and in the bays, harbours, and creeks of the provinces, &c., without being restricted to any distance from the shore." Besides this concession of fishing, which manifestly covers the use of the strand in the process of taking fish, a further permission to land upon the coasts and shores is conceded to our fishermen for the independent purpose of using the land for "drying their nets and curing their fish." The contention seems to be that, because specific permission to use the land for purposes not included in the process of "taking fish," is given in terms, therefore the use of the strand in the process of "taking fish" is excluded, though, in the nature of the process of taking fish, the temporary use of the strand in managing the seines is a part of inshore fishing. This faulty reasoning is not helped at all by the proviso of the Treaty that our fishermen, in using their right on shore, shall "not interfere with the rights of private property, or with British fishermen, in the peaceable use of any part of the said coasts in their occupancy for the same purpose." If this proviso does not include the use of the strand in taking fish, it does not qualify the fishing concession. If it does include that use of the strand, then it construes such use as within the fishing concession, and qualifies it by the observance of private property on shore, and non-interference with British fishermen using the strand in their fishing.

Lord Salisbury's reference to the argument of Mr. Foster before the Halifax Commission on the independent subject of the commercial privileges for which the British case demanded compensation in the awards (and which were rejected by the Commission as not within the purview of the Treaty), for the doctrines of this Government in regard to the use of the strand as an incident of the inshore fishery concession, needs no serious comment here. If the "Case" of either Government could fairly be referred to as maintaining propositions to which it should be held in this contention, the special arguments pro and con of counsel cannot usefully be resorted to for this purpose. In this interlocutory argument on the commercial question the British Counsel, in answering Mr. Foster, maintained the opposite construction of the Treaty. Neither view had any important relation to the subject then under discussion.

The second topic of Lord Salisbury's despatch, from which aid is sought for his main proposition, is the presentation of Mr. Marcy's Circular to the Collectors of Customs, while the reciprocity Treaty was in force, for promulgation among our fishermen, the whole text of which Lord Salisbury incorporates in his note.

In the full copy of this Circular, which is appended (No. 5) to the Babson and Foster Report, the fishery regulations of the provinces to which it relates are recited, and a reference to these is sufficient to displace any inference that this Government has assented to any curtailment, past or previous, by provincial legislation of the freedom of the inshore fishery as conceded to our fishermen by the terms of the Reciprocity Treaty or the Treaty of Washington. One of these regulations relates to the demarcation of "gurry grounds," and the other to the reservation of spawning grounds, during the spawning season, from invasion. "Gurry," or the offal of fish, was supposed to infect the waters, and the regulation was not of the right of taking fish, but of poisoning them. The care of the spawning beds in spawning season, in like manner, was a regulation of the breeding of fish, not a regulation of modes of American fishing. Both these regulations met the approval of this Government, and were required by Mr. Marcy to be respected by our fishermen, for this reason and in the sense of being within the reasonable province of local civil jurisdiction, and not encroaching upon the province of freedom of the fishery as imparted by the Reciprocity Treaty. But the right of this Government to inspect all such laws and pass upon them as falling one side or the other of the line thus firmly drawn is explicitly stated by Mr. Marcy. He says:—

"Should they be so framed or executed as to make any discrimination in favour of British fishermen, or to impair the rights secured to American fishermen by that Treaty, those injuriously affected by them will appeal to this Government for redress."

Accordingly, the fishermen are directed to make complaint, upon the case arising, either in respect to any law or its execution, "in order that the matter may be arranged by the two Governments."

The position of this Government, as laid down in my despatch of the 28th September, 1878, is, therefore, unembarrassed by any attitude in this contention heretofore taken in any diplomatic discussion of parallel Treaty engagements. Any particular interpretation of the Treaty as to the right to use the strand in fishing with seines ceases to be of significance in the issue now joined with the British Government, because the provincial laws in question prohibit the use of the seines at all, and the main proposition of the British Government subjects our Treaty rights to such legislation. So, too, the scope of this main proposition can be neither obscured nor confused by the irrelevant consideration of the local jurisdiction within 3 miles of the shore, over persons or property, of the running of civil or criminal process, of health or police regulations, of territorial sovereignty in the abstract. The issue between the two Governments is as to what regulations of the freedom of the fishery, in the very matter of the time and manner of taking fish, remain a part of British sovereignty over the fishery under the colour of sovereignty over the place, when exclusive sovereignty over the fishery has been parted with by Great Britain, and a participation in such fishery has been acquired by the United States, in the terms and on the consideration of the Treaty of Washington.

Upon this issue the position of this Government was notified to the British Government in September, 1878, as follows:—

"This Government conceives that the fishery rights of the United States, conceded by the Treaty of Washington, are to be exercised wholly free from the restraints and regulations of the Statutes of Newfoundland, now set up as authority over our fishermen, and from any other regulations of fishing now in force or that may hereafter be enacted by that Government."

Upon this issue the position of the British Government is now notified to us by the despatch of Lord Salisbury of the 3rd April ultimo as follows. Referring to these Statutes of Newfoundland, Lord Salisbury says:—

"These regulations, which were in force at the date of the Treaty of Washington, were not abolished, but confirmed by the subsequent Statutes, and are binding under the Treaty upon the citizens of the United States in common with British subjects. The United States' fishermen, in landing for the purpose of fishing at Tickle Beach, in using a seine at a prohibited time, and in barring herrings with seines from the shore, exceeded their Treaty privileges and were engaged in unlawful acts."

Lord Salisbury further states that Her Majesty's Government "have always admitted the incompetence of the Colonial or the Imperial Legislature to limit by subsequent legislation the advantages secured by Treaty to the subjects of another Power."

There are but two grounds upon which the subordination of the United States' freedom of the inshore fisheries to Imperial or provincial legislation, curtailing or burdening that freedom ever has been, or in the nature of the case can be, placed.

The first is that of reserved general sovereignty within the 3-mile limit, under cover of which it is pretended there lurked in the concession of the freedom of this fishery to the United States in common with Great Britain, the power of one party in the privilege of this common fishery to regulate the enjoyment of it by the other. The statement of this proposition confutes it. The United States would have acquired nothing of right if the concession was constantly subject to the will of Great Britain for its exercise and enjoyment. Accordingly Lord Salisbury disclaims this pretension as ever having been held by the British Government as a reserved power, capable of exercise by any regulations subsequent to the date of the Treaty of Washington. But, manifestly, antecedent regulations, as having force subsequent to the Treaty, cannot be sustained upon the ground of sovereignty over the Treaty concession by any better reason than new legislation of that quality and effect. If the Treaty predominates over subsequent provincial legislation, encroaching upon the Treaty concession by stronger reason, it supplants previous provincial legislation, subversive or restrictive, of the Treaty concession. If such previous legislation persists after the Treaty comes into operation, it must be because the Treaty, in terms or by just interpretation, accepts this previous legislation as a part of itself. But this is the predominance of the Treaty, and not of the legislation, which thenceforth owes its vigour to the stipulations of the Treaty by which the United States adopts and confirms the provincial legislation in force at its date. This is, in substance, the British contention, and, in the failure of the doctrine of reserved sovereignty, is the only alternative basis of the present proposition of the British Government.

The subject thus brought into dispute at this late date in the progress of the fishery negotiations between the two countries is, simply, what the fishery in provincial waters, which the British Government had at its disposal, and which we acquired at its hands as a matter of property and beneficial enjoyment, really was.

That the British proprietorship in and dominion over this inshore fishery was perfect, absolute, and without incumbrance or limitations, and that this was the subject concerning which the negotiations were occupied, and by and to which the Treaty equivalents were to be measured and applied, was certainly never doubted by the negotiators of this Treaty on the part of the United States or of Great Britain. Whatever this fishery was in its natural extent and value, in its geographical area, and its multitude and variety of fish products, that was the subject of which Great Britain possessed the jus disponendi and that the subject of which the United States proposed to acquire an undivided share. The proportion of this fishery which Great Britain was to part with and the United States was to appropriate does not affect the question of what the entire property was and was understood to be. Whatever the United States would have acquired had Great Britain parted with the whole fishery, the subject partitioned between them was this entirety, no matter what the shares in which it was to be enjoyed might be. It is equally clear that the negotiators on both sides assumed that Great Britain was dealing with this subject as sole owner, and that it had impaired neither its title nor its possession by any previous grant or incumbrance. Whatever right and enjoyment, then, by proprietorship and dominion Great Britain, in its political sovereignty, could impart to "the subjects of Her Britannic Majesty," that right and enjoyment Great Britain could impart "to the inhabitants of the United States."

This being the subject of the grant, and this the title and possession of the grantor, what is the Treaty description of the estate, right, and privilege granted to the United States for the enjoyment of its citizens? The text of the Fishery Articles of the Treaty of Washington shows that there was no limitation whatever upon the grant, except that the estate, right, and privilege granted were to endure but for a term of years, and were to be enjoyed by the United States, not exclusively, but in common with Great Britain. There was, to be sure, a restriction imposed upon both countries which excluded both equally from extending the enjoyment of either's share of the common fishery beyond "the inhabitants of the United States" on the one side, and "Her Britannic Majesty's subjects" on the other, thus disabling either Government from impairing the share of the other by introducing foreign fishermen into the common fishery. But this feature in the grant has no significance in the measure of the concession as now disputed by Great Britain and contended for by the United States.

The British contention imputes to the phrase of the Treaty, "in common with the subjects of Her Britannic Majesty," not only its manifest effect of excluding any possible conclusion that the privilege conceded to the United States was exclusive, but the further effect of measuring the subject of the grant—that is, the fishery itself—as it was then, at the very date of the Treaty, regulated by the various laws of the maritime provinces.

For this interpolation there seems no justification, either in reason or in the history of the negotiation. There is not the least evidence that it was present to the mind of either of the High Contracting Parties to the Treaty that the subject of the fishery to be partitioned between them was any less than such as it was in its natural dimensions and quality, and such as it was, as a subject of human control, at the unlimited disposal of British sovereignty. What these provincial laws were no one inquired and no one disclosed. That the fishery our sea-going fishermen were to share in was a fishery regulated by and for the local population, fishing from the shore, no one conceived. That the title of Great Britain should be examined, a warranty against adverse title and possession or against incumbrances exacted, would have seemed both foolish and offensive to the High Joint Commission which negotiated this Treaty. To the apprehension of all, the map and statistics of the catch showed what the fishery was in extent and value, and the dominion of Great Britain over the subject measured the security of the right which we were about to acquire.

The proposition of Lord Salisbury reduces the grant of the fishery from the dimensions of the fishery as Great Britain had power to convey it, and by its more natural description would convey it, to the fishery as it had been trimmed and curtailed by local legislation and was to be regulated by local administration. He reduces our enjoyment from a freedom of the fishery such as the plenary political power of Great Britain could impart to its subjects, and could share with the United States to be enjoyed by their inhabitants, to the use of the fishing methods and seasons of the provincial coast population as their faculties and occasions had arranged them. And this interpretation of the subject of the grant by which one parted with, and the other acquired, nothing of value, turns upon the phrase of the Treaty which defines the estate conveyed as not exclusive, but to be held in common.

Fortunately the closing transaction between the two Governments by which the fishery concession to the United States was to be measured and valued, and compensation on our part therefor to be adjusted according to the measure and value of the provincial fishery, not in the abstract, but as opened to our fishermen, furnished an opportunity to take the estimate both of the British and provincial Governments of the extent and comprehension of the subject of the grant. This transaction antedates the present disputation, and brings the two Governments together in a computation before the Halifax Commission of the nature, extent, and benefit of the inshore provincial fishery.

The considerations for the British concession were threefold: first, an equivalent fishery concession on our own coasts; second, exemption of provincial fish products from duties, or the concession of our free market; third, such supplemental money payment as the nature, extent, and value of the British fishery concession, in the judgment of the Halifax Commission, would warrant or require. It would be enough to say that the present pretensions of the British Government in reduction of the grant were not presented in depreciation of the price we were to pay, nor was any subjection of the natural fishery to political or municipal disparagement advanced by us in reduction of the money value with which we were to be charged. But the British and provincial Governments are precluded from the present pretensions not by silence alone as to these latent limitations and incumbrances upon the grant when its price was being adjusted by the Halifax Award. The Case of the British Government presents, in the most open and unequivocal terms, the measure of the grant in the sense both of benefit to the United States and of injury to the provincial fishermen. The conduct of the contention throughout maintained the freedom of the fishery to the methods and occasions of our fishing enterprise and skill, and insisted upon the right accorded (which might exhaust and destroy the fisheries so as to depreciate their benefit to the coast population even beyond the Treaty period), and not its actual exercise by our fishermen as the standard of estimate by which our money payment was to be fixed.

In "the Case of Her Majesty's Government" submitted to the Halifax Commission the following language is used to illustrate and enforce the advantage in the extent and method of fishing secured by the Treaty of 1871 over the restrictions of the Convention of 1818:—

"The Convention of 1818 entitled United States' citizens to fish on the shores of the Magdalen Islands, but denied them the privilege of landing there. Without such permission the practical use of the inshore fisheries was impossible. Although such permission has tacitly existed, as a matter of sufferance, it might at any moment have been withdrawn, and the operations of the United States' fishermen in that locality would thus have been rendered ineffectual. The value of these inshore fisheries is great; mackerel, herring, halibut, capelin, and launce abound, and are caught inside of the principal bays and harbours, where they resort to spawn. Between 300 and 400 United States' fishing vessels yearly frequent the waters of this group, and take large quantities of fish, both for curing and bait. A single seine has been known to take at one haul enough of herrings to fill 3,000 barrels. Seining mackerel is similarly productive. During the spring and summer fishery of the year 1875, when the mackerel were closer inshore than usual, the comparative failure of the American fishermen was owing to their being unprepared with suitable hauling-nets and small boats, their vessels being unable to approach close enough to the beaches.

"In the case of the remaining portions of the seaboard of Canada, the terms of the Convention of 1818 debarred United States' citizens from landing at any part for the pursuit of operations connected with fishing. This privilege is essential to the successful prosecution of both the inshore and deep-sea fisheries. By it they would be enabled to prepare their fish in a superior manner, in a salubrious climate, as well as more expeditiously, and they would be relieved of a serious embarrassment as regards the disposition of fish offals, by curing on shore the fish which otherwise would have been dressed on board their vessels and the refuse thrown overboard.

"All the advantages above detailed have been secured for a period of twelve years to United States' fishermen. Without them, fishing operations on many parts of the coast would be not only unremunerative but impossible; and they may therefore be fairly claimed as an important item in the valuation of the liberties granted to the United States under Article XVIII of the Treaty of Washington."—"Halifax Com.," vol i, p. 93.

And again:—

"4. Formation of fishing establishments.

"The privilege of establishing permanent fishing stations on the shores of Canadian bays, creeks, and harbours, akin to that of landing to dry and cure fish, is of material advantage to United States' citizens.

* * * * * *

"There are further advantages derivable from permanent establishments ashore, such as the accumulation of stock and fresh fish preserved in snow or ice, and others kept in frozen and fresh state by artificial freezing."—Ibid., pp. 94, 95.

In that portion of the same "Case" which specially regards the character of the Newfoundland fishery and points out with elaborate precision the rights of United States' fishermen on the shores of that island and the compensation demanded therefor, the British Government says:—

"I. The entire freedom of the Inshore Fisheries.

"Newfoundland, from that part of its coast now thrown open to United States' fishermen, yearly extracts, at the lowest estimate, 5,000,000 dollars' worth of fish and fish oil; and when the value of fish used for bait and local consumption for food and agricultural purposes, of which there are no returns, is taken into account, the total may be fairly stated at 6,000,000 dollars annually.

"It may possibly be contended, on the part of the United States, that their fishermen have not in the past availed themselves of the Newfoundland inshore fisheries, with but few exceptions, and that they would and do resort to the coasts of that island only for the purpose of procuring bait for the bank fishery. This may, up to the present time, to some extent, be true as regards codfish, but not as regards herring, turbot, and halibut. It is not at all probable that, possessing as they now do the right to take herring and capelin for themselves on all perts of the Newfoundland coasts, they will continue to purchase as heretofore, and they will thus prevent the local fishermen, especially those of Fortune Bay, from engaging in a very lucrative employment which formerly occupied them during a portion of the winter season for the supply of the United States' market.

"The words of the Treaty of Washington, in dealing with the question of compensation, makes no allusion to what use the United States may or do make of the privileges granted them, but simply state that, inasmuch as it is asserted by Her Majesty's Government that the privileges accorded to the citizens of the United States under Article XVIII are of greater value than those accorded under Articles XIX and XXI to the subjects of Her Britannic Majesty, and this is not admitted by the United States, it is further agreed that a Commission shall be appointed, having regard to the privileges accorded by the United States to Her Britannic Majesty's subjects in Articles XIX and XXI, the amount of any compensation to be paid by the Government of the United States to that of Her Majesty in return for the privileges accorded to the United States under Article XVIII.

"It is asserted, on the part of Her Majesty's Government, that the actual use which may be made of this privilege at the present moment is not so much in question as the actual value of it to those who may, if they will, use it. It is possible, and even probable, that United States' fishermen may at any moment avail themselves of the privilege of fishing in Newfoundland inshore waters to a much larger extent than they do at present; but even if they should not do so, it would not relieve them from the obligation of making the just payment for a right which they have acquired subject to the condition of making that payment. The case may be not inaptly illustrated by the somewhat analogous one of a tenancy of shooting or fishing privileges; it is not because the tenant fails to exercise the rights which he has acquired by virtue of his lease that the proprietor should be debarred from the recovery of his rent.

"There is a marked contrast, to the advantage of the United States' citizens, between the privilege of access to fisheries the most valuable and productive in the world, and the barren right accorded to the inhabitants of Newfoundland of fishing in the exhausted and preoccupied waters of the United States north of the thirty-ninth parallel of north latitude, in which there is no field for lucrative operations, even if British subjects desired to resort to them; and there are strong grounds for believing that year by year, as United States' fishermen resort in greater numbers to the coasts of Newfoundland for the purpose of procuring bait and supplies, they will become more intimately acquainted with the resources of the inshore fisheries and their unlimited capacity for extension and development. As a matter of fact, United States' vessels have, since the Washington Treaty came into operation, been successfully engaged in these fisheries; and it is but reasonable to anticipate that, as the advantages to be derived from them become more widely known, larger numbers of United States' fishermen will engage in them.

"A participation by fishermen of the United States in the freedom of these waters must, notwithstanding their wonderfully reproductive capacity, tell materially on the local catch, and, while affording to the United States' fishermen a profitable employment, must seriously interfere with local success. The extra amount of bait also which is required for the supply of the United States' demand for the bank fishery must have the effect of diminishing the supply of cod for the inshores, as it is well known that the presence of that fish is caused by the attraction offered by a large quantity of bait fishes, and as this quantity diminishes the cod will resort in fewer numbers to the coast. The effect of this diminution may not in all probability be apparent for some years to come, and while United States' fishermen will have the liberty of enjoying the fisheries for several years in their present teeming and remunerative state, the effects of over-fishing may, after their right to participate in them has lapsed, become seriously prejudicial to the interests of the local fishermen. (Ibid., pp. 103, 104.)

* * * * * *

"It is impossible to offer more convincing testimony as to the value to United States' fishermen of securing the right to use the coast of Newfoundland as a basis of operations for the bank fisheries than is contained in the declaration of one who has been for six years so occupied, sailing the ports of Salem and Gloucester, in Massachusetts, and who declares that it is of the greatest importance to United States' fishermen to procure from Newfoundland the bait necessary for those fisheries, and that such benefits can hardly be over-estimated; that there will be, during the season of 1876, upwards of 200 United States' vessels in Fortune Bay for bait, and that there will be upwards of 300 vessels from the United States engaged in the Grand Bank fishery; that owing to the great advantage of being able to run into Newfoundland for bait of different kinds, they are enabled to make four trips during the season; that the capelin, which may be considered as a bait peculiar to Newfoundland, is the best which can be used for this fishery, and that a vessel would probably be enabled to make two trips during the capelin season, which extends over a period of about six weeks. The same experienced deponent is of opinion that the bank fisheries are capable of immense expansion and development, and that the privilege of getting bait on the coast of Newfoundland is indispensable for the accomplishment of this object.

"As an instance of the demand for bait supplies derived from the Newfoundland inshore fisheries, it may be useful to state that the average amount of this article consumed by the French fishermen, who only prosecute the bank fisheries during a period of about six months of the year, is from 120,000 to 160,000 dollars annually. The herring, capelin, and squid amply meet these requirements, and are supplied by the people of Fortune and Placentia Bays, the produce of the Islands of Saint Pierre and Miquelon being insufficient to meet the demand.

"It is evident from the above considerations that not only are the United States' fishermen almost entirely dependent on the bait supply from Newfoundland, now open to them for the successful prosecution of the bank fisheries, but also that they are enabled, through the privileges conceded to them by the Treaty of Washington, to largely increase the number of their trips, and thus considerably augment the profits of the enterprise. This substantial advantage is secured at the risk, as before mentioned, of hereafter depleting the bait supplies of the Newfoundland inshores, and it is but just that a substantial equivalent should be paid by those who profit thereby.

"We are therefore warranted in submitting to the Commissioners that not only should the present actual advantages derived on this head by United States' fishermen be taken into consideration, but also the probable effect of the concessions made in their favour. The inevitable consequence of these concessions will be to attract a larger amount of United States' capital and enterprise, following the profits already made in this direction, and the effect will be to inflict an injury on the local fishermen, both by the increased demand on their sources of supply and by competition with them in their trade with foreign markets."—Ibid., pp. 105, 106.

"Conclusion.

"It has thus been shown that under the Treaty of Washington there has been conceded to the United States—

"First. The privilege of an equal participation in a fishery vast in area, teeming with fish, continuously increasing in productiveness, and now yielding to operatives, very limited in number when considered with reference to the field of labour, the large annual return of upwards of 6,000,000 dollars, of which 20 per cent. may be estimated as net profit, or 1,200,000 dollars.

"It is believed that the claim on the part of Newfoundland in respect of this portion of the privileges acquired by United States' citizens under the Treaty of Washington will be confined to the most moderate dimensions when estimated at one-tenth of this amount, namely, 120,000 dollars per annum, or, for the twelve years of the operation of the Treaty, a total sum of 1,440,000 dollars."—Ibid., pp. 107, 108.

To this "Case" the United States' Government filed an answer, and the British Government filed a reply to the answer in which it repeated its contention:—

"The words 'for no other purposes whatever' are studiously omitted by the framers of the last-named Treaty, and the privilege, in common with the subjects of Her Britannic Majesty, to take fish and to land for fishing purposes, clearly includes the liberty to purchase bait and supplies, tranship cargoes, &c., for which Her Majesty's Government contend it has a right to claim compensation.

"It is clear that these privileges were not enjoyed under the Convention of 1818, and it is equally evident that they are enjoyed under the Treaty of Washington."—Ibid., p. 173.

* * * * * *

"As regards the herring fishery on the coast of Newfoundland, it is availed of to a considerable extent by the United States' fishermen, and evidence will be adduced of large exportations by them in American vessels, particularly from Fortune Bay and the neighbourhood, both to European and their own markets.

"The presence of United States' fishermen upon the coast of Newfoundland, so far from being an advantage, as is assumed in the Answer, operates most prejudicially to Newfoundland fishermen. Bait is not thrown overboard to attract the fish, as asserted, but the United States' bank-fishing vessels, visiting the coast in such large numbers as they do, for the purpose of obtaining bait, sweep the coves, creeks, and inlets, thereby diminishing the supply of bait for local catch, and scaring it from the where it would otherwise be an attraction to the cod."—Ibid., p 186.

It forms no part of my purpose in this Report to adduce in argument or proof the manifold supports to the view now presented which the record of the diplomatic history of the fishery negotiations between the two countries or the documents and proceedings of the Halifax Commission contain. It is very apparent throughout them both that the obliteration of the sea-line of demarcation between the rights of our fishermen and those of British fishermen we regarded of principal value as removing the sources of irritation between them and possible occasions of controversy and estrangements between the two nations. In my despatch to Mr. Welsh of the 27th September, 1878, I laid before the British Government this disposition on our part as furnishing the leading purpose in the framing of the Fishery Articles of the Treaty of Washington. I then said that "politically and in the interest of good neighbourhood this Government did regard, and at all times would regard, the restoration of the relations between the two countries in the common enjoyment of these fisheries to the ancient footing of the Treaty of 1873 as most grateful in sentiment and as a most valuable guarantee against any renewal of strife." In the British "Case" before the Halifax Commission Her Majesty's Government definitely insisted upon this assured position of our public relations in this regard as an element of consideration in the Award they asked from the Commission. Her Majesty's Government drew the attention of the Commissioners "to the great importance attaching to the beneficial consequences to the United States of honourably acquiring for their fishermen full freedom to pursue their adventurous calling without incurring constant risks and exposing themselves and their fellow-countrymen to the inevitable reproach of wilfully trespassing on the rightful domain of friendly neighbours. Paramount, however, to this consideration is the avoidance of irritating disputes, calculated to disquiet the public mind of a spirited and enterprising people, and liable always to become a cause of mutual anxiety and embarrassment. It was repeatedly stated by the American members of the Joint High Commission at Washington, in discussing proposals regarding the Canadian fisheries, "that the United States desired to secure their enjoyment, not for their commercial or intrinsic value, but for the purpose of removing a source of irritation."

The experience of our Fortune Bay fishermen in their first attempt, in the sixth year of the running of the Treaty, to exercise on the coast of Newfoundland the "full freedom to pursue their adventurous calling," which Her Majesty's Government said had been honourably acquired for them by their own Government, is exhibited in the papers now submitted, as is also the treatment of their grievance and this Government's presentation of it accorded by Her Majesty's Government.

The British Government claimed before the Halifax Commission the sum of 120,000 dollars per annum during the twelve years of the Treaty period, or the gross sum of 1,440,000 dollars, for the advantage to the United States of the fishing privilege proper on the Newfoundland coast alone, conceded by the Treaty, over and above the counter-concessions of our inshore fishery and the remission of duty on their fish products.

The Halifax Award of 5,500,000 dollars for the Dominion of Canada and Newfoundland together has been divided between them by the British Government, and the sum of 1,000,000 dollars has been received by Newfoundland as its share of the money payment made by the United States under the Treaty. It will be observed that under the British view of the exposure of our fishermen at Fortune Bay to the penalties of infractions of the provincial laws, while they were enjoying in their own opinion and that of this Government the full freedom of the fishery accorded by the Treaty, there is no pretence that the violence offered them, and the wanton destruction of their fishing property, and spoliation of their draught of fishes, find any warrant in the supremacy of violated law under colour of which the British Government has refused them any indemnity. In this attitude of the British Government, as taken in the correspondence, the violent expulsion of our fishermen from their fishery on the 6th January, 1878, by the coast fishermen of Newfoundland seems to be justified, if not espoused. This position, too, of that Government necessarily carries a warning that any future attempt by our fishermen to exercise their Treaty privileges, except in conformity to the local fishing regulations, will be resisted by the authority of the British Government as well as exposed to the violence of the coast fishermen. Under this unhappy and unexpected failure of accord between the two Governments as to the measure of the inshore fishing privileges secured to our fisherman by the Treaty of Washington, as developed in this correspondence, it becomes the imperative duty of this Government to consider what measures should be taken to maintain the rights of our people under the Treaty, as we understand them, and to obtain redress for their expulsion from the enjoyment of their rights.

So far as this diminution of these privileges calls for a reconsideration of the Treaty equivalents already parted with by this Government and received by Great Britain, as suitable to the failure of the privileges thus purchased and paid for, by this denial of their exercise so as to be valuable or desirable to our people, that subject necessarily must be remitted to diplomatic correspondence.

The only continuing consideration the United States is paying for the Treaty period, for the expected enjoyment of the Treaty concessions, is the remission of our customs duties upon the fish products of the provincial share in these fisheries. I respectfully advise that it be recommended to Congress to re-enforce the duties upon fish and fish oil, the products of the provincial fisheries, as they existed before the Treaty of Washington came into operation, to so continue until the two Governments shall be in accord as to the interpretation and execution of the Fishery Articles of the Treaty of Washington, and in the adjustment of the grievance of our fishermen from the infraction of their rights under that Treaty.

This measure will give to our fishermen, while excluded from the enjoyment of the inshore fisheries under the continued enforcement of the British interpretation of the Treaty, a restoration of the domestic market for the product of their own fishing industry, as it stood before its freedom was thrown open to the provincial fishermen in exchange for the free fishery opened to our fishermen.

I respectfully advise, also, submitting to the consideration of Congress the propriety of authorizing the examination and auditing of the claims of our fishermen for injuries suffered by the infraction or denial of their Treaty privileges, with the view of some ultimate provision by Convention with Great Britain or by this Government for their indemnity.

Earl Granville to Sir E. Thornton.

Sir, Foreign Office, June 9, 1880.

I HAD to-day an interview with the United States' Minister at this Court respecting the Fortune Bay affair.

Mr. Lowell stated that there was a much stronger and deeper feeling on the other side of the Atlantic upon this question than was appreciated here. There was, he said, a feeling that a wrong had been done which ought to be redressed.

We agreed that this was a reason why both Governments should try to settle the question.

I observed that the present Government had not their reputation to make as to a wish to act in a conciliatory manner towards the United States, but that we could make no concession which could not be made with perfect justification.

I then asked Mr. Lowell whether he had any suggestions to make. He replied, "none;" that his instructions were to conform his language to that of Mr. Evarts' note. I inquired whether it would not be possible to separate the two questions of the interpretation of the Treaty and of the attack upon the American fishermen. He replied that he feared it might be too late to do this, but that, at my request, he would be prepared to ask the question.

Mr. Lowell added, not officially, but only as his personal opinion, that there would be no precipitate action on the part of the United States. The President, he said, had power to act, but the moment for doing so was at his own discretion.

We finally agreed to renew our conversation upon this subject at an early date.

I am, &c.

Mr. Lowell to Earl Granville.—(Received June 12.)

My Lord, United States' Legation, London, June 12, 1880.

REFERRING to my conversation with your Lordship on the 9th instant, I have the honour to acquaint you that I took pleasure in communicating by cable the next day to my Government the friendly sentiments of your Lordship in respect to the differences between the two countries on the Fishery question.

I have this morning received a telegram from Mr. Evarts, by which he desires me to communicate his great gratification at the expression by your Lordship of the friendly disposition of the British Cabinet, a disposition which, he states, he should have been ready to assume from the public character of its members. He adds that the President will be quite ready to entertain any considerations which may be presented to the Secretary of State to relieve the question of the fisheries from its present difficulties, and that the Bill now pending before Congress extends to the President adequate discretionary power to meet an accord between the two Governments respecting the fishery rights of the United States under the Treaty, should such an accord be established during the recess of Congress.

I have, &c.

MY LORD,

I HAVE the honour to transmit herewith for your Lordship's information, a copy of a report of a Committee of the Privy Council adopting a memorandum prepared by the Minister of Agriculture containing a proposal for the organisation of an Irish Immigration to Manitoba and the North-West.

I have, &c.

Enclosure.

COPY of a REPORT of a COMMITTEE of the HONOURABLE the PRIVY COUNCIL for CANADA, approved by His Excellency the GOVERNOR-GENERAL, on the 5th November 1880.

ON the recommendation of the Honourable the Minister of Agriculture, the Committee advise that the accompanying memorandum be adopted as a proposal for the organisation of an Irish Immigration to Manitoba and the North-West, and that the same should be communicated to the Right Honourable the Secretary of State for the Colonies by your Excellency and through the High Commissioner for Canada in England, should your Excellency see no objection to that course.

Certified, J. O. COTÉ,
Clerk, Privy Council, Canada.

MEMORANDUM.

ON the suggestion made to him by the High Commissioner of Canada in England, Sir A. T. Galt, G.C.M.G., the undersigned has the honour to propose the following as a basis of joint action in promoting Irish Immigration should the Imperial Government entertain the project.

The Canadian Government, sympathising with their fellow subjects of Ireland in their distressed circumstances, would cheerfully co-operate in a well considered measure of relief by means of a systematic immigration from Ireland. If such a system of Irish immigration were established it is evidently a condition precedent to obtaining the cordial co-operation of Canada, that the immigrants should not become a burden upon the existing population.

In the case of single men and women no serious difficulty would arise, as employment can readily be found. But in the present distressed circumstances of Ireland, it is manifest that it is only by the removal of entire families that any sensible relief would be experienced from the pressure of a redundant population.

Provision would have, therefore, to be made, not only for the transport of the families to their place of settlement, but also for their maintenance until a crop can be had from the land.

In the older Provinces of the Dominion where the land is all heavily timbered, the difficulty of managing a large immigration would be very great. But in the vast fertile plains of the North-West, the question becomes comparatively easy of solution.

By very simple pre-arrangement any required number of farm lots could be prepared for occupation, in the season preceding the arrival of the immigrants, a small dwelling erected, a certain extent of the prairie land broken up and prepared for seed, and in the case of late arrival, actually sown, so as to ensure a crop the same season that the immigrants were placed in possession. This work could be done by contract under proper supervision, and would give employment on arrival to the new immigrant while his crop was growing, thereby greatly reducing the cost of the undertaking and really limiting it ultimately to little more than the cost of his transport, as the repayment of advances by the earlier settlers would soon be sufficient to meet the annual outlay for preparing new lands.

The cost of removing an immigrant family consisting of parents and three children from the port of embarkation to Winnipeg may now be taken at about 40*l.* subject to a certain increase for their transport thence to their farm lot. The dwelling and eight acres of land prepared for crop with seed may be estimated at from 35*l.* to 40*l.* Some provision for the family might be required on arrival but the wages of the man ought to suffice for the support of his family till his crop is harvested, after which the immigrant may be regarded as self-supporting.

The Canadian Government provides each settler with a "free grant" of 160 acres, subject only to a patent fee of 2*l.* The settler can also secure the preemption of 160 acres adjoining at the current price and usual conditions.

For the re-imbursement of the outlay for transport and for establishing the immigrant upon his farm, it is suggested that the Canadian Government would provide that the total cost, as certified to their agent, and acknowledged by the settler, should form a first charge on the land, payable by certain annual instalments with interest.

To obviate the misconstruction to which Her Majesty's Government might be exposed in favouring any Canadian system of immigration, two points seem to be important.

1. Instead of direct action by Her Majesty's Government, it is suggested that the whole movement should be conducted under the auspices of a Commission or of a National Emigration Association, with an adequate organization, both at home and in Canada, and that the pecuniary aid should be given by the Imperial Government in the form of advances to such Association or Commission, at a low rate of interest, secured upon the settlers' land.

2. All immigration should be voluntary and assistance should be equally granted to all who come under the conditions laid down.

Were such a Commission or such an Association established, certain tracts of land would be placed at their disposal for settlement, which, under their officers would be prepared for the incoming families. The Association or Commission would also charge itself with the dissemination of information at home and with the selection and shipment of the immigrants while the Canadian Government would make them participant of any reduction on passages obtained in favour of immigrants, and cause them to be cared for on arrival and forwarded at the expense of the Commission or of the Association to Winnipeg where they would be met by the Government Land Guides and shown by them their respective lots; after which proceedings, the officers of the Commission or of the Association would take them in charge and see them installed on their land, which would have been prepared for occupation during the previous season.

The whole respectfully submitted.

Enclosure 1. in No 1.

The LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR, Prince Edward Island, to the SECRETARY of STATE FOR CANADA.

Province of Prince Edward Island, Government House,

SIR, May 12, 1876.

I HAVE the honour to transmit herewith for the consideration and approval of His Excellency the Governor General, an Act passed in the late session of the Legislature of this Province, entitled "An Act to amend the Land Purchase Act of 1875," in triplicate, sealed and certified in the usual manner, and accompanying it, are the reasons, in duplicate, assigned by the Attorney General for its passing.

The Act amending the Land Purchase Act, 1875, was reserved by me for the signification of His Excellency's pleasure thereon.

I beg respectfully to call His Excellency's attention to the Attorney General's report, and to his reasons therein stated for the passing of the Act amending the Land Purchase Act, 1875, in which I concur, and which appear to me so pertinent and cogent, and I think so clearly show how necessary its provisions are to the effectual working of the Act alluded to, as to call for no particular observations on my part, beyond expressing my hope that it will receive His Excellency's favourable consideration.

* * * * * *

The Land Commissioners Court, standing adjourned to the 1st day of July next, it is very desirable to know His Excellency's pleasure as regards the Act amending the Land Purchase Act previous to that period.

Enclosure 2. in No. 1.

Attorney General's Office, Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, May 6, 1876.

REPORT of Attorney General setting forth reasons for the passing of the Act to amend "The Land Purchase Act, 1875."

This Act was passed by the Legislature of this Province last session for the purpose of removing doubts as to the meaning and construction of some of the provisions of "the Land Purchase Act, 1875," and to extend its powers.

By the 28th section and subsections of said Act, it is provided that the Commissioners appointed thereunder in estimating the amount of compensation to be paid to a proprietor for his estate should take into consideration the price at which other proprietors had heretofore sold their lands to the Government, the number of acres under lease, the length of leases, the rent reserved, the arrears, the years over which they extend, and the probability of their being recovered, the number of acres unleased, and their value, the gross rental actually paid for the previous six years, with the expenses incident to their collection, the number of acres held adversely, the reasonable probabilities of the proprietor sustaining his claim against squatters, and the expenses attending thereon, the performance or nonperformance of the conditions in the original grants from the Crown, the effect of such nonperformance, and how far the several despatches from the English Colonial Secretaries to the Lieutenant Governor of this Island or other action of the Crown or Government have operated as waivers of any forfeitures, the quitrents reserved in the original grants, and how far the payments of the same have been waived or remitted by the Crown.

Proceedings have been taken in many cases under "the Land Purchase Act, 1875," by the Commissioner of Public Lands for the purchase of the estates of proprietors, and awards have been made by the Commissioners appointed to adjudicate thereon. The awards made in those cases adjudicated upon by the Commissioners, of whom the Right Honourable Hugh C. E. Childers was chairman, were on the face of them silent as to the matters set forth in the section 28 and its subsections, although, in fact, they were as fully investigated and enquired into by the Commissioners as the nature of the several cases would permit of, and were taken into their consideration in estimating the value of the lands. This section was looked upon and construed as merely directory of the matters they were to consider in forming their conclusions as to the value of the proprietors' estates.

It never was contemplated as enacting matters which the Commissioners should be bound specifically to set out on the face of their awards; such a construction as that would operate to defeat the object of the Act entirely, inasmuch as no specific award could be made on some of the points, such, for instance, as the boundaries of the land held by each squatter, without endless trouble and expense.

The awards were drawn in general terms, simply stating the sum awarded to the proprietor, giving no description of the land nor the acreage, and making no reference to the matters mentioned in section 28.

A large majority of the proprietors whose estates were thus awarded for have not appealed from the awards, but the decision of the Supreme Court has thrown doubts upon the validity of these awards, which doubts it is essential should be removed. Applications were made in two cases on behalf of the proprietors (Miss Sulivan and the Honourable Ponsonby Fane) to restrain the public trustee from executing a conveyance of their estates under section 32 of the main Act, and to set aside the awards on the grounds that they did not expressly find and determine on their face the matters mentioned in said section 28 and subsections, and that they were uncertain inasmuch that they did not describe the lands by metes and bounds, nor give the acreage.

The Supreme Court of this Province has decided in favour of these objections, and has quashed the awards in both of the cases argued before them.

The Commissioner of Public Lands has appealed Miss Sulivan's case to the Supreme Court at Ottawa; negotiations for a peaceful settlement of the Fane estate are pending. I have no hesitation in stating that the intention of the Legislature was that the facts and circumstances set forth in the said section 28 and subsections were merely to be taken into consideration by the Commissioners in valuing the land and not that the finding on each fact and circumstance should be specifically set forth in their awards.

Indeed it would seem from the very matters themselves that they were intended more as guides to the Commissioners in making their awards than subjects for any specific finding, such, for instance, as the probabilities of proprietors recovering land from squatters, and the effect of despatches from the Colonial Office relative to the performance and nonperformance of the conditions under which this island was originally granted away by the Crown.

For the purpose of carrying out the intention of the Local Legislature, this Act provides that no awards heretofore made or hereafter to be made shall be void by reason of the said facts and circumstances not being expressly found in such awards, but still retains to the Supreme Court the power of remitting them back to the Commissioners in cases where they do not contain descriptions of the estates, and also power to restrain the public trustee from executing a conveyance of such estates until a description shall be settled by the Court.

It also extinguishes all quitrents and arrears thereof due on all estates adjudicated on, and releases the proprietors from all liability on account thereof.

The Act also makes provision to meet the case of James F. Montgomery, Esquire, who made an application to the Supreme Court to have the award in his case remitted back to the Commissioners to correct an alleged omission. It appears that between the time of making the award and the order to remit it back Mr. Childers, the Commissioner appointed by his Excellency the Governor-General resigned his position and left this Province; doubts were consequently entertained whether the Court, as constituted after that gentleman's vacancy, had been filled up, would be competent to review the matters taken into consideration by the Commissioners who made the award.

The Act gives Mr. Montgomery power to appoint a new Commissioner, and provides for the mode of procedure; it also empowers the Commissioners, if they think fit, to make a new award, and they are not to be tied down to the sum named in the award so remitted to them. These provisions and powers are not to be confined to Mr. Montgomery's case, but are to be general in their application, and are intended to apply to any similar case that may arise in working out the Land Purchase Act.

The Act also makes provisions to meet the case of the estate of John Winsloe, a lunatic.

The Master of the Rolls declined to appoint a Commissioner to act on behalf of the proprietor, deciding that the provisions of the Land Purchase Act did not provide for such a case.

This Act supplies this defect by declaring that the law shall extend to such cases.

This estate of John Winsloe is the only estate owned by a lunatic proprietor, and as the lands surrounding it have been purchased under the Compulsory Act, it is thought necessary to make the law plain enough to embrace John Winsloe's estate.

There is also provision made that where notices for hearing cases have been given under section 14 of the principal Act, and such hearings from some cause or other have not taken place, that the proceedings are not to abate on that account, but that fresh notices may be given. There is a necessity for this amendment.

The Act also extends the time stipulated in section 2 of the main Act for notifying proprietors of the Government's intention to purchase their estates. There are one or two small estates that will elude the operations of this Act if this amendment is not sanctioned. It is proposed to extend the time for a further period of 60 days from the publication of His Excellency the Governor General's assent to this Act.

Provision is also made to meet the case of a Commissioner who may be disqualified to act on account of relationship to a proprietor by authorising the appointment of a new Commissioner ad hoc. A case has arisen which has rendered this provision necessary.

The deed from the Public Trustee to the Commissioner of Public Lands on its production in any Court of Law or Equity in the Province is to be received as primâ facie evidence that the proceedings taken under the Land Act have been regularly complied with. This provision is in my opinion very necessary, without it, it will be difficult to protect the interests of the Government of this Province, and will not, I think, work injustice to individuals.

Proprietors under this Act will be required, before receiving the amount of their awards, to deposit with the Government, their muniments of title, leases, and plans. Without this provision it will be difficult, if not impossible, for the Commissioner of Public Lands to carry out the sale of the lands to the tenants or occupiers.

The Act extends the definition of the term " proprietor " so as to include tenants in tail, this has become necessary in consequence of the decision come to by the Supreme Court, that the Land Purchase Act, 1875, only extends and applies to owners of land in fee simple. As estates tail in land situate in this Province may at any time be barred by the tenant in tail, who can exercise as full a disposing control over such estates as a tenant in fee, it is not considered that this provision is of an objectionable or exceptional character. Provision is made that nothing in this Act shall in any way affect the case of Miss Sulivan, appealed from the Supreme Court of this Province, to the Supreme Court of the dominion of Canada.

All the provisions of this Act are, in my opinion, absolutely necessary for the satisfactory and speedy winding up of the long vexed land question of this Province. It involves no new principle, quoad the intentions of the framers of the principal Act, and will not work any wrong or injury to any proprietor, and is really an Act to remedy practical defects, many of which were not forseen when the Land Purchase Act, 1875, was passed, and have arisen chiefly from the construction put upon that Act by the Supreme Court of this Province.

As the Land Commissioners Court stands adjourned to the 1st of July next, it is very desirable to obtain His Excellency the Governor General's decision upon the Act in question before that date, if possible.

FREDK. BRECKEN,
Attorney General for Prince Edward Island.

Enclosure 3. in No. 1.

AN ACT TO AMEND THE "LAND PURCHASE ACT."

Passed April 29, 1876.

Preamble. WHEREAS doubts have arisen as to the meaning and construction of many provisions of "The Land Purchase Act, 1875," and it is highly expedient that all such doubts shall be removed:

Be it therefore enacted by the Lieutenant Governor, Council, and Assembly, as follows:

Award not to be void because matters to be considered by Commissioners under 28th sec. of 38 Vict. c. 32. are not expressly found in such award.

I. No award heretofore made or hereafter to be made by the Commissioners appointed or to be appointed under the provisions of "The Land Purchase Act, 1875," or by any two of them, shall be held or deemed to be invalid or void in any court of law or equity, nor shall any injunction or other order be granted by the Supreme Court, or by any judge thereof, restraining the public trustee from executing a conveyance pursuant to the said Act, of the lands and estates of the proprietor for which such award was or shall be made, by reason of the facts or circumstances or any of them, which the Commissioners are directed to take into their consideration by the twenty-eighth section, and sub-sections of the said Act, in estimating the amount of compensation to be paid to any proprietor not having been found expressly in such award, it having been and being the intention of the legislature that such facts and circumstances should only be taken into the consideration of the Commissioners in estimating the compensation they award, but should not be expressly found by them in their award.

No award to be void for want of discription of lands for which award is made. Public Trustee may be restrained.

II. No award heretofore made or hereafter to be made by the Commissioners appointed or to be appointed under the provisions of the said Act shall be held or deemed to be invalid or void in any court of law or equity by reason of such award not containing any description of the lands of the said proprietor for which such award was or shall be made; but the Supreme Court shall have power in any such case to restrain the public trustee from executing a conveyance of the estate of any such proprietor until the description of the lands of such proprietor has been settled by the said court or a judge thereof.

Quit rents released in all cases where award made.

III. No proceedings either in personam or in rem shall be commenced, prosecuted, or maintained in any court of law or equity, for the recovery of any quit rents reserved in the original grants or the lands of any proprietor for which any award has been made under "The Land Purchase Act, 1875," and all such quit rents shall be deemed and held to have been and to be absolutely and for ever released by such award, and such award shall and may be pleaded in bar by any person or persons whomsoever of any action brought for the recovery of such quit rent.

Preamble.

IV. And whereas the Supreme Court of this island have remitted back the award made by the Commissioners in the matter of the application of the Commissioner of Public Land for the purchase of the estate of James Frederick Montgomery, to correct an alleged mistake or omission therein, and owing to the resignation of the Right Honourable Hugh C. E. Childers, the Commissioner appointed by the Governor General in Council, and one of the Commissioners by whom the said award was made, and his absence from the Colony, doubts have arisen respecting the Commissioners and the mode of procedure to be adopted so as to make an examination into such alleged mistake or omission, and also so as to make a new final and binding award, and it is expedient to remove such doubts and provide machinery to carry out the order of the said Court effectually:

Estate of James F. Montgomery.

Be it therefore enacted that the existing Commissioners respectively appointed by the Governor General of Canada in Council and the Lieutenant Governor of this island in Council, together with the Commissioner appointed or to be appointed by the said proprietor, James Frederick Montgomery, shall have and are hereby declared to have as full power and jurisdiction with reference to the estate of the said James Frederick Montgomery, and the order of the Supreme Court referring the award therein back, and the revising of such award, and the correcting of any mistake or omission therein, and the making and publication of a new award therein, as the Commissioners who made the said award so remitted back could or would have; and they shall have full power to hear and rehear all evidence offered before them either by the said James Frederick Montgomery or the Commissioner of Public Lands, and to make a new award which shall be legal and binding on all parties and on the estate and land of James Frederick Montgomery.

Notice of hearing.

V. The said Commissioners or any two of them shall cause the Commissioner of Public Lands and the said proprietor, James Frederick Montgomery, to be served with a notice of a time and place when they shall proceed to hear and determine the matters so remitted as aforesaid; and such notice shall be served at least fourteen days before the day of such hearing, and no other notice or publication shall be necessary or requisite.

Vacancy of proprietor's commissioner how filled up.

VI. In case of the death, absence, or refusal to act of the Commissioner appointed by the said James Frederick Montgomery, he shall be at liberty to appoint a new Commissioner; and in case no such new Commissioner is appointed by the said James Frederick Montgomery, and the Commissiener appointed previously by him is dead, absent, or refuses or declines to act, then, and in each and all of such cases the Commissioners for the time being appointed by the Governor General of Canada in Council and the Lieutenant Governor of this island in Council may hear and determine such case and make as valid and binding an award as fully and effectually as if the proprietor's Commissioner had acted.

Power to Commissioner to remodel award.

VII. In case the said Commissioners, or any two of them, find it necessary to make a new award, they shall not be bound in any way by the sum awarded by the Commissioners whose award was so remitted back as aforesaid, but shall award such sum as they may deem just and right, whether the same is greater or less than that awarded by the Commissioners whose award has been remitted back as aforesaid.

Order remitting back award to contain alleged errors, &c.

VIII. In any case where an application is hereafter made, either by the proprietor or the Commissioner of Public Lands, to the Supreme Court to remit any award back to the Commissioners to correct any error, informality, or omission therein, and any order is made by such Supreme Court remitting such award back, such order shall expressly contain the alleged error, informality, or omission for the correction of which such award is remitted; and in any such case where such order is made the Commissioners appointed respectively by the Governor General of Canada in Council and the Lieutenant Governor of this island in Council, and holding office at the time such order remitting back the award is made, shall have full power and jurisdiction, together with the Commissioner of the proprietor, if he will act, to consider such order and such alleged error, informality, or omission, although they may not be the same Commissioners who made the award; and if they, or any two of them, find any such error, informality, or omission, they shall have full power to make a new award, correcting any such error, informality, or omission, as the case may be; and if they are unable to find or do not find any such error, informality, or omission, as alleged in the order of the Supreme Court, they shall certify the same under their hands to the said Supreme Court, and shall file or cause the same to be filed in the office of the prothonotary: and such new award, when made and published, or when a new award is made, or such award so remitted back where the Commissioners certify that they do not find any such error, informality, or omission as alleged, shall respectively be binding, conclusive, and final on all parties and on the lands of the proprietor for whose lands the award is respectively made.

What Commissioners may consider remitting order and correct award.

Notice by Commissioners of hearing order remitting back award.

IX. In any case where an order is made by the Supreme Court remitting any award back, the said Commissioners, or any two of them, shall cause fourteen days' notice at least to be served on the Commissioner of Public Lands and upon the proprietor or his agent for the time being, of a time and place when they shall proceed to hear and determine the matter so remitted as aforesaid; and no other notice or publication shall in any such case be necessary or requisite.

Vacancy of proprietors commissioner how filled up.

X. In case of the death, absence, or refusal to act of the Commissioner appointed by the proprietor, he shall be at liberty to appoint a new Commissioner, and in case no such new Commissioner is appointed by a proprietor, and the Commissioner previously appointed by him is dead, absent, or refuses or declines to act, then, and in each and all of such cases, the other two Commissioners may hear and determine such case, and make as valid and binding an award as fully and effectually as if the proprietor's Commissioner had acted.

The estate of John Winsloe, a lunatic.

XI. And whereas a notice was served upon Henry Jones Cundall, the committee of John Winsloe, a lunatic, by the Commissioner of Public Lands, under and pursuant to the second section of the said Act, of the intention of the Government of this Province to purchase the township lands of such lunatic under the said Act, and doubts have been expressed whether the provisions of said Act extends to or embraces such a case, and it is expedient to remove such doubts:

Land Purchase Act, 1875, to extend to lunatic proprietors.

Be it enacted that the "Land Purchase Act, 1875," shall be construed to extend to, and is hereby declared to extend to, the cases of lunatic proprietors; all notices heretofore served upon or hereafter served upon the committee of any such lunatic proprietor shall be deemed and held to be good and valid notices and services, and shall bind the estate of such proprietor to the same extent as if such proprietor was compos mentis and had been personally served; and every Commissioner appointed or to be appointed by any such committee of a lunatic shall be deemed and held to be properly and legally appointed; and every such committee so notified who may not, by reason of the said recited doubts or from any other reason or cause, have appointed, and any such committee shall, within thirty days after the publication of the Governor General's assent to this Act, appoint a Commissioner on behalf of the proprietor or estate of which he is such committee as aforesaid; and in default of any such appointment the Supreme Court shall, on the application of the Commissioner of Public Lands, appoint a Commissioner on behalf of such committee of such lunatic proprietor.

Commissioner for lunatic proprietor.

Proceedings confirmed.

XII. After the appointment of any such Commissioner as provided in the last preceding section, all such proceedings shall be had and taken as if such Commissioner had been duly appointed under the ninth or eleventh section of "The Land Purchase Act."

Proceedings not to abate because case not heard pursuant to notice under 14th sec. 38 Vict. c. 32. but fresh notice may be given.

XIII. In any case or cases where the Commissioners, or any two of them, under "The Land Purchase Act, 1875," have published, or shall hereafter publish, a notice or notices under the fourteenth section of said Act, of a time and place for hearing and considering the matters referred to them, relating to the lands of any proprietor, whose Commissioner shall have been appointed, and from any reason or cause whatsoever, such hearing has not taken place, or shall not take place, pursuant to such notice, or any mistake has been made in the publication, such case or cases or the proceedings therein shall not abate, but it shall be lawful for such Commissioners, or the Commissioners for the time being, appointed under the said Act, or any two of them, without any fresh petition or other proceedings on the part of the Commissioner of Public Lands or proprietor, to publish fresh notices pursuant to the said fourteenth section, for the hearing and considering the matters referred to them relating to the lands of any such proprietor, and all subsequent proceedings based or taken upon any such fresh notice or notices, shall be, in all and every respect, as legal and binding upon all parties and persons as if such notice or notices was or were the first or original notice or notices.

Preamble.

XIV. Whereas there are several proprietors in this Island who were not notified of the intention of the Government to purchase their estates under the second section of "The Land Purchase Act, 1875," because of the difficulties and impossibilities of ascertaining the proper parties upon whom to serve the notices; and it is expedient to extend the time allowed by the said second section for serving such notices:

Time for giving notice to proprietors extended.

Be it therefore enacted that the time allowed by the second section of the said Act, within which the Commissioner of Public Lands must notify any proprietor or proprietors of the intention of the Government to purchase his or their township lands, shall be, and the same is hereby extended to sixty days after the publication of the Governor General's assent to this Act, in the Canada "Gazette," and any notice served within such last mentioned sixty days, shall have the like effect and force as if the same had been served within the time limited by the second section of "The Land Purchase Act, 1875."

When Commissioners appointed by Lieut. Governor disqualified by relationship or otherwise, another to be appointed in his place.

XV. In any case or cases under the "The Land Purchase Act, 1875," where it has been found, or shall hereafter be found, that the Commissioner appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council, was or is related to any proprietor whose lands are sought to be taken under the said Act, or from any cause or disability unable to act as Commissioner on any particular estate: It shall be lawful for the Lieutenant-Governor of this Island in Council to appoint a Commissioner ad hoc in his stead and place, quod the particular proprietor or estate that such Commissioner is related to, or incapacitated from hearing or adjudicating upon, and such Commissioner shall have as full power and authority in every respect, with reference to the estate of such proprietor, as if he had been the Commissioner appointed under the fifth section of the said Act.

No fresh notice, &c., required.

XVI. No fresh notice, petition, or other proceeding shall be necessary on the part of the Commissioner of Public Lands or proprietor, on the appointment of any such Commission ad hoc, but such Commissioner shall, together with the other Commissioner or Commissioners, cause a notice of a time a place of hearing to be published pursuant to the provisions of the fourteenth section of said Act.

Deed from Public Trustee to Commissioner of XVII. Every deed or conveyance executed by the Public Trustee, under "The Land Purchase Act, 1875," shall be taken and received whenever the execution is proved, by the Public Trustee, in any court of law or equity in this Island, as primâ facie evidence that all proceedings had been regularly and legally had, and taken, and done, and that all conditions had been performed, and all things had happened and existed, and all times had elapsed necessary to entitle such Public Trustee to execute, and that such Public Trustee was at the date thereof entitled to execute such deed or conveyance, and to convey the lands described in such deed, in fee simple, to the Commissioner of Public Lands, at and from the date of such deed and no other evidence of any kind, or of any fact or circumstances, shall be necessary or required to make such deed primâ facie evidence, as aforesaid, of the right of such Public Trustee to execute such deed and convey the lands therein described, in fee simple, to the Commissioner of Public Lands, or that the lands therein described became vested in fee simple at the date thereof, in the Commissioner of Public Lands.

Public Lands to be primâ facie evidence that proceedings have regularly taken, &c.

XVIII. The Supreme Court shall not make any order for the payment of any moneys awarded for any lands under "The Land Purchase Act, 1875," unless and until the proprietor or person making application for such moneys shall first deposit with the Prothonotary all such deeds, plans, leases, counterparts of leases, agreements, and muniments of title relating to the lands or any part thereof, for which such moneys have been awarded, as may be in the possession, custody, or control of such person so applying, and this clause shall apply as well to all applications already made, as to those which hereafter may be made.

Proprietor to deposit all deeds, leases, &c., of estate with prothonotary before recovering moneys awarded to him for his estate.

XIX. The Prothonotary shall keep all such deeds, plans, leases, and counterparts of leases, agreements and muniments of title so deposited in each estate carefully by themselves, and apart from all papers and muniments of title in any other estate deposited with him as aforesaid, and shall deliver them over to the Commissioner of Public Lands, together with the deed from the Public Trustee in each estate, pursuant to the rules of the said court.

Custody of deeds, plans, leases, &c.

XX. The term and expression "Proprietor," whenever used in "The Land Purchase Act, 1875," shall, in addition to the definitions thereof given in and by the said Act, but not in anywise in limitation of such definitions be held and construed to have included and extended to and to include and extend to all tenants in tail, and the said "Land Purchase Act, 1875," and all proceedings taken or to be taken thereunder shall be construed as if this provision had been enacted therein and formed part of the Act at the time of the passing thereof.

Term proprietor to include tenants in tail.

XXI. Nothing in this Act contained shall be construed to prejudice or affect the rights of Charlotte Antonia Sulivan, the proceedings to purchase whose estate are now pending before the Supreme Court of Canada.

Act not to affect rights of Miss Sulivan, appealed to Supreme Court of Canada.

GOVERNOR-GENERAL THE RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF DUFFERIN, K.P., K.C.B., to the RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF CARNARVON. (Received August 8, 1876.)

Government House, Ottawa,
July 27, 1876.

MY LORD,

IN my Despatch of May 26,* I had the honour of forwarding to your Lordship an attested copy of a reserved Bill passed in the last session of the Legislature of the Province of Prince Edward Island, entitled " An Act to amend the Land Purchase Act, 1875."

* No. 1.

I have now the honour of enclosing a copy of a report of a Committee of the Privy Council concurring in a memorandum by the Minister of Justice advising me for the reasons stated, not to assent to the Bill in question.

I also forward for your Lordship's information, copies of two documents which I have received from the landed proprietors and the counsel for all the English proprietors respectively, protesting against the provisions of the Bill, and praying that it may not become law.

Enclosure 1. in No. 3.

Copy of a Report of a Committee of the Honourable the Privy Council, approved by His Excellency the Governor General, on the July 21, 1876.

The Committee of Council have had under consideration the report hereunto annexed, dated 18th July 1876, from the Hon. Mr. Scott, acting in the absence of the Minister of Justice, relating to " An Act to amend the Land Purchase Act, 1875," passed in the Legislature of the Province of Prince Edward Island and reserved by the Lieut.-Governor for the signification of the Governor General's pleasure, and on the recommendation of the Hon. Mr. Scott, and for the reasons stated in his report, the committee advise that the Bill entitled " An Act to amend the Land Purchase Act, " 1875," do not receive the assent of the Governor General in Council.

Department of Justice, Ottawa, July 18, 1876.

The undersigned has the honour to report :—

That a despatch from the Lieutenant-Governor of Prince Edward Island of 12th May last, mentioned for the consideration of the Governor General, two Acts passed by the Legislature of the Province, as to one of which, relating to certain departments of the Public Service, action has already been taken.

As to the other Bill so transmitted. It is entitled " An Act to amend the Land Purchase Act, 1875," and was reserved by the Lieutenant-Governor for the signification of the Governor General's pleasure. With the despatch of the Lieutenant Governer is a certified copy of the Bill so reserved, and the report of the Attorney General giving his reasons for the passing of the same by the Council and Assembly.

The Lieutenant Governor calls attention to the Attorney General's report and his reasons therein stated for the passing of the Act, in which he (the Lieutenant Governor) concurs, and he expresses his hope that it will receive His Excellency's consideration.

The Lieutenant Governor adds that as the Land Commissioner's Court stands adjourned until the 1st July next, it is very desirable that he should know His Excellency's pleasure as regards the Act in question previous to that period.

The Bill so reserved purports to be an amendment of the " Land Purchase Act, 1875," and recites that doubts have arisen as to the meaning and construction of many provisions of " The Land Purchase Act, 1875," and that is highly expedient that all such doubts should be removed.

It then proceeds to enact that no award theretofore made or thereafter to be made shall be held void in any Court of Law or Equity by reason that certain matters which were required by the Commissioners to be taken under consideration are not expressly mentioned in any award, and that no award shall be void for other reasons.

It also provides that nothing shall affect the rights of Miss Sulivan to purchase, whose estate is now pending before the Supreme Court of Canada.

The effect of the first portion of the Act appears to be that the interpretation of the Supreme Court of the island of the Act of 1875, upon which certain awards of the Land Commissioners were held bad, is reversed, and the awards in question to be declared as valid.

Against the assent to this Bill, Mr. Edward J. Hodgson, by letter of the 8th June last, addressed to the Secretary of State, urges that the Bill in question very seriously affects the rights and the property of persons holding land in the province. He represents that the Act is for the purpose of giving effect to certain awards considered to be void by those whose property is dealt with by them, and that the award similar to those now attempted to be legalized has been declared to be void by the Supreme Court of Prince Edward Island.

Mr. Hodgson further represents that there is another case pending of Miss H. McDonald, of Montreal, and that if the Bill be assented to, it will have the effect of declaring the award to be valid, and not only so, but there are no provisions made for indemnifying her in the costs incurred by her in the proceedings she has instituted.

He also represents that further hardship will arise to individuals in case the Bill should become law; and he adds that memorials explaining the objections in question are being prepared, and requests that consideration of the Act may be delayed for an opportunity of considering the memorials referred to.

In the report of the Attorney-General of Prince Edward Island it is represented that applications to the Supreme Court of the Island were made on behalf of Miss Sulivan and of the Hon. Ponsonby Fane, and the Court quashed the awards in both cases, but that negotiations for a peaceful settlement of the Fane estate are pending.

The undersigned has the honour under the circumstances to report:—

That there does not appear to be any reservation in the Act of the rights of the Hon. Ponsonby Fane, or of any other parties as to whom awards may have been made, and who are similarly situated with Miss Sulivan and Mr. Fane, and who may have regarded the decisions of the Supreme Court of the Island in the cases before them as applicable to themselves.

That by telegraphic communications with the Lieutenant Governor of the Province, it is ascertained that Mr. Fane's case has been settled and withdrawn from the Court, and that the only additional case pending before the Supreme Court of the Province on the 21st June instant is that of John Alister Macdonald, which is not yet tried, but in which a rule nisi has been granted by that Court to set aside the award, on the 19th of June instant, to be tried at the sittings of that Court at Charlottetown on the last Tuesday in June instant.

But petitions have been presented at a later date, (1), by Mr. Edward J. Hodgson, before mentioned, and who describes himself as one of the proprietors of land, and also as counsel for all the English proprietors, and nearly all those resident therein; and (2) from the following proprietors and owners of land in Prince Edward Island, viz., James F. Montgomery, Jane B. Douse, Arabella Douse, John A. McDonell, J. P. Douse, Rev. John A. S. McDonald, by his attorney, Alexander McLean, Edward J. Hodgson, Helen Jane McDonald, and W. C. McDonald.

The allegations in the two petitions are substantially the same, and the petitioners pray that the assent of the Governor-General in Council be not given to the reserved Bill in question.

It is stated:—

1. That it was notorious at the time of passing the Bill that the errors (in the Land Purchase Act of 1875) would be made the grounds of judicial applications to set aside the proceedings, and the awards founded upon them whenever the Government attempted to enforce them.

2. That petitioners did not avail themselves within the period fixed by the Act of 1875 for remission back to the Commissioners of the awards in their cases, relying on their ordinary right to oppose the awards, of which right the reserved Bill would deprive them; which also neglects to provide any means for remission of these irregular and erroneous awards to the Commissioners.

3. That the reserved Bill puts land owners to additional costs and expenses, but makes no provision for the refund of the same.

4. That the Commissioners' award having neglected to specify the portion of the lands taken from the portion reserved, the owners are by the reserved Bill put to additional costs on proceedings before the Court without provision for payment thereof.

5. A special complaint of petitioner James F. Montgomery as to an error in his case, in respect of which he obtained an Order of Court for remission of the case back to the Commissioners; but the reserved Bill provides for a hearing of the case before other Commissioners and a new award; and that the provision in respect to other cases than his own is confined as to the point on which such other cases may be referred back.

6. That in the case of one John Winsloe, a lunatic, the reserved Bill is practically to set aside a judgment of the Master of the Rolls, deciding that the Land Purchase Act, 1875, did not apply to the estate of the lunatic.

7. That proprietors whose claims were to have been heard by the first Commissioners, but which were not heard, and the proceedings as to which have abated through the neglect of the Government, have no indemnification as to their costs.

8. That the 17th section gives an extraordinary and dangerous effect to deeds executed by the public trustee.

9. That many of the proceedings taken in the Commissioners' Court, and which are pending and undetermined, are manifestly irregular, informal, and invalid; and that it is contrary to British legislation to remove doubts in contested proceedings by retrospective legislation as sought to be effected by this Act.

The undersigned has the honour further to report that without giving weight or consideration to any great extent to the allegations in the petitions which are unsupported by any actual proof, he is of opinion that the reserved Bill is retrospective in its effect; that it deals with rights of parties now in litigation under the Act which it is proposed to amend, or which may yet fairly form the subject of litigation; and that there is an absence of any provision saving the rights and proceedings of persons whose properties have been dealt with under the Act of 1875.

He therefore recommends that the Bill entitled "An Act to amend the Land Purchase Act, 1875," do not receive the assent of the Governor-General in Council.

(Signed) R. W. Scott,
Acting Minister of Justice.

Enclosure 2. in No. 3.

To His Excellency the Right Hon. Sir Frederick Temple, Bart., Earl of Dufferin, the Governor-General of Canada.

The humble petition of the undersigned proprietors and owners of land in Prince Edward Island respectfully sheweth:

That an Act was passed in the last session of the General Assembly of Prince Edward Island, entituled "An Act to amend the Land Purchase Act, 1875," which was reserved for the signification of your Excellency's pleasure thereon, and which is of so unusual a nature, and will, if assented to, so prejudicially affect your petitioners that they solicit your Excellency's attention to some of its provisions.

The Land Purchase Act of 1875, in the opinion of your petitioners, affected the rights of private property to an unusual extent, and the Act of last Session is an attempt to cure certain omissions and errors committed by the Commissioners appointed under that Act in proceedings before them, which are still pending between the Government on the one hand and certain proprietors on the other. Although it was notorious at the time of passing the Act that these errors would be made the grounds of judicial applications to set aside those proceedings and the awards founded upon them whenever the Government attempted to enforce them. Indeed, at the very time of passing the Act, awards made in the estates of certain proprietors had been declared invalid by the Supreme Court of the Colony for objections similar to those which the Government now attempt by special legislation to correct in the cases of other proprietors.

By the Land Purchase Act, 1875, leave is reserved to proprietors to make application to the Supreme Court within a limited period after the making of awards to have those awards remitted back to the Commissioners for reconsideration; but because certain of your petitioners were advised that the awards made in their cases were illegal and void, they allowed the time granted for applications to remit them back to elapse, relying upon their ordinary right to oppose the awards whenever the Government attempted to enforce them, but the Government now seek by retrospective legislation to remove objections that have been judicially decided to be fatal to the awards, and by that legislation make no provision for enabling the proprietors thus subjected to the consequences of these irregular and erroneous awards to have them remitted back to the Commissioners for amendment or correction.

The "Land Purchase Act of 1875" makes no provision for indemnifying proprietors whose estates are adjudicated on in the Commissioners Court against expenses to their solicitors' counsel and witnesses, and the second section of the Act of 1876 renders awards legal without any description of the lands taken from proprietors, but subjects such proprietors to the additional expense of settling the description of such lands by the Supreme Court or a judge thereof, and makes no provision for refunding such proprietors the expenses caused by such additional proceedings.

Your petitioners submit that inasmuch as by the "Land Purchase Act, 1875," proprietors are allowed to retain certain portions of their lands defined by that Act, while the rest is compulsorily taken from them, it is but reasonable and proper that the Commissioners should be required to distinguish in their awards the portion of each estate taken from the portion reserved, and that it is arbitrary and unjust by retrospective legislation to subject proprietors to the expense of having the omissions and errors of the Commissioners corrected by additional proceedings before the Supreme Court without at least providing for the payment of all expenses incident to such supplemental litigation.

The estate of your petitioner, James Frederick Montgomery, was adjudicated on by the Commissioners, who made an award in September last, and your petitioner discovered after the same was made that one year's rent was omitted by them from the award under the impression that your petitioner could recover that year's rent notwithstanding the award, whereas, in fact, it could not be so recovered, because it was overdue in law at the time the award was made, although, in fact, the custom pursued by your petitioner with his tenants was not to collect it until the autumn following. Your petitioner, James F. Montgomery, on discovering this omission applied to the Supreme Court pursuant to the provisions of the Land Purchase Act, 1875, to have his award remitted back to the Commissioners to correct the alleged error, and an order was made in October last remitting back the award to the Commissioners for correction. No application was made by the Government to have his award remitted back or set aside. He has urged the Commissioners of Public Lands, in whose name these proceedings on behalf of the Government are conducted, to have the case re-heard, but hitherto without success. He has also made repeated reasonable offers for the voluntary conveyance of his estate to the Government. If he is in error concerning the said year's rent the amount of the award should stand; on the other hand, if that year's rent has really been omitted the amount of the award should be increased. But the Government, instead of entertaining his offers of a voluntary settlement or bringing the case to a re-hearing within a reasonable time, now pass an Act affecting him individually, and enabling certain persons therein named to hear and re-hear all the evidence and to make a new award (see sec. 4), and by section 7 of the same Act, such new award may give your petitioner a less amount than was awarded by the Commissioners whose award has been so remitted back.

The Commissioner on behalf of the Local Government has made and filed an affidavit against the claim of your petitioner, James F. Montgomery, notwithstanding which the Supreme Court remitted back the award; the present Commissioner appointed by the Governor-General had not been appointed when your petitioner's case was heard. If the Act of 1876 becomes law, your petitioner will be obliged to go to the expense of having his whole case re-heard and all his evidence reproduced for the information of the new Commissioner to avoid the danger of having his award reduced notwithstanding the fact that the alleged omission for which his award was remitted back consists of whether said years' rent was omitted; even if your petitioner is in error in contending that it has been omitted, the fact of his being so mistaken could not lessen the award. No provision is made by either Act by which your petitioner can recover the expenses of the former or subsequent hearings, and he confidently hopes that your Excellency will not sanction retrospective and personal legislation of this kind, enacted without cause, and the only effect of which would be to harass your petitioner unnecessarily. Your Excellency will observe that while your petitioner is thus dealt with personally and by name and put to the annoyance and expense of a general re-hearing, the same Act provides that in all other cases (see sec. 8) when awards are remitted back, the duty of the Commissioners in such a case is confined to correct the very error for which such awards are so remitted back.

Your petitioners show that special provision is made by sec. 11 of the Act for bringing the estate of John Winsloe, a lunatic, within the operations of the "Land Purchase Act, 1875," on the ground that "doubts have been expressed whether the provisions of "the said Act extend to or embrace such a case." What this Act terms a "doubt," your petitioners are informed is really a judicial decision of the Master of the Rolls of this island.

Your petitioners learn that the Committee of the said lunatic, on being notified by the Government under the "Land Purchase Act, 1875," petitioned the Master of the Rolls (who has co-ordinate jurisdiction with the Chancellor concerning lunatics and their estates) for the appointment of a Commissioner for said lunatic's estate under the "Land Purchase Act, 1875," and the Master of the Rolls gave a written decision or judgment deciding that the case was not within the provisions of the Statute. A copy of that judgment was served by the lunatic's committee or trustee upon the Commissioner of Public Lands. The Government took no steps to over-rule or appeal from the decision of the Master of the Rolls, but they now adopt the summary method of annulling that decision by an Act of Parliament.

Your petitioners also show that certain proprietors have been notified that their estates would be valued and taken under the provisions of the "Land Purchase Act, 1875"; that such proprietors appointed Commissioners and were in attendance at the Commissioners' Court with their witnesses, but the Court in the fall of 1875 suspended its labours without hearing these cases, and it is now sought (see sec. 13) to revive proceedings which have abated through the neglect of the Government without indemnifying such proprietors in their former or future costs.

In some instances when proceedings so abated, the then owners or proprietors of land executed conveyances and made other legitimate dispositions of property, and your petitioners submit that it would be unjust to revive these proceedings by means of an Act of Parliament, and have these lands compulsorily assigned to the Government without notice to the persons who since the abatement of the proceedings have acquired them by purchase or conveyance.

Your petitioners cannot allow the 17th section of the Act to pass without pointing out the extraordinary and dangerous effect sought to be given to deeds executed by the public trustee. It is well established that the Commissioners who appraise estates have no power to adjudicate upon titles. If the Commissioners appraise lands in which the proprietor has only a life estate (as in fact they have done), and the public trustee executes a deed of such lands to the Government, this section raises a presumption that such deed conveys an estate in fee simple. Again.—Many occupants of lands on estates hold lands by virtue of many years occupation, but if this section becomes law, the deed of the public trustee will be primâ facie evidence that the grantee named in such deed and not the occupant of the land is seized in fee simple.

Your petitioners lastly show that many of the proceedings taken in the Commissioners' Court, and which are pending and undetermined are manifestly irregular, informal, and invalid. And they submit that it is unusual and contrary to the course of British legislation to correct mistakes and remove doubts in contested proceedings by one-sided and retrospective legislation in the manner sought to be effected by this Act, and your petitioners pray that in view of the exceptional, novel, and dangerous nature of the provisions of the Act in question, your Excellency will be pleased to prevent its becoming law.

And your petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

Enclosure 3. in No. 3.

From Mr. E. J. Hodgson to the Earl of Dufferin.

Ottawa, June 17, 1876, Library of Parliament.

May it please your Excellency, as one of the proprietors of lands in Prince Edward Island, and also as counsel for all the English proprietors, and nearly all those resident thereon, I venture to address your Excellency on their behalf, with reference to an Act passed by two branches of the Legislature of Prince Edward Island (but not assented to by Sir Robert Hodgson, the Lieutenant-Governor), entitled "An Act to amend the Land "Purchase Act, 1875."

Since the passing of the "Land Purchase Act, 1875," the following proprietors have received what has been awarded for their estates, and therefore I do not speak on their behalf, viz:—

1. Robert Bruce Stewart.
2. S. C. B. Ponsonby Fane.
3. George W. de Blois.
4. William Cundall.
5. Miss Cundall.

I left Charlottetown last Monday week to attend the Supreme Court of Canada, for the argument of Miss Sulivan's case under this Act. At that time the proprietors whose names I have given above are only those who have been paid for. The great majority of the remainder are still pending, 11 months having elapsed since the unfortunate owners have been brought before the court, deprived of their right to receive the arrears of rent due to them, and still unable to obtain their money.

The Act amending the Land Purchase Act has been reserved for the special consideration of your Excellency as the Governor-General of Canada, and I humbly petition your Excellency to disallow that Act for the reasons, which in this memorial, I shall state for your Excellency's consideration.

As I shall have occasion to make frequent reference to the awards made by the Commissioners, it would be convenient if I should set out the form in which they have been made. It is as follows (omitting the title) :—

" The sum awarded under section 26 of the said Act by us, Commissioners appointed under the provisions of the said Act, is $."

Signatures.

It is provided by the Statute reserved for your Excellency's consideration, that no award, heretofore made, or hereafter to be made, shall be void by reason of its not finding any of those facts which by " the Land Purchase Act, 1875," it was bound to have found expressly.

I shall assume that the decision of the Supreme Court of Prince Edward Island in Miss Sulivan's case is valid. True an appeal has been taken out against it, but until reversed it must be considered to be law. And the legislature must have believed very strongly in the validity of that judgment or they would not have passed a legislative enactment to reverse it.

Now, by that decision, it was declared to be the duty of the Commissioners to find specifically, certain matters in issue submitted to their consideration, which are set forth in section 28 of " the Land Purchase Act, 1875," among others.

1. The quit rents reserved to the crown.
2. The effect of the non-performance of the conditions of the original grants, if they found they had not been performed.
3. The arrears of rent.

There are various other matters in section 28, but I desire to call your Excellency's attention to these three especially. The Supreme Court held that it was the duty of the Commissioners to find these matters on the face of their award, because if they did not the proprietor would be seriously prejudiced. For instance, the quit rents reserved to the crown, by the original grants, have by an Act of the Legislature of Prince Edward Island (14 Victoria, cap. 3), been assigned to the Government of that Province. Sub-section (c.) of the 28th section of the " Land Purchase Act," directs the Commissioners to consider (and as a necessary consequence I submit to determine, for it is difficult to understand why any matters were referred to them unless it were that they should determine them,) " the quit rents reserved in the original grants, and how far payment " of the same have been remitted by the crown." This is a Legislative declaration that there is a question whether the quit rents have been waived or remitted by the Crown. Now the effect of the complete absence of any reference to the quit rents in the award might have this effect. That a sum of (say 20,000 dollars) might have been deducted from a proprietor, and a balance of (say) 80,000 dollars awarded him, but this fact not appearing when the 80,000 dollars had been paid into court for the proprietor. There would be nothing to prevent the Attorney-General from coming into court, and by " information " or proceedings in the nature of such, claiming the quit rents over again. It would be unavailing for the proprietor to plead that this matter had been determined and that already thousands of dollars had been deducted from him. He could not plead the award. It is perfectly silent as to this fact, and by its terms is expressed to be made not in pursuance of the " Land Purchase Act, 1875," but only of its 26th section.

The Attorney-General, when presenting his claim would, under section 40 of the last mentioned Act, be entitled to the quit rents if found to be due; and thus the unfortunate proprietor would be compelled to pay them a second time.

Now the Legislature of Prince Edward Island recognised this mode of viewing the case to be correct, for by the Act now petitioned against, section three, it is provided :—

" No proceedings either in personem or in rem shall be commenced, prosecuted, or maintained in any court of law or equity for the recovery of any quit rents reserved in the original grants, or the lands of any proprietor for which any award has been made under the " Land Purchase Act, 1875," and all such quit rents shall be deemed and held to have been, and to be absolutely and for ever released by such award, and such award shall and may be pleaded in law by any person or persons whomsoever of any action bought for the recovery of such quit rent."

This provision is most fair and just, and gives to the proprietor that protection which he is entitled to.

But it is evident that if these inefficient and illegal awards are to be rendered valid, the proprietors whose lands are dealt with are equally entitled to protection from the consequences which are certain to ensue from all omission to find respecting—

(1.) The conditions of the original grants from the Crown.

(2.) The performance or non-performance of these conditions.

(3.) The effects of such non-performance.

("The Land Purchase Act, 1875," section 28, sub-section (E.).)

A course somewhat similar to that already pointed out regarding the quit rents would be pursued but with consequences still more serious to the proprietor.

The Crown has ceded all its rights in the lands in Prince Edward Island to the Government of that Colony. Having got possession of the proprietor's lands, it would be an easy matter to procure an inquest of office to find whether the conditions of the original grants had been performed; but it may be said, if upon the execution of this inquest of office it were found that the land is liable to escheat, how could it affect the proprietors? Very seriously, and in this way. Upon the resumption of the lands by the Government of Prince Edward Island, every tenant is liable to be ejected from his farm, and under the covenant for quiet enjoyment contained in his lease he would have his remedy by an action for damages against his landlord. The tenants who had no leases would have no cause to fear from the action of the Government, nor indeed would those who have leases, they would be well recouped for any temporary dispossession, or liability to such, but the power of forcing a landlord into court to answer actions of damages by hundreds of tenants would never be allowed to lie dormant. Stripped of their property, allowed in many instances not one third of its value, the unfortunate proprietors never would be allowed to withdraw from the Island the pittance they have been awarded in order to invest it in some other portion of her Majesty's realms, where to own land is not considered in the light of a crime.

This in truth and in fact is the real reason why this Act, now petitioned against, has been passed. The proprietors are withdrawing the money they have received to invest it elsewhere. Their experience of owning property in Prince Edward Island has been too bitter and too dearly purchased, to induce them to risk further there, the wreck of their property. To stop this withdrawal of their money is now sought, and it must be admitted that the mode taken is a most ingenious one. When the proprietors are brought into court to answer their tenants for disturbance of their holdings, under the proceedings soon to be instituted, it will be useless for them to produce the bold naked award consisting of 23 words (exclusive of the amount), for it raises no presumption that this matter has been determined.

If the proprietors are entitled to protection in the matter of the quit rents, and the Legislature of Prince Edward Island have conceded that point, they are also entitled to protection from being twice charged with damages on account of alleged non-performance of the conditions of the original grant.

But this is another matter which the Commissioners are bound to find under section 28, which by the amending Act they are relieved from doing, and although it does not affect so many of the proprietors, still there are some who will be very seriously injured by its omission from the award. It is the direction to find the arrears of rent.

The Commissioners have every power enabling them to do this. They can compel, under section 20, the production of all documents, books, papers, &c. in order to enable them to see how the estate stands.

Where a proprietor has died the arrears of rent due at the time of his death pass to his executors, the rents due since being inciden to the reversion pass with it, to the heir-at-law, or the devisee.

There is a class of cases of this kind which has been dealt with by the Commissioners. Under their award a lump sum has been given. Now, when the executor goes into the Supreme Court to ask for his share of the award, that is, the arrears due to the deceased proprietor at the time of his death, if the award had set out as it should have done the arrears of rent, there would have been no difficulty. But under the award sought to be confirmed, how can the court tell what amount he is entitled to? It may be assumed that, in any case, something has been deducted from these arrears. How can the Supreme Court tell how much? If it gives the executor more than the Commissioners it must come out of the lump sum awarded, and the proprietor unjustly loses by the amount of such excess. If it gives less than the Commissioners the executor loses the deficiency. I am the administrator cum testamento annexo of the estate of the Rev. John McDonald, which at his death passed to his nephew the Rev. J. A. S. McDonald. But the arrears due at the time of the first named gentleman's death passed to me, and, when collected, are to be handed over to Cardinal Manning in trust for certain charitable purposes in England. I would here quote the words of Judge Peters, one of the judges of the Supreme Court of Prince Edward Island, in giving judgment in Miss Sulivan's case.

" There are two lines in the 20th section (of ' The Land Purchase Act, 1875,') which I think have been very much overlooked. They are these, ' And the facts which ' they may require to ascertain in order to carry this Act into effect.' The meaning of these, I take to be, is facts which it is their duty to ascertain in order to give full effect to this Act. This goes far beyond what they themselves have to perform; it points to all that has to be done by others to carry out what they have begun ; to what the public trustee has to do, and to what this Court has to do in making distribution. I see it stated that in one case the arrears are assigned to Cardinal Manning. If the award finds a lump sum, and the Cardinal's claim comes in to participate in the distribution, how could we ascertain how much of the lump sum was awarded in respect of the land, and how much in respect of arrears of rent ? We could make no distribution in such a case; and the same thing may happen in other cases where arrears are due to the deceased proprietor, and the present proprietor is not his personal representative, we could be compelled to hold the award void in such a case."

There is, however, another consideration which I venture to press upon your Excellency's consideration, as even a still stronger reason why this Act should not be permitted to go into operation.

It assumes (and assumes correctly enough) that awards made in the general terms above alluded to are void. In some instances application has already been made to the Court to set them aside. In an application made by myself, as representing Miss Helen McDonald, of Montreal, proceedings have been taken in the Supreme Court to set aside the award for the very defects which this Act now legalizes. The words of the first section of the Act are so strong that they will have, as they are intended to have, a retroactive aspect, so as to make the proceedings already taken of no effect ; nor does it provide that the parties who have taken these proceedings shall be indemnified in their costs.

I beg to direct your Excellency's attention to the opinion of English judges to legislation such as this, as reported in the case of Moore v. Durden, 2 Exchequer Reports, 22.

In that case the Court refused to follow the rule which requires Acts of Parliament to be construed by giving to its language the interpretation ordinarily attached to it, because its effect would be to make that illegal which but for such rule would have been legal. Alderson B. says, " It is contrary to the first principles of justice to punish those " who have offended against no law, and surely to take away existing rights without " compensation is in the nature of punishment." His Lordship further stated that he would not suppose " that the Legislature contemplated so gross an act of injustice as " without compensation to take away an existing right of action already pending, and " that, too, with no provision even for the costs incurred in the enforcing of what was " before a legal right;" but it was added that this was only a rule of construction, and would yield to the intention of the Legislature if sufficiently expressed.

There can be little doubt that in the Act now under consideration the Legislature has expressed itself in such a manner that " the first principles of justice " have been violated by enacting " so gross an act of injustice as, without compensation, to take away an " existing right." The words of the 1st section, " No award heretofore made or here- " after to be made " will compel the Court " to punish those who have offended against " no law," by compelling them to relinquish proceedings in a court of law which at the time they instituted them they had a legal right so to do, and by compelling them to pay costs for availing themselves of a perfectly legal right. But surely this great wrong, ineffective as it will be for us to argue, should this Act become law, is a strong valid reason why its operation should be stayed, and why the proprietors, whose great misfortune it is to hold lands in Prince Edward Island, should not be still further oppressed by so cruel an act of injustice.

Any forbearance, any clemency on the part of the Commissioners of Public Lands, the proprietors have no reason to hope for or to expect. And I would point out to your Excellency that section 11 of this Act now under consideration arms him with power to seize the lands of an unfortunate lunatic whose income barely enables him to be supported in the Provincial Asylum at Nova Scotia. When his estate has been taken away, if anything be left him at all after the Attorney-General has procured the confiscation of a large proportion of his award, in the manner I have already pointed out, his fate will indeed be a sad one.

This, however, is a matter in which I have not a right to address your Excellency except in the interest of common humanity, but knowing the circumstances, that the son of an English gentleman, now deceased, an unfortunate lunatic in the Nova Scotia Asylum, is sought to be deprived of his property, and that sections 11 and 12 of the Act, now under consideration, amount to, and are intended as a statutary reversal of the decision of the Master of the Rolls of Prince Edward Island, in whose charge he is, in the matter of the estate of that very lunatic. I venture to express the hope that your Excellency will cause that decision to be laid before you, before your Excellency will cause the Royal Assent to be given to so objectionable a measure.

The question whether "The Land Purchase Act, 1875," is not "ultra vires," being in excess of the jurisdiction given to the Local Legislature under the British North American Act, has been raised on behalf of the proprietors, and has been decided adversely to their contention that it is so. Such being the case, the measure now under consideration is freed from any of those considerations which attach to the giving of the Royal Assent to those measures over which the Dominion Government has jurisdiction.

Before the admission of Prince Edward Island into the Dominion it was not unusual for those whose rights were attacked by Acts of a nature similar to this to lay their humble petition at the foot of the Throne. Since confederation, they now cannot do it. But in matters such as this solely under the control of the Local Legislature, your Excellency is regarded as in no ordinary degree the special representative of the Queen's Majesty, clothed with the authority, and, we dare not doubt, not indisposed to use it to protect those of Her Majesty's subjects who are conscious of having done no wrong, and who humbly trust that although they are the possessors of landed estates out of England, your Excellency will not on that account refrain from exercising the Royal prerogative to save them from being the victims of a cruel wrong by the operation of a harsh, unjust, and oppressive measure.

Governor-General the Right Hon. the EARL OF DUFFERIN, K.P., K.C.B., to the Right Hon. the EARL OF CARNARVON. (Received April 19th, 1877.)

My Lord, Ottawa, April 4, 1877.

With regard to previous correspondence relative to the appeal in the case of Miss Sulivan to the Supreme Court of the Dominion, under the Prince Edward Island Land Purchase Act of 1875, I have the honour to enclose herewith for your Lordship's information a copy of a letter from the Registrar of that court, covering an official report containing the judgment of the Chief Justice and Justices.

I have, &c.

The Right Hon. the Earl of Carnarvon, &c. &c. &c.

Enclosure 1. in No. 4.

Sir, Ottawa, March 29, 1877.

By direction of the Chief Justice, and in compliance with the request contained in your letter to him of the 24th inst., I have the honour of transmitting to you, herewith, for the information of His Excellency the Governor-General, a full report, prepared by the official reporter of the court, of the case appealed to the Supreme Court of Canada, in which the Commissioner of Public Lands of Prince Edward Island, was Appellant, and Miss Charlotte Antonia Sulivan, Respondent.

The report contains at length the reasons for judgment given by the Chief Justice and Judges of the court.

Together with the report I send a copy of the case and factum of both parties, and also a copy of the formal judgment entered in the matter of said appeal.

I am, &c.,

Edward J. Langevin, Esq.,
Under Secretary of State, Ottawa.

Enclosure 2. in No. 4.

DOMINION OF CANADA.—IN THE SUPREME COURT OF CANADA.

In the matter of the application of Francis Kelly, the Commissioner of Public Lands, for the purchase of the Estate of Charlotte Antonia Sulivan, and the "Land Purchase Act, 1875."

Charlotte Antonia Sulivan is proprietor of townships numbers 9, 16, 22, and 61, in this island.

Proceedings were commenced to take the said township lands compulsorily under the Land Purchase Act of 1875.

The matter came up for hearing before the Commissioners mentioned in printed case, and the said Commissioners made an award therein, as set out on page 2 of the said case.

The Supreme Court of Prince Edward Island made an order setting aside the award, which rule is set out on page 76 of the printed case.

From the order of the Supreme Court of Prince Edward Island, Francis Kelly, the Commissioner of Public Lands, now appeals to the Supreme Court of Canada.

The respondent, Charlotte Antonia Sulivan, will contend before the Court of Appeal:—

I. That an appeal does not lie direct from the Supreme Court of Prince Edward Island to the Supreme Court of Canada.

II. That if such appeal does lie, this appeal must be dismissed, and the Judgment of the Court below confirmed with costs.

I. No appeal lies direct from the Supreme Court of Prince Edward Island to the Supreme Court of Canada.

By section 11 of the Supreme and Exchequer Court Act: "When an appeal to the Supreme Court is given from a Judgment in any case, it shall always be understood to be given from the Court of last resource in the Province were the Judgment was rendered in such case."

See also Section 17.

The Lieutenant-Governor in Council is constituted a Court of Error and Appeal, in Prince Edward Island, by various Royal Instructions. See e.g. Royal Instructions, Appendix to Journal of House of Assembly of Prince Edward Island, A.D. 1851, Appendix F.

See also, Clarke's Colonial Law. Page 111.

By Section 24 of Supreme and Exchequer Court Act, proceedings in appeals shall be  as nearly as possible in conformity with the present practice of the Judicial Committee of Her Majesty's Privy Council.

It has been decided that appeals from the Supreme Court of Prince Edward Island must, in the first instance, lie to the Governor in Council, and that no appeal lies direct from the Supreme Court to Her Majesty's Privy Council.

Re Cambridge, 3, Moore, P.C.C., 175.

In Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, in which the Governor in Council of each constituted a Court of Appeal, it was found necessary to obtain Orders under the Imperial Act, 7 & 8 Vict., Cap. 69, to allow appeals from the Supreme Courts of these Provinces respectively direct to Her Majesty's Privy Council.

See the order affecting New Brunswick appeals, dated 27th November, 1852, in 4 All. N. B. Reports, page 497.

Do. do. N. S. Journals of the House of Assembly of Nova Scotia, A.D. 1854, page 94, Appendix 10.

No similar order was passed regulating appeals for Prince Edward Island, and therefore the practice as set out in Re Cambridge is unchanged.

The Governor in Council of Prince Edward Island is recognised as a Court of Appeal by the Island Act, 6 Vict., Cap. 26, s. 51, which provides that any person dissatisfied with a decree of the Surrogate, may appeal to the Governor in Council.

The existence of a Court of Error and Appeal for this Province is recognised by various local Statutes ranging from A.D. 1781 to A.D. 1873. See e.g. Local Acts, 21 Geo. III. Cap. 17, 6 Vict., Cap. 26, 36 Vict., Cap. 22, &c.

It is submitted that the above authorities show that the Supreme Court of Prince Edward Island, is not the Court of last resort in this Province.

II. The award in this case should be set aside for the reasons recited in the Rule absolute on page 76 of the printed case.

Because :

1. The award is not final, and 2, it is uncertain.

It is uncertain.

Because it does not show that the Commissioners have adjudicated on matters on which they were bound to adjudicate by the "Land Purchase Act, 1875." The submission is of matters specified in Section 28 of that Act, and must be treated as if it contained the terms of a voluntary submission made by the parties. Award is not made de praemissis, and there is nothing to show that the various matters specified in this section were taken into consideration by the Commissioners.

The rule of law is, if it be doubtful whether the award has decided the question referred it will be set aside for the uncertainty.

Tribe v. Upperton, 3 A. & E., p. 295.
Pearson v. Archibald, 11 M. & W., p. 477.

The award is not only silent as to some matters submitted under Section 28, but it shows on its face that it was made with respect only to matters embraced by Section 26, as the compensation to which Miss Sulivan is entitled by reason of her being divested of her land.

This does not embrace sub-sections 1, 2, and 3 of Section 28.

The rule of law is, if several specific matters are referred and there be no specific adjudication upon any one, the award is void.

Ross v. Boards, 8, A. & E., p. 290.

The award is uncertain, inasmuch as it only decides some of the matters submitted by the 28th section of the Land Purchase Act, 1875.

It is also uncertain, inasmuch as it does not define or describe the subject matter for which the award gives the sum of 81,500 dollars.

Moreover, a proper construction of the Act requires that the land for which a sum is awarded shall be described by metes and bounds, or such description as is necessary in a deed.

By Section 32 the Public Trustee is empowered to execute a deed in form B—that form requires (what indeed would be necessary without such direction) the land to be particularly described by metes and bounds. The office of the Public Trustee is only ministerial. He is to convey "the estate of the proprietor." What estate? The estate adjudicated on, and for which the sum awarded shall have been paid into the Treasury. See Section 32.

Either the Commissioners or the Public Trustee must prepare the description; but the Public Trustee is not a party to the proceedings until after "the number of acres under lease," "the length of the leases," "the rent reserved," "the arrears," &c., Section 28, are adjudicated on. Indeed, the Public Trustee need not receive his appointment until after the award is made.

Can he settle these particulars ex parte?

It is submitted the Public Trustee can only convey the estate specified in the award; and that if the award contains no description of the land the Public Trustee is not authorised to supply the omission.

See Doe-dem Matkins v. Horner, 8, A. & E., page 243, where Patterson, J. says he thought residue of land not embraced in award should be described by metes and bounds.

If it be the Commissioners duty to define the land for which they award a sum of money, it was improper for them to leave or delegate this duty to the Public Trustee.

The Commissioners, by section 28, are also to take into consideration the conditions of the original grants from the Crown, and the performance or non-performance of those conditions, &c.

The award is uncertain, inasmuch as it does not show that the Commissioners have considered or adjudicated on the matters submitted to them by sub-sections 1, 2, and 3 of section 28.

A copy of the original grant of one of the lots in this case, viz., township number nine, extracted from the office of the Public Registry of Deeds of this Island, and certified by the Registrar, is annexed, and contains the conditions referred to in the first part of Mr. Justice Peters' judgment on page 87 of the printed case.

The award being that of an inferior Court should show by express words, or by necessary implication, that the Commisssioners had complied with all preliminaries necessary to enable them to adjudicate upon the estate, and make an award.

See cases quoted, 2, Shelf. on Railways, 4 Ed., 302 notes.

Inasmuch as the Commissioners have thus omitted a duty cast upon them by the Act, and without doing which they had no jurisdiction to make the award in this case these preliminary questions and the award are open to inquiry by the Supreme Court, notwithstanding the 45th section of the Land Purchase Act, 1875.

ISLAND OF ST. JOHN, S.S.—Edmund Fanning,

To all to whom these Presents shall come Greeting:

Know ye that I, Edmund Fanning, LL.D., Lieutenant-Governor and Commander-in-Chief in and over His Majesty's Island of Saint John and the territories thereunto adjacent, &c., &c., &c. By virtue of the power and authority to me given by His present Majesty King George the Third under the Great Seal of Great Britain, have given, granted, and confirmed, and do by these presents pursuant to His Majesty's Order in Council bearing date the 16th day of April in the year of our Lord 1794, give, grant, and confirm unto Stephen Sulivan, Esquire, of the Kingdom of Great Britain, his hiers and assigns all that tract, lot, or township of land situate, lying and being in the said island of St. John, and distinguished and known by the name of lot or township No. 9, and bounded in manner following, that is to say: bounded on the north by the division line of lot No. 6, east and west distance 4 miles and 3,100 feet; on the south by the Sand Cove and the sea towards Percival Point; on the east by the division line of lot No. 9 and No. 10, north and south distance 8 miles and 2,000 feet; and on the west by the division line of lot No. 8, north and south distance 5 miles, and containeth in the whole by estimation 20,000 acres (be the same more or less), and hath such figure and shape as is delineated and expressed in and by a certain map or plan thereof made and hereunto annexed. Together with all and all manner of mines opened and unopened excepting mines of gold, silver, and coals. To have and to hold the said granted premises with all the privileges, profits, commodities, and appurtenances thereunto belonging unto the said Stephen Sulivan, his heirs and assigns for ever. Saving and reserving to His Majesty, his heirs and successors all such part or parts of the said tract of land as hath or have been already set apart for building wharves, erecting fortifications, enclosing naval yards, or laying out highways for the communication between one part of the said island and another. Also saving and reserving to His said Majesty, his heirs and successors, 100 acres of the said tract of land for the site of a church as a glebe for a minister of the gospel, and 30 acres for a schoolmaster. And further saving and reserving for the disposal of His Majesty, his heirs and successors, 500 feet from high water mark on the coast of the said tract of land hereby granted to erect stages or other necessary buildings for carrying on the fishery. Yielding and paying therefor by the said grantee, his heirs and assigns (which by the acceptance hereof he binds and obliges himself, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, to pay to his said Majesty, his heirs and successors, or to any person lawfully authorised to receive the same), for His Majesty's use a free yearly quit-rent of 6*s.* for every 100 acres hereby granted, the first payment of the same to commence and become payable on one half of the said granted premises on the feast of Saint Michael which shall first happen after the expiration of five years from the date hereof or within 14 days after. And also yielding and paying the like quit rent for the whole 20,000 acres hereby granted on the feast of Saint Michael next coming after the expiration of ten years from the date hereof or within 14 days after, and so to continue payable yearly and every year thereafter for ever. And the said grantee doth hereby oblige himself, his heirs and assigns, to settle the said tract of land within 10 years from the date hereof with Protestant settlers in proportion of one person to every 200 acres the said Protestant settlers to be introduced from such parts of Europe as are not within His Majesty's Dominions or to be such persons as have resided within His Majesty's Dominions in America two years antecedent to the date hereof. And if the said grantee shall not settle one-third part of the said tract of land in the proportion aforesaid within four years from the date hereof, then the whole of the said tract shall become forfeited to His Majesty, his heirs and successors, and this grant shall thereupon become null and void and of none effect. In witness whereof, I have signed these presents and caused the seal of this island to be thereunto affixed at Charlottetown, this 18th day of May, in the 35th year of the reign of our sovereign Lord George the Third, by the grace of God of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, King Defender of the Faith and so forth, and in the year of our Lord 1795.

By His Excellency's command,

PETER MACGOWAN,
Dep. Secretary.

Registered the 8th day of August 1795.

Office of the Registrar of Deeds, Prince Edward Island, March 31, 1876.

I hereby certify that the foregoing writing is a true copy of a grant from Edmund Fanning, Lieut.-Governor, to Stephen Sulivan, registered in this office in liber 8. Folio 57.

Enclosure 3. in No. 4.

DOMINION OF CANADA.—IN THE SUPREME COURT OF CANADA.

In the matter of the application of Francis Kelly, the Commissioner of Public Lands, for the purchase of the estate of Charlotte Antonia Sulivan, and the Land Purchase Act, 1875.

APPEAL BY THE COMMISSIONER OF PUBLIC LANDS OF PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

Factum or Points for argument in appeal on the part of the Commissioner of Public Lands.

STATEMENT OF FACTS.

CHARLOTTE A. Sulivan was proprietor of certain township lands of Prince Edward Island, comprising townships or parts of townships, Nos. 9, 16, 22, and 61.

The Commissioner of Public Lands commenced proceedings in August last for the compulsory purchase of these lands under the Land Purchase Act, 1875.

The application was heard by the Commissioners appointed under the said Act and by the proprietor, both parties appearing by counsel.

On the 4th September 1875 two of Commissioners made an award, as follows :—

Dominion of Canada, Province of Prince Edward Island.

In the matter of the application of Emanuel McEachen, the Commissioner of Public Lands, for the purchase of the estate of Charlotte Autonia Sulivan, and the Land Purchase Act, 1875.

The sum awarded, under section 26 of the said Act, by us, two of the Commissioners appointed under the provisions of the said Act, is 81,500 dollars ($81,500).

HUGH CULLING EARDLEY CHILDERS,
Commissioner appointed by the Governor General in Council.

JOHN THEOPHILUS JENKINS,
Commissioner appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

Charlottetown, 4th September 1875.

The award was duly published on the 7th September 1875.

No application was made, within the time allowed by the 45th section of the Act, to remit the award back to the Commissioners to correct any error, informality, or omission in the award.

On the 3rd November 1875 the public trustee served the proprietor with a notice of his intention to execute a conveyance of her estate to the Commissioner of Public Lands, in which notice the lands were described by metes and bounds (see cases in appeal, pages 3 to 7 inclusive).

On the 16th day of November 1875, the proprietor obtained an injunction restraining the Public Trustee from executing the conveyance of which he had given notice (case, page 10).

She also obtained a rule nisi (case, page 10) calling upon the Commissioner of Public Lands to show cause why the said award and all subsequent proceedings should not be set aside, on four grounds, viz.:—

1. That the award is not final.
2. That it is uncertain.
3. Because a delegated authority must be exercised under it to ascertain metes and bounds of lands to be conveyed by public trustee to the Commissioner of Public Lands.
4. Because the money awarded had not been paid into the Treasury of the Province.

This rule nisi was in 17th January 1876 made absolute (case, pages 76 and 77), and on the 7th February leave was granted to the Commissioner of Public Lands to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Finality of Award.

The proprietor contended—

1st. That the award is not final, because it did not expressly award on the subjects which the 28th section of the Act directs that the Commissioners shall take into consideration. The Commissioner of Public Lands contends that the award is final, and that the Act only required that the Commissioner should find in their award the sum or amount due to the proprietor for his estate. The 28th section is merely directory. It is true it pointed out certain facts or circumstances which the Commissioners should take into their consideration in making their estimate of the amount to be paid the proprietor.

That 28th section is an enabling clause. It does not exclude other matters or facts from the consideration of the Commissioners in making up their award. It merely enables and directs them to take facts into consideration, many of which certainly without the aid of that clause they would not be justified in considering. Each of these facts, if brought properly in evidence before them, was to be an element to be taken into their consideration. If any of these facts was not brought properly before them in evidence, or was withdrawn by counsel, the Commissioners were not bound to consider them. The several facts and circumstances, as stated in the sub-sections, of themselves afford the clearest evidence that they were intended merely as beacons to light the Commissioners on their way to a true conclusion, and that they were not of necessity to form expressly a part of that conclusion.

All the sub-sections of section 28 are on the same footing, and the intention of the legislature was manifestly the same regarding them all. If one had to be expressly found, then all had. If any one need not be expressly found on the face of the award, then none need. Take sub-section A., the price at which other proprietors on the island had sold to the Government. That price was a mere piece of evidence, which it cannot be argued successfully should appear on the face of the award. Cui bono? It was very well as an item to be considered and weighed by the Commissioners. It may have afforded some data on which to found a conclusion of the general value of proprietors' lands on the island. It certainly could not form any part of the conclusion itself. It was a bare, bald fact, not in dispute, and not necessary, in anybody's interest, to be expressly stated in the face of the award. The same argument will apply with more or less force to each of the other sub-sections.

Many of these sub-sections are only applicable to particular cases. As regards the sub-section, relating to the original Grants and quit rents. Miss Sulivan was a consenting party to the Island Statute, 27 Vict. Cap. 2, commonly called the 15 Years Purchase Act, and the questions relating to these subjects, were withdrawn by the counsel, for the Commissioner of Public Lands, from the consideration of the arbitrators, so that under no circumstances could the award be set aside for its silence on these points.

But the Act, we contend, is positive as to the duty of the Commissioners, and that duty is expressly stated twice in different parts of the Act. The Act clearly intended that the Commissioners, in making their award, should simply find and award a sum of money,—they had no power to award anything else, any other award would be ultra vires.

In the 4th section it is enacted that the amount of money to be paid to any such proprietor, shall be "found and ascertained by three Commissioners, or any two of "them, to be applied as hereafter mentioned."

That section is express and clear. It is the amount of money to be paid they are to ascertain and find; not any collateral facts.

Then, again, the 26th section:—"After hearing the evidence the Commissioners "shall,"—not find a number of collateral facts,—but "shall award the sum due to such "proprietor as the compensation or price to which he shall be entitled, &c."

The evidence referred to in this section means in part such evidence as may be offered them on the several matters pointed out in the 28th section and its sub-sections.

It is submitted then as clear from the Act that the intention of the legislature was that like a jury assessing damages, the Commissioners should find an amount, and not that they should express their reasons for such findings, so that—as stated by one of the learned judges—if any one of reasons were in the opinion of the court wrong the result might be set aside. It was clearly to avoid any such difficulty and the endless litigation that would follow, that the law declared their award should contain simply their conclusions, and not their arguments in coming to those conclusions, or their findings upon the different branches of evidence. Then, again, it does not appear that any of the sub-sections were not considered, the onus surely lay on the party impeaching the award to show this. The court will not certainly presume that the Commissioners neglected anything they were bound to consider. The presumption will be the very contrary.

Omnia, presumuntur, rite esse, acta, here applies. All the arguments as to the possible injury a proprietor may suffer from the omission to consider any of these sub-sections, is simply begging the question, because it must first affirmatively appear that there was an omission on the part of the Commissioners. Of this there is not a scintilla of evidence.

In support of this branch of the argument is cited:—

Uncertainty of Award.

The proprietor contended the award was uncertain in not describing the lands awarded for by metes and bounds, or by some definite description.

The Commissioner of Public Lands contends:—

1. That no description need appear on the face of the award.

The Commissioner of Public Lands, under the 2nd section of the Act, notified Miss Sulivan of the intention of the Government to purchase "all of her township lands in "the island, liable to the provisions of the Land Purchase Act," (notice page 2 of case.) Miss Sulivan was not a resident proprietor, and had no lands "in her actual use and "occupation," within the meaning of the terms, in the 1st section of the Act, which were exempt from the operation of the Act.

The Act grasped all her township lands in Prince Edward Island, none were exempt. Those lands constituted her "estate" within the meaning of the Act. The Commissioners had no power to embrace any lands not part of her estate, or exclude any which were part of it.

Their powers were discretionary as to the sum they should award, not as to the lands for which they made the award.

No description they might insert in their award could alter or change the lands really affected and bound by the award.

If ejectment was brought by the Commissioner of Public Lands, to recover any part of Miss Sulivan's estate, he would be bound to prove that the lands he was seeking to recover really formed part of the estate of the proprietor, bound and grasped by the Act.

That fact would require to be proved aliunde, the award and the deed from the Public Trustee to the Commissioner of Public Lands. If the award contained a description, embracing the lands sought to be recovered in the ejectment, that would not relieve the Commissioners from proving that such lands really form part of the proprietor's estate.

A primâ facie uncertainty in an award does not vitiate it, if capable of being rendered certain.

The "Estate" and the lands in this case are capable of being ascertained with accuracy.

Id certum, est, quod certum, reddi potest. No bonâ fide dispute exists as to what constitutes Miss Sulivan's estate; the description given by the Public Trustee is correct description, and therefore no possible harm can accrue to any one.

Delegation of Authority to Public Trustee.

There is no delegation of authority. The award bounded all the proprietor's estate. There was no power delegated to the Public Trustee, to add to or detract from the lands bounded. He had merely to describe lands for which the arbitrators had awarded money. He correctly described them at his peril, and the peril of the Government he represented. His describing the lands could not prejudice the proprietor or any third person. In this case it appears he correctly described them. If he did not do so the Court would have restrained him from conveying, as provided by the Act.

But there could be no exercise of any judicial functions by the Trustee in describing the lands. It was purely a ministerial act on his part.

Russel on Awards, Ed. of 1856, p. 281.
Thorpe v. Cole, 2. C. M. & K., 367. S. C. 4. Dowl., 457.

The proprietor would be entitled to draw the sum awarded by the Commissioners, irrespective of any description given by the Public Trustee.

In making his application to the Court for the money awarded, the question would not be what lands the Trustee had described, but what lands really formed part of the proprietors estate, for which the award was made. Primâ facie, the proprietor notified, was entitled to all the money awarded.

An application by any third party, mortgagee, judgment creditor, &c., for any part of the money, might involve an inquiry by the Supreme Court, as to what really constituted the estate proceeded against, and whether any particular piece of land formed part of it, but could have nothing to do with the description the Public Trustee might make or give.

Jurisdiction of Court to set Award Aside.

The Court had no jurisdiction to declare the award void. In doing so it acted ultra vires. The 45th section of Land Purchase Act (case, page 115), expressly takes away the ordinary jurisdiction of the Court, and declares that no "award shall be invalid or void, for any reason, defect, or informality." The same section gives ample powers to the Court to remit the award back, to correct any error, informality or omission made in it, and gives the Commissioners full powers to revise and re-execute.

If there was any error, informality, or omission, the proprietor should have moved under this section to remit award back, but did not do so.

A further power is given by the 32nd section to the court, or a judge, to restrain the Public Trustee from executing a conveyance.

The award made is clearly on a matter within arbitrators' jurisdiction.

It does not appear that they awarded on any matter not within their jurisdiction. It does not appear that they neglected to exercise a jurisdiction which they should exercise. No attempt is made to show that in estimating the amount awarded to Miss Sulivan, the arbitrators omitted the consideration of any of the circumstances set out in the 28th section of the Act, the award is expressly made under and pursuant to the Act, and in a matter within the scope of the Act; their jurisdiction appears on the face of the award.

Presumptions will not be made against the award, but rather in its favour.

Non-Payment of the money into the Treasury.

The money awarded was paid into the Treasury in Dominion notes, which it afterwards appeared were not legal then in Prince Edward Island.

This is a subsequent act to the award, and does not affect the validity of that document.

The money paid in not being legal tender, the proprietor had a right to an injunction, restraining the Public Trustee from executing a conveyance until legal tender money was paid in. This she got.

The Commissioner of Public Lands would be entitled to dissolve that injunction, when legal tender money was substituted. The section is directory, not imperative.

It declares that the money shall be paid at the expiration of 30 days—not within 30 days. The non-payment of the legal tender money within 30 days, could not therefore operate to vitiate the award; but could only have the effect of entitling the proprietor to restrain the Public Trustee from executing a conveyance until legal tender money was paid into the Treasury.

Francis Kelly, Appellant, and Charlotte Antonia Sulivan, Respondent.

In the matter of the application of the said Francis Kelly, the Commissioner of Public Lands for the Province of Prince Edward Island, for the purchase of the estate of the said Charlotte Antonia Sulivan, and "the Land Purchase Act, 1875," and in the matter of an appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada by the said Francis Kelly from the Judgment of Her Majesty's Supreme Court of Judicature for Prince Edward Island, rendered on the 17th day of January 1876, making absolute a rule nisi granted in the said cause by the said last-mentioned Court on the 17th day of November 1875, calling on the said appellant to show cause why the award made and filed in the matter of the said application and all subsequent proceedings should not be set aside.

The above appeal having come on to be argued before this Court on the eighth, ninth, and tenth days of June last past, in presence of counsel, as well for the appellant as the respondent, whereupon and upon hearing what was alleged by counsel aforesaid, this court was pleased to direct that the same should stand over for judgment, and the same having come on this day for judgment, it was ordered and adjudged by the said Court that the said appeal should be and the same was allowed, and that the said judgment of Her Majesty's Supreme Court of Judicature for Prince Edward Island be reversed, that the said rule nisi should be discharged, and that the respondent should pay to the appellant as well the costs incurred in the said last-mentioned court as the costs of this appeal.

SUPREME COURT of CANADA, June Session, 1876.

PRESENT:

Their Lordships Chief Justice Richards; Ritchie, J.; Strong, J.; Taschereau and Fournier, J.

IN the matter of the application of Francis Kelly, Commissioner of Public Lands for the purchase of the estate of Charlotte Antonia Sulivan, and the Prince Edward Island Land Purchase Act, 1875.

APPEAL by the Commissioner of Public Lands of Prince Edward Island.

Jurisdiction of Supreme Court of Canada. Court of last resort in Prince Edward Island. Jurisdiction of Court to set aside award. Remedy by remitting back award, provided application be made to Supreme Court of Prince Edward Island within 30 days after publication of award. Finality of award.

Held, that the Court of last resort in the Province of Prince Edward Island, from whose judgment an appeal lies direct to the Supreme Court of Canada, is the Supreme Court of Judicature of Prince Edward Island.

Held, that by Statute of Prince Edward Island, known as "The Land Purchase Act, 1875," an award of the Commissioners cannot be quashed and set aside or declared invalid and void on an application made to the Supreme Court of Prince Edward Island, but can be remitted back to the Commissioners in the manner prescribed by the 45th section of the Act.

The island of Prince Edward Island long ago granted in large blocks of about 20,000 acres each was, as time went on, let by the grantees in small parcels, generally for long terms of years, reserving an acreable rent of about one shilling.

Out of these tenures sprung an agitation, which under various names occasioned much discord in the Colony, and in 1862 an Act of Assembly was passed under the provisions of which a portion of the island was purchased by the Government from its owners; but a considerable portion remained in the hands of others, who declined to sell. The Land Purchase Act of 1875 was passed. Under its authority a tribunal called the Commissioners Court was organised, and it is out of proceedings instituted in that Court for the purchase of the township lands of Miss Sulivan the present questions arise.

The nature of the questions decided and the manner in which they arose are fully set forth in the reasons for judgment given by their Lordships.

Mr. Brecken, Attorney-General, Prince Edward Island; Mr. Cockburn, Q.C.; and Mr. L. H. Davies, for appellants.

First, as to the jurisdiction of this Court.

The power of the Governor in Council to sit as a Court was given by Royal instructions previous to Lord Monk's appointment. In subsequent Royal instructions there are clauses which expressly revoke the power given to the Governor.

If this Court exists in Prince Edward Island, it also exists for Nova Scotia; and the practice there shows that the Appeal to the Privy Council lies direct from the Supreme Court. McPherson P. C. Pract., 9392. The Act, 1873, Prince Edward Island, is a copy of the English Procedure Act, and reference is made to a Court of Error and Appeal, because it was intended to provide for a Court of Error and Appeal under the British North America Act, it being only two months previous to confederation that this Act was passed.

No rules were ever made, and since confederation the Lieutenant-Governor is appointed by the dominion Government, and he is not given any judicial functions. Reference is made to Commission to Lieutenant-Governor Patterson, and Royal Instructions to Lieutenant-Governors since 1854.

II. The award is final.

The Act only required that the Commissioners should find in their award the sum or amount due to the proprietor for his estate. Section 28 of the Act, with sub-sections a, b, c, d, e, are merely directory, and as stated in sub-section e, "the number of acres, the " reasonable probabilities, and expenses of the proprietor shall each and all be elements " to be taken into consideration by the Commissioners in estimating the value of the " lands." This proves that these facts and circumstances, as stated in the sub-sections themselves, were merely intended as beacons to light the Commissioners on their way to a true conclusion. In section 27 of the Act, it is stated that the object of this Act is to pay every proprietor a fair indemnity or equivalent for the value of his interest, and no more. Now the intention of the Legislature is certainly well expressed, viz., to find the amount to be paid. It is the amount of money to be paid they are to ascertain and find, not any collateral facts. All the arguments as to the possible injury a proprietor might suffer from the omission to consider any of these sub-sections is simply begging the question, because it must first affirmably appear that there was an omission on the part of the Commissioners. Further, the evidence as to quantity was taken from respondent's own agent, and to set aside an award there must either be manifest fraud or excessive jurisdiction or some material matter that has not been taken into consideration. There could not have been any fraud when the evidence given and accepted was that of the agent of the respondent. The case of Withworth v. Hulse, L. R. 1 Exch., 252, is not in point, because it does not appear in this case that any of the sub-sections were not considered. On the contrary, all respondent's estate was adjudicated upon.

In support of this branch of the argument is cited—

Duke of Beaufort v. Swansea Harbour Trustees, 8, C. B. N. S., 765.
In re Byles, 25, L. J. Ex., p. 53.

Harrison v. Creswick, 13, C. B., 399.
Russell on Awards, 2 Ed., pp. 266, 267, 258, 262.

As to the uncertainty of the award, all respondent's estate was adjudicated upon; the Trustee's Act was simply ministerial. The Commissioner of Public Lands, under the 2nd section of the Act, notified Miss Sulivan of the intention of the Government to purchase "all her township lands in the island liable to the provisions of the Land "Purchase Act." The Commissioners had no power to embrace any lands not part of her estate or exclude any which were part of it.

It was decided lately in the island that the mere notice given under the Act brought all the lands of a proprietor under the provisions of the Land Purchase Act, and therefore Commissioners had to estimate only the sum they should award, and their powers were not discretionary as to the lands. There could be no necessity of describing the lands by metes and bounds. The describing of the land is purely a ministerial act. No description they might insert could alter or change the lands really affected and bound by the award. A primâ facie uncertainty in an award does not vitiate it, if capable of being rendered certain. The "estate" and the lands in this case are capable of being ascertained with accuracy.

The following cases are cited:—

20 U. C. Q. B. N. S. 283, 24, Q. B. U. C., p. 581.

The Court had no jurisdiction to declare the award void. The 45th section of Land Purchase Act expressly takes away the ordinary jurisdiction of the Court, and declares that "no award shall be invalid or void for any reason, defect, or informality," but the Court had amply power under the same section to remit the award back to the Commissioners to correct any error, informality, or omission, provided application is made 30 days after rendering of the award. This remedy was treated with silent contempt. Now, after reading that prohibitory clause of the Act, nothing in this case could reasonably justify the Court below to quash the award in this summary way. The award is expressly made under and pursuant to the Act; the arbitrator's jurisdiction appears on the face of the award. Presumptions will not be made against the award, but rather in its favour. Mr. M. C. Cameron, Q.C., and Mr. E. T. Hodgson, for the respondent.

I. No appeal lies direct from the Supreme Court of Prince Edward Island to the Supreme Court of Canada. Sections 11 and 17 of the Supreme Court Act declare that all appeals to the Supreme Court must be from the Court of last resort in any province. In Prince Edward Island there is a Court of Error and Appeal, composed of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, before which this case should have been tried before coming here. By various Acts of the Legislature of the Island this Court is recognised to have an existence, 1 vol. Prince Edward Island Statutes, p. 291; Rev. Stat., p. 51, 21 Geo. III. ch. 17; and section 145 of Prince Edward Island Act, 1873; 6 Vict. c. 26, sec. 51. The discussion on re Cambridge, 3 Moore P. C. C., 175, shows that in the year 1841 the Privy Council decided that an appeal would not lie to them from the courts of the Island, except through the Governor in Council. By section 24 of the Supreme Court Act, the practice in appeals to the Privy Council must be followed in similar cases in the Supreme Court here.

In all other British Colonies there have been Orders in Council passed to enable parties to appeal direct from the supreme courts of the respective provinces to the Privy Council without recognising or appealing to the intermediate court, composed of Governor in Council, but in Prince Edward Island no Order in Council or Act of Parliament has changed or affected the law as it once stood. Reference is made to Royal Instructions, Appendix F. Journals of House of Assembly, Prince Edward Island. Clarke's Colonial Law, p. 111, L. R. 4, Q. B., p. 225.

II. As the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of Judicature of Prince Edward Island is questioned, it is well to remark that it has always been admitted that an appellate court would never inquire into the manner or process of an inferior court provided it was legally seized of the cause. By the 32nd section of the Land Purchase Act, the Supreme Court had a right to restrain the Public Trustee from executing a conveyance of the estate of a proprietor to the Commissioner of Public Lands. It is not the duty of this court, as an appellate court, to inquire if this was obtained by a rule nisi or otherwise. The court is given a jurisdiction which it would not have were it a case of arbitration. When a Statutory power is given to deprive a person of his land, the strictest interpretation must be given to the Statute, and every means afforded to the proprietor to find out if any omission or error has taken place. The award was open to inquiry by the Supreme Court, notwithstanding the 45th section of the Land Purchase Act, 1875. Colonial Bank of Australia v. Willan, L. R. 5, P. C., 442; Reg. v. Jus. of Staffordshire, 5, E. U. B. C., 49. So though certiorari be taken away by Statute, if cause be decided by a majority of a court improperly constituted, certiorari yet lies, Reg. v. Cheltenham, 1 Q., B. 467; Reg. v. St. Albans, 17, Jurist, 531, S. C. 22, L. J. (M. C.) 143; Richards v. S. Wales, R. R. Co., 18, L. J. (Q. B.), 310 S. C. 6; Rail., case, 197. The Commissioners had no jurisdiction in this case, and therefore their award was bad, and should be set aside first, because the notice required by the Act had not been properly given. This being a proceeding in rem the notice from the Commissioner of Public Lands should have set out a description of the lands by metes and bounds over which jurisdiction was claimed; second, because it did not appear on the record that notification of the appointment of the Commissioner had been given, or that the Commissioners were sworn under sections 9 and 13 of the Act.

L. Canada Rep. 11 Vol., 499; Joseph v. Ostell. Third, because the notice in the Royal Gazette, required to be given under section 14, of time and place of hearing for three consecutive weeks was advertised for only two weeks.

3. C. P. U. C., p. 19.; 28 Q. B. U. C., p. 333; 24 Q. B. U. C., p. 439. No appearance of respondent by counsel could waive these defects, because (a.) no consent can give jurisdiction. (b.) The interests of parties other than Miss Sulivan's were affected whom no consent of hers could bind. (c.) The Commissioners derive their authority from the Statute and not from the consent of the parties. The award is not final and it is uncertain.

It is uncertain: It does not show that the Commissioners adjudicated on matters on which they were bound to adjudicate under section 28 of the Land Purchase Act. The award is not made de priemissis, and there is nothing to show that the various matters specified in this section were taken into consideration by the Commissioners. The Act is intended to convey an absolute and indefeasible estate of fee simple from all incumbrances of every description, and to divest the proprietor not only of the land but also of all arrears of rent. Now unless a proper description be given somewhere, how can Commissioners award on these arrears of rent.

The rule of law is, if it be doubtful whether the award has decided the question referred, it will be set aside for the uncertainty. Russel on Awards, 2nd Ed., p. 284. Tribe v. Upperton, 3 A. and E., p. 295. Pearson v. Archibald, 11 M. and W. p. 477.

The award does not embrace sub-sections 1, 2, and 3 of section 28, and the rule of law is if specific matters are referred and there be no specific adjudication upon any of them the award is void. Moreover the form of conveyance used in the schedule annexed to the Act, implies that the lands should be described by metes and bounds. In answer to the contention of the counsel for the appellant that in this case it would have been impossible for the Commissioners to find on the matters and things contained in sub-section e. of section 28 of this Act, it is well to remark that section 24 clearly confers authority which would enable them not only to examine the quality of the land, timber, &c., but also to cause such surveys to be made as might be necessary for carrying the Act into effect. How could the Public Trustee execute a deed in form B. of the Act if the award were held to be valid? The Public Trustee is merely a ministerial officer and he could not execute a deed to the Commissioner of Public Lands without exercising judicial functions in ascertaining what lands to insert in such deed.

Reference is made to the following cases: Russell on Awards, 2 Ed., p. 261. Randall v. Randall, 7 East, p. 81. Re Rider v. Fisher, 3 Bing, U.C., 874. Whitworth v. Hulse, L.R., 1 Exch., 252. Further the award shows an excess of jurisdiction inasmuch as it deals with all Miss Sulivan's lands, whereas they had jurisdiction only over the excess above 500 acres. As Judge Peters, in his judgment puts it, "Now, surely if I say you shall not hold over "500 acres the plain and necessary implication is that you may hold 500." It can only be with regard to this excess that the compulsory clauses of the Act were intended to operate. The respondents counsel rely also on the reason for judgment by the court below, and referred also to the following authorities:

Mr. L. H. Davies in reply—

In this case Miss Sulivan did not wish to retain her 500 acres. The scope of the Act was to reach proprietors whose lands were not in their actual use and occupation. The presence of respondent's Commissioner, her appearance by counsel, and affidavit of her agent, G. W. Le Blois, surely put at rest any contention that certain preliminary formalities of the Act were not complied with. Supposing an omission had taken place, the remedy was marked out in the 45th section of the Act.

As to mentioning in the award all the matters submitted to the Commissioners by sub-sections 1, 2, and 3, section 20, the Act would have been absolutely unworkable.

The following is a Synopsis of the Land Purchase Act of 1875.

The Island Statute known as the Land Purchase Act of 1875, came in force by the proclamation of the Lieutenannt-Governor on the 13th June 1876. It refers to the fact that the government of the island was entitled to receive from the dominion government $800,000 for the purpose of enabling the Province to purchase the township lands held by proprietors in the island; and further recites that it was desirable to convert leasehold tenures into freehold estates upon terms just and equitable to the tenants as well as to the proprietors in the island. The first section declared that the term "proprietor" should include and extend to any person for the time being receiving or entitled to receive the rents, issues, or profits of any township lands in the island (exceeding 500 acres in the aggregate), in his or their own right or as a trustee, guardian, executor, or administrator for any other person or persons, or as a husband in right of or together with his wife, and whether such lands are leased or unleased, occupied or unoccupied, cultivated or wilderness. But nothing in the Act contained should be construed to affect any proprietor whose lands in his actual use and occupation and untenanted did not exceed 1,000 acres.

Section 2. That the Commissioner of Public Lands shall, within 60 days after the publication of the Governor-General's assent to the Act in the "Canada Gazette," notify any proprietor that the Government intend to purchase his or their township lands under the Act.

Section 3 provides for the service of notice.

Section 4. The amount of money to be paid to any such proprietor shall be ascertained by three Commissioners or any two of them appointed under the Act.

Sections 5, 6, 7, 8 and 9 provide for the selection of the three Commissioners, one by the Governor-General in Council, one by the Lieutenant-Governor of the Island, and the third by the proprietor.

Sections 10, 11, 12 and 13 refer to appointing Commissioners in place of those who die or who are incapacitated from serving or who refuse to serve, and electing a commissioner to preside at the meetings.

Section 14. Notice of the day and place of the sitting of the Commission to be published in the "Royal Gazette."

Section 15 makes the Commissioner of Public Lands in all proceedings the claimant, and subjects him to process for contempt.

Section 16 provides for the cases of proprietors who are lunatics, infants, &c.

Section 17. Court may appoint a guardian ad litem.

Section 18. Commissioner of Public Lands may appoint a solicitor to act for him.

Section 19. Either party may obtain subpœnas for witnesses.

Under the 20th section the Commissioners are authorised to examine witnesses on oath upon the matters submitted to their consideration, and as to the facts which they may require to ascertain in order to carry this Act into effect.

Section 21. The Commissioners, when appointed, shall make oath before one of the judges of the Supreme Court that they will well and faithfully discharge the duties imposed upon them under the Act, and adjudicate on all matters coming before them to the best of their judgment.

Sections 22, 23, 24 and 25 authorise Commissioners to proceed ex parte when parties neglect to appear, to extend time to proprietors before entering on case, and to have power to enter on and examine lands and adjourn the hearing of any matter from time to time.

Section 26. "After hearing evidence adduced before them, the Commissioners, or any "two of them, shall award the sum due to such proprietor as the compensation or price "to which he shall be entitled by reason of his being divested of his lands and all "interest therein and thereto."

Section 27 provides that no compensation shall be allowed in consequence of the purchase being compulsory, "the object of the Act being to pay every proprietor a fair "indemnity or equivalent for the value of his interest and no more."

Section 28 enacts that in estimating the amount of compensation to be paid to any proprietor for his interest in, or right to, any lands, the Commissioners shall take the following facts or circumstances into consideration:—

(a.) The price at which other proprietors in the island have sold their lands to the Government.

(b.) The number of acres under lease in the estate or lands they are valuing, the length of the leases on such estates; the rents reserved by such leases; the arrears of rent, and the years over which they extend, and the reasonable probability of their being recovered.

(c.) The number of acres of vacant or unleased lands; their quality and value to the proprietor.

(d.) (1.) The gross rental actually paid by the tenants on any estate yearly for the previous six years; (2.) The expenses and charges connected with and incidental to the recovery of such rent and its receipts by the proprietor; and (3.) the actual net receipts of the proprietor for the said period of six years.

(e.) The number of acres possessed or occupied by any persons who have not attorned to or paid rent to the proprietor, and who claim to hold such land adversely to such proprietor, and the reasonable probabilities and expenses of the proprietor sustaining his claim against such persons holding adversely in a court of law, shall each and all be elements to be taken into consideration by the said Commissioners in estimating the value of such proprietor's land; (1) the conditions of the original grants from the Crown; (2) the performance of those conditions; (3) the effects of such non-performance, and how far the despatches from the English Colonial Secretaries to the different Lieutenant-Governors of the island have operated as waivers of any forfeitures.

(f.) The quit rents reserved in the original grants, and how far the payment of the same have been waived or remitted by the Crown.

Section 29. A copy of the award to be delivered to the proprietor or his agent and the original to be filed in the office of the prothonotary of the Supreme Court.

Section 30. At the expiration of 60 days from such publication, the Government shall pay into the Colonial Treasury the sum awarded to the credit of the suit or proceeding in which the award is made.

Section 31. A certificate of the amount paid in to be delivered to the prothonotary of the Court.

Section 32. The Public Trustee shall (unless restricted by the Supreme Court or a judge) after 14 days notice to the proprietor, execute a conveyance of the estate of such proprietor to the Commissiouer ot Public Lands, which conveyance may be in the form B. of the Act.

Section 33. The conveyance shall rest in the Commission of Public Lands an absolute and indefeasible estate of fee simple free from all incumbrances of every description, and shall be held and disposed of by him as if such lands had been purchased under the provisions of 16 Vict. c. 18., and shall also vest in the Commissioner all arrears of rent due upon the said lands.

Section 34. The appointment of the Public Trustee to be under the Great Seal, and shall be registered.

Section 35. Party entitled to sum awarded or portion of such sum to obtain the same by obtaining an order from the Supreme Court on petition, and proving his or their right to such sum or portion thereof. Provided the Commissioner of Public Lands be made a party to such application.

Section 36. The Supreme Court, on application, to make all proper persons parties to such proceedings and to apportion the sums amongst the parties entitled to receive the same.

Section 37. When the full sum for the land is paid into the Treasury and the conveyance executed by the Trustee, the Government shall be exonerated from all claims on the estate.

Section 38. The party obtaining an order from the Supreme Court for any money to which he is entitled or any interest therein shall be indemnified his cost on the application, but a person failing in his application is not to get costs, but must pay to the party obtaining the order his costs incurred by the unsuccessful application.

Sections 39 and 40 refer to the Court ordering money to be invested in the name of trustees, &c., to meet the circumstances of each case and the same or the interest thereof to be paid to the proper parties.

Sections 41 and 42. Trustees to hold purchase money upon same trusts as they held the lands. Court may appoint trustees and dismiss them and appoint others in their stead.

Sections 43 and 44. Compensation of Commissioners and Public Trustees.

Section 45 refers to the setting aside of the award.

Section 46. The Supreme Court to have power to make rules and regulations for the carrying the Act into effect.

Section 47 declares, as it is expedient that the matters referred to the Supreme Court under the Act should not interfere with the ordinary business of the Court during term time, the Court from time to time may appoint sessions for the purpose of hearing proceedings under the Act, and provides for one week's notice to be given.

Section 48. Penalty on Commissioners for neglecting to proceed under provisions of the Act.

And, lastly, the 49th section enacts: After the Commissioners shall have given notice to any proprietor under the second section of the Act, no such proprietor shall maintain any action at law for the recovery of more than the current year and subsequent accruing rents due to him from any tenant or occupier upon his lands, and if any such action is brought the tenant may plead the Act in bar of the action; nor shall any execution issue on any judgment, recovered or to be recovered, for rent by any such proprietor against any tenant on the Island, except the current year's rent and subsequent accruing rent; and in case any such execution is issued the Supreme Court, or a judge thereof, shall, on application, stay any such execution until the award of the said Commissioners shall be made.

January 15th, 1877.—Chief Justice Richards.

The appeal is from the Supreme Court of Prince Edward Island, making absolute a rule to quash the award made and filed in this matter and all subsequent proceedings, wherein it was ordered that the said award be quashed and set aside, and that the said Commissioner of Public Lands pay the costs of the application and the rule. Against this judgment and order of the Court the Commissioner appeals. On the hearing, the first objection taken on behalf of the respondent was first discussed, viz., that no appeal lies direct from the Supreme Court of Prince Edward Island to the Supreme Court of Canada.

The latter part of Section 11 of the Supreme and Exchequer Court Act, reads as follows:—"And when an appeal to the Supreme Court is given from a judgment in any "case it shall always be understood to be given from the Court of last resort in the "province where the judgment was rendered in such case." The respondent in the factum suggests that the Governor in Council is constituted a Court of Error and Appeal in Prince Edward Island by various Royal Instructions, and refers to the instructions to Sir John Colborne, accompanying his Commission of 13th December, 1838, appointing him Captain-General and Governor-in-Chief of the Island.

The instructions, which in the absence of the Captain-General and Governor-in-Chief were intended for the Lieutenant-Governor or officer administering the government for the time being, are referred to as being in the Appendix to the journals of the House of Assembly of the Island, A.D. 1851, Appendix F. The Commission to Sir John Colborne is also to he found in the same book.

The 23rd and 24th sections of the Instruction were especially referred to on the argument. The first part of the 23rd section is as follows:—"Our will and pleasure is that "you do in all civil causes, on application being made to you for that purpose, permit "and allow appeals from any of the Courts of Common Law in our said Island of "Prince Edward; and you are for that purpose to issue a writ in the manner which has "been usually accustomed, returnable before yourself and the Executive Council of the "said Island of Prince Edward, who are to proceed to hear and determine such appeals." It goes on to provide that the judges of the Court whose judgment is appealed from shall not vote on the appeal, though they may be present and give the reasons of their judgment. It also directs that the sum or value appealed from must exceed 300*l.* sterling, and security be given, and when the sum exceed 500*l.* sterling, and either party is not satisfied with the judgment of the Governor in Coucil, an appeal may lie to the Queen in Council, the same to be made within 14 days, and security given. And in certain cases when the rights of the crown are involved, he is to admit an appeal to the Queen in council, though the value be less than 500*l.* sterling.

The 24th paragraph directs him to admit appeals to the Queen in her Privy Council in case of fines to a certain amount for misdemeanor. Clarke's "Colonial Law," page 111, was cited, and referring to the position of most of the North American Colonies the following language is used:—"From the Common Law Courts an appeal in the nature "of a Writ of Error lies in the first instance to the Court of Error in the Colony, and "from them to Her Majesty in Council. The Colonial Court of Error is usually com-"posed of the Governor in Council, who decide by a majority."

Re Cambridge, 3 Moore, P. C. C., 175. An application was made for leave to appeal where the amount was under 300*l.*; the Court of Appeal in the Island only allowing appeal when the amount was over 300*l.* Lord Brougham, in giving judgment, refers to the existence of the Court of Appeal in the Colony.

The Act 6 Vict. c. 26, sec. 5, provides that any person dissatisfied with the decree of the Surrogate may appeal "to the Governor in Council." Under section 51 he was to give a bond for the payment of such costs as should be awarded by the Governor in Council (sec. 52). If the decision of the Surrogate should be reversed or altered the Governor in Council should make such order touching the subject of the appeal as to them shall seem fit, and by section 53 every license to sell real estate "shall be made in "such form as the Surrogate (or in case of the decision of the Surrogate being altered "by the Governor in Council) may prescribe." The Island Statute 21 Geo, 3 ch. 17, relates to the limitation of actions. Section 4 provides that when "judgment given for "a plaintiff is reversed on a writ of Error, arrest of judgment, &c., he may commence "another action within a year."

The Island Statute 5 Wm. IV. c. 10, constitutes the Governor in Council a court for hearing matters of divorce, with full power, authority, and jurisdiction. The court to sit on the second Monday in May in each year. The Governor may appoint the Chief Justice to preside.

In re Monckton, a barrister, 1 Moore P. C. C., p. 455. The Chief Justice of the island had made an order in a matter wherein the applicant, a barrister, was arrested, striking his name off the rolls as a barrister. On appeal to the Privy Council the order was set aside.

The sections of the Island Statute 36 Vict. c. 22, from 136 to 158 inclusive, and section 230, refer to appeals to a court of error or appeal. Sections 136 to 157 inclusive, are the same as those in the English Common Law Procedure Act, 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, from section 146 to 167 inclusive, slightly varied to adapt them to the circumstances of the island. The 136th section begins, "And with respect to proceedings in error, be it enacted," &c. The 145th section speaks of the setting down of the case for argument in the Court of Error in the manner heretofore used, refers to the roll being sent into the Court of Error or Appeal, and "the Court of Error or Appeal shall thereupon review the proceedings."

The appellants on the argument contended that as a matter of fact no such tribunal as a court of error and appeal was ever established in the island.

There is no existing official document of any kind showing the establishing of such a court. There is no record of any case ever having been brought before such a tribunal, and the reference in the is land Statute 21 Geo. 3. c. 17, respecting the limitation of actions to a year for bringing an action when cases are reversed in error, &c., cannot be considered as establishing or recognising the establishment of a court of appeal as a court of the last resort from the Supreme Court in the island.

That the Statute 6 Vict. c. 26, so far as it relates to an appeal from decisions of the Surrogate Court to the Governor in Council, does not form them into a general appellate tribunal, but in those special cases allows an appeal to the Governor in Council, and directs the Probate Court to carry out the decision of that body when the appeal is made to them.

That the reference to appeals in the Act 36 Vict. c. 22, arose from hasty legislation in adopting the general provisions of the Common Law Procedure Act, and if no court of appeal actually existed, would not necessarily establish one.

A copy of instructions to Governor Patterson was produced at the argument, but his commission was not.

It was suggested that application should be made to the Colonial Office for copies of the commissions and instructions of such Governors as would be likely to throw light on the subject, and any other documents of a like nature, and these documents were to be placed before this court.

Reference was also made on the argument to Stuart's History of Prince Edward Island, printed in 1805, and to Haliburton's Nova Scotia, vol. 2, p. 330.

Since the argument copies of the commission of Governor Patterson of Prince Edward Island, then the island of St. John, and of two commissions to Guy Carleton, Esq., as Governor of the Province of Quebec, and the instructions accompanying each of the commissions, have been filed with the registrar of the court. No other documents referring to the establishment of a court of appeals have been brought to the notice of the court. We must, therefore, dispose of the preliminary question on the materials before us.

Copies of the commissions of Lord Monck, Sir John Young, Lord Dufferin, and of the present Governor of the island, Sir R. Hodgson, were obtained in Ottawa.

Prince Edward Island, or the island of St. John, as it was then called previous to the year 1764, was under the same Government with the Province of Nova Scotia, and giving the boundaries of that province in the commission of William Campbell, Esq., commonly called Lord William Campbell, dated 11th August 1766, appointing him Captain General and Governor of Nova Scotia, the island of St. John is included. In the commission to Walter Patterson, dated 4th August 1769, so much of the patent to Lord William Campbell as mentioned the island of St. John was revoked, and Patterson was appointed Captain General and Governor-in-Chief of the island and territories adjacent thereto. Under the commission to Governor Patterson he had power, by and with the consent of the Council, to erect and establish courts of judicature within the island, for the determining and hearing of all causes, civil and criminal, according to law and equity, and to constitute and appoint judges and commissioners of oyer and terminer for the better administration of justice. The commission also refers to such reasonable Statutes as should thereafter be made and agreed upon by him, with the advice and consent of the Council and Assembly of the island; and as soon as the situation and circumstances of the island would admit thereof, and as soon as need should require, he was to call general assemblies of the freeholders and planters, to be called the Assembly of the island; and by the consent of the Council and Assembly he had power to make laws for the good government of the island. By the instructions he was to constitute a council to assist him in the administration of the affairs of the Colony, and the council to have all the powers and privileges and authority usually exercised in the other American colonies.

He was to give his immediate attention to the establishing of such courts of judicature as might be found necessary for the administration of justice. He was to consult the Chief Justice as to the measures proper to be pursued for the purpose, governing himself, as far as difference of circumstances would admit, by what had been approved and found advantageous in Nova Scotia. He was to transmit to the Secretary of State copies of all acts, orders, commissions, &c., by virtue of which any courts, officers, jurisdictions, &c. were established.

The consideration of calling a Lower House of Assembly could not too early be taken up.

There is no authority in his commission or instructions directing him to establish a court of error or appeal, nor to permit or allow appeals to himself in council.

The commission of Guy Carleton, afterwards Lord Dorchester, appointing him Governor of the Province of Quebec, dated 12th April 1768, is similar to that of Governor Patterson, which was dated 4th August 1769. It appoints him Captain General and Governor-in-Chief of the Province of Quebec. His instructions differ somewhat from those afterwards given to Governor Patterson, and as to summoning a general assembly of freeholders as soon as the more pressing affairs of Government would allow, stated, as it was impracticable to form such an establishment, then he was to make such rules and regulations, with the advice of the Council, as should appear to be necessary for the peace, order, and good government of the Province.

He was to establish courts of justice, and consider what had been established in that respect in the other colonies in America, particularly in Nova Scotia.

He was to allow appeals from any of the Courts of Common Law to the Governor in Council and for that purpose was to issue a writ "in the manner which has usually been accustomed" before himself and the Council who were to proceed to hear and determine such appeals. (As already stated, no such direction or authority as this is contained in the commission to Governor Patterson).

He was again appointed Governor of Quebec, his commission being dated 27th December, 1775, after the passing of the Imperial Statute 14, Geo. III. ch. 83, for making more effectual provision for the Government of the Province of Quebec. Following the provisions of the Imperial Statute he was authorised, with the consent of the Council, to make ordinances for the peace, welfare, and good government of the Province, certain exceptions as to ordinances imposing taxes. He had authority to appoint judges, &c., as in his former commission.

Under his instructions he was directed by and with the advice of his Council to establish courts of justice. Suggestions were made as to the kind and number of courts, but he was to be guided by circumstances, and amongst other suggestions as to what should be done was the following, viz. :—That the Governor and Council should be a court of civil jurisdiction for the hearing of appeals from the judgments of the other courts when the matter in dispute exceeded 10 pounds.

The decision of the Governor in Council to be final in cases not exceeding 500*l.* sterling, in which case an appeal from the judgment to be admitted to the King in Council.

An ordinance was passed by the Governor in Council on 25th July 1777, establishing certain courts according to the suggestions contained in the Royal Instructions, and under that ordinance the Governor in Council was constituted a court of appeal.

On the margin of the ordinance in the copy in the library of Parliament here, there is the following entry in manuscript, "vide ordinance of 17th Sept. 1773, passed on Ch. J. Hayes going home." It was the model of this and the next ordinance in some instances.

The next ordinance was to regulate the proceedings in the courts of civil judicature in the Province of Quebec. From this it appears that before the Act of 14 Geo. III. and the commission and instructions under it were given, the Governor in Council had passed an ordinance to establish a court of appeal in Quebec, and this under a commission and instructions similar to that under which Governor Patterson was acting in Prince Edward Island, except so far as the power to grant appeals was wanting in the instructions to Governor Patterson, which was contained in the instructions to Governor Carleton.

In August 1769, the commission to Governor Patterson was issued, and he is said to have arrived in the colony in 1770. The first meeting of the Legislature composed of the Council and Assembly, with the Governor, of course, was, according to Stewart's History of Prince Edward Island, p. 177, in 1773, and the first Statute, as appears by the Acts of the General Assembly of the island, published in 1862, was passed in 1773. It is entitled "At the General Assembly of His Majesty's Island of St. John, begun and "holden at Charlottetown the seventh day of July, Anno Domini, 1773, in the thirteenth "year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord George the Third, by the Grace of God of "Great Britain, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith. Being the first "General Assembly convened in the Island." The first Statute passed recited that it had been found absolutely necessary and expedient by His Majesty's Governor in Council of the island to make several resolutions, ordinances, and regulations for the good government of the said island, it then repeats these ordinances and confirms what was done under them.

Cap. 2 is entitled " An Act to confirm and make valid in Law all manner of process " and proceedings in the several Courts of Judicature within this Island, from the first " day of May 1769, to this present Session of Assembly."

The recital states:—

" Whereas this Island has been without a complete Legislature from the commence- " ment of the goverment thereof, which took place on the first day of May 1769, unto " this present Session of Assembly, during which time many and various proceedings " have been had at the several Courts of Judicature in the Island." It then declares the writs, judgments, and proceedings in the courts from and after the said 1st May, 1769, to the end of that session good and valid in law. That it should not extend to take away or rectify errors in the using of process, mispleadings, and erroneous rendering of judgment in point of law, but in all such cases the parties aggrieved might have their writ or writs of error upon such erroneous judgment in such manner as they might have done before the making of the Act.

Governor Patterson apparently remained Governor until 1786, when he was succeeded by Governor Fanning, who continued in office, it is said, for 19 years, that would be until 1805. Governor Patterson was authorised by his commission, with the advice and consent of the Council, to establish such and so many courts of justice within the island as they should think fit for determining causes, as well criminal as civil, according to law and equity, and to constitute and appoint judges, and in cases requisite, to issue commissions of oyer and terminer.

We have nothing to show that in Governor Patterson's time any court of error or appellate court was established by any act of his; and it seems admitted that, as a matter of fact, no such court ever exercised any jurisdiction in the island, and no case was ever brought before such a court. If it had been established under any ordinance of the Council, before the first sitting of the Legislature, we have not been referred to any such ordinance. It is shown by Statutes passed at that sitting, that courts of judicature had before that been established and have been continued ever since. As to those courts that have been exercising their functions and powers ever since with legislation from time to time with reference to them, they would no doubt be considered as established tribunals, and as having been legally established. But when it is contended that so important a tribunal as a court of last resort exists in a province, it should be shown there was such a court actually exercising judicial functions, or that it was established by some act of the Legislature or of the Crown. As far as Governor Patterson is concerned, it does not appear that by any kind of legislative enactment or order, either by the Governor in Council or by the more perfect legislation after the General Assembly was called, such a court was established nor does it appear that he was by instructions specially authorised to establish such a court or to allow appeals from any of the courts of the common law as Governor Carleton was in the instructions accompanying his first commission, and as Sir John Colborne was in the instructions accompanying the commission to him in 1838.

Under the instructions to Governor Patterson he was to send to the Secretary of State copies of all acts, orders, commissions, &c., by virtue of which any courts, &c. were established. We presume the parties have had proper inquiries made as to the existence of copies of such documents, and that none can be found. It is said none exist in the island.

Whether, under any subsequent commission or instructions, an attempt was made to establish such a court in the interval between the commission to Governor Patterson 1769, and that to Sir John Colborne 1838, we have nothing before us to show.

Under that commission, as already stated, he was authorised to allow appeals, and for that purpose to issue a writ in the manner "which has been usually accustomed," returnable before himself and the executive council who were to proceed to hear and determine the same. The instructions to most of the Colonial Governors were said to be to the same effect. In Macpherson's Practice of the Privy Council, Appendix 72, he speaks of the Governor in Council as forming the Court of Error in the colony.

The instructions accompanying the commission to Lord Monk in 1861 do not in any way refer to the allowing of appeals, and from what is said on the subject in Macpherson's Practice in the Privy Council, it seems that in the Royal Instructions issued to Colonial Governors of the Colonies (that have legislatures) for some time past no mention is made of appeals. And the same can be said as to the instructions to Lord Lisgar in 1868. Nor is anything said as to allowing appeals in the commissions to Lord Monk and Lord Dufferin, nor in the instructions accompanying the same.

The reference to the matter in Haliburton's Nova Scotia, Vol 2, p. 330, is to the effect that "The Governor in Council conjointly constitute a court of error from which an "appeal lies on the dernier ressort to King in Council." He considers the origin of this appellate jurisdiction to have been the custom of Normandy when appeals lay to the Duke in Council.

In Stewart's Nova Scotia, after stating the only common law court established in the island was the Supreme Court, pointing out how the Chief Justice was appointed and how the proceedings were conducted, adds: "An appeal in the nature of a writ of "error is allowed from the Supreme Court to the Governor or Commander-in-Chief in "Council where the debt or value appealed for exceeds 300*l.* sterling, with an appeal "from their judgment when the debt or value appealed for exceeds 500*l.* sterling."

There is a chapter on appeals in Clark's Summary of Colonial Law, p. 106, in which he refers to the right of determining in the court of last resort all controversies between the citizens of a state as having been always considered the best evidence of the possession of sovereign power. At page 111 he uses the language already referred to, and at page 120, referring to the practice in the Privy Council, and to the case of a party who has been prevented, by accidental causes, from applying to the Governor of a colony within the period limited in the particular colony, for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council, the Governor having no jurisdiction after that to allow the appeal, he proceeds, "but His Majesty in Council, from whom the right of appeal itself in all "cases emanates, may of course, at his pleasure, relax in any such particular instance "when it appears equitable to do so, the restrictions to which it is generally subject. "So it may happen that a Governor improperly refuses to allow an appeal from some "doubts as to its competency or regularity or from any other cause where justice "required a contrary decision. In all such cases the party aggrieved is of course "entitled to apply to His Majesty in Council."

In the report of the case in re Cambridge, cited on the argument, Lord Brougham said there is no instance of allowing an appeal from the Supreme Court at once to the Queen in Council, there being by the constitution of the island a Court of Appeal, namely, the Governor in Council, from whose decisions alone an appeal lies and then says the proper course and the only course their lordships can take is to advise Her Majesty to allow it to be appealed to the Governor in Council, it may then be brought before us in a future stage if the parties are not satisfied with the decision.

In the statement of the case it is said (this was in 1841) that by the royal instructions to the Governor, he was directed to allow appeals to himself in council in cases where the value appealed from amounts to 300*l.* sterling, and to the King in Council only where the value appealed from amounts to 500*l.* sterling. That the amount being below 300*l.*, the case was not appealable either to the Governor in Council or to Her Majesty.

Now if a court in the sense now contended for by the respondent had been created by the constitution of the Colony, or in any other way recognised by law, where the jurisdiction it had was only in matters above 300*l.* sterling, could an appeal be allowed in that court by order of the Queen in the manner suggested in Cambridge's case, I should think not. But if it be considered as the exercise of the prerogative right of the Crown to review the judgments of Colonial courts, and the Crown chooses to exercise that right through the Governor and Council, appeals may be allowed to them according to instructions, which, of course, may be varied from time to time or according to specific cases, as to the Crown may seem just. The Governor in Council may be considered a court as long as the instructions exist, but when they are withdrawn the court must fall with them.

At the time of the passing of the Dominion Statute establishing the Supreme Court, the Lieutenant-Governor of the Island was not an officer holding a commission under the Great Seal of Great Britain, nor did he receive any instructions to allow appeals, nor was he authorised to issue writs for that purpose returnable before him and the Executive Council, nor were they directed or authorised to proceed to hear and determine such appeals.

In the absence then of any evidence showing the establishment of a court of error, or that any tribunal ever exercised within the Island the powers of such a court, I am of opinion that the unmistakeable references to such a court in the Island Statute of 1873, or in the other Acts to which we are referred, do not create such a court, if it had not an existence previous thereto. If it had been shown that such a court assumed to exercise the functions of a properly organised court and had been doing so for years, the recognition of it by the Acts of the legislature might be considered as affirming its legal existence, but not to create a court.

In the reference to the Court of Error or Appeal in the Statute referred to, mention is not made of the Governor in Council constituting such court.

The Island Statute of 21 Geo. III. c. 17, does not necessarily imply that the revising of a judgment in error must be by a court superior to the Supreme Court, or if it does that that court must be necessarily one existing in the Colony. The King in Council might revise in error.

As to the Statute relating to the estates of intestates special jurisdiction is by the Statute given to the Governor in Council, who are to decide the matter on appeal, and their decision, I apprehend, is to be carried out by the judge of the court.

The fact that in the instructions to most of the Governors in the American Colonies, reference is made to their granting letters of administration and probates of wills, probably suggested that it was desirable to have an appeal to the Governor, and that appeal is expressly given to him and the Council by name in the Statute. The Act constituting the Governor in Council a divorce court, creates them for that purpose, and does not make them a court of error or appeal. In the Imperial Act of 1791, 31 Geo. III. c. 31, the existence of the ordinance of the Governor in Council of the Province of Quebec, constituting the Governor in Council a court of civil jurisdiction for hearing and determining appeals in certain cases is recognised under section 34, which enacts that the Governor of each of the Provinces (of Upper and Lower Canada) with such executive council as shall be appointed by His Majesty for the affairs of such province shall be a court of civil jurisdiction within each of said provinces for hearing and determining appeals within the same, in like cases and manner, and subject to such appeal as before the passing of the Act might have been heard and determined by the Governor in Council of the Province of Quebec, but subject nevertheless to such further or other provisions as might be made by the Legislature of the Provinces.

The Legislature of Lower Canada passed a Statute on the subject, 34 Geo. III. c. 6. In Upper Canada, the same year, by 34 Geo. III. c. 2, sec. 33, the Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, or person administering the Government, or the Chief Justice of the Province, together with any two or more members of the executive council of the Province, shall compose a court of appeal for hearing and determining all appeals from such judgment or sentences as might lawfully be brought before them. Section 35 declared in what cases an appeal should lie to the court. Appeals were also allowed under the Upper Canada Act of 1837, from the decisions of the Vice-Chancellor, though the Governor was Chancellor.

In Woodcock's West Indies, page 288, the following reference is made to appeals in the Colonies:—

"Appeals from decisions of Colonial courts may be considered as existing at the common law as affected by the King's instructions to the Governors, by Colonial law and parliamentary enactment. It has been said to be an inherent right of the subject of which he cannot be deprived, to appeal to the sovereign to redress a wrong done to him in any court of justice, and also an inherent right of the king inseparable from the crown to distribute justice amongst his subjects."

"His Majesty by his instructions declares his Royal will and pleasure to be that his representative shall in all cases, on application being made to him for that purpose, permit and allow appeals from any of the courts of common law, and he and the council, with the exception of such as may have heard the cause as judges in the court below (who are nevertheless allowed to give their reasons for the judgment complained of), are to proceed to hear and determine the appeal. It is provided, however, that the sum or value appealed for do exceed 300*l.* sterling, and that security be first given by the appellant to answer such charges as shall be awarded in case the first sentence be affirmed. And if either party be dissatisfied with the decision of the Governor in Council, then an appeal is allowed to the King in Council, provided the sum or value appealed for exceed 500*l.* sterling; the appeal to be made within 14 days after sentence, and good security given by the appellant that he will effectually prosecute the same and answer the condemnation, and also pay such costs and charges as shall be awarded in case the sentence of the Governor in Council be affirmed."

It is also provided that in special cases the Governor is to admit the appeal.

In McPherson's Practice of the Privy Council, Appendix 72, the instructions to Governors, previous to 1854, are referred to; they were said to be substantially the same in all the American colonies, and were generally to the effect mentioned in Mr. Woodcock's book. It is added in the Royal Instructions now issued to colonial governors, no mention is made of appeal.

Special orders are made in the Privy Council as to appeals from the Supreme Court in the colony named in the order, where the sum or matter in issue is above a certain amount. Such orders appear to have been made in reference to the Provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia.

It may be that after the powers conferred by the Statute 3 and 4 Williaam IV. c. 41, on the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, had began to be exercised, it was found by experience that it was better not to continue to all the governors of the colonies the right to permit appeals to the Governor in Council, but rather that the appeals should come direct to the Queen in Council, and that, in consequence, when it was not desired to continue such powers, the governors were not authorised to exercise them by their instructions. Whatever may be the reason, the latest instructions I have seen to the Governor of the Island, viz., those to Sir John Young, afterwards Lord Lisgar, date December 29, 1868, contain no authority to allow appeals to the Governor in Council from any of the courts of the island.

When the Provincial Statute of 1875, called the Land Purchase Act, was passed, and when the judgment now appealed from was pronounced, the Governor of the Island was appointed by a commission issued under the Great Seal of Canada, and attested and signed by the present Governor-General of Canada, Lord Dufferin, and no instructions accompanied that commission.

During the time instructions of the kind alluded to and the appeal to the Governor in Council existed and was exercised, it might be referred to as a court in the same way as the Queen in Council or the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council is frequently called a court, but when these instructions were withdrawn and no other authority existed by which the appeals to the Governor in Council could be made, then I fail to see how the Governor in Council for the time being could be such a court. If the commission to any Governor had ordered and directed that he and his Executive Council and the Governor and Council for the time being should constitute a court to which appeals might be made, it could then with more force be urged that a court was thereby established. But I do not think such authority as was contained in the instructions to Sir John Colborne by itself constituted a court of appeals as a permanent institution, but for the time being he was to exercise the prerogative right of the Crown to hear appeals from the Colonial Court under such instructions; and when such instructions were withdrawn the right of the Governor in Council to hear appeals ceased.

I am not satisfied that any court of error or appeal, or any court or the last resort, save the Supreme Court, within the meaning of the Dominion Act creating this court, was established or existed in the Island of Prince Edward, during the time that Mr. Patterson was Governor of the Province. We were not referred to any case that had ever been brought before such a court, and it was not denied that no case had ever been taken to such a court within the Island. It is not pretended that such a court had ever been established by Legislative enactment, though it was contended the existence of such a court was recognised in Statutes passed by the Legislature. If established at all it must have been by an instrument under the Great Seal, or under the instructions to the Governor, if that would establish a court of that kind. No instrument under the Great Seal either of Great Britain or of the Colony has been referred to establishing such a court.

Now the Governor in Council was constituted a court of appeals by an ordinance of the Province of Quebec, when the instructions expressly authorised an appeal to the Governor in Council. The instructions to Governor Carleton with his second commission, when referring to subjects for (if I may use the term) legislation, directs his attention to constituting the Governor in Council a Court of Civil Jurisdiction for the hearing of appeals. The Act of 31 Geo. III. c. 31, distinctly recognises such a court, and the subsequent Legislation, both in Upper and Lower Canada, constitute the Governor in Council a court. The tribunals so established were properly courts, and exercised their powers under laws which continued them as long as the laws existed. There is a manifest difference between tribunals so constituted and those which exercise powers conferred by the Royal Instructions alone, and which seem only to exist whilst the instructions are continued. In the one case they exist and continue by positive enactment, and in the other by virtue of the prerogative right, to revise the decisions of the Colonial courts, and when the Governors are not authorised to exercise that right it seems the natural and logical result that they cease to possess it. The commissions issued to the Governors since Sir John Colborne's time, which we have seen, do not contain any authority to the Governor to hear and allow appeals, and the reference to this matter in Macpherson's Practice indicates that in most, if not all, of the commissions issued lately, that authority which was formerly given has been intentionally withdrawn.

On the whole I come to the conclusion that the present Governor of the Island of Prince Edward had no authority to allow an appeal in the matter now before this court, and that it is properly brought before us. As already stated, I do not think the references to the Court of Error or Appeal in the Island Statute of 1873, create such a court if none existed at the time.

The other Statutes referred to do not necessarily imply that a court of appeal existed in the Colony, and none of those Statutes create a general court of appeal.

I do not think the Dominion Parliament when they enacted that the appeal given to this court was to be "understood as given from the court of last resort in the Province "in which judgment was rendered," meant to compel suitors, before bringing their cases here, to have them heard in, if I may use the term, a mythical court that had never been resorted to by suitors, or to courts to which, if such recourse ever existed it had long been abandoned and disused. I think, therefore, that this Appeal is properly before us, and we have jurisdiction to hear it.

The case states that the Right Honourable Hugh C. E. Childers was duly appointed a Commissioner by the Governor-General in Council under the seventh section of the Act (the Land Purchase Act, 1875). John T. Jenkins, Esquire, was duly appointed a Commissioner by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council under the fifth section; and Robert Grant Haliburton was appointed by Miss Sulivan as her Commissioner under the ninth section.

That the Commissioners so appointed met at a day and place in Charlottetown then appointed for the purpose of hearing and considering the matter referred to them, and at the same time and place so appointed the Commissioner of Public Lands and the proprietress, Miss Charlotte Antonia Sulivan, were represented by counsel, and evidence tendered on both sides having been heard, the said three Commissioners made an award which was set out. The notice of the Commissioner of Public Lands, served on Miss Sulivan's agent, is set out in the case, and refers to the Act and the powers of the Commissioner under it, and states that the island Government "intend to purchase all of her "township lands in the island liable to the provisions of the Act, including all such parts "or portions of lots or townships, numbers 9, 16, 22, and 61, in the island, as she was or "claimed to be the proprietor of and as were liable to the provisions of the Act."

It appears from the Statute that the Government of the island was entitled to receive from the Dominion Government a large sum of money for the purpose of enabling the Government of the province to purchase the township lands held by the proprietors in the island.

We may, without going beyond what is considered the legal province of a judge, be supposed to know that there had been difficulties in the island existing for many years in relation to the collection of rents on these lands; that there had been legislation on the subject, and that further legislation was deemed necessary.

The recital in the Statute, that it was desirable to convert leasehold tenures into freehold estates, indicates that it was a matter affecting the public interests. This Statute ought, therefore, to be viewed not as ordinary legislation, but as the settling of an important question of great moment to the community, and in principle like the abolition of the Seignorial tenure in Lower Canada, and the settling of the land question in Ireland. In carrying out such measures as these there may be cases where the law works harshly, where important rights may seem to be disregarded and private interests are made to yield to the public good without sufficient compensation being given; yet the legislation on the subject generally assumes to be based on the principle of compensation to individuals when their property is taken from them, and points out a mode of ascertaining what the indemnity shall be and how it shall be paid.

It is not doubted in the court below, and we do not doubt that the Legislature of the island had a right to pass the Statute. The great object of the Statute seems to have been to convert the leasehold tenures into freehold estate. A matter of very great importance, and one which, if not settled, would be likely to affect the peace as well as the prosperity of the province.

Their intention seems to have been as to all questions connected with the lands, such as rents and judgments obtained for the rents and claims arising out of the ownership of the land, and, as far as the proprietors were concerned, that they should no longer be enforceable by them; and that those incidents, such as arrears of rent, and the like rights, should, with the soil itself and all interest in it, pass from the proprietor to the Government. That the money value of the rights of the proprietor, taking into consideration in estimating such value, certain circumstances, such as the price at which other proprietors had sold their lands, the annual rentals due and actually received each year, the expense of collecting the net receipts for six years, &c., was to be fixed by three Commissioners. These Commissioners were to be selected—one by the Dominion Government, one by the island Government, one by the party interested. It can hardly be disputed that this was a fair mode of selecting the Commissioners, who were, after hearing evidence, to make the award, and the money awarded was to be paid into the island treasury to the credit of the suit or proceeding. The object, no doubt, being that the money should represent the land, and the different parties interested should, on application to the court, receive what they were entitled to from that fund.

They intended the award of the Commissioners to be final, but if either party wished to have any error, informality, or omission in the award corrected, he could apply within 30 days after the publication of the award to the Supreme Court to have it remitted back to the Commissioners.

A trustee was to be appointed to convey the estate of the proprietor to the Commissioner of Public Lands, notice was to be given to the proprietor and the court, or a judge might restrain the execution of the deed. This conveyance and the payment of the money awarded into the Treasury was to vest the lands in the Commissioner in fee simple.

The money awarded in each case was to be paid into the provincial Treasury at the expiration of 60 days, and the Public Trustee, after the money was so paid, was to execute a conveyance of the estate of the proprietor unless restrained after 14 days' notice to the proprietor. Why should not the intention of the Legislature be carried out in this matter? I do not think it necessary to discuss the elaborate judgments given by the learned judges in the court below. The view I take of the Statute renders that unnecessary. The view I take is that the mode pointed out by the Statute is the one which should have been pursued by the proprietor in this matter if there were any error, informality, or omission in the award, and that the court had no other authority to inquire into the proceedings of the Commissioners further than to see if the subject matter was properly before them, and perhaps to see if they had been guilty of any fraud in their proceedings; and if they had the strict legal right to do so, in the exercise of a sound discretion according to the best of my judgment, the proprietor's application to set aside the award should have been refused.

I see no reason to doubt that the Commissioners properly entered on the enquiry as to the compensation to be awarded to Miss Sulivan for her rights as a proprietor in township lands in the island.

It is not denied that Miss Sulivan was a "proprietor" within the meaning of the Act of Township Lands, exceeding in the aggregate 500 acres. Her lands were therefore liable to be purchased under the Act.

The appointment of the Commissioners is stated in the case, and the notice to Miss Sulivan of the intention to purchase all her lands is set out. The notice complies with the Act. If only a portion could be purchased it might be that the portion selected would be that which was most profitable to the proprietor and most desirable or her to keep. In my opinion the Statute contemplates the purchase of all of the peculiar description of lands owned by a proprietor whose estate exceeded 500 acres, and when the value was to be ascertained it would be for the interest of the proprietor to show what the land was in order that compensation might be given for all, and that none might be omitted. If the Statute had required the Commissioner of Public Lands to define by metes and bounds in his notice the land he intended to "be purchased" under the Act, it would probably induce them to describe such lands as were well known to belong to the particular proprietor, and which probably would be those that were most valuable and most for the interest of the proprietor to retain, or it would have the effect of making the Statute useless if the Commissioner could not give a minute description of each parcel of land owned by the proprietor. The court below thought the notice sufficient, and I see no reason to dissent from that view.

It was suggested on the argument for the first time that it did not appear that the Commissioners were sworn, or that the Commissioner appointed by the proprietor ever notified the Commissioner of Public Lands of his appointment. It was also suggested that the notice of the sitting of the Commissioners was not published a sufficient length of time before the day fixed for their sitting.

The provisions of the Statute as to these matters seem directory, and it is reasonable to presume they were followed. Particularly as the objections were not taken on the argument in the court below, nor in the rule, nor mentioned as relied on in the respondent's factum. It is not now shown affirmatively that as to the points suggested, the proceedings were not regular except as to the time of giving the notice of the sitting of the Commissioners, which as the parties appeared could be no objection. If necessary to show in any proceeding that these things were done, it could, I apprehend, be averred in pleading and proved by evidence.

If the proprietor Commissioner gave the Commissioner of Public Lands no other notice of his appointment than claiming to sit and sitting as such when the matter was proceeded with, when the said Commissioner was either personally present or was represented by counsel, that would be some notice of his appointment, and on a bare suggestion of this kind we will not presume that the parties did not do what they ought to have done.

The papers before us show that the case was fully inquired into before the Commissioners, a large number of witnesses examined, able advocates addressed the Commissioners, and two of them made their award as follows :—

" Dominion of Canada, Province of Prince Edward Island."

" In the matter of the application of Emmanuel McEachen, the Commissioner of Public Lands, for the purchase of the estate of Charlotte Antonia Sulivan, and the 'Land Purchase Act of 1875.'

" The sum awarded under section 26 of the said Act by us, two of the Commissioners appointed under the provisions of the said Act, is eighty-one thousand five hundred dollars.

" Hugh Culling Eardley Childers,
" Commissioner appointed by the Governor-General in Council.
" John Theophilus Jenkins,
" Commissioner appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council.

" Charlottetown, 4th Sept. 1875."

The award was duly published 7th Sept. A.D. 1875, pursuant to 29th section of the Act. The application was made to set it aside on the 17th November. The Public Trustee having notified Miss Sulivan's agent, on the 3rd November, that the sum awarded had been paid into the Treasury of the Island to the credit of the suit, and that after 14 days from the service of the notice he would execute a conveyance to the Commissioner of Public Lands of the estate of Miss Sulivan, the proprietor, which estate was more particularly described in the four schedules annexed.

The question is whether the court below had any authority to make the rule absolute to quash the award, and in discussing this question it is necessary to refer to the 45th section of the Act, which is as follows :—

" No award made by said Commissioners, or any two of them, shall be held or deemed to be invalid or void for any reason, defect, or informality whatsoever, but the Supreme Court shall have power, on the application of either the Commissioner of Public Lands or the proprietor to remit to the Commissioners any award which shall have been made by them to correct any error, informality, or omission made in their award. Provided always that such application to the Supreme Court to remit such award to the Commissioners shall be made within thirty days after the publication thereof as aforesaid; and provided further, that in case any such award is remitted back to the Commissioners, they shall have full power to revise and re-execute the same, and their powers shall not be held to have ceased by reason of their executing their first award, and in no case shall any appeal lie from any such award, either to the Supreme Court, the Court of Chancery, or any other legal tribunal; nor shall any such award or the proceedings before such Commissioners be removed or taken into or inquired into by any court by certiorari, or any other process, but with the exception of the aforesaid power given to such Supreme Court to remit back the matter to such Commissioners, their award shall be binding, final, and conclusive on all parties."

Could any more emphatic language be used to show that the Legislature intended that this award should be " binding, final, and conclusive on all parties," and should not be held or deemed to be invalid or void for any reason, defect, or informality whatsoever?

On the application of the court below certain facts were stated by the agent of Miss Sulivan in his affidavit.

One, that in Schedule B. there is a farm alleged to be 34 acres, purchased by Arthur Ramsay on lot 16, whereas Ramsay had purchased 84 acres, this being 50 acres more than Miss Sulivan claimed to own or demanded compensation for.

2. That in the 15,000 acres claimed to be conveyed to the Commissioner by the trustee, there is included 1,100 on lot 16, held under verbal agreement, whereas in truth under verbal agreement the lands owned by Miss Sulivan, and for which she claimed compensation, amount only to 708 acres.

The following matters are in dispute, and evidence given concerning the same :—

The amount of arrears of rent due by several tenants upon the estate. The performance of the conditions of the original grants from the Crown, and how far the performance has been waived. That Miss Sulivan contended the conditions of the original grants had been waived; the Commissioner of Public Lands alleged the contrary, and gave in evidence despatches of Secretaries of State for the Colonies, printed in the journals of the House of Assembly, in support of his claim and in denial of her contention.

That in Schedule B. in four several plots of land purchased by Arthur Ramsay and Samuel Yeo upon township lot No. 16, and excepted out of the said township claimed to be conveyed as aforesaid, are referred to as "being numbered or coloured green upon "the plan of the said township in the possession of Miss Sulivan's agent, and produced "by him before the Commissioners under the Land Purchase Act"; whereas there was more than one plan of lot 16 in the agent's possession and produced by him before the Commissioners. There were two produced by him, and they differ from each other, and he had no means of finding out from the notice which of the plans is referred to.

The same thing is stated in effect as to Schedule D., township lot No. 61.

If in relation to these matters thus stated in the affidavit it was necessary to protect Miss Sulivan's interest, or even to prevent inconvenience in carrying out the award, that something more explicit should be stated in the award relative thereto, application might have been made, under the 45th section of the Act, to the Supreme Court to remit the award to the Commissioners to correct the same. But that was not done. If an application had been made to the court, and it had been shown that the omissions or errors referred to in the affidavit would prejudice Miss Sulivan, or were such as ought to be remedied by the arbitrators, the court would have sent it back for that purpose. But the course taken on Miss Sulivan's behalf in lying by until the time for applying to the court under the Statute had passed, it can be seen, has worked great injustice and inconvenience to those acting on behalf of the public. If it had been urged that the award was faulty, it could have been corrected. The Commissioner of Public Lands does not complain of it, therefore there was no reason to apply on his behalf; the proprietor does object, therefore she ought to have applied sooner. She might have applied according to the terms of the Statute, she has deliberately chosen not to do so, she must therefore abide by the consequences. As I understand the judgment of the court below, the matter, in their view, was properly before the Commissioners; it was within their jurisdiction, and they were fully authorised to decide on all questions arising in relation to the inquiry and decision they were to make. The objection is that they did not decide matters which they ought to have decided, and that the award is void by reason of that defect, though if the proprietor had applied within the 30 days, the award might have been remitted to the Commissioners to correct the error or omission.

It is not pretended that after the 30 days the court have the power of setting aside this award under the Statute, nor am I aware that they have any peculiar powers conferred on them by local Statutes to interfere when the legislature has declared that an award shall be final. I understand that the court below proceed on the common law right of the court to review the decisions of inferior tribunals, and to see that they properly carry out the powers and authority vested in them; not that they are a court of appeal to review the conclusions at which the inferior tribunal has arrived, but that they can, if that tribunal has not done all that it should have done, declare void its decision. The more logical course to take under such circumstances would be to require the inferior tribunal to do what it ought to do, and that was what the Legislature authorised the court to do. But in this case I do not think any such right existed in the court below. The Statute emphatically declares that in no case shall an appeal lie from any such award either to the Supreme Court, the Court of Chancery, or any other legal tribunal; nor shall any such award or the proceedings before such Commissioners be removed or taken into or inquired into by any court by certiorari or any other process, but, with the exception of the power of the Supreme Court to remit back the matter, their award shall be binding, final, and conclusive on all parties.

If a power of a superior court to review or set aside an award or decision of a special tribunal can be taken away by Act of Parliament, it seems to me that the words in this Statute ought be held to do it. In Richards v. South Wales Railway Co., 13 Jurist., p. 1097, Sir William Earle, in his judgment said, "It was admitted that the writ (of "certiorari) was taken away as to all proceedings under the Acts (which he referred to), "this rule therefore cannot be made absolute unless it distinctly appears that in the "proceedings the sheriff and the jury have taken upon themselves to decide on a "matter on which they had no jurisdiction. When that is made out the statutory "prohibition does not apply, and the inherent jurisdiction of this court is unrestrained.

" . . . There is, however, a great disposition to evade clauses in Acts of Parliament " which take away the certiorari on the alleged excess of jurisdiction, and we feel bound " not to yield to attempts of this kind unless they rest on very clear and satisfactory " grounds."

In the Colonial Bank of Australasia v. William, 5 L. R. P. C., p. 442, the following language is used in the decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council: " There are numerous cases in the books which establish that notwithstanding the " privative clause in a Statute the Court of Queen's Bench will grant a certiorari, but " some of those authorities establish and none are inconsistent with the proposition that " in any such case that court will not quash the order removed except upon the ground " either of a manifest defect of jurisdiction in the tribunal that made it or of manifest " fraud in the party procuring it." And at p. 450 the following language is used, " The " Court of Queen's Bench, whose exercise of this power is discretionary, would certainly " not quash an order of an inferior court upon the ground of fraud unless the fraud " were clear and manifest."

Here there is no defect of jurisdiction and it is not pretended that there is any fraud; but as I understand the argument, it was urged that all the jurisdiction was not exercised and that it is a defect of jurisdiction. They were to consider and award on the matters referred to in the 28th section, and not having done so the whole proceeding is void.

After giving the matter my best consideration, I have arrived at the conclusion that the Legislature did not intend that the Commissioners should find, as specific facts, the facts and circumstances mentioned in the 28th section which they were to take into their consideration in estimating the amount of compensation to be paid to a proprietor for his interest or right in any lands.

If it had been intended they should find specifically on each of these points, I think different language would have been used, and if the court thought some kind of decision necessary on the points, they could have referred the award back to the Commissioners for that purpose. In any view it does not seem so plain a question of want of exercise of jurisdiction as to justify setting aside the award under such a Statute as this.

The object of this section 28 being to allow the Commissioners to take evidence on all these subjects, and having all these matters and the evidence relating to them before them, and seeing that the declared object of the Legislature was to pay every proprietor a fair indemnity or equivalent for the value of his interest and no more in the land to be purchased, all this was to be taken into consideration, and then they were to award under section 26 the sum due to the proprietor as " the compensation or price to which he should " be entitled by reason of being divested of his land and all interest therein and thereto."

The papers before us show that the matters referred to in the 28th section were brought before the Commissioners, except, perhaps, those relating to the conditions of the original grants. It is said that as Miss Sulivan was one of the parties referred to in the Act of 27 Vict. c. 2, she was not a party affected by any decision of that question. After hearing the evidence the Commissioners made their award. They say, in express terms, the sum awarded under the 26th section of the Act is 81,500 dollars. Is there any reason why we should presume they did not take the matter into consideration, which the law directed them to do, before they made their award? They were to make their award after hearing the evidence; this, of course, implies they were to consider it, or it would be useless to offer evidence. On the contrary, we ought not to assume that they could not properly make an award under the 26th section, unless they considered these matters, that they have done so.

In Brittain v. Kinnaird, 1 Brod v. Bing, at p. 430, Dallas, C. J., said, formerly the rule was to intend anything against a stinted jurisdiction, that is not the rule now, and nothing is to be intended but what is fair and reasonable, and it is fair and reasonable to intended magistrates will do what is just. It is fair and reasonable to presume here that the Commissioners did what was right. It is a fair and reasonable intendment that they did what the law required of them, unless it appears on the face of the award that they did not. The proceedings before the arbitrators show that these matters were discussed before them, and the only reasonable conclusion is that they must have taken them into consideration. In the view that I take, then, the award ought not to have been set aside. The Commissioners were not required to find specifically on the matters they were to take into consideration under the 28th section, and the presumption is they did take them into consideration. Then as to the necessity of describing the specific land as to which they made the award. Suppose they had in the award described lands that Miss Sulivan did not own, or lands that were not liable to be purchased under the Act, would their finding bind anyone not a party to the award? It is not pretended it would. The Commissioner notified her he intended to purchase all her township lands, that being the kind of land referred to in the Statute, which he was authorised to purthase; and it was concerning all these lands the award was made. The money has been paid into the provincial Treasury, and represents all these lands. When those claiming the money are brought before the court they will decide to whom and in what proportion the money is to be paid. Primâ facie it is Miss Sulivan, and those who contest her right must show how their claim originates. The finding of the Commissioners could not in any way deprive the parties of rights which arose out of matters in which they and Miss Sulivan were alone connected. The court might say, if the Commissioners took a certain view, it would be only fair as between individuals that the other parties should have a certain sum, but the court would not necessarily be bound to take that or any particular view. The whole matter is open to them, and when the parties are before them they will dispose of their rights as they show them to be. Mere speculative difficulties ought not to be very seriously considered when the party suggesting them had an opportunity of having them all settled, but did not choose to avail herself of it.

I do not consider the describing of the property in the deeds by the Public Trustee a transfer of their authority by the Commissioners. There were certain lands, the value to be paid for, which was the subject of their inquiry. What those lands were seems to me easily ascertainable, and if the particular maps in the description cannot be identified and the conveyance is held void for uncertainty, I fail to see how Miss Sulivan is injured by that, or why she should concern herself with it. It seems to me all her township lands and her interest in them and in the rents were properly before the Commissioners, and they have awarded her all the compensation she is entitled to for them. The amount so awarded has been paid into the Treasury, and I see no reason why she should not get what she is intitled to out of it. Why she should concern herself about the conveyance unless it may affect her interest is not so apparent. If this conveyance included any of her land not liable to be purchased under the Act, she might then say she was interested as to that, and insist upon its being put right. She might apply to the court to restrain the conveyance under the 32nd section until it was corrected. I fail to see that the omission to describe the lands in the award is ground for setting it aside. The trustee is to execute a conveyance of the estate of the proprietor. If he executes a deed of property not a part of her estate, that cannot prejudice her nor anyone else, as I can see.

It has indeed been suggested that if it was her estate the conveyance gives a primâ facie title; and if a squatter on the estate were sued, the Land Commissioner or purchaser under him would only be obliged to show title under the conveyance by the trustee, instead of tracing the title from the Crown. I hardly think a court would set aside an award like this on that ground alone.

The money was awarded under the 25th section, for the lands of which Miss Sulivan was divested, and they were all the lands of a certain description of which she was proprietor in the Island. As it was not necessary to describe them in the notice, I fail to see why it is necessary for the Commissioners to describe them in their award. If she had devised all her township lands in the island and died, it is not doubted that such a description would carry to her devisee all the lands of that description which she owned in the colony. It urged that the form of deed appended to the Statute makes it necessary the lands should be described by metes and bounds. The Section 32 says, the deed may be in the form,and if a clear and intelligible description were given without metes and bounds I do not think the deed would be inoperative.

It seems to me that the words of the 20th section of the Act authorising the Commissioners to summon and examine witnesses upon matters submitted to their consideration " and the facts which they may require to ascertain in order to carry this Act into effect," taken in connection with the 28th section, mean the facts and circumstances they are to take into consideration in order to make their award, and they could not do this unless they had power to examine the witnesses as to these facts. That cannot mean all the facts necessary to carry the Act into effect as far as the action of others is concerned. Much must be left to the court to ascertain when they are called upon to distribute the money, and as the Commissioners were not called upon, in my view, to find specially on these matters referred in the 28th section. I do not think the words referred in the 20th section compelled them to do so.

Take the converse of the case before us. Suppose after the time for moving to refer the case back to the Commissioners had passed, and after the money had been paid into the Treasury and an application had been made on Miss Sulivan's behalf to the court for an order to pay over the same, then for the first time the Commissioner of Public Lands had applied to set aside the award, because he would be embarrassed in discharging his duties under the Act, inasmuch as the Commissioners had not found specially on the matters referred to in the 28th section, would not the answer have been, you had the knowledge of the award and its contents long ago, you have deliberately chosen to let the opportunity pass of having the alleged errors corrected, and you must now work out your rights under the award as you best can, Miss Sulivan has had a certain sum awarded to her, by your notice you claimed to purchase all her township lands, she has been awarded a sum for her interest in those lands and she ought to have it. If this would be the proper answer to such an application, a similar answer to Miss Sulivan seems to me equally just and proper. I have not met with any case where the special provision was made for the correction of the errors or omissions of the tribunal created by the Statute and where the private re-enactments was so stroug and emphatic as it is in this Statute, when the court has felt justified in setting aside the award of the inferior tribunal.

Under such circumstances, on an application like this, I think that the declared intentions of the Legislature ought to be respected, and the parties should be left to assert their rights in some other way than by asking the court on an application such as this is to declare the award invalid and void, where the Legislature has said it shall be binding, final, and conclusive on all parties, unless inquired into in the manner prescribed by the Act, and shall not be enquired into by any court on certiorari.

If either of the parties to the award find a difficulty in obtaining all the benefits under it to which they claim to be entitled, that is a matter which may be said to have arisen either from their own deliberate act or want of reasonable care and attention.

The appellant in this matter does not anticipate difficulties of a serious character as far as his part of the case is concerned. If the respondent finds a difficulty she ought to have taken the steps that were open to her to have had it remedied.

The case may be briefly summed up as follows:—After considering what has been brought before us relating to the subject, we are not satisfied there is a court of last resort in the Province of Prince Edward Island other than the Supreme Court from whose judgment this appeal is brought, and therefore the appeal is properly brought to this court.

Secondly. That by the Statute passed by the Island Legislature, and which they had a right to pass, the award of the Commissioners could not be quashed and set aside or declared invalid or void on an application made to the Supreme Court, but it could have been remitted back to the Commissioners in the manner prescribed by the 45th section of the Act. The application for the rule in the court below not having been made within the proper time nor according to the provisions of that section, the decision of that court is against the express words of the Statute, and cannot be allowed to stand.

Mr. Justice Ritchie.

I think this appeal is properly before us. It was admitted on both sides on the argument that no evidence could be discovered of the establishment of a court of appeal, either by charter or patent under the Great Seal, or by any statutory enactment; nor could it be discovered that any such court has ever sat in the island. The observation of Lord Brougham in the Cambridge case must therefore, I think, refer to the clause at that time usually inserted in the Royal Instructions to Colonial Governors authorising the Governor in Council to permit and allow appeals.

I think this was not the establishment of a court, because there is clear authority for saying that the power to establish courts cannot be granted by the Crown, by instructions or otherwise, than under the Great Seal, but is rather, I think, an exercise of the Royal Prerogative in furtherance of the right of the Queen to receive and hear appeals from colonial courts, by which the Queen directs that, before coming to her direct, the appellant shall first go to her representative in council in the colony. A governor without instructions to that effect has, it appears to me, no authority to entertain such appeals, and no such instructions exist at present. If the Queen's representative, without instructions, would have no such power, much less would the officer of the Dominion Government. I do not think it can be said that there is either de jure or de facto any court of appeal in the island, therefore I think the matter was appealable to this court from the Supreme Court as being the highest court of final resort in the island.

It was clearly the object of the legislature to provide for a speedy, final, and conclusive decision by the Commissioners of all questions referred to them, and to make their award "final, binding, and conclusive on all parties," at the same time it was obviously the desire of the legitlature to secure to the public through the Commissioner of Public Lands, and to the proprietors the means of having the doings of the Commissioners reviewed, and any errors they may have committed corrected, any omissions supplied, and any informalities or defects cured. For accomplishing which, the commissioners were placed, as is were, under the immediate supervision of the Supreme Court of the Island, and ready access to that court was afforded by the simple application either of the Commissioner of the Public Lands or the proprietors, and to enable the court, when its aid was invoked, to see that right was done; ample power is given to remit the awards to the Commissioners to correct any error or informality or omission, provided the application was made within the time limited, and on such award being remitted to the Commissioners, full power is given them to revise and re-execute the same.

The Statute first declares that "no award made by the Commissioners or any two of "them shall be held or deemed to be invalid or void for any reason, defect, or infor- "mality whatsoever," and then provides a suitable tribunal for the correction "of any "error or informality or omission," and declares that in no case shall any appeal lie from any such award, either to the Supreme Court, the Court of Chancery, or any other legal tribunal, nor shall any such award or the proceedings before such Commissioners be removed or taken into or inquired into by any court by certiorari or any other process, and as if to prevent the possibility of the intention of the Legislature being misapprehended, the section of the Act after being thus minute thus concludes "but with "the exception of the aforesaid power given to such Supreme Court to remit back the "matter to such Commissioners, their award shall be binding, final, and conclusive on "all parties." It cannot be denied that the Legislature had the power to deal with this subject, and if it chose, make the award of the Commissioners final, and most certainly it had the right to establish a court of review final in the island, so far as the courts of the island were concerned, and could they have selected a more suitable tribunal than the Supreme Court, the Court to which, under ordinary circumstances, belongs especially the duty of supervising the proceedings of the inferior tribunals of the island. The practical effect really was merely to give the Supreme Court a more summary and ample jurisdiction to enable it more speedily and effectually to deal with the matter free from the technicalities and delays, and possibly costs incident to the ordinary mode of proceeding. If this was the intention of the Legislature, as from the Statute I gather it to have been, I am at a loss to conceive what language could have been used to achieve that object if the language of the 45th section of the Land Purchase Act of 1875 does not do it.

In the case of Nawab of Surat, 9 Moore, P. C. C., p. 88, an Act of the Legislature of India empowered the Governor in Council of Bombay to administer the private estate of the Nawab of Surat, and it was by Section 2 enacted, "that no act of the said Governor "of Bombay in Council in respect to the administration of and administration of such "property, from the date of the death of the said late Nawab, should be liable to be "questioned in any court of law or equity." No provision was made for an appeal from the Governor's decision. On an application by a claimant dissatisfied with the award made distributing the estate for leave to appeal to the Judical Committee, Knight Bruce, Lord Justice, said: "Their Lordships are of opinion that the intention of the "Act was not to create a court; that the intention of the Act was to delegate either "arbitrarily or subject to certain limitations of discretion, the administration and dis- "tribution of the Nawab's property, but in such a way that the administration and "distribution should not be judicially questioned. * * * It seems," he says, "an "anomalous and extraordinary proceeding to vest powers of this description, not liable "to be checked by any ordinary course or powers of law, in any individual or in any "body; but the Indian Legislature had power over the property; they might, in the "exercise of that power, which is inherent in legislation, have given the whole property "at once to any stranger, or devoted to any purpose, and whether, with moral justice "or not, is not the question. Instead of doing that, they do what, to their Lordship's "appear substantially the same thing, they vest the power of dealing with it in a "particular individual or a particular body, and declare that its acts shall not be liable "to be questioned in any court of law or equity."

How different is this case in view of the exigencies and necessities of the country. The Legislature compels proprietors to sell, no doubt, in many cases against their will, and makes provision for compensation to be estimated by disinterested parties and not by parties whose acts cannot be judicially questioned. It only provides that if such acts are questioned it must be before a particular court within a specified time and in a specified manner.

I have been unable to discover, after a most careful investigation, that the Commissioners have in any way dealt with any matter over which their jurisdiction did not extend, or that in dealing with matters over which they had jurisdiction, they exceeded in any way that jurisdiction. The only question the Commissioners had finally to determine and award was in the words of the Statute, "the sum due to the proprietor as the compensation of price to which he shall be entitled by reason of his being divested of his lands and all interest therein or thereto."

The provisions of the Act as to how they were to proceed and what they were to take into their consideration to enable them to arrive at a just and proper conclusion were directory, though not the less obligatory, on them, and which, if they failed to regard ample remedy as we have seen was provided. It is not shown that they did not do everything that they were required to do, and did not follow the directions of the Statute in every particular; but the complaint seems to be that this does not appear on the face of their award. But if they did not do as they were required, or if they did, and it should have appeared on the face of the award, which I by no means affirm, is not the answer to the complaining party very obvious? If you were aggrieved thereby, or in any other way, why did you not avail yourself of the remedy provided for you and apply to the Supreme Court within the time and in the manner prescribed and have the error or omission, irregularity, or defect, rectified?

The Commissioners have referred to and so incorporated in their award the application of the Commissioner of Public Lands and the Lands Purchase Act, 1875; and in the matter of such application for the purchase of the estate of C. A. Sulivan, have awarded, under Section 26 of the said Act, a certain sum. This, it seems to me, is just what they were authorised and required to do. If in their proceedings the Commissioners were guilty of any error, informality, or omission, a remedy was at hand. The course to be pursued by a dissatisfied party was plain and simple in the extreme; but it was a course they could adopt or not; if they did not choose to take it, and so get the error corrected, or omission supplied, and award revised and re-executed in the mode prescribed, but have allowed the time given them by the Legislature to elapse, they have only themselves to blame. The law, in clear, strong, and unambiguous language, not to be misunderstood, says in effect, "if the Commissioners err or for any reason you are dissatisfied with the award go to the Supreme Court within a certain time, and in a certain way, and get the error corrected; but you shall go to no other court, and with the exception of the power given to the Supreme Court to remit the matter to the Commissioners, their award shall be binding, final, and conclusive on all parties;" and neither the Supreme Court of the island nor this court have, in my opinion, any right to say to the contrary. Therefore I think the adjudication of the Supreme Court was not warranted, and their judgment must be reversed.

Mr. Justice Strong.

Although entirely concurring in the conclusion arrived at, I am unable to assent to all that has been propounded in the preceding judgment as to the law on the question of the jurisdiction of a Colonial Governor and Council as a court of appeal. I consider it sufficient to say that the preliminary objection raised in this case to the jurisdiction on the ground that the Supreme Court of Prince Edward Island was not a court of last resort has not been sustained, for the following reasons:—If any appellate court exists in the island, it must owe its origin either to an Imperial Act of Parliament, a Statute of the island Legislature, or to letters patent under the Great Seal of the United Kingdom or of the island, if, indeed, a court, exercising a jurisdiction by way of appeal which was unknown to the common law, could be created otherwise than by Statute. No such Statute can be shown to have been in existence, and no letters patent conferring such a jurisdiction are now extant. For this reason, and this reason only, I think the objection fails.

As regards the merits, I agree on all points with the judgments of his Lordship the Chief Justice and my brother Ritchie.

Mr. Justice Taschereau.

The facts of the case have already been stated by my learned brother judges who have just expressed their opinion, and I will therefore abstain from repeating them. I shall neither notice the objection made on the part of Miss Sulivan to the right of appeal de plano in this case from the judgment of the Supreme Court of Prince Edward Island on the ground that the same appeal should have been in the first instance to the Governor in Council as a court of error and appeal, and thence to our own court, viz., the Supreme Court of Canada, as it has been clearly shown no such court of error and appeal exists in the island, and thereiore the appeal was rightly brought before this court, the judgment complained of being rendered by the court of last resort in Prince Edward Island.

But coming to the merits of the case, I say that the respondent had no right such as she claimed in the court below, and such as the same court entertained; that is to say, to set aside the award made by the Commissioners appointed under the Land Purchase Act of 1875, stating the amount of money to be paid to respondent, Miss Sulivan, as proprietor of certain township lands.

The grounds on which the respondent based her motion to set aside the award were on account of pretended irregularity and insufficiency in the wording of the award. Looking at the text of the Act in question, we find at Section 4 that the amount of money to be paid as an indemnity to any such proprietor shall be found and ascertained by three Commissioners, or any two of them duly appointed; no form of procedure is indicated, and it seems that the duty of the Commissioners is purely and simply limited to the award of an amount as an indemnity, and, in fact, they were authorised to proceed in a summary way, without even reducing the evidence to writing. It is also to be observed that by Section 45 of the Land Act in question it is provided that "in no case "shall any appeal lie from such award, either to the Supreme Court, the Court of "Chancery, or any other legal tribunal; nor shall any such award or the proceedings "before such Commissioners be removed or taken into or inquired into by any other "court by certiorari or any other process, but" (mark this) "the Supreme Court shall "have power, on the application of either the Commissioner of Public Lands or the "proprietor, to remit to the Commissioners any award which shall have been made by "them, to correct any error or informality or omission made in their award; provided "always that any such application to the Supreme Court to remit such award to the "Commissioners shall be made within thirty days after the publication thereof, and "provided further that the said Commissioners shall have power to revise and re-execute "the same."

I think the above enactment of the Land Purchase Act clearly indicates the intention of the Legislature as to celerity of action and proceedings as to denial of any revision or appeal, as to avoiding a multiplicity of proceedings in the law courts, and as to the correction and revision, by the Commissioners themselves alone, of any defect or informality duly pointed out to them by any of the parties within 30 days from the promulgation of the award. Now the 30 days had elapsed before any of the parties had, in the terms of the Statute, lodged any complaint. I infer that the respondent is now estopped from lodging her complaint before a court of justice, unless section 45, above referred to, means nothing and should be looked upon as a dead letter. The language of the section seems so clear and so energetic that I can see no way of eluding it. It is true that the learned judges of the court appealed from have quoted a number of decisions having some bearing on the case, but others of equal strength are to be found to show we could not interfere and set aside such an award, supported by a section so formed as the 45th section of the Land Act in question. I, for one, would not be disposed to set aside the law (which is clear and positive in its terms) on the strength of decisions whose authority is destroyed by contrary rulings.

Now, referring to the 46th section of the said Land Act, we will see that the Supreme Court of Prince Edward Island has power to make rules and regulations not inconsistent with the provisions of the Act for the purpose of more effectually carrying out the requirements of the Act, and I say that it is not shown that any such regulations have been made authorising all the forms of proceeding claimed in the respondent's brief.

But what did the Commissioners omit to do? To declare in their award the matters mentioned in the 28th section of the Land Purchase Act of 1875, and therein indicated as to be taken into consideration by them in estimating compensation to proprietors? An attentive perusal of that section has convinced me that the suggestions therein contained are merely directory for their investigation, and, as it was very well said in appellant's factum, were intended merely as beacons to light the Commissioners on their way to a final conclusion, and that the mention of details was not a necessary ingredient in their award.

In arriving at their award the Commissioners must be presumed to have taken into their consideration all the suggestions contained in the Land Purchase Act, and this, under the very common rule of law, "omnia presumuntur rite et soleminta ipse acta." The Commissioners by the Act in question are put in the position of juries. It is not either evident that all the details required by the respondent can easily be reached, and in fact of what great use would it have been for the respondent if the Commissioners had categorically alluded to each of the matters of fact mentioned in the 28th section? None whatever, for the report was final to all intents and purposes; it could not be questioned in any way nor reversed. The respondent, if desirous of knowing her true position, can easily ascertain it, the important facts being very few in number, her number of acres guaranteed, and her rights to arrears of rent not affected.

All the presumptions are against the respondent, and so is the law of the case. She did not comply with the law; she did not complain in due time (and she had ample time to do so), but allowed her adversary to rest in peace; she does not avail herself of the only efficient proceeding pointed out by the Statute, but an after thought leads her to adopt in the Court below the proceedings alluded to. I consider the respondent is not rightly before this Court, and as one of its members I am not disposed to disturb the award of the Commissioners for the reasons mentioned in the rule Nisi granted by the Supreme Court of Prince Edward Island. I would therefore maintain the appeal.

MR. JUSTICE FOURNIER.

La première question: Cette cour a-t-elle jurisdiction pour entendre cet appel?

L'Intimée pretend que non. Il existerait d'après elle, dans l'Isle du Prince Edouard un tribunal supérieur à la Cour Suprême, composé du Gouverneur en conseil, auquel il aurait du s'adresser avant de porter son present appel. Elle fonde cette prétention sur l'article de notre acte declarant qu'il n' y aura d'appel à cette cour que du jugement de la cour de dernier ressort dans la province d'où l'appel provient.

Les nombreux documents cités par l'Honorable Juge en chef et les recherches historiques faites pour constater l'existence de cette Cour n'ont eu d'autre resultat que de prouver d'une manière bien certaine qu'un tel tribunal composé du Gouverneur en Conseil, comme Cour d'Appel pour l'Isle du Prince Edouard n'existe pas, s'il a jamais existé.

Consequemment l'Appel est bien porté—Ce point règlé, reste la question de savoir si l'Intimée en s'adressant à la Cour Suprême de l'Isle du Prince Edouard, au moyen d'un certiorari pour faire mettre de côté la sentence arbitrale dont elle se plaint. Dans se procédé devant la Cour Suprême, l'Intimée a eu gain de cause.

Mais l'Acte concernant la vente des terres de l'Isle du Prince Edouard "The "Land Purchase Act" contenant une disposition formelle enlevant le recours au procédé du certiorari pour attaquer les procédures des arbitres, et y substituant un mode particulier, l'Intimée ne devait-elle pas recourir au remède particulier que lui indique le Statut pour se proteger contre les erreurs et omissions qui pouvaient se glisser dans les procédés des arbitres?

N'ayant pas jugé à propos d'invoquer le seul remède que lui indiquait la loi, elle ne doit s'en prendre qu'à elle si elle n'obtient pas de faire reformer la sentence arbitrale. Mais au surplus je suis convaincu comme mes honorables collègues que les formalités voulues par la loi ont été remplies par les arbitres et que l'Intimée n'a pas de griefs réels.

No. 5.

The RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF KIMBERLEY to GOVERNOR-GENERAL THE RIGHT HON. THE MARQUIS OF LORNE, K.T., G.C.M.G.

MY LORD, Downing Street, August 16, 1880.

WITH reference to the Earl of Dufferin's Despatch of the 24th February 1876,* relating to the proceedings before the Commissioners under the "Land Purchase Act, 1875," passed by the Provincial Legislature of Prince Edward Island, I have the honour

---

* Not printed.

to request that you will obtain from the Lieutenant-Governor of that Province a full report of the proceedings under the Act in question, containing the following particulars :—

(1.) The awards (in a tabular form), by the Commission, whether during the chairmanship of Mr. Childers or afterwards, including a statement of the acreage, the sums awarded, and any particulars of the annual rent, &c.

(2.) The cases in which the amount was disputed and the result of the dispute.

(3.) The total amount paid.

(4.) Particulars of the sales to the tenants of their holdings up to the present time.

(5.) Some account of the present holdings in the island; for example, the number and total acreage of holdings exceeding 200 acres, of those between 100 and 200 acres, of those between 50 and 100 acres, &c.

As there appears reason to believe that information on this subject might be interesting to the Imperial Parliament, I should be glad if it should be in your Lordship's power to forward the report to me at an early date in order, that if there should be no objection, the particulars may be in the hands of Parliament early next session.

I have, &c.

Governor-General the Marquis of Lorne. (Signed) KIMBERLEY.

office of the Commissioner of Public Lands of this Province, containing a full report of the proceedings of the Commission under the provisions of the "Land Purchase Act, 1875," in order that the same may be forwarded by you to the Right Honourable the Secretary of State for the Colonies.

I have, &c.

The Honourable the Secretary of State, Ottawa. (Signed) T. Heath Haviland, Lieutenant-Governor.

To the Honourable Thomas Heath Haviland, Q.C., Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Prince Edward Island, &c., &c.

Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island,
November 4, 1880.

Sir,

I have the honour to submit a report of the proceedings of the Commissioners under the "Land Purchase Act, 1875," as required in Earl of Kimberley's Despatch to the Governor-General of the 16th of August 1880, specifying as required by the Secretary of State for Canada in his letter to your Honour of the 6th September, the points in which the landlords had not complied with the conditions of their respective grants.

In 1767 Prince Edward Island, with the exception of three small reservations intended for county towns, was divided into 67 lots or townships, containing about 20,000 acres each, 65 of which were disposed of in one day by lottery in London before the Board of Trade and Plantations.

Grants were subsequently issued to the various allottees, which contained the following among other conditions.

That the grantee of each township should settle the same within 10 years from the date of the grant. in the proportion of one person for every 200 acres, such persons to be foreign Protestants or persons who had resided in British America for two years previous to 1767.

That if one third of the land was not so settled within four years of the date of the grants the whole should be forfeited.

The payment of a certain quitrent varying from 6*s*. to 2*s*. sterling per 100 acres, according to the different lots, payable annually on one half of the grant at the expiration of five years, and on the whole at the expiration of 10 years from the date of grant.

On these terms the original proprietors accepted their grants, and in the following year they petitioned the British Government that the island might be granted a separate Government, and offered in order to defray the expense thereof, that such portion of the quitrent which would not be payable until five years after the date of the grants should become payable the first of May 1769, and the payment of the remaining half to be postponed for 20 years.

This application was acceded to by Her Majesty's Government.

During the five years following the establishment of the Local Government in 1768 the quitrents were not paid as stipulated, and at the expiration of 10 years from the date of the grants the condition of settlement as regards population was complied with in only 10 townships. Nine others were partially settled, and the remaining townships neglected.

But in no case were the settlers foreign Protestants.

In 1802 the quitrents in arrears amounted to 59,162*l*. sterling, and the British Government, desirous of encouraging the settlement of the Colony, determined to accept a moderate commutation, discriminating in favour of such proprietors as had exerted themselves to any degree in carrying out the conditions of their grants.

The commuted arrears were not paid. The total amount shown to have been paid up to 1833 was only 6,000*l*. sterling; whereas the total amount by the terms of the grants would have been about 145,000*l*. sterling.

The agitation in the island on the subjects of quitrents and escheat for the nonfulfilment of the conditions of the original grants was commenced in 1770. One of the first acts of the local Legislature was the taking into consideration the non-performance of these conditions. From that time forward the agitation was increasing, various attempts having been made to establish a Court of Escheat.

In 1853 an Act was passed by the provincial Legislature for the purchase of the estates of such proprietors as might be disposed to sell them. This Act received the Royal assent, and between the years 1854 and 1871 13 proprietary estates, consisting of 457,260 acres were purchased, and the office of Commissioner of Crown Lands was created for the purpose of managing the sales of the said lands to the tenants or occupiers.

In Schedule A. to this report may be found the following particulars respecting the working of this Act:—

1. Date of purchase.
2. Acreage of the different estates.
3. Amount of purchase money.
4. Rate per acre paid proprietors.
5. Particulars of holdings purchased by tenants.
6. Acreage rate per acre to tenants.

The proprietors of the greater portion of the island having refused to sell their lands under this Act, and the agitation still continuing, it was agreed upon by the provincial Legislature and some of the largest proprietors that the questions which had hitherto formed the subject of agitation should be referred to a commission with power to devise a system by which the leasehold lands might be converted into freehold. At the suggestion of the proprietors, the commissioners were empowered to enter into all the inquiries that might be necessary, and to decide upon the different questions which should be brought before them.

The Commission was constituted in 1860, the Hon. John H. Gray, of New Brunswick, being nominated by the British Government, the Hon. Joseph Howe, of Nova Scotia, by the Legislature of Prince Edward Island, and the Hon. J. W. Ritchie, of Halifax, by the proprietors.

The Legislature of Prince Edward Island on the 2nd day of May, 1860, passed an Act in advance to give effect to the award of the Commissioners, but on the publication of the award the proprietors raised an objection against the manner in which it provided for the valuation of land, and on this objection the award was ultimately set aside.

The excitement in consequence of what was regarded as the bad faith of the proprietors in refusing to accept the award of the Commissioners became very general all over the Colony. An organisation, known as the "Tenant League," came into existence, and resistance was offered to the collection of rent by the civil officers, so that it became necessary in 1865 to despatch a company of about 200 soldiers from Halifax to the island to assist in the maintenance of the law.

In 1868 a minute of Council urging on the British Government the necessity for the adoption of compulsory measures for the settlement of the land question was forwarded to the British Government.

The Land Purchase Act, 1875, produced a final settlement of an agitation which had for over 100 years greatly retarded the prosperity of the province

Schedule B. contains the following particulars respecting the estates purchased under this Act.

1. The acreage of the various estates.
2. The arrears of rent due proprietors.
3. Gross annual rental reserved in leases.
4. Gross amount of rental received in six years preceding the sitting of Commission.
5. Gross amount awarded by Commission.
6. Rate per acre paid by Government.
7. Particulars of present holdings of land sold under the provisions of the "Land Purchase Act, 1875."
8. Rate per acre charged to tenants.
9. Total amount paid by Government.

Applications to the Supreme Court of Prince Edward Island to set aside the awards of the Commission under "the Land Purchase Act, 1875" were made by the following proprietors, viz.:—

Charlotte A. Sulivan.
Robert Bruce Stewart.
John A. S. Macdonald.
Helen J. Macdonald.
William C. Macdonald.
John A. Macdonald.
Spencer C. B. P. Fane.
Sidney T. and Amelia Evans.

The awards were set aside in the cases of Charlotte A. Sulivan, Robert Bruce Stewart, John A. S. Macdonald, and Spencer C. B. P. Fane, but appeals having been taken to the Supreme Court of the Dominion, and the case of Charlotte A. Sulivan being heard, the decision of the Island Court was reversed with costs.

The case of John A. S. Macdonald was compromised by the payment of the attorney's costs, Mr. Macdonald being allowed interest on the award from the date thereof.

Spencer C. B. P. Fane and Robert Bruce Stewart abandoned their cases and accepted the award. William C. Macdonald's award was affirmed by the Island Court, Sidney T. and Amelia Evans, Helen J. Macdonald, and John A. Macdonald abandoned their cases before they obtained hearings in the Provincial Court and accepted the amounts awarded to them.

An application was made to the Court by James F. Montgomery that the award in his case be referred back to the Commissioners for amendments; the application was granted, but subsequently a compromise was effected, Mr. Montgomery being allowed an additional sum of $1,590 as accruing rent and costs. The foregoing were all the cases in which the amounts awarded by the Commissioners were disputed.

In the case of Colonel Cumberland and wife the sum of $1,000 was deducted from the award, as on the production of titles it was found that "Warren Farm," containing 123 acres, which was included in the award was only held under lease by Colonel Cumberland.

Some delay occurred in perfecting the titles of some of the estates, in which cases the landlords were allowed interest on the amount of the awards until payment was made. This will explain the discrepancy between the sums in the fifth and ninth columns of Schedule B. in the estates of Sidney and Amelia Evans, George A. McNutt, trustee of Mrs. Stephens and Margaret Stewart.

The sums received at this office during the years 1877, 1878, and 1879 in payment of instalments, and interest on purchase money, amount to $177,878 76c.

A much larger sum would no doubt have been received were it not for the great depression in trade existing during that period, causing a decline in the prices usually received for agricultural products.

Whilst some of the tenants are somewhat slow in meeting their instalments as they fall due, the majority are making commendable efforts in that direction, and the public sentiment in the Colony will sustain the Department of Public Lands in firmly but prudently enforcing payment of the balances remaining unpaid by the tenants.

I have, &c.

(Signed) Donald Ferguson,
Commissioner of Public Lands.

Further Correspondence respecting the Occurrences at Fortune Bay, Newfoundland, in January 1878.

No. 1.

Earl Granville to Mr. Lowell.

Sir, Foreign Office, October 27, 1880.

HER Majesty's Government have carefully considered the correspondence which has taken place between their predecessors and the Government of the United States respecting the disturbance which occurred at Fortune Bay on the 6th January, 1878, and they have approached this subject with the most earnest desire to arrive at an amicable solution of the differences which have unfortunately arisen between the two Governments on the construction of the provisions of the Treaties which regulate the rights of United States' fishermen on the coast of Newfoundland.

In the first place, I desire that there should be no possibility of misconception as to the views entertained by Her Majesty's Government respecting the conduct of the Newfoundland fishermen in violently interfering with the United States' fishermen, and destroying or damaging some of their nets. Her Majesty's Government have no hesitation in admitting that this proceeding was quite indefensible, and is much to be regretted. No sense of injury to their rights, however well founded, could, under the circumstances, justify the British fishermen in taking the law into their own hands, and committing acts of violence; but I will revert by and by to this feature in the case, and will now proceed to the important question raised in this controversy, whether, under the Treaty of Washington, the United States' fishermen are bound to observe the Fishery Regulations of Newfoundland in common with British subjects.

Without entering into any lengthy discussion on this point, I feel bound to state that, in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government, the clause in the Treaty of Washington which provides that the citizens of the United States shall be entitled, "in common with British subjects," to fish in Newfoundland waters within the limits of British sovereignty, means that the American and the British fishermen shall fish in these waters upon terms of equality, and not that there shall be an exemption of American fishermen from any reasonable regulations to which British fishermen are subject.

Her Majesty's Government entirely concur in Mr. Marcy's Circular of the 28th March, 1856. The principle therein laid down appears to them perfectly sound, and as applicable to the fishery provisions of the Treaty of Washington as to those of the Treaty which Mr. Marcy had in view; they cannot, therefore, admit the accuracy of the opinion expressed in Mr. Evarts' letter to Mr. Welsh of the 28th September, 1878, "that the fishery rights of the United States conceded by the Treaty of Washington are to be exercised wholly free from the restraints and regulations of the Statutes of Newfoundland," if by that opinion anything inconsistent with Mr. Marcy's principle is really intended. Her Majesty's Government, however, fully admit that, if any such local Statutes could be shown to be inconsistent with the express stipulations, or even with the spirit of the Treaty, they would not be within the category of those reasonable regulations by which American (in common with British) fishermen ought to be bound; and they observe, on the other hand, with much satisfaction, that Mr. Evarts, at the close of his letter to Mr. Welsh of the 1st August, 1879, after expressing regret at "the conflict of interests which the exercise of the Treaty privileges enjoyed by the United States appears to have developed," expressed himself as follows:—

"There is no intention on the part of this [the United States'] Government that these privileges should be abused, and no desire that their full and free enjoyment should harm the colonial fishermen.

"While the differing interests and methods of the shore fishery and the vessel fishery make it impossible that the regulation of the one should be entirely given to the other, yet if the mutual obligations of the Treaty of 1871 are to be maintained, the United States' Government would gladly co-operate with the Government of Her Britannic Majesty in any effort to make those regulations a matter of reciprocal convenience and right, a means of preserving the fisheries at their highest point of production, and of conciliating a community of interest by a just proportion of advantages and profits."

Her Majesty's Government do not interpret these expressions in any sense derogatory to the sovereign authority of Great Britain in the territorial waters of Newfoundland, by which only regulations having the force of law within those waters can be made. So regarding the proposal, they are pleased not only to recognize in it an indication that the design of Her Majesty's Government to arrive at a friendly and speedy settlement of this question is fully reciprocated by the Government of the United States, but also to discern in it the basis of a practical settlement of the difficulty; and I have the honour to request that you will inform Mr. Evarts that Her Majesty's Government, with a view to avoiding further discussion and future misunderstandings, are quite willing to confer with the Government of the United States respecting the establishment of regulations under which the subjects of both parties to the Treaty of Washington shall have the full and equal enjoyment of any fishery which under the Treaty is to be used in common. The duty of enacting and enforcing such regulations, when agreed upon, would, of course, rest with the Power having the sovereignty of the shore and waters in each case.

As regards the claim of the United States' fishermen to compensation for the injuries and losses which they are alleged to have sustained in consequence of the violent obstruction which they encountered from British fishermen in Fortune Bay on the occasion referred to, I have to state that Her Majesty's Government are quite willing that they should be indemnified for any injuries and losses which upon a joint inquiry may be found to have been sustained by them, and in respect of which they are reasonably entitled to compensation; but on this point I have to observe that a claim is put forward by them for the loss of fish which had been caught, or which, but for the interference of the British fishermen, might have been caught by means of strand fishing, a mode of fishing to which, under the Treaty of Washington, they were not entitled to resort.

The prosecution by them of the strand fishery being clearly in excess of their Treaty privileges, Her Majesty's Government cannot doubt that, on further consideration, the United States' Government will not be disposed to support a claim in respect of the loss of the fish which they had caught, or might have caught, by that process.

I am, &c.

Further Correspondence respecting the Occurrences at Fortune Bay, Newfoundland, and other places: 1879-81.

No. 1.

Mr. Welsh to the Marquis of Salisbury.—(Received August 15.)

My Lord, London, August 13, 1879.

I AM instructed to bring to the attention of Her Britannic Majesty's Government the case of the schooner "Mist," Captain Cozzens, of Gloucester, Massachusetts, as made in the affidavit which accompanies this note.

As therein stated, it appears that Captain Cozzens and his crew, while taking squid in Conception Bay, Newfoundland, on the 8th July, 1878, were forcibly compelled to abandon the fishery by the inhabitants of that locality.

This case involves the same violation of the rights secured to the fishermen of the United States by the Treaty of Washington, 1871, as occurred in the transactions at Fortune Bay. The amount claimed for damages is 800 dollars.

I have, &c.

(Signed) JOHN WELSH.

Inclosure in No. 1.

Deposition of John Cozzens.

I, JOHN COZZENS, of Gloucester, County of Essex, State of Massachusetts, do on oath depose and say that in the month of July, about the 8th, I was lying in Broad Cove, Conception Bay, Newfoundland, in the schooner "Mist," of Gloucester, Massachusetts, of which schooner I was master. I went in for bait myself, and crew commenced catching squid for bait by use of jigs. I had taken about 3,000 squid, when the inhabitants of the place, in about sixty boats, surrounded my vessel and threatened to cut our cable unless we stopped fishing. We were obliged to haul in our jigs and stop fishing, as the mob outnumbered my crew five to one. At the time the threats were made we were lying about 300 yards from a lee shore, wind blowing a good breeze, and in case our cable had been cut our vessel would have gone on to the rocks and been lost. We could have taken all the bait we wanted if we had not been stopped by this threatening demonstration. Mr. Yuck, of Portugal Cove, a Custom-house officer, came on board my vessel and said I ought to have bought my bait of the inhabitants or compromised the matter in some way. The men that came off to my vessel were furious in their threats, and they were determined to force me to buy bait of them. I considered that I had a right under the Treaty of Washington to catch all the bait I needed. My fishing for bait did not in any way interfere with the inhabitants; and the whole cause of their attacking me was to force me to buy my bait instead of catching it myself. Finally, I was obliged to buy my bait of the inhabitants, paying 20 cents per hundred for squid, the action of the inhabitants rendering the privileges of the Treaty useless to me. I took 30,000 squid in number. went in five different times for bait that season, and having been deprived of my rights on this occasion, I bought all my bait afterward, not daring to fish for it, costing me in tim and expense 800 dollars. And I hereby claim for my vessel that amount as justly due for being deprived of my rights under the Treaty, for if I could have been allowed to catch my own bait, it would have cost me nothing in addition to the expense of the voyage.

(Signed) JOHN COZZENS.

Gloucester, November 23, 1878.

Massachusetts, Essex, S.S.

On the 23rd day of November, A.D. 1878, personally appeared said John Cozzens, and made oath to the truth of the above affidavit.

No. 6.

The Secretary to the Admiralty to Lord Tenterden.—(Received September 17.)

Sir, Admiralty, September 16, 1879.

I AM commanded by my Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty to transmit, for the information of the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, a copy of a letter, dated the 27th ultimo, from the commanding officer of Her Majesty's ship "Druid" at St. John's, Newfoundland, relative to the fisheries, and reporting that the "Zephyr" was about to proceed to make inquiry as to a disturbance between some American and English fishermen at Trinity Bay, and will proceed about the middle of September to Port au Basque to convey his Excellency Sir John Glover to St. George's Bay.

A similar letter has been sent to the Colonial Office.

I am, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT HALL.

Inclosure 1 in No. 6.

Captain Kennedy to Vice-Admiral Sir E. Inglefield.

Sir, "Druid," at St. John's, Newfoundland, August 27, 1879.

I HAVE the honour to report that the "Druid" and "Zephyr" are in port, and the "Plover" is daily expected from the west coast.

The steam-yacht "Northumbria," belonging to the Earl of Lonsdale, arrived here on the 17th instant; the French man-of-war steamer "Adonis" on the 18th instant; and the United States' screw-ship "Kearsage" on the 21st.

On the arrival of the next mail from Halifax, about the 5th September, I shall proceed on my second cruize to Labrador, touching at several ports on the north-east side of the island where the French have rights of fishing. After visiting the Labrador coast, I shall proceed down the west coast to the Bay of Islands, where I expect to meet his Excellency the Governor, who is desirous of visiting some recently-discovered coal-fields in the interior, after which I shall return here with his Excellency.

The "Zephyr" will proceed to Port au Basque about the middle of September to meet his Excellency, who goes there by steamer, and will convey him to St. George's Bay, from whence she will join me at Bay of Islands.

The squadron continues to be remarkably healthy.

I inclose copy of "Zephyr's" sailing orders for Port au Basque.

Having, on the 25th August, received official notice from his Excellency the Governor of a disturbance between some American and English fishermen at Trinity Bay, at the request of his Excellency, I have ordered the "Zephyr" to proceed there with Judge

Prowse to inquire into the matter. The particulars will be forwarded on the return of the "Zephyr" to this port. Sailing orders attached.

The "Zephyr" will carry out her other orders on her return.

I have, &c.

(Signed) W. R. KENNEDY.

Inclosure 2 in No. 6.

Sailing Orders.

(Memo.) "Druid," at St. John's, August 25, 1879.

IN consequence of a disturbance having taken place at Smith's Sound, Trinity Bay, between some English and American fishermen, you are, after embarking Mr. Prowse, J.P., to proceed to that place with all dispatch to inquire into the same.

You are to place the "Zephyr" at the disposal of Mr. Prowse, and return with him to this port at the conclusion of the inquiry.

(Signed) W. R. KENNEDY, Captain and Senior Officer.

To Lieutenant and Commander Clutterbuck,
Her Majesty's gun-boat "Zephyr."

Inclosure 3 in No. 6.

Sailing Orders.

(Memo.)

THE "Zephyr" being in all respects ready for sea, you are to proceed to Channel, Port au Basque, in time to meet his Excellency Sir John Glover, who will arrive there by the steamer leaving St. John's on or about the 13th September.

2. Having embarked his Excellency, you are to take him to Codroy, or wherever he may desire, and place yourself entirely at his disposal.

3. After disembarking the Governor, you are to join me at Bay of Islands.

Dated on board Her Majesty's ship "Druid," at St. John's, the 27th August, 1879.

(Signed) W. R. KENNEDY, Captain and Senior Officer.

To Lieutenant and Commander W. R. Clutterbuck,
Her Majesty's gun-boat "Zephyr."

No. 8.

Mr. Bramston to Lord Tenterden.—(Received September 26.)

Sir, Downing Street, September 26, 1879.

I AM directed by the Secretary of State for the Colonies to transmit to you a copy of a despatch from the Governor of Newfoundland, inclosing a communication from the United States' Consul at St. John's, with accompanying statements, relating to the alleged opposition offered to the American fishing schooner "Howard Holbrook," at Smith's Sound, Trinity Bay, on the 16th August last. The Governor's despatch also incloses a Report by Judge Prowse, whom he deputed to inquire into the circumstances of the case, and certain depositions relating to the matter are promised by next mail.

* No. 6.

In submitting these papers for the consideration of the Marquis of Salisbury, I am desired to request that you will direct his attention to the Act of the Legislature of Newfoundland, Cap. 6 of 1876, "To amend the law relating to the coast fisheries," section 3 of which prohibits the taking of squid "by means of any seine, bunt, or other such contrivance."

The question of how far certain provisions of the Law of Newfoundland are or are not at variance with the intention of the Treaty of Washington is, Sir Michael Hicks Beach believes, now under the consideration of the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, in connection with the claims of American fishermen arising out of the Fortune Bay disturbances.

On this point I am desired to call attention to paragraph 5 of Sir John Glover's despatch, in which he asks for instructions.

I am, &c.
(Signed) JOHN BRAMSTON.

Inclosure 1 in No. 8.

Governor Sir J. Glover to Sir M. Hicks Beach.

Sir, Government House, Newfoundland, August 28, 1879.

I HAVE the honour to inclose, for your information, copy of a letter from the United States' Consul at this port, dated the 23rd instant, putting forward a complaint that opposition had been offered by our fishermen to the crew of the American schooner "Howard Holbrook," when attempting to seine for squid at Smith's Sound, in Trinity Bay.

2. This appearing to be a repetition of the interruption which occurred in Fortune Bay in 1878, I at once applied to the Senior Naval Officer for the service of one of Her Majesty's ships of war to convey to the spot a legal officer charged with the duty of inquiring into the correctness of the statements put forward to sustain the case which I conclude would, if supported by evidence, have been followed by the United States' Government submitting a claim for compensation.

3. The Senior Naval Officer, complying with my request, dispatched Her Majesty's ship "Zephyr" to Smith's Sound, and on her return I was furnished with the inclosed Report of Judge Prowse, the legal officer deputed by my Government to conduct the inquiry, which proves most fully, by sworn evidence, that the whole charge against our fishermen was frivolous, and void of all sustainment.

4. It will be seen from the evidence inclosed that the question involved is, whether our local laws for the protection of a fishery common to two Contracting Parties, but passed subsequent to the date of the Treaty, are binding on the one party who have not assented to what they consider a modification of, or indeed a violation of, contract.

5. I should desire to be instructed on this point, because the great number of American vessels frequenting our waters in the exercise of their fishery rights under the Treaty of Washington may, ere the present season be ended, produce an indefinite number of claims for compensation on the part of the American Government.

6. The depositions which should accompany Mr. Prowse's Report are so voluminous that it has been found impossible to forward them by the present mail, but they will be sent by the next.

Trusting my proceedings may meet your approval, I have, &c.
(Signed) JOHN H. GLOVER.

Inclosure 2 in No. 8.

Mr. Molloy to Governor Sir J. Glover.

United States' Consulate, St. John's, Newfoundland,
Sir, August 23, 1879.

HEREWITH beg to inclose statement of Captain Daniel McFaden, of the schooner "Howard Holbrook," of Gloucester, Massachusetts; also statement of Martin Ryan, of Torbay, pilot of said vessel, complaining of the interference of Cooper and others, of Smith Sound, Trinity Bay, in preventing his procuring supply of bait, which I have the honour to call your Excellency's attention to, and reply at earliest convenience.

I have, &c.
(Signed) THOMAS N. MOLLOY,
United States' Consul.

Inclosure 3 in No. 8.

Statement of Daniel Mc Faden.

I, DANIEL McFADEN, of Gloucester, in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and United States of America, being duly sworn, do depose and say that I am captain of the American "Howard Holbrook," and that on the 16th day of August, 1879, I was at Smith's Sound, Trinity Bay, that I had a seine with which I attempted to seine bait, but the natives at that place opposed my setting the seine. One man named Cooper, speaking for the others, said that if I attempted to use my seine they would cut it to pieces and break up our dories. There were thirty men prepared there to do this. Not being able to catch my bait myself by using my seine, I offered to pay the native fishermen 75 cents per barrel for herring, but they demanded 1 dollar. I was finally obliged to purchase squid at 22 cents per hundred. I needed 30,000 squid, but as I could not purchase them there I left Trinity Bay for Torbay, where I arrived on the 22nd August. If I had been allowed to set my seine I could have taken all the squid I needed.

Mr. Cooper said that no one should set a seine for squid within 3 miles of these shores and river. He said he knew the law. I do not know whether Cooper was an officer of the Government of Newfoundland or not.

(Signed) DANIEL McFADEN.

Inclosure 4 in No. 8.

Statement of Martin Ryan.

I, MARTIN RYAN, of Torbay, Newfoundland, being duly sworn, do depose and say that I was with Captain McFaden, of the American schooner "Howard Holbrook," at Smith Sound, Trinity Bay, when he was prevented by the native fishermen from using his seine. We were all ready to shoot the seine, and had it in the dory; Mr. Cooper and his people forbid our setting it. Cooper said if we shot the seine, he and the other native fishermen would cut it to pieces; that he knew the law, and we should not seine. There was no doubt that the seine would have been destroyed, as the people are determined not to allow the Americans to seine, as it would deprive them of the money they would receive for bait.

I have an ice-house in Torbay, and have been engaged in the business for four years. I sell about 100 tons of ice each year to the American fishing schooners at from 4 to 5 dollars per ton.

It is a great advantage to our people to have the American schooners come in for ice and bait, as they pay us in cash for what they purchase. Within the last two years a great many persons at different points along the coast are fitting up ice-houses to sell ice to the Americans. The general feeling of the operative fishermen along the coast of Newfoundland is opposed to the Americans taking their own bait with seines or otherwise, but they desire to have them come to this coast and purchase bait and ice. I know of no American vessels fishing within 3 miles of the coast of this island. About two years ago the schooner "Concord" was interfered with while fishing at Torbay.

Sir, Government House, Newfoundland, August 25, 1879.

I AM instructed by his Excellency the Governor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 23rd instant, with inclosures, relating to an alleged interruption of American fishermen by Newfoundland fishermen in Smith's Sound, of Trinity Bay, on the 16th instant, and I am to inform you that his Excellency will cause a strict investigation to be made into the circumstances attending the alleged occurrence.

Inclosure 6 in No. 8.

Governor Sir J. Glover to Captain Kennedy.

Sir, Government House, Newfoundland, August 25, 1879.

I HAVE the honour to inclose copy of a letter from the United States' Consul, together with copies of depositions made by Daniel McFaden, master of the American vessel "Howard Holbrook," and Martin Ryan, a British subject, employed as pilot of the "Howard Holbrook," relating to obstruction offered by British fishermen to the taking of bait by the Americans, on the 16th August, at Smith's Sound, Trinity Bay,

I would suggest, for your consideration, that one of Her Majesty's ships under your command be detailed to proceed to Smith's Sound, in Trinity Bay, for the purpose of ascertaining the correctness of the statements put forth in the depositions made before the United States' Consul, and I consider it advisable, in Imperial interests, that a gentleman of legal acquirements and local knowledge should conduct the inquiry. If in accordance with your views, I propose that Mr. Prowse, Q.C., Judge of the District Court of St. John's, be the officer to proceed on the duty before named, who will be instructed to caution Newfoundland fishermen against taking the law into their own hands.

I have, &c.

Inclosure 7 in No. 8.

Captain Kennedy, R.N. to Governor Sir J. Glover.

Sir, "Druid," at St. John's, August 26, 1879.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Excellency's letter, inclosing a copy of a letter from the United States' Consul, together with correspondence relating to a disturbance between some English and American fishermen, at Smith's Sound, Trinity Bay, on the 16th of this month..

In compliance with your Excellency's wishes, I have detailed Her Majesty's gunvessel "Zephyr" to convey Mr. Prowse, Q.C., to that part, to ascertain the truth of the charges advanced by the Americans, and I have to add that the "Zephyr" sailed this morning in pursuance of those orders.

I have, &c.

Inclosure 8 in No. 8.

Mr. Prowse to the Colonial Secretary.

Sir, St. John's, Newfoundland, August 27, 1879.

HAVING proceeded to Smith's Sound, in Trinity Bay, in Her Majesty's ship "Zephyr," by order of the Government, to investigate the facts connected with an alleged obstruction by Newfoundland fishermen to the taking of bait fishes by the crew of an American schooner called the "Howard Holbrook," I have the honour to report, for the information of his Excellency the Governor, that, having made a careful examination of the facts at Smith's Sound, where we arrived last evening, and having taken a number of depositions there, which are appended to this Report, I am enabled to state that the facts of the case are as follow:—

The American schooner "Howard Holbrook" arrived at Aspey Cove, Smith's Sound. On Thursday, the 14th August, the master came in a dory, with the witness Martin Ryan, to that cove to seine for squid; the man referred to in the depositions,

John Cooper, and his two men-servants, were on the beach preparing to have their breakfast. A conversation took place between Ryan and Cooper, the purport of which is given by Cooper, and confirmed by Ryan. Ryan said to Cooper that he was a Newfoundlander, and could seine; Cooper replied that he could not. Ryan said he would; and Cooper replied, "You'd better try." Not a word was said by McFaden, the master of the American schooner, and not a word was said by Cooper or any one else to him. Cooper alleges that he threatened no violence, and that he never intended to do any.

After the short conversation, which lasted a few minutes, Ryan and the master of the schooner went down to Lower Lances Cove, which is a short distance from Aspey Cove, and there shot their seine, and hauled some herring.

The schooner remained in the Sound until the following Monday, buying squids and jigging them, and that instead of any obstruction being offered to the American (Ryan's evidence shows) they were treated with the greatest kindness and hospitality.

From the short experience that I had of Cooper, who is an immense man, very outspoken and honest, with a great fund of humour, I feel convinced that his statement* is substantially correct; his story is also confirmed, almost word for word, in all important points, by Ryan's own deposition taken before me, and by the evidence of other witnesses.

Knowing that the Government were most anxious to protect the rights of the fishermen of the United States under the Washington Treaty, I took special pains to obtain accurate information respecting the obstruction complained of by Consul Molloy; and I am happy to inform the Government that in this instance, at all events, there is no cause of complaint against our fishermen.

Ryan, who is favourably disposed towards the Americans, shows in his evidence† the wisdom of the law against seining squid, and his opinion will be confirmed by every fisherman in the Colony.

I have to thank Lieutenant Clutterbuck, R.N., commanding Her Majesty's ship "Zephyr," and his officers, for extreme courtesy and kindness, and for the ready assistance given me in carrying out the object of my mission.

I have, &c.

The Secretary to the Admiralty to Lord Tenterden.—(Received October 1.)

My Lord, Admiralty, October 1, 1879.

I AM commanded by my Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty to transmit, for the information of the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, a copy of a letter dated the 17th ultimo, from the commanding officer of Her Majesty's ship "Druid," the Senior Officer of Her Majesty's ships and vessels employed on fishery duties on the coasts of Newfoundland, stating that there have been no disputes with the Americans since the "outrage" complained of at Smith's Sound, Trinity Bay; and also reporting the orders hs had issued to the commanding officers of the "Plover" and "Zephyr" to act with the utmost caution in dealing with any questions which may arise out of the proceedings of American fishermen.

I am, &c.

P.S.—A copy of this despatch has been sent to the Colonial Office.

Inclosure in No. 9.

Captain Kennedy to Vice-Admiral Sir E. Inglefield.

Sir, "Druid," at St. John's, Newfoundland, September 17, 1879.

I HAVE the honour to inform you that there have not been any disputes with the Americans since the "outrage" complained of at Smith's Sound, Trinity Bay, which the "Zephyr" was sent to investigate, and the particulars of which was forwarded by last mail.

* See Inclosure 3 in No. 11. † See Inclosure 2 in No. 11.

There is no doubt, however, that collisions are likely to arise from time to time with the American fishermen, who are not disposed to abide by such Colonial laws as have been made subsequent to the Treaty of Washington; in this they are supported by the United States' Government, and the question will have to be settled by the Home authorities.

In the meanwhile, I have directed Captain Stewart and Lieutenant Clutterbuck to act with the utmost caution in dealing with any questions of this nature, and to take care that the acknowledged rights of the Americans are not infringed, and to warn all persons who interfere with them that they will have to answer for the same.

It seems not to be generally known along the coast that the Americans have, since the payment of the Halifax Award, "the right to participate in the Newfoundland inshore fisheries, and to procure bait for the prosecution of the bank and deep-sea fisheries"; this, coupled with the fact that they ignore all local laws, which the Newfoundlanders are forced to acknowledge, is calculated to irritate the latter, and to drive them to retaliatory measures, which it will be my duty to suppress.

Statement of Martin Ryan.

MARTIN RYAN, of Torbay, fisherman, sworn, who, upon his oath, saith:—On Tuesday, 12th August, 1879, I left Torbay in the American banking schooner "Howard Holbrook," Daniel McFaden master; we went first to Portugal Cove, Conception Bay, looking for squids for bait.

On Wednesday following we anchored in Smith's Sound; the next day, Thursday, we went to Aspey Cove, and I got the seine in the dory and was going to seine; I spoke to a very stout man named John Cooper, who was on the beach with his two servant men preparing to get their breakfast; I said I was a Newfoundlander belonging to near St. John's, and I said that I could seine bait; he said I could not, I said that if I saw a chance I would; he, Cooper, said "You had better try;" the only talk was between Cooper and me; we rowed off then, and that was all that passed between us.

The master of the banker, Daniel McFaden, did not say a word to Cooper, and Cooper did not say a word to him. We then went down to Lower Lance, shot our seine, and got some herring in it. We remained in Smith's Sound from that time up to Monday morning getting squids, jigging them, and buying them from the Newfoundland fishermen. There was another American banker there getting squids, buying them, and jigging them; a Nova Scotia banker, and two Fortune Bay schooners, also getting squids. None of us got full fares of squids, we only got about 5,000 squids there, and got more squids in Torbay.

On Sunday evening we spent the evening, the two American captains and myself, in the house of a man named Leate; we did not mention a word about the obstruction to him. There was not the least obstruction to us by any one except what I have referred to about John Cooper.

The people of Smith's Sound were only too glad to sell bait to us, and were most civil and obliging to the Americans. In several places we offered money for hospitality afforded to us, and it would not be received. We only paid 25 cents for most of our squids, some 30 cents.

It is not the practice in this Colony to seine for squids, and in my opinion it would not succeed; generally the squids do not approach sufficiently close to the shore to make seining successful; jigging seems to have no effect in driving away squids, but rather collects them together; and the best places for squids in my experience in Torbay is where we have constantly jigged for years. For some cause, which I cannot explain, the squids always seem to frequent particular places in the harbours.

I consider that if a seine were shot any way near where the fishermen were jigging squids, it would certainly have the effect of driving the squids away, at any rate for some time, and probably would spoil the place as a jigging-ground. After my twenty-five years' experience, I consider jigging the best method of getting squids for bait; I would not approve of seining for squids, it would be ruinous to the fishery.

I consider the affair with Cooper in Smith's Sound has been made too much of; I did not attach the least importance to it. No threats whatever were used, except as I have mentioned, and I did not mind what he (Cooper) said; he may have asked me to breakfast; I don't remember; we were not talking together, Cooper and I, for more than five minutes.

Sworn before me at St. John's, this 27th day of August, A. D. 1879.

Inclosure 3 in No. 11.

Statement of John Cooper.

Northern District, Smith's Sound, Newfoundland.

THE examination of John Cooper, of Smith's Sound, planter, taken upon oath, who saith:—On Thursday, the 14th August, 1879, there were three banking schooners in the Sound, two belonging to the United States, and one to Nova Scotia; two were in Aspey Cove (opposite to where I live, Rocky Brook, Smith's Sound), and one schooner was in Lower Lance Cove, just below my place on the opposite shore. There were also two schooners belonging to Grand Bank, Newfoundland, in the Sound, looking for bait. The crews of these different schooners were jigging squids, both in Lower Lance Cove and Aspey Cove (places which are resorted to as jigging coves), and the masters of the schooners were buying squids from the Newfoundland fishermen as well as jigging them themselves. No American banker, during their stay in the Sound, made an attempt to shoot a seine in my presence and was prevented from doing so by our fishermen.

A man who told me his name was Martin Ryan, of Torbay, was in Aspey Cove on the Thursday aforesaid. I asked him was he going to haul bait; he said he was a Newfoundlander, a man from Torbay, and he would haul bait when and where he liked. I said to him that I did not think it was lawful for him to haul bait (meaning squids). If it was herring he might get what he wanted; I said we had seines, and we would haul herring for him. Martin Ryan said he would haul it himself. I replied, "You had better try," adding, laughing, "We are going to have some breakfast; come and have some with us." I never threatened to cut up his seine and break up the dory. Ryan and the master of the schooner went away at once and shot their seine in Lower Lance Cove (another jigging cove), where they got some small herring, which they threw away. No one interfered with them in any way, and if the people had intended to use violence or force they could have stopped Martin Ryan and the master of the American banker from seining. They saw him preparing to seine, and they saw him shoot his seine, and they never interrupted him or came near him, or threatened him in any way. Martin Ryan wanted squids; he would not take herring.

On the same day that the occurrence took place in Aspey Cove, the master of the American banker and Ryan bought squids from the Newfoundland fishermen around Smith's Sound. There was not enough squid to supply the five vessels with full fares of squid, but all they could jig for themselves and get jigged for them they obtained. We have never hauled squids with a seine, we believed that it was illegal. We would have had no objection to their hauling herring, or hauling herring for them. There were no threats of violence used towards Martin or the master of the United States' banking schooner that was with him. There was no talk whatever about cutting up the American banker's seine, no threats, and no intimidation used towards him by me or by any one in my presence. All my conversation was with Martin Ryan. The master of the American banking schooner may have been in the dory with Martin Ryan and the rest of the dory's crew, but I did not know the master from any one else. I did not address any one in the dory but Martin Ryan. The talk between me and Martin Ryan lasted only a few minutes, This same American schooner remained in the Sound four days after this conversation near my house, and bought and jigged squids, and to my knowledge seined. This whole matter has been magnified, and the facts incorrectly stated by Martin Ryan and Daniel McFaden. The people of Smith's Sound are only too glad for fishermen to come from all parts and buy bait from them, or to assist foreign fishermen to get bait.

Statement of John Steele.

THE examination of John Steele, of Burgoyne Cove, Smith's Sound, Trinity Bay, fisherman, taken upon oath, who saith:—On Thursday, the 14th August, 1879, I was over in Lower Lance Cove jigging squids for Ryan and the schooner he was aboard of. I saw some herrings with the crew, which they told me they hauled with the seine. Asked them if they hauled many; said only a few. Ryan wanted squids. They were giving 30 cents a hundred for the squids. There were not enough squids to supply all the bankers then in Smith's Sound looking for bait.

Statement of Peter Willar.

THE examination of Peter Willar, of Rocky Brook aforesaid, fisherman, taken upon oath, who saith:—I was present on Thursday, the 14th August, 1879, when the conversation took place between Martin Ryan and Cooper; I could not hear the words. Cooper spoke to no one but Ryan. Only our three men there—Cooper, Duffett, and myself. Cooper was laughing; heard him invite Ryan to breakfast. We were having our breakfast on the beach at the time. I have heard Ryan's and Daniel McFaden's statements read; they are untrue, no such threats were used. No other men belonging to Smith's Sound were on the beach at the time but us three. I think Ryan had four men with him. I did not know that either of them was the master of the schooner. No one spoke but Ryan.

Statement of John Leate.

THE examination of John Leate, of Upper Lance Cove, Smith's Sound, Trinity Bay, taken upon oath, who saith:—I remember Thursday, the 14th August instant, when Martin Ryan had the conversation with John Cooper about seining for squids; John Cooper did not speak to any one but Martin Ryan, and he did not use any angry tone or threats. He laughed several times when speaking to Ryan about seining, and he asked Martin Ryan and the dory's crew to come up and have some breakfast. There was no man in Lower Lance Cove or the vicinity in Smith's Sound who threatened any American with violence, and I do not believe there is a person in the Sound who would use violence towards any one about seining. Neither Martin Ryan nor the master of the United States' schooner were driven away from Smith's Sound. They remained for four days after this conversation jigging and buying squids.

On Sunday evening following the masters of the two United States' banking schooners spent the evening at my house in company with Ryan; they did not say one word about being prevented from seining. The only difference whatever was between Martin Ryan and John Cooper. There have been three American bankers in Smith's Sound looking for bait this summer, and there has not been one angry word between them and the people of Smith's Sound. Martin Ryan and the master of the schooner bought and jigged all the squids they could lay hands on. There was not enough for the five vessels; neither of them got a full fare.

This affair is a made-up thing, and the facts stated both by Ryan and Daniel McFaden are untrue.

I am aware that Ryan and the American crew shot their seine in Lower Lance Cove immediately after the conversation with Cooper, and I have been informed that before Ryan came up to Aspey Cove on the 14th August he was cautioned about seining for squids in Lower Lance Cove by a man named Reuben Toop, and told he would be fined for seining squids, and he did not seine them, but did so the same day, after he left Aspey Cove.

Statement of James Duffett.

THE examination of James Duffett, of Rocky Brook, Smith's Sound, fisherman, taken upon oath, who saith:—I remember Thursday, the 14th August, 1879. I was present in Aspey Cove, in Smith's Sound, opposite to where I live, when Martin Ryan came there with the American banker's crew; they came on the beach; there were only three of us present—Cooper, myself, and Peter Willar. I could not hear the words that passed between Ryan and Cooper; I went away from them a little way eating my breakfast. I saw Cooper laugh several times when talking to Ryan; heard only the last words when Cooper turned round towards me; he called out to Ryan to come and have breakfast; Cooper spoke to no one but Ryan. I do not believe that Ryan was threatened that his seine would be cut and his dories smashed. Ryan went away after the conversation and hauled herrings soon after in Lower Lance Cove; Ryan wanted squids, not herring. We never seine for squids, as we know that it is illegal. Ryan remained here four days gathering up squids, jigging them themselves, and getting them jigged by the people of Smith's Sound.

Governor Sir J. Glover to Sir M. Hicks Beach.

Sir, Government House, October 1, 1879.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your despatch of the 2nd September, with inclosures (two), respecting the alleged interference with United States' fishermen in Conception Bay in July 1878.

My Government have caused a judicial investigation to be made into the circumstances attending the several visits of the American schooner "Mist" to Broad Cove and its neighbourhood during the years 1877, 1878, and 1879. The inquiry was conducted by Mr. Prowse, one of the Judges of the District Court of St. John's, copy of whose Report I inclose, together with the depositions of the several witnesses taken upon oath, from which it would appear that some discussion took place relative to the taking and purchase of squid, between Newfoundlanders, on board the schooner "Mist," on behalf of the master of that vessel, and some Newfoundlanders in boats near the schooner, on or about the 8th or 9th July, 1877, and not during 1878 as sworn to by John Cozzens.

I have, &c.

Mr. Prowse to the Colonial Secretary.

Sir, St. John's, Newfoundland, September 19, 1879.

HAVING been requested by the Government to examine into and report upon the claim of Mr. John Cozzens, master of the schooner "Mist," of Gloucester, Massachusetts, I have the honour to state, for the information of his Excellency the Governor, the following is a correct statement of the facts as well as I could ascertain them:—

The schooner "Mist" was piloted into Broad Cove by a fisherman belonging to the place, Daniel Tucker, about the 8th or 9th July, 1877, in the evening. The schooner was anchored in a part of the cove where squids are generally jigged. Cozzens next morning early began jigging for squids and was getting them fast. The fishermen of Broad Cove were also about the same ground in their boats jigging. About 7 A.M. one of the boats in which were George Tucker and Henry Tucker came alongside the schooner to sell their squids; they could not agree upon a price with Cozzens; Cozzens then said he would not buy, he would jig his own bait. Henry Tucker said if he would not buy he should not jig. Daniel Tucker and his friends who were aboard the "Mist," or whose boats were fastened to her, took Cozzens' part, and said Cozzens should jig; Henry Tucker then called out to Cozzens' crew, "Men, haul in them jigs." Angry words also passed between George Tucker (who was in the boat with Henry), and Daniel Tucker, who was aboard the "Mist," and the principal disturbance was between these two. The fishermen of the cove thought Daniel Tucker would not let Cozzens buy bait from any one but his friends.

Daniel Tucker and his brother Richard, who side with Cozzens, both say that some one in the boats called out, "Cut his cable;" the other witnesses deny this, but, at any rate, if it was said, it was only an empty threat, as all agree that no attempt was made either to board the schooner or to do her any injury. The dispute lasted a short time, and the fishermen soon went ashore to their breakfasts.

Cozzens and his crew continued their jigging and were catching squids very fast, as is proved, first, by the master's own statement that he had caught 3,000 squid; secondly, by the evidence of George Reginald Tucker, who, when he came alongside just after breakfast, found the crew so busy hauling in squids that they could not attend to him, and told him to come by-and-bye; towards the afternoon the squids became scarcer, and then Cozzens began to buy from the people at 20 cents per 100; his crew, however, continued jigging each day, and, finally, obtained a large quantity, according to the statement of Benjamin Squires, to whom Cozzens showed what he had caught, 10,000 squids. This the witness Bernard Curtis, master of the banker "J. W. Roberts," proves to be as large a quantity of squids as he ever knew a banking schooner's crew to jig. All the evidence goes to prove that the bankers generally buy their squids, for the obvious reason that it would take the crew too long to jig their own bait. Mr. Cozzens' claim is based on the fact of his having been prevented from catching bait on this trip in July 1877, but it is clearly shown that, so far from being prevented, he actually, on that trip, caught a larger quantity than any other banker for the season. Mr. Cozzens' statement as to being surrounded by sixty boats is contradicted by the fact that there are, according to the last census, only forty-three boats in the place; also as regards the wind being on shore, this statement is directly contradicted by all the witnesses, and I should consider that very little weight ought to be attached to the evidence of one who, as is shown by Mr. Tulk, the Preventive Officer's, evidence, attempted to pass off a forged receipt on him for his light dues.

Broad Cove is a very small place, the people are very peaceable, industrious, and thrifty; all this dispute arose from jealousy because some were making more out of the stranger than others; it was a petty local squabble.

Statement of Benjamin Squires.

To wit, Central District, Broad Cove, Newfoundland.

THE examination of Benjamin Squires, of Broad Cove, fisherman, taken upon oath, who saith:—I remember the American schooner "Mist," Cozzens master, being in Broad Cove in July 1877. When Cozzens came in he bought squids from some of the people and not from others; some of the people said he ought to buy from all hands, if he would not buy from all he should not jig. Cozzens said he would not buy his bait, he would jig it. On the first morning after he came in he did jig his bait; he also jigged bait on the two other days he remained in the cove. No one interfered with him or prevented him from jigging. No one offered him any violence, or injured his jiggers or any other part of his fishery gear. The dispute principally arose amongst the people themselves. Some of the Broad Cove men who had sold squids to Cozzens remained aboard, and were jigging from his vessel, and it was only from those who were aboard of his schooner, and jigging for him, that he would buy. The fishermen in the boats said he should buy from all hands. Those aboard the schooner said he should not. Afternoons, Cozzens bought from all hands, and jigged a large quantity himself. Not much the first day, bait was scarce, except in the morning; but he did well on the second and third days. Cozzens came into Broad Cove again that summer, after, and bought and jigged his bait as he did before. He was also in Broad Cove this summer getting bait. On neither occasion did he say one word about being injured or interfered with by the Broad Cove people. No one in Broad Cove prevented Cozzens from jigging what bait he liked. I was aboard of his schooner and saw the crew jigging each day. They jigged about 10,000 squids themselves. I saw the tubs on deck, and could tell what they caught. Cozzens showed me what his crew had jigged; he did not buy more than 20,000 squids. The wind was not on the shore, it was south south-west, and off the land; it was blowing a good breeze. Cozzens' crew on that trip jigged as much squids as any other banker which was in Broad Cove that summer. Generally the crews don't trouble themselves to jig, they prefer buying their bait, and the crew walk about ashore. Cozzens only arrived early on that morning, and he could not have taken 500 squids when the dispute arose. Mr. Tulk did not arrive until 4 in the afternoon, and Cozzens then had all the squids that were caught that day bought. At the time of the dispute there were about ten boats around the schooner, and most of these were single-handed. There are only forty boats in Broad Cove.

Statement of Henry Tucker.

THE examination of Henry Tucker, of Broad Cove, fisherman, taken upon oath, who saith:—I remember going to Cozzens' schooner "Mist" about the 8th July, 1877, to sell him squids; it was about 7 A.M. There were some Broad Cove fishermen aboard jigging squids from the stern of the schooner. Cozzens would buy no squids from me; he would only buy from those who were aboard of his vessel, or fastened on to her. I asked him to buy our squids. He said no, he was going to jig. We said if he would not buy our squids he should leave the place, or haul in his jiggers. Notwithstanding this he kept jigging away. Daniel Tucker and George Tucker began to jaw. Daniel was aboard the schooner; George was in the punt with me. Dan Tucker and the other Broad Cove men aboard the schooner said he should jig. There were then about ten boats about the schooner, some single-handed, some with two hands. All left the schooner then and came ashore. We did not go near the schooner again until Mr. Tulk came in the afternoon about 4 P.M. I believe Cozzens was jigging all that day. Squids were scarce that day except in the morning. We went aboard after Tulk came and sold Cozzens our squids; he gave us 20 cents a hundred. No one prevented Cozzens getting squids as much as he liked, and I believe he jigged a great deal of his squids. There was no disturbance nor any row, except what I have mentioned. No one offered any violence to Cozzens, or injured his jiggers or his gear. Cozzens came in again to Broad Cove for bait on that same summer, and was also in Broad Cove this summer. The wind was south-south-west, and not on the land; it was off the shore. The crew of the bankers generally don't jig much, they mostly buy all their bait, and generally walk about ashore when they come in.

Statement of Daniel Tucker.

THE examination of Daniel Tucker, of Broad Cove, fisherman, taken upon oath, who saith:—I remember piloting in the American schooner "Mist," Cozzen master, into Broad Cove in July 1877. As soon as I anchored the vessel I came ashore. Went out again to her pretty early next morning, the 8th July, or thereabouts. I went aboard the schooner; the crew of the schooner were jigging. My brother, Richard Tucker, and my cousin, Joseph Tucker, came with me, and I believe they tied on to the schooner and jigged squids. In the morning a number of boats were near the schooner jigging squids. Henry Tucker came with George Tucker to the side of the schooner; they asked Cozzens to buy their squids. He said what would they ask, they said 25 cents a hundred. He said that he would give 15 cents; they said they would not give them for that. Cozzens then said he would jig them. Henry Tucker said if he would not buy he should not jig himself. Henry Tucker called out to Cozzens' crew, "Come, men, haul in them jigs." Cozzens said he would jig. George Tucker said to me, "Why did you bring this man in here that would not buy bait?" I said I only showed him the way the vessel brought me here. My brother and my cousin came aboard the ship; there were about twenty boats about the schooner. I heard some one in the crowd say, "Cut his cable." No one of the boats' crews, however, about the schooner made any attempt to do any injury to the vessel or to her fishing gear. Cozzens told them that the first man would cut the cable he would fall. The principal talk was between me and George Tucker. I took Cozzens' part. I had to had to go to Portugal Cove, and I left the vessel when the row was over. It did not last very long, and was all talk; and it did not prevent Cozzens from getting his bait. Cozzens came into Broad Cove again that same summer; he also came in last year, and was into Broad Cove this year. He never said one word to me about any damages that he had sustained on account of the row in 1877, and he did not sustain any damage. The bankers nearly always buy their squids. They jig a few, but their principal supply is bought from the fishermen. It would take too much time for a banker's crew to catch their squids on jigs.

Statement of Richard Tucker.

THE examination of Richard Tucker, of Broad Cove, fisherman, taken upon oath, who saith :—I was aboard of Cozzens' schooner "Mist" on the 8th July, 1877. I know that Cozzens jigged squids, some before the row and after the row, and he was not prevented from getting his bait, for he both jigged and bought his bait both before and after the row. I was aboard the schooner when the row commenced. Henry Tucker was the first man who asked Cozzens to buy bait ; they could not agree on the price ; Cozzens said if he did not get the bait for his price he would jig himself. Henry said he should not jig, and he called out to Cozzens' crew, "Haul in them jigs." There were some words then between my brother Daniel and George Tucker. Heard some talk about cutting the cable, but no one in the fishing boats made an attempt to come aboard the schooner, or to commit any injury, and it soon ended, and was all talk, no one struck, and nothing injured. I came ashore to my breakfast. When I went out again to the schooner after my breakfast, Cozzens and his crew were jigging, and were too busy getting their squids to buy, and they told John Tucker's son, George Reginald Tucker, to come by-and-bye, they were catching them so fast then.

Statement of Bernard Curtis.

THE examination of Bernard Curtis, master of the banking schooner "J. W. Roberts," upon his oath, saith :—I have been engaged in the banking business for seven years. For one year I sailed out of Province Town, Massachusetts. In all my experience I have never known the crew of a banking schooner to jig more than 10,000 squids ; it would delay the vessel too long for the crew to get their own bait, and the invariable practice for all the bankers, both British and American, is to buy their bait ; it is obtained in that way so much more speedily, and is fresher and in better condition.

Statement of George Tucker.

THE examination of George Tucker, of Broad Cove, fisherman, taken upon oath, who saith:—I remember when the American schooner "Mist," Cozzens master, came into Broad Cove in July 1877. I went out to the schooner in the morning before breakfast to sell squids. Henry Tucker was in the boat with me. Cozzens would not buy our squids. Daniel Tucker, of Broad Cove, was aboard of the schooner jigging squids, and the crew of the schooner were also jigging squids. Cozzens said he was going to jig his own squids, and he would not buy from us. There were a good many boats fastened on to the schooner jigging squids for him. Henry Tucker told the men in the schooner to haul in their jigs. I spoke to Daniel Tucker, who was aboard the schooner, said, "You are the first man that ever brought these Americans here to jig for themselves." He gave me impudence, and I replied. The people in the schooner went on jigging away. All the boats that came off with us went ashore then. The whole dispute arose because Cozzens would only buy from some who were there jigging for him fastened on to his schooner or aboard, and not from the people of the cove generally. The whole dispute amounted only to some angry words, and principally was between Daniel Tucker and me. Cozzens and his crew jigged a great deal of squids; they were anchored right on the jigging ground. They only bought 20,000 squids from the people of the cove, and that was the most amount; the rest, 10,000 squids, their own crew jigged. Cozzens' crew jigged more squids for themselves that summer on that trip than any other American banker that came into Broad Cove. Cozzens came in again to Broad Cove that summer and got squids; he was also in several times last summer. There was nothing whatever done by the people of Broad Cove to prevent Cozzens from jigging; no injury to him, and no one threatened to cut his cable or destroy his gear. After Mr. Tulk came at 4 o'clock, Cozzens bought squids from all of us at 20 cents a hundred. The wind that day was off the land, the schooners bow was towards the beach. Generally speaking, the American bankers buy most of their squids; sometimes they jig a little. Unless squids were very plenty, it would take a banker's crew a week to get their squid. Generally, the bankers take a very short time to bait, and it suits them best to buy. There would be too much delay to jig for themselves. All the Newfoundland bankers buy their bait, and so do all the other banking schooners.

Statement of William Tulk.

THE examination on oath of William Tulk, Preventive Officer of Her Majesty's Customs at Portugal Cove, Newfoundland, who saith:—On the 8th July, 1877, saw an American schooner going into Broad Cove, and I went down there to collect light dues from her. I went aboard of Cozzens' schooner "Mist," and he paid me his light dues. Cozzens did not say one word to me concerning any dispute with the Broad Cove fishermen about bait. I never advised him to buy bait from the Broad Cove fishermen, nor do I remember having any conversation with Cozzens about squids. The whole dispute, as I understand it, arose from a man named Daniel Tucker, of Broad Cove, who piloted Cozzens into Broad Cove, advising him to buy his squids only from him, Daniel Tucker, and his friends who were aboard the schooner with Cozzens jigging. This created a jealousy on the part of the other people in the cove, from whom Cozzens refused to buy any squid. I believe Cozzens jigged a great deal of his squids, about 10,000; the other 20,000 he bought. I have never known any banking schooner's crew to jig so large a quantity as 10,000 before, 2,000 or 3,000 is generally the quantity, often less. I have never known more than 10,000 squids to be jigged by the crew of a banking schooner. Bankers almost invariably buy their bait; it is a much more convenient way of getting it. If a crew had to jig their bait it would, except under very favourable circumstances, take from ten to fifteen days to get their necessary quantity of bait. The wind that day was south-south-west, and off the land.

Cozzens came into Broad Cove again in the summer of 1877. He made no complaint to me about the way that the Broad Cove people had treated him. Next year (1878) paid me his light dues again, when he visited Broad Cove; made no complaint. This spring he came again, put into Portugal Cove. I asked if he had paid his light dues; he said yes, produced receipt purporting to be signed by Vavasour, Preventive Officer, St. Lawrence, Newfoundland. I said the receipt was not correct, and Cozzens admitted to me afterwards it was a forgery, and he paid me his light dues. I do not believe any of Cozzens' statement to be correct.

No. 19.

Sir E. Thornton to Earl Granville.—(Received June 5.)

(Extract.) Washington, May 24, 1880.

DURING a conversation which I had with Mr. Evarts at the State Department on the 20th instant I spoke to him about the Fortune Bay affair, and expressed some surprise at the step which the President and he had recommended to Congress, to the effect that the import duties upon fish and fish-oil, the produce of the British provinces, should be re-imposed as they existed before the Treaty of Washington. I stated that it appeared to me that this was an unfriendly step, and, if carried out by Congress, would render an agreement upon the question at issue much more difficult than it would otherwise have been. Previously to the transmission of the President's message, I should have had great hopes that an arrangement might have been arrived at; but, when it was attempted to put upon Her Majesty's Government a pressure to which, under similar circumstances, the United States' Government would have certainly objected, it did not seem as if the latter was desirous of finding a solution of the question.

I also pointed out to him that the Colonies of Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island had allowed American fishermen the privilege of fishing in their waters very shortly after the conclusion of the Treaty of Washington, although the Act of Congress relieving fish and fish-oil, the produce of Prince Edward Island, from import duties in the United States, was not passed till the 1st March, 1873, and Newfoundland was not admitted to the same immunity till May 1874, and although United States' citizens had enjoyed the right of fishing in the waters of Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland, their Government had never consented to reimburse the duties which had been paid on the fish and fish-oil imported from those Colonies into the United States during that time.

Mr. Evarts denied emphatically that he had wished to recommend a measure which could be thought to be unfriendly towards Her Majesty's Government; nor did he consider that it was so, or that it could be viewed in that light. He said that he had in September 1878 pointed out to Her Majesty's Government that the question was a serious one, and that it was the opinion of the United States' Government that a false construction had been given to the Treaty, to the prejudice of the United States' fishermen. He had maintained from the beginning of the discussion that the right of fishing given by the Treaty was free from all restrictions which might have been imposed upon native fishermen by local laws either anterior or subsequent to the date of the Treaty. He thought that Her Majesty's Government had not sufficiently considered the gravity of the case, had paid but little attention to it, and had unnecessarily delayed replying to the representations of the United States' Government. He asserted that until the season of 1878 no American fishermen had visited the coasts of Newfoundland for the purpose of fishing, and that when they did so, they had met with such a reception that until an answer should be received from Her Majesty's Government they had not ventured to repeat the visit. This answer had now arrived, just as the fishermen were preparing their equipments for this season, and were anxious to know whether they would be allowed to fish on the coasts of Newfoundland. But Lord Salisbury in his note of the 3rd ultimo had maintained that in the affair at Fortune Bay the Americans had violated both the local laws and the provisions of the Treaty, and that the native fishermen were therefore justified in attacking them, and preventing them from pursuing their ordinary mode of fishing. It was therefore impossible that, as the natives were thus encouraged to resist the rights of the Americans, the latter could again expose themselves to such losses as they had suffered in Fortune Bay.

It would have been very different, Mr. Evarts argued, if the authorities had taken the matter in hand, and if the question had been settled by a Court of Justice, but that it could not be that American fishermen should be exposed to the violence of a mob, and he expressed his surprise that Her Majesty's Government should have justified the means which were used for preventing Americans from enjoying their rights under the Treaty.

Under these circumstances, as it appeared that Her Majesty's Government had finally determined to interpret the Treaty in a manner entirely at variance with the expressed opinion of the United States' Government, and to justify the Newfoundland fishermen in taking the law into their own hands and forcibly preventing American fishermen from exercising the rights to which their own Government considered them entitled, Mr. Evarts declared that there was no ground for the charge which I had made, that he was now the first to recommend to Congress a violation of the Treaty. On the contrary, he maintained that it was we who had allowed and sustained an infraction of the Treaty by the Newfoundland fishermen, looking at the interpretation given to it by the United States. There was then nothing left but one of two things: either to protect the American fishermen by the presence of men-of-war, which might have led to a conflict, or to re-impose the duty on fish, the taking off of which had been part of the price paid by the United States for the free enjoyment of the right of fishing.

I asked Mr. Evarts whether he could conscientiously assert that, if British subjects had availed themselves of the privilege of fishing on the United States' coasts, they would have been allowed advantages, either as to the mode or time of fishing, over the native fishermen? He replied that if the former had attempted to take any such advantages, the United States' Government would immediately have recommended that the same rights should be allowed to the natives. "But," I said, "such a step would have led to the entire destruction of the fisheries." This idea Mr. Evarts ridiculed; indeed, it seems to be the firm conviction of those in this country who have most studied the matter, that no amount of catching will lead to any perceptible diminution in the quantity of fish; but that there are other causes, not yet well understood, arising from local circumstances, storms, &c., which occasionally drive the fish away from the points which they have been in the habit of visiting.

Mr. Evarts thinks that there has been unnecessary delay in replying to his representations, and that sufficient attention has not been paid to his arguments; and that Lord Salisbury's note of the 3rd ultimo seemed to imply that the Newfoundland fishermen were justified in their attack upon the Americans, and would be encouraged to a repetition of similar conduct on future occasions.

There is also a strong desire on the part of the United States' Government, in view of the approaching end of the term for which fishing rights were granted by the Treaty, that it should not be supposed that the value which has been assigned to the fisheries by the Treaty and the Halifax Award is one which can ever be admitted or acknowledged by the United States as a precedent for any future arrangement.

I had the honour to transmit copies of the President's Message to Congress, accompanied by Mr. Evarts' Report upon the subject in my despatch of the 18th instant.* The papers which were transmitted with Mr. Evarts' Report have not yet been printed.

I also inclose copies of a Bill which was submitted to the House of Representatives on the 18th instant by Mr. Loring, a member from Massachusetts, which proposes that Collectors of Customs should be instructed to collect on fish and fish-oil the duties imposed before the Act of the 1st March, 1873; and that from the duties so collected the sum of 125,000 dollars should be set apart for the compensation of the United States' fishermen "who were driven from Fortune Bay on the 6th January, 1878." The Bill was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, by which I understand that it has not yet been taken into consideration.

"Whereas, by the provisions of the Treaty of Washington of 1871, the right of inshore fishing along the coasts and shores, and in the bays, harbours, and creeks of all Her Britannic Majesty's dominions in Canada, and of the Island of Newfoundland, were secured to the inhabitants of the United States; and

"Whereas, by the provisions of said Treaty a Commission was appointed to meet at Halifax and award the compensation to be paid by the United States for this grant in addition to the freedom of the fishery in United States' waters, and the remission of all duties upon fish and fish-oil imported into the United States from the said dominions of Her Britannic Majesty; and

"Whereas the said Commission awarded to Her Britannic Majesty the sum of 5,500,000 dollars as such compensation, which has been duly and fully paid; and

"Whereas the fishermen of the United States have been driven by violence from the fishing-grounds in which such freedom of fishery has been granted by said Treaty, and laws in limitation of their rights have been passed by the local Legislatures of said dominions, and Her Britannic Majesty's Government have refused all redress therefor, and have supported the claim of the said dominions to enforce said legislation: therefore

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, that section 1 of an Act entitled 'An Act to carry into effect the provisions of the Treaty between the United States and Great Britain, signed in the city of Washington the 8th May, 1871, relating to the Fisheries,' and approved the 1st March, 1873, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

"Sec. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to instruct the Collectors of Customs in the various Collection-districts of the United States to collect on all fish and fish-oil imported into the United States from the said dominions of Her Britannic Majesty the duties heretofore imposed thereon by the provisions of section 2504, schedule F, of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

"Sec. 3. That from the amount of duties so collected the sum of 125,000 dollars be, and the same is hereby, set apart for the compensation of the fishermen of the United States who were driven from Fortune Bay, in Newfoundland, on the 6th January, 1878, and that the same be paid into the hands of the Secretary of State, to be by him distributed among said claimants according to the proofs of damages submitted to him in their behalf."

WITH reference to previous correspondence respecting the question which has arisen with the United States' Government arising out of the occurrences at Fortune Bay in January 1878, I have the honour to transmit to you, for your information and for that of your Government, a copy of a note addressed by the Marquis of Salisbury to Mr. Hoppin on the 3rd April last upon this subject.†

Earl Granville to Sir E. Thornton.

Sir, Foreign Office, June 9, 1880.

I HAD to-day an interview with the United States' Minister at this Court respecting the Fortune Bay affair.

Mr. Lowell stated that there was a much stronger and deeper feeling on the other side of the Atlantic upon this question than was appreciated here. There was, he said, a feeling that a wrong had been done which ought to be redressed.

We agreed that this was a reason why both Governments should try to settle the question.

I observed that the present Government had not their reputation to make as to a wish to act in a conciliatory manner towards the United States, but that we could make no concession which could not be made with perfect justification.

I then asked Mr. Lowell whether he had any suggestions to make. He replied, "none"; that his instructions were to conform his language to that of Mr. Evarts' note. I inquired whether it would not be possible to separate the two questions of the interpretation of the Treaty and of the attack upon the American fishermen. He replied that he feared that it might be too late to do this, but that, at my request, he would be prepared to ask the question.

Mr. Lowell added, not officially, but only as his personal opinion, that there would be no precipitate action on the part of the United States. The President, he said, had power to act, but the moment for doing so was at his own discretion.

REFERRING to my conversation with your Lordship on the 9th instant, I have the honour to acquaint you that I took pleasure in communicating by cable the next day to my Government the friendly sentiments of your Lordship in respect to the differences between the two countries on the Fishery question.

I have this morning received a telegram from Mr. Evarts, by which he desires me to communicate his great gratification at the expression by your Lordship of the friendly disposition of the British Cabinet—a disposition which, he states, he should have been ready to assume from the public character of its members. He adds that the President will be quite ready to entertain any considerations which may be presented to the Secretary of State to relieve the question of the fisheries from its present difficulties, and that the Bill now pending before Congress extends to the President adequate discretionary power to meet an accord between the two Governments respecting the fishery rights of the United States under the Treaty, should such an accord be established during the recess of Congress.

I HAVE not been able to ascertain that any decision has been arrived at by the Committee on Foreign Affairs with regard to the Bill submitted to the House of Representatives by Mr. Loring, proposing to reimpose import duties upon fish and fish-oil, the produce of the British provinces, nor do I believe that the matter has been considered in that Committee. It is certain that no Report has been made to the House upon the subject.

Neither have the newspapers paid much attention to it.

No. 28.

Sir E. Thornton to Earl Granville.—(Received June 20.)

(Extract.) Washington, June 7, 1880.

WITH reference to my despatch of the 31st ultimo, I have now the honour to transmit herewith printed copies of the correspondence which was forwarded to Congress on the 17th ultimo, together with the message of the President respecting the Fortune Bay affair.

The greater part of the correspondence is already known to the Foreign Office. I beg, however, to call attention to a paragraph in a letter from the United States' Commercial Agent at St. Pierre, Miquelon, to the State Department (p. 16), in which he contradicts the statement that the American fishing schooners were obliged to leave the bay on account of the antagonism of the natives, and says that they remained there for a fortnight or more after the occurrences of the 13th January, using the same seines, except the one which was destroyed.

At p. 93, and following pages, will be found a Report addressed to Mr. Evarts by Messrs. Babson and Foster, who were sent, during the season of 1879, on board of the United States' ship "Kearsarge," to inquire into the conduct of the inshore fisheries by the American fishermen, and the treatment which they received at the hands of the local authorities and population.

These gentlemen did not, however, find much to complain of, and heard of only one instance in which the native fishermen of Whitehead, on the northern part of Cape Breton, refused to allow the Americans to use seines for catching squid for bait. It appears, however, from this Report, that in general there has been a great falling off in the fisheries, and particularly in the mackerel fishery, and it is probably on this account that the American fishermen are of opinion that the relieving of the fish from import duties and the Halifax Award were a high price for the small return which they declare that they have derived from their fishing rights under the Treaty of Washington, and that they would have made a much greater profit if the fish caught on the United States' coasts, and that which in former times they were in the habit of purchasing from the Canadians and importing as their own catch, had been protected by import duties on all other fish.

I understand that Mr. Evarts has been earnestly urging the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives to come to a decision with regard to the recommendation made by the President in his message on the Fortune Bay affair, so that some Act upon the subject may be passed before the closing of the Session. The Committee does not, however, appear to be entirely in accord with Mr. Evarts' views. But I understand that a Bill has been prepared and approved by a majority of the Committee, and will be shortly submitted to the House, perhaps to-day. It is said that it has a long preamble, accusing Her Majesty's Government of having failed to carry out the provisions of the Treaty of Washington.

Section 1 proposes to re-impose the duties on fish and fish-oil coming from Canada and Newfoundland.

Section 2 provides that, whenever an arrangement may have been come to with Her Majesty's Government as to the interpretation and execution of the Fishery Articles of the Treaty, the President may remit the collection of the duties.

Section 3 authorizes the President to prevent American fishermen from fishing on the coasts of the British provinces until the two Governments are in accord on the subject.

Section 4 authorizes the Secretary of State to audit the claims of the sufferers by the Fortune Bay affair, and appropriates the sum necessary for their payment by him.

Such are the statements made by the newspapers with regard to this Bill, and they are probably more or less correct.

It is added that Mr. Cox, the Chairman of the Committee, is preparing a Report to accompany the Bill and support it. It is also said that the minority of the Committee will present another Report, accompanied by a Resolution to request the President to take steps to obtain indemnity for the sufferers by the Fortune Bay affair, and to secure to United States' citizens their rights under the Treaty, and, failing to accomplish these purposes, to procure the abrogation of the Treaty.

The newspapers generally are paying but little attention to the subject.

Depositions of James L. Anderson, James D. Norwood, Peter Thibodau, James Challoner, and Charles Dagle, taken in relation to the trouble between the Canadian and American Fishermen at Aspee Bay, Cape Breton.

Gloucester, September 8, 1879.

I, JAMES L. ANDERSON, of Gloucester, Massachusetts, and master of the schooner "Cadet," of Gloucester, do, on oath, depose and say that I left Gloucester on the 7th June, 1879, bound for Aspee Bay, Cape Breton, to take squid. My vessel was fitted and furnished with a seine for the taking of squid, as I considered that, under the provisions of the Treaty of Washington, I had the right to take fish of any kind within 3 miles of the shores of the Dominion, and also to use seines or other apparatus for the purpose. I arrived at Aspee Bay on the 20th June; the American schooner "Bay State," Captain Goodwin, arrived the same day. He was fitted with a seine for the purpose of taking squid. The inhabitants of Aspee Bay came off to my vessel, and seeing the seine on deck, asked me what I intended to do with it. I told them that it was for the purpose of taking squid; they then left my vessel and went on shore. The next morning I went on shore and was met by a fisherman named Gwin, who informed me that the fishermen of the place had consulted together and had made up their minds that no seine should be set in the bay, and if it was attempted they would cut it up and destroy it, and that they would serve me the same.

He gave as a reason for this that they believed the using of the seine would drive away the squid and deprive them of bait for their own fisheries, and ruin their business of jigging squid. I explained to them that squid had been seined in Chebucto for several years, with no more perceptible decrease of the squid than when they were caught by jigs; that the same amount of squid would be taken from the water by the jigs, as there are some 200 men who fish for squid at that place. I found that it was useless to argue, as every time I went on shore the threats were repeated, and that they would be carried out.

I then attempted to compromise by offering to pay them for all the squid I might take in the seine, at the same rate as if they caught them with jigs, and divide the money among them equally. They said that if my seine was used in the bay that it would establish a precedent for seining there, and other vessels would not then be prevented, after one had been allowed to seine. Finding I could not use my seine, and knowing that if it was cut up I should not have it to use in other places, and be deprived of the means of getting my cargo, I felt obliged to give it up. When the squid came into the bay there was a large fleet of bankers, and if I could have used my seine I could have supplied every vessel with bait and have also loaded my own vessel with squid to sell the vessels on the banks. For ten successive days the bay was swarming with squid, but not one would take the hook, and the people could not take any.

All of the vessels lying there were obliged to leave without obtaining any bait, and I left also, for Chetticamp. Failing to find squid there, I returned to Aspee Bay on the 21st July, and found squid in the bay that at that time would take the hook.

I commenced buying of the fishermen, having over sixty boats with 180 men employed. I paid for this lot of squid 561 dollars in cash, getting about two-thirds of a cargo. This cargo I carried to St. Pierre, and sold the squid for 6¼ fr. per 100 to the Jersey fishermen. In a week's time I came back to Aspee Bay, and found squid plenty in the bay, but they would not take the hook. I could have taken all the squid I wanted if I could have used my seine. I remained three days, and finding that I could not obtain any squid, as they would not bite, I left the bay, and I then started for Newfoundland, and in the dense fog the current set the vessel on the Little Miguelon, where she was lost. My loss on being deprived of the use of my seine on my first trip would be 5,000 dollars, as for this season I could have loaded my vessel in three days on the first trip, and would have had them in St. Pierre's at least three weeks ahead of any other baiter, and as the squid failed at St. Pierre this season, I could have got 1 dol. 50 c. per 100 for them. The cargo I carried there three weeks later I got 1 dol. 25 c. per 100 for. I should have been at no expense in buying the squid, as my crew could have set the seine and handled the fish; on my second visit I paid the people 561 dollars for a partial cargo, and the third trip I could have seined my cargo, but was not allowed to, and the squid not biting, I could not purchase from the people.

My third trip, by being so deprived, I suffered a loss of at least 2,000 dollars. The delay, the uncertainty, and the consequent waste of time, and the continued expense of my vessel and crew obliging me to cruize from port to port in search of fish, when I could have realized full cargoes every time I was there, with certain sales, will not be computed in this amount, but simply the cost of the squid to me at Aspee Bay if I could have seined, and the value of the squid at St. Pierre.

In this whole matter no fishery officer or officer of the law forbade my seining; the threats and all demonstrations came from the local fishermen acting independent of all law, and combined together to act as a mob, violence enforced by numbers being their only authority. I told them time and again that under the Treaty of Washington I had a right to seine, as the Government had paid 5,500,000 dollars for this right; they replied that they cared nothing for Treaties or rights; they were going to take care of themselves; the money the Government had got done them no good, but when they got cash for squid it did them some good.

The squid on those shores are about a third grown, and are not mature enough for spawning; they are about 6 inches long, and they grow about 2 inches in a summer; they are the young squid, and every season they come on these coasts, always the young fish; by the use of the seine it makes the catch a certainty, while the hooking process cannot be depended upon.

On this trip my vessel was under a fishing licence, with a permit to touch and trade. I had a few boots and shoes and some cottons, in case I had occasion to trade. On arriving at Aspee Bay I reported to the Customs officer at North-west Harbour, and entered my vessel; the most of my goods I carried to St. Pierre.

Gloucester, September 10, 1879.

I, James D. Norwood, master of the American schooner "Messina," of Gloucester, do, on oath, depose and say that I left Gloucester for St. Ann's or Aspee Bay, Cape Breton, for a cargo of squid to sell for bait. I had been in these ports in previous years, and knew that the inhabitants would oppose the use of a seine in that bay, and consequently I went prepared to buy my squid.

I stopped at St. Ann's about a fortnight; got no squid, as they would not bite; then went to Aspee Bay and found that the squid would not take the hook, and that the people had opposed the use of any seine by Captain Anderson or any other person. I could have hired a seine and loaded my vessel if I had been allowed what I considered my rights under the Treaty of Washington, but finding the people in such a determined and threatening attitude, I knew it would be useless to try to get my cargo there, and left for Newfoundland. I arrived at Torbay, where I bought 300,000 squid of the local fishermen, paying 900 dollars in cash for them.

The same hostility to Americans taking their own bait with seines exists at Newfoundland as at Cape Breton. The fishermen can make twice the amount of money taking squid for the American bankers and baiters than they can in their usual avocation of cod fishing, and they will not be deprived of this lucrative trade if they can help it. It is cash to them, and the women and boys join with the local fishermen in the light work of taking squid with jigs. The whole community shares in the squid fishery and in the money they receive for them.

In my judgment, full 100,000 dollars is paid annually on these shores for bait alone, and this could all be saved if the Americans could use their seines to take bait; and the bait, if not purchased by the American fleet, would be useless and valueless to the people.

I have been informed that there is a local law against seining squid at Newfoundland. The present mode of taking squid by jigs is a slow process, costing the Americans a great loss of time, when, if the seine could be used, it would save two-thirds the time it now takes to get bait. Each banker now has to spend at least thirty days out of each trip in going around from place to place for bait, as when the squid will not take the hook none can be obtained, and the seine makes the catch a certainty.

Gloucester, September 10, 1879.

I, Peter Thibodau, master of the American schooner "Lizzie J. Jones," of Gloucester, do, on oath, depose and say that I left Gloucester in the said vessel on the 3rd June, 1879, for Aspee Bay, Cape Breton, on a trip for squid. I was not fitted with a seine, but was prepared to buy for this season; that the previous year I was at Aspee Bay with Captain Dagle, and knew that the fishermen there would not, under any circumstances, permit a seine to be used there.

I was at Aspee Bay when Captain Anderson, of the schooner "Cadet," tried to use his seine, and Captain Anderson asked me to assist him in using his seine for seining the squid; but the local fishermen, to a man, united in threatening destruction to the seine or any one who attempted to use it in that bay.

I am perfectly sure that the seine would have been destroyed, as the people warned me from having anything to do with it, and were constantly on the watch to see if Anderson attempted to use it, and were prepared to attack him on the first demonstration on his part. I did not get but 3,000 squid at Aspee Bay. My vessel would take, as a cargo, 500,000.

All of the vessels could have been loaded with squid, could the seine have been used; the bay was swarming with them.

I told the people that Americans had the right to take these squid with seines, and they said they cared nothing for that; they should and would protect themselves; if they allowed seining it would ruin their business of jigging squid, and then they thought the seining would drive away the squid from the bay.

At this place the local fishermen have no money, except what they get from the Americans for squid, and they say if this trade is taken from them they will have no money to pay their taxes, &c.

They usually receive from the local traders goods and groceries for the fish they take during the season, while the Americans pay cash for the squid and bait they buy.

I was obliged to leave Aspee Bay, as I could not obtain any squid, as they would not bite.

I then went to Newfoundland to Conception and Trinity Bays, where I bought my squid of the local fishermen.

The feeling is the same at Newfoundland as at Aspee Bay aganst seining.

No American will be allowed to use a seine to take squid in any of the bays or coves of Newfoundland under penalty of destruction of the seine. I have heard the people say this over and over again, and know that it is impossible to obtain what we consider our rights in this respect under the Treaty of Washington.

White Point, Br. Vic., August 17, 1879.

James Challoner, of White Point, Aspee Bay, being duly sworn, do depose and say that about the 20th July, 1879, Captain Anderson, of the schooner "Cadet," of Gloucester, came to see me, and said that his vessel, the previous season, had done very well with squid, which they had purchased here and had sold at St. Pierre Miquelon; and that there were ten vessels this year engaged in the same business, and eight of them did come to this bay for the purpose of getting squid and carrying them to the banks for sale to the bankers, and remained here until about the 16th July. Captain Anderson and Captain Goodwin of the "Bay State," had a seine for the purpose of seining squid in the bay, and did not attempt to use it, because the fishermen would not allow them to do so; they threatened to cut the seine if they placed it in the water; there never has been but one seine cast in this bay, and had Captain Anderson thrown his seine he would have swept the whole school of squid in the cove, and the fishermen would have been deprived of all their bait for the season. Last season the Americans purchased their squid, giving 20 cents per 100, and this, when the squid are plenty, is a source of profit and a large part of the business of the inhabitants. Captain Anderson could have purchased all he wished, but if the fishermen had allowed him to seine they would have lost the money paid for the squid by the cod fishermen from the banks. No opposition was made to Captain Anderson's catching squid by hook and line.

American and French bankers come here every summer for bait, and if Captain Anderson had taken all the squid by his seine the bankers would have been forced to purchase of him instead of the native fishermen, of whom there are about 150. I am not aware of any Colonial law against securing squid. The only reason the inhabitants threatened Captain Anderson was that he would ruin their squid catch. The only fishery officer lives at Fragnish, down the coast. Some Newfoundlanders living near here attempted, a little while ago, to use seines for taking caplin, but the natives would not permit them to do so. I have been a resident here for thirty years, and engaged in the business of purchasing fish.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 17th day of August, 1879.

(Signed) J. H. SEARS, Ensign, United States' Navy,
United States' Ship "Kearsarge."

Charles Dagle, captain of the schooner "Joseph Story," being duly sworn, doth depose and say that he was at Aspee Bay, Cape Breton, in the latter part of June, 1879, for the purpose of purchasing squid to carry to St. Pierre for bait for the French bankers; that while he was there Captain Anderson, of the schooner "Cadet," of Gloucester, Massachusetts, who came for the purpose of catching squid at that place, and squid not being obtained in sufficient numbers by jigging, attempted to use a squid seine for the purpose of catching the squid, which schooled in great numbers, but would not bite at the jig. The inhabitants of Aspee Bay threatened that if he set his seine they would cut it, and there would be trouble, as selling squid was their only way of making money during the summer season, and if a seine was used in the cove all the squid would be taken or driven away, and they would lose all their summer's employment, as squid was the only bait they could obtain for catching cod. They were willing that Captain Anderson should jig his squid or purchase of them. Captain Anderson left the bay without a trip of squid, while if he had used his seine he would probably have filled his vessel.

That I have just come back from Torbay, Newfoundland, near St. John, with 94,000 squid, which were all purchased of the inhabitants there. That there is a law in force in Newfoundland against seining squid, which forces us to purchase of the natives, as we have no time to take them by the slow process of jigging.

Sir E. Thornton to Earl Granville.—(Received June 27.)

(Extract.) Washington, June 14, 1880.

WITH reference to my despatch of the 7th instant, I have the honour to inclose copies of the Bill with regard to the fishery clauses of the Treaty of Washington, of which I gave a synopsis in that despatch.

I also inclose copies of the Report submitted to the House of Representatives, together with the Bill from the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

It will be seen that the language of the Report is not moderate; its principal argument is, that Her Majesty's Government gave by the Treaty full right of free fishing on the sea coasts and shores of the British provinces without being in any way subject to their local laws. It ignores altogether that the stipulation was that the inhabitants of the United States should have, in common with the subjects of Her Majesty, the liberty to take fish on those coasts and shores.

The last paragraph of page 5 of the Report intimates that, if the Dominion choose that a Commission should be organized to consider questions with regard to reciprocal trade, its demands with regard to fish and all other articles might be listened to.

But the Resolution reported by the Committee with regard to such a Commission has not been passed by Congress.

It is said that, although a joint Resolution passed by the two Houses has decided that the Session shall be finally adjourned on the 16th instant, the inclosed Bill will be taken into consideration by the House, perhaps to-day, and passed before the close of the Session. I cannot, however, conceive that the Senate will have time to take it up before that date, nor till Congress shall meet in December next, so that it is not likely to become law till then.

I also inclose copies of a Resolution submitted to the House on the 9th instant by Mr. Rice, a member from Massachusetts, and once Governor of that State, proposing that the President should take measures for securing indemnity on account of the Fortune Bay affair, and to procure the early abrogation of the fishery Articles of the Treaty. The Resolution was accompanied by a Report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, copies of which are likewise inclosed.

The newspapers have made but few comments upon the subject.

Inclosure 1 in No. 29.

46th Congress, 2nd Session.—House of Representatives, 6453.

[Report No. 1746.]

A Bill relating to certain provisions of the Treaty of Washington.

MR. COX, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported the following Bill as a substitute for H. R. 6242 :—

"A Bill relating to certain provisions of the Treaty of Washington.

"Whereas by the provisions of the Treaty of Washington of 1871 the liberty of inshore fishing on the sea-coasts and shores, and in the bays, harbours, and creeks of all Her Britannic Majesty's dominions in Canada, and of the Island of Newfoundland, without being restricted to any distance from the shore, was secured to the inhabitants of the United States; and

"Whereas by the provisions of said Treaty a Commission was appointed to meet at Halifax and award the compensation to be paid by the United States for this grant, in addition to the freedom of the fishery in United States' waters and the remission of all duties upon fish and fish-oil imported into the United States, being the produce of the fisheries of said dominions of Her Britannic Majesty; and

"Whereas the said Commission awarded to the Government of Her Britannic Majesty the sum of 5,500,000 dollars as such compensation, which has been paid by this Government; and

"Whereas the fishermen of the United States have been driven by violence from fishing grounds in which such freedom of fishery has been granted by said Treaty, and Her Britannic Majesty's Government have refused all redress therefor, and in justification thereof support the local legislation of said dominions restrictive of such liberty, notwithstanding said provisions of said Treaty; and

"Whereas the Government of the United States and the Government of Her Britannic Majesty are not in accord as to the interpretation and execution of said provisions of the Treaty of Washington; therefore

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, that the duties on fish-oil and fish, being the produce of the fisheries of the Dominion of Canada (including Prince Edward's Island) and of the Colony of Newfoundland, imported into the United States, as such duties were imposed by law before the fishery Articles of the Treaty of Washington came into operation, and before the passage of the Act of the 1st March, 1873, entitled 'An Act to carry into effect the provisions of the Treaty between the United States and Great Britain, signed in the City of Washington the 8th May, 1871, relating to the fisheries,' be, and the same are hereby, reimposed, and shall be collected to the same effect as they were in force before the passage of the said Act of the 1st March, 1873; said duties hereby imposed being as to such fish at and after the rate mentioned in Schedule F, and as to such fish oil at and after the rate mentioned in Schedule M of section 2504 of the Revised Statutes:—Provided, however, that such duties shall not be imposed or collected upon such fish or fish-oil unless the same shall be imported on or after the 1st July, 1880.

"Sec. 2. That whenever and as soon as the Government of the United States and the Government of Her Britannic Majesty shall be in accord as to the interpretation and execution of the fishery Articles of the Treaty of Washington as respects the liberty of the inshore fishery of the said Dominion of Canada and of the Colony of Newfoundland, as conceded by said fishery Articles, and in respect of the exercise of that liberty by the inhabitants of the United States, it shall be lawful for the President of the United States to issue his Proclamation to that effect, and to remit the collection of duties under or by virtue of this Act from and after such date as in and by such Proclamation he shall designate for such remission.

"Sec. 3. That the President is hereby authorized and empowered at any time while the duties reimposed by the provisions of this Act are in force and required to be collected, if in his discretion he shall think the public interests so require, to issue his Proclamation restraining, in such manner and degree as he may see fit, the inhabitants of the United States from the exercise of their liberty of fishing within three miles of the coasts and shores of Her Britannic Majesty's said dominions, or any parts thereof, until the Government of the United States and the Government of Her Britannic Majesty shall be in accord as to the interpretation and execution of the fishery Articles of the Treaty of Washington as respects the said liberty of the inshore fishery of the said Dominion of Canada and of the Colony of Newfoundland as conceded by said fishery Articles, and the same to revoke, and from time to time to reissue, as in his discretion the public interests may seem to require.

"Sec. 4. That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to examine into and audit the claims of our fishermen for loss and injury sustained by and from the interruption of their exercise of the liberty of the inshore fishery at Fortune Bay in January 1878, and their expulsion from said fishery; and that the sum necessary to compensate said fishermen for such loss and injury, to be paid and distributed to them under the direction of the Secretary State, be, and the same hereby is, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

46TH CONGRESS, 2ND SESSION.— HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

[REPORT No. 1746.]

Fishery Provisions of the Treaty of Washington.

MR. COX, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, submitted the following Report: (To accompany Bill H. R. 6453).

The Committee on Foreign Affairs, to whom was referred the message from the President of the United States communicating certain correspondence with the Government of Great Britain in regard to the alleged outrages on the American fishermen at Fortune Bay and the Province of Newfoundland, and also House Bill 6242, "relating to certain provisions of the Treaty of Washington," introduced by the Hon. Mr. Loring, of Massachusetts, report the accompanying substitute for said Bill, for which they ask the favourable consideration of the House.

The preamble of the Bill has five several recitals. As to these there can be no controversy.

The first recites the provisions of the Treaty of Washington of 1871 as to the liberty of inshore fishing. The second recites the meeting of the Commission at Halifax, and the object thereof under said Treaty. The third recites the award to Her Britannic Majesty of 5,500,000 dollars, as compensation paid by the United States for the freedom of the fishery. The fourth asserts the fact that the fishermen of the United States were driven by unlawful force from the fishing-grounds in which such freedom of fishery had been granted, and asserts the refusal of redress therefor. It recounts the pretended justification thereof in the local legislation of the Province of Newfoundland, restrictive and violative of such liberty, notwithstanding the plain provisions of the Treaty. The last recital indicates the discord between the two Governments which celebrated the Treaty.

The enactments of the Bill are intended to provide the best remedy now possible for the wrongs inflicted. These remedies consist in the imposition of duties on fish-oil and fish produced by the fisheries of the Dominion, including Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland. The 2nd section of the Bill provides for a discontinuance of such duties in case an accord be established between the two Governments. The 3rd section provides for a Presidential Proclamation to restrain our citizens from the exercise of their right to fish until the accord be established. The 4th section provides for a proper audit of the claims of fishermen by reason of the violence at Fortune Bay on the 6th January, 1878, and appropriates money therefor.

The Committee refer to the message of the President and the accompanying letter of the Secretary of State, as well as to the documents accompanying the President's communication to the House of Representatives in reply to their Resolution of the 27th April, 1880, for a detailed Statement of this vexed question.

This Committee has already reported to the House a Resolution for the abrogation of the fishery clauses of the Treaty of Washington. This abrogation may, in one regard, be accomplished by the mode prescribed by the Treaty. Notice is required to be given, and by the provisions of the Treaty it cannot be annulled formally until 1885.

This remedy seems to be too remote, inconsequential, and almost futile to remedy the wrongs which our fishermen have suffered. By a bold, violent, and outrageous infraction of the terms of the Treaty, as illustrated in the repulse of twenty of our vessels, the destruction of their seines, and the loss of their ventures at the Fortune Bay in January 1878, the advantages of the Treaty, for which we paid and are paying so much, have been nullified.

It is evident from the facts that a new adjustment of the fishery relations under the Washington Treaty is necessary. But before that adjustment can be had by cancelling that part of the Treaty itself, certain other measures are indispensable. They should be promptly taken by Congress in aid of the President's vigorous and patriotic remonstrance. This Congress will be responsible if we fail thus to vindicate our undoubted rights and dignity.

The rights conceded by this Treaty in the XVIIIth Article are as follows:—

"That inhabitants of the United States shall have, in common with the subjects of Her Britannic Majesty, the liberty to take fish of every kind, except shell-fish, on the sea-coasts and shores, and in bays, harbours, and creeks of the Provinces of Quebec, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick, and the Colony of Prince Edward Island, and of the several islands thereto adjacent, without being restricted to any distance from the shore, with permission to land upon the said coasts and shores and islands, and also Magdalen Islands, for the purpose of drying their nets and curing their fish; provided, that in so doing they do not interfere with the rights and private property, or with British fishermen, in the peaceable use of any part of the said coasts in their occupancy for the same purpose. It is understood that the above applies solely to the sea fishery."

From the terms of this Article it will be seen that the liberty to take fish of every kind, except shell-fish, is conceded to our people on the sea-coasts and shores, as well as the bays, harbours, and creeks of the provinces. No more comprehensive language can be used to give an undivided interest to the inhabitants of the United States along and equal with those of Great Britain in this adventurous and hazardous business. Every interpretation of these rights in the Halifax Commission and in the correspondence, including the "Case" made by Her Majesty's Government, confirms the views of our Administration—that without such permission to fish on the "shores" the practical use of the fisheries is impossible. Without such permission, we paid for nothing. We bought back what we unwisely relinquished or failed to defend in 1818, and the delivery has been withheld.

For reasons not necessary here to state, the equal participation in the fisheries, which was conceded to us by the sovereign power of Great Britain, was considered at Halifax to be so immensely valuable, that 6,000,000 dollars was claimed from us for it. Of this 20 per cent. was estimated as net profit on 1,200,000 dollars. It was urged at Halifax, as one reason for the enormous award which our Government was in too great haste to pay, that not only had we in the present an enormous advantage, but in the future a splendid prospect, by which our enterprise might be aggrandized and our wealth and industries increased.

What, then, was the surprise of the American Congress and people when, after appropriating and paying the 5,500,000 dollars on this dubious Award, made under circumstances which require close diplomatic scrutiny and urgent demand, that we had paid our money and mitigated our Tariff for Dominion fish, only to receive no returning consideration. True, the British Minister, Lord Salisbury, just before he received our millions, was exceedingly complaisant. He signified, in no ambiguous style, that British sovereignty, as regards these matters, was only limited in its scope by the engagements of the Treaty of Washington, and that these engagements could not be modified or affected by any municipal legislation. But as soon as the money was paid a different tone prevailed. A new interpretation, as the concomitant and justification of violence, pervaded the British correspondence.

It is a singular fact connected with this affair, that while the occurrence of Fortune Bay was in January, 1878, and while in March of that year our Government demanded an explanation and asserted its rights, the British Government did not respond until the 4th September of the same year.

What, then, was their answer? Upon this answer depends the reason for the legislation proposed by the Committee. The grounds were that our fishermen infracted a law of Newfoundland as to fishing on Sunday, which was passed subsequent to the Treaty of Washington; that they used seines to take herring contrary to a law of that province, which prescribed the methods of fishing for six months of the year between October and April; and that they had the audacity to use seines in a manner prohibited by provincial statute, or by a codification of all their provincial laws made after the Treaty. The English Minister justified the violence against the American fishermen by a charge that they had committed three distinct breaches of a law of that province.

If it had been the provincial Government or that of the Dominion which was the Treaty-making Power, or if the Treaty had recognized the existing provincial laws or the right to enact such fishery laws thereafter, it might have changed the logic and situation. But it was the sovereign Government of Great Britain which made the Treaty, without reservation as to local legislation, by which was justified this wanton violence. Our Treaty relations are, therefore, made to depend on provincial restraints, regulations, and statutes, not only in force at the time of the Treaty, but those enacted afterwards; and, by a similarity of reasoning, by all statutes, rules, and regulations enactable at the pleasure of the provinces. This cannot be tolerated.

In these particulars, therefore, our fishermen were denied their rights under the Treaty. These rights consisted in an enjoyment with the British inhabitants, authenticated by a common or joint authority which was supreme above provincial law.

The Committee believe that no power, not even the British Imperial authority, could thus wrongfully restrain the rights acquired under the Treaty. So believing, they report that so much of the consideration not yet given by the United States for the benefits and privileges of that Treaty shall be withheld until the two supreme Governments are agreed as to the interpretation of the Treaty.

Without discussing the failure and lack of consideration paid for our fishery freedom, which in Treaties as in private contracts unbinds the injured party, it will be conceded that, in addition to the 5,500,000 dollars paid in money, equivalent rights were granted to the British inhabitants for fisheries on our own coasts; and, second, an exemption of the provincial fish products from duties, giving to the Dominion an absolutely free market for fish and fish-oils in the United States. If it be said that the Bill reported by the Committee is a violation of the fishery clauses of the Treaty, which allows free fish to come into the United States, it may be answered that the violent infraction of that Treaty at Fortune Bay destroys the very object for which these immense considerations were granted and paid. Since it is not possible, except by diplomacy, to recover the 5,500,000 dollars paid to the British Government for the now valueless concession; since we do not propose to take away the concession to the British inhabitants who desire to fish on our shores; one thing remains to be done by this Congress, which is entirely consistent with international law and the decisions of our Supreme Court.

The decisions of our highest Law Tribunal go so far as to say that in all matters within the purview of Congress, as, for instance, the Tariff, as on hemp in the case of Tyler v. Morton (Curtis' Reports, vol. ii, p. 454), no Treaty should intervene to prevent the action of the Federal legislation as to imposts on foreign articles.

The question as to the right of the Treaty-making power to affect duties on imports is not a new question. The Constitution in delegating such a power did not, however, interfere with that of Congress to regulate commerce and to impose duties. It is not necessary to discuss here and now how far Congress may participate in the matter of reimposing duties on fish, which were made free by the Washington Treaty, as whatever power the Federal Government had to make the Treaty as to imposts may of right be controlled by Congress. This part of our constitutional duty it is now proposed to assume by the Bill reported. No one can question the power of Congress to control the revenues to be derived from fish and fish-oil.

As to international law, the violence by which the Treaty was boldly broken at Fortune Bay, as well as the antagonistic legislation of the provinces by which it was justified, would be a serious complication, if not a casus belli. In the absence of reparation and harmony, no other relief is possible for such infraction, except by reprisal, letters of marque, or via facti, known to the law of nations.

"The violation of any one Article of the Treaty is a violation of the whole Treaty; for all the Articles are dependent on each other, and one is to be deemed a condition of the other. A violation of any single Article abrogates the whole Treaty, if the injured party so elects to consider it. This may, however, be prevented by an express stipulation that if one Article be broken, the others shall nevertheless continue in full force. If the Treaty is violated by one of the Contracting Parties, either by proceedings incompatible with its general spirit, or by a specific breach of any one of its Articles, it becomes not absolutely void, but voidable at the election of the injured party. If he prefers not to come to a rupture, the Treaty remains valid and obligatory. He may waive or remit the infraction committed, or he may demand a just satisfaction."—(Lawrence's "Wheaton," Part 4, Chap. iv, p. 887.)

Vattel, in his chapter (xv) on the "Faith of Treaties," after considering their sacredness, says, however, that they are no better than empty words if nations do not consider them as respectable engagements—as rules which are to be inviolably observed by Sovereigns, and held sacred throughout the whole earth. Upon this observance depends the safety and repose of nations; and, as a conclusion, he remarks that he who violates his Treaties violates at the same time the law of nations. He who makes sport of such solemn sanctions is to be treated, not as an enemy merely of the injured party, but of the human race.

Phillimore holds that it has been made a matter of dispute with respect to Treaties whether a change of circumstances subsequent to the Treaty does not operate to the defeasance of the Treaty itself. If so, à fortiori, a violent change, a disruption of such relations provided in any Article of the Treaty which defeats its object, leaves the Treaty itself voidable at the election of the injured party.

The Committee do not propose that this country, after paying so much, should waive or remit the infraction; but it proposes that not only should there be a claim presented for the return of the 5,500,000 dollars, and a demand for the satisfaction of the losses at Fortune Bay, but that there should be a prompt reimposition of the duties on fish and fish-oils, which all countries except the dominion have continued to pay into our Treasury.

The Committee have not thought proper to consider such ultimate and protentous means and issues as look to reprisal or collision. All they propose is what their Bill proposes: that in the absence of agreement between the two Governments as to the interpretation of the Treaty and as to the effect of these provincial Statutes and Regulations, the great boon given to Dominion fishermen of a free market to the United States for their fish or fish-oils should be withheld. In ordinary cases, perhaps, the Committee on Foreign Affairs would not increase the revenues of the Government by any additional Tariff on any commodity, and much less when that commodity, which is a source of food, may be enhanced in price. It is not a matter in question whether fish will be cheaper or dearer by reason of the re-enactment of the tax on fish from the Dominion. It is a matter of patriotic respect and interest, when great advantages were given to the Dominion and the immense sum of 5,500,000 dollars paid, and the great exceptional privilege given to bring their fish into our market free, that the object for which we paid this sum and bestowed these privileges shall not now be allowed to turn to ashes. It would be a national humiliation, for which there is no material or moneyed equivalent, to allow such an audacious infraction by mob violence, under the cover or colour of mere provincial legislation, backed by British Imperial authority, without our using every remedy.

The United States can no more deal with these provinces than Great Britain can deal with New York or Massachusetts. They know only one party to the Treaty of Washington, namely, the Imperial Government. When the Imperial Government made this Treaty, everything inconsistent with that Treaty, either provincial Regulations or Statutes, were annulled by the Treaty, and everything possible to be enacted after the Treaty were to be subordinate to the clauses of the Treaty. When, therefore, our fishermen lost 103,000 dollars in the destruction of their seines and their venture, it is not only a case for reclamation against the British Government, but it is a case which puts us on our best endeavour to prevent any possible recurrence of such outrage. In fine, the circumstances make it the indispensable duty of our Government to withhold every consideration possible, not yet completed, in order to bring the Dominion or the British Government to the observance of the Treaty.

It may be that a restoration and even monopoly of the domestic market for the products of our own fish industry will do something to aid our own fisheries. Of that the Committee does not propose to take any account.

When Great Britain or the Dominion choose a Commission organized to consider the questions as to the reciprocal trade between the United States and the Dominion, such as this Committee have reported, it will be time to listen to their demands as to fish and all other articles. Thus, mutuality in the commerce of the two countries may have more prompt attention and relief.

The issue, as stated by the Secretary of State, between the two Governments, is this: shall there be provincial sovereignty over our fishery relations under the Treaty, after the exclusive sovereignty of that subject has been parted with by the Government of Great Britain.

The United States having acquired a participation in such fishery by paying the consideration fixed by the Treaty, how can the British Government claim, as Lord Salisbury did on the 3rd April, 1880, that these provincial regulations which were in force at the time of the Treaty still remain in full force; and especially, how can they make such claim when the very Minister himself acknowledged "the incompetency of the Colonial or even Imperial Government to remit by subsequent legislation the advantages secured by the Treaty to the subjects of another Power."

The freedom for which we have paid should neither be curtailed nor burdened. What we acquired from Great Britain under the Treaty was neither subject to the will of the provinces nor to the will of Great Britain. Having been fixed by Treaty, it should not be arbitrarily and forcibly annulled. If Great Britain had the power to dispose of her right, then we had from her the privilege of the shore fisheries. Our right is then equal to hers. There is no power except brute violence to despoil us of that privilege which we have so abundantly and inordinately paid for.

The power of Great Britain over this subject was plenary. That plenary power was exercised not merely to obtain an immense sum of money which she has distributed among the provinces, and 1,000,000 of which was received by Newfoundland itself, but by the same authority we were made coparceners in the advantage of this freedom to fish on her sea coasts and shores.

Our citizens being, therefore, debarred from the enjoyments of the rights to which they were entitled under the Treaty of Washington, not only have they a just claim for redress to the amount of their damages which our Bill proposes to ascertain, but we have a right to withhold any one of the considerations which we yielded for the advantages thus denied. As nothing is given for the advantages we supposed we had received, so nothing should be left undone to rescue whatever we can from the grasp of these provincial law and Treaty breakers. The Committee therefore submit the accompanying Bill, and recommend its passage.

[REPORT No. 1275.]

Joint Resolution relating to the Termination of Articles XVIII and XXI of the Treaty of 1871 with Great Britain relating to the Fisheries.

MR. RICE, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported the following joint Resolution:—

Joint Resolution relating to the termination of Articles XVIII and XXI of the Treaty of 1871 with Great Britain relating to the fisheries.

"Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, that the President be, and he is hereby, respectfully requested to take such measures as will secure indemnity to our citizens for the damages sustained by them from past unlawful violence committed against them by the inhabitants of Newfoundland, and protection from any repetition of such violence, and to procure the early abrogation or termination of the Articles in the Treaty of 1871 relating to the fisheries."

Inclosure 4 in No. 29.

46TH CONGRESS, 2ND SESSION.—HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

[REPORT No. 1275.]

Relating to the Fisheries.

MR. RICE, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, submitted the following Report:—

The Committee on Foreign Affairs, to whom were referred the Resolutions of the Legislatures of Maine and Massachusetts, relating to the termination of Articles XVIII and XXI of the Treaty of 1871 with Great Britain, having had the same under consideration, submit the following Report:—

The following Resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Maine were referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs of this House:—

Joint Resolutions relating to the termination of Articles XVIII and XXI of the Treaty of 1871 with Great Britain.

"Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives in Legislature assembled, that justice to fishermen and to the fishing interests of the country require that Articles XVIII and XXI of the Treaty concluded between the United States and Great Britain on the 8th May, 1871, should be terminated at the earliest possible period.

"Resolved, that we respectfully instruct our Senators and request our Representatives in Congress to use all honourable means to accomplish the purposes indicated by the foregoing resolve.

"Resolved, that the Secretary of State be required to transmit a copy of these resolves to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress, and also a copy to the President of the United States."

Similar Resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Massachusetts were referred at the same time to the Committee. Articles XVIII and XXI referred to in the foregoing Resolutions are as follows:—

"Article XVIII. It is agreed by the High Contracting Parties that in addition to the liberty secured to the United States' fishermen by the Convention between the United States and Great Britain, signed at London on the 20th October, 1818, of taking, curing, and drying fish on certain coasts of the British North American Colonies therein defined, the inhabitants of the United States shall have, in common with the subjects of Her Britannic Majesty, the liberty, for the term of years mentioned in Article XXXIII of this Treaty, to take fish of every kind, except shell-fish, on the sea-coasts and shores, and in the bays, harbours, and creeks of the Provinces of Quebec, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick, and the Colony of Prince Edward's Island, and of the several islands thereunto adjacent, without being restricted to any distance from the shore, with permission to land upon the said coasts, and shores, and islands, and also upon the Magdalene Islands, for the purpose of drying their nets and curing their fish: provided that, in so doing, they do not interfere with the rights of private property or with British fishermen in the peaceable use of any part of the said coasts in their occupancy for the same purpose.

"It is understood that the above-mentioned liberty applies solely to the sea-fishery, and that the salmon and shad-fisheries, and all other fisheries in rivers and the mouths of rivers, are hereby reserved exclusively for British fishermen.

"Article XXI. It is agreed that, for the term of years mentioned in Article XXXIII of this Treaty, fish-oil and fish of all kinds (except fish of the inland lakes and of the rivers falling into them, and except fish preserved in oils, being the produce of the fisheries of the United States, or of the Dominion of Canada, or of Prince Edward's Island, shall be admitted into each country, respectively, free of duty."

Article XIX of the Treaty concedes the same privileges to British subjects as are conceded by Article XVIII to the subjects of the United States. Article XXII of the Treaty provides for a Commission to determine how much shall be paid by the United States to Great Britain for the value of the privileges conceded by the Treaty to the United States by Article XVIII above the value of those conceded to Great Britain by Articles XIX and XXI. The Halifax Commission was duly appointed under the provisions of Article XXII, and awarded the payment of 5,500,000 dollars by the United States to Great Britain. Article XXXIII provides that Articles XVIII to XXV, inclusive, and Article XXX "shall remain in force for the period of ten years from the date at which they may come into operation, and further, until the expiration of two years after either of the High Contracting Parties has given notice to the other of its wish to terminate the same; each of the High Contracting Parties being at liberty to give such notice to the other at the end of the said period of ten years, or at any time afterward."

It was subsequently agreed that the Articles of the Treaty should take effect on the 1st July, 1873. According to the terms of the Treaty, therefore, notice of its termination cannot be given until July 1883, to take effect July 1885. As, however, the Commission awarded a very large sum as the excess of the value of the British concessions over those of the United States, which was not nearly what was claimed by the British counsel, it may be assumed that it ought not to be a difficult piece of diplomacy on the part of the United States to secure the termination of the Articles referred to at an earlier period than is provided by the Treaty itself, as the United States would thereby surrender privileges which were claimed by the British counsel to be of greater value, in exchange for those of less value. With the means, however, by which the result may be accomplished, this Committee have now nothing to do. The question for us to decide is whether we shall recommend the termination of the Treaty provisions relating to the fisheries, as requested by the Resolutions of the Legislatures of Maine and Massachusetts referred to us.

The fisheries have always been regarded as among the most important of our national industries. They furnish for our market a cheap and healthy article of food. They give employment to a large number of men, of a nature peculiarly interesting and advantageous to the country. They have been a nursery for sailors; a training-school which has supplied experienced and hardy men to defend the flag upon the water in every war. In the colonial times the New England fishermen captured Louisburg under a General born among them, and pre-eminent in the traits of character for which they were, as a class, distinguished. During the Revolution their privateers swarmed the seas, earning wealth for their owners, and glory and advantage for their struggling country. In the war of 1812 they manned our vessels, and, under the motto of "Free trade and sailors' rights," they certainly did their part toward bringing the war to a successful conclusion. It may be that in future wars they may not play so conspicuous a part as in those of the past. Iron and steel are superseding wood and sail, and science fights the naval battle by its own instrumentalities, instead of the daring men who used to sail from the harbours of Gloucester and Marblehead, but still we cannot well anticipate the time when the qualities and experience gained by the fishermen in their adventurous business will not be most profitable to the country, not only in time of war, but in those commercial pursuits which are about to occupy a wider sphere, and enter more intimately into all international relations. This importance of the fisheries has always been recognized by our Government in its Treaty negotiations.

The Treaty of 1783 between Great Britain and the United States recognized the rights of American citizens to the fisheries, as they had been exercised before the Revolution, as fully as it did their rights to the soil within the boundaries of the States. The statesmen of that day would accept nothing less than perfect equality for our fishermen upon any fishing grounds where they might choose to go. John Adams said he would fight the Revolution over again if the fisheries were not secured to us. It was not his fault, or that of his compeers, that the United States have since been reduced to a position of humiliation and disgrace in this respect. In the Treaty by which they obtained recognition of our national existence, they included, as one of our recognized and vested national rights, freedom and equality upon the fishing grounds of the north-east, which had been won from France to England by New England fishermen, under their favourite leader, Sir William Pepperill.

The same freedom and equality would be ours to-day had it not been disgracefully surrendered in later negotiations. After the war of 1812, Great Britain claimed sole jurisdiction of the shore fisheries of her North American dominions, and excluded our fishermen from them on the ground that the Treaty had been terminated by the war, and the right of fishing on British fishing grounds was a Treaty right, not a vested right. In the Treaty of Ghent the subject was not included, the Commissioners of the two Powers avowing opposite views in regard to it. If the American view were the correct one, the right to fish in British water was a vested national right as much as that to the soil of the States, and did not need to be again provided for in the Treaty. If the British view were correct, the right ceased with the old Treaty, and could only be revived by being included in the new Treaty.

It is too late now to argue which of these positions was legally right. England maintained hers by the strong arm. She drove by violence our fishermen from the grounds won by their valour, preserved to them by the Treaty which fixed the national status, which they had done so much to secure, and which their courage and patriotism would have retained had they been sustained by the Government of their country. But this was not the fact.

In the Convention of 1818, the United States acquiesced to a great extent in the British claim. She renounced for ever the liberty before enjoyed of fishing within 3 marine miles of any of the British coasts, excepting the shores of the Magdalen Islands, the north, south, and west shores of Newfoundland, and the shores of Labrador. A pusillanimous provision was inserted into the Treaty that American fishermen should be allowed to enter British bays and harbours for the purpose of shelter and repairing damages, of purchasing wood and obtaining water, and for no other purpose whatsoever. But a judicious system of bounties, and the superior energy and skill of our fishermen, enabled them to survive even this treacherous betrayal of their interests. From 1825 to 1854 the fishing business of Massachusetts constantly and regularly increased. In 1825 the fishing fleet from Gloucester consisted of 154 vessels, of 6,000 tons burden; in 1847, of 287 vessels, of 12,000 tons; and in 1854, of 300 vessels, of over 20,000 tons. The business of the other fishing towns increased in similar proportion.

In 1854, our diplomacy struck another blow at the fishing interests by the Reciprocity Treaty. This Treaty gave to American fishermen the right to British inshore fisheries, and the same right to British fishermen in American waters north of the 36th parallel. It also opened the markets of each country to fish of the other, free from duty. The greater demand in the American market made this concession of great value to British fishermen; they at once enlarged their fleets, and when the reverses of our civil war drove our vessels from the fishing grounds they pressed their advantages, and supplied our market with free fish, while our fishermen were engaged in the navy in the war, or were, by force of circumstances, excluded from participation in the business which had supplied themselves and their ancestors for generations. It will be noticed, by reference to the prices current, that the price of fish was not varied to the American consumer. The hardy toiler on the seas was depressed—the bread was taken from him; but there was no compensating advantage to any one except the British fisherman and the market middlemen.

In 1866, the Reciprocity Treaty was terminated, against the wishes of the Canadians, who were but too eager to continue a system which brought them many dollars for every one it took from them; they then sold licences to American vessels to fish in their waters, raising the price of the licence year after year from 50 cents to 2 dollars a ton, until at the last price American fishing vessels disappeared from British waters.

The provisions of the Treaty of 1871 relating to the fisheries have already been stated. The fishermen of New England, through their representatives in Legislature assembled, now ask that these provisions be terminated. They admit that they would derive some advantages from the free and undisturbed enjoyment of the privileges accorded them in these provisions, but they say that the disadvantages are vastly greater than the advantages, and that while they are subjected to the disadvantages in full force, they are deprived of the paltry advantages by local prejudice and annoyances, culminating in mob violence, not hindered by the local authorities, and now apparently sustained by the Home Government.

It was claimed by the American counsel before the Halifax Commission, and supported by what seems to be the strongest testimony, that the value of the American concessions was equal to that of the British concessions, and that no balance, or at least but a very small one, should be awarded against the United States.

It is useless here to discuss the character of the testimony by which this claim was controverted, or of the Tribunal by which it was coolly and peremptorily disregarded. After payment of the award, the men most interested in the subject justify the claim of our counsel by offering to resign what they get for what they give, less the 5,500,000 dollars award, which we must be content to pay for our experience of the result of friendly arbitration with Great Britain—they only ask to be restored to the ante-Treaty status, and they will trust to their own resources for future protection against Canadian competition. Their claim in substance is, that the privileges they gain may be estimated in money value, pretty accurately, by the highest amount which could be derived by the Canadian Government from licences between 1866 and 1871, before the price was raised to the prohibitory point, which was less than 40,000 dollars a-year, while, on the other hand, the duty on the fish which the Canadians import free into our markets would average 350,000 dollars a-year: they complain that the Treaty discriminates against them in favour of the Canadians, that they fish in vessels and with apparatus whose price is increased by the duty imposed upon the materials of which they are made, while the British fish in smaller, less expensive, and untaxed vessels. They are far from home; the British are along their own shores, near their supplies, and the catch of both is equally free to enter our markets. They profess a confidence in their own ability to overcome by superior skill and energy the other disadvantages, excepting those growing out of their heavier taxation at home, but they claim that while they sustain their share of the burdens of their own country by payment of duties and taxes they should be protected, as are other industries, against the competition of those who are not subjected to these burdens; they claim that they should be allowed to fish in untaxed vessels, or should be protected against their competitors who fish in untaxed vessels. Handicapped by this indirect discrimination, they claim that it is only a question of time when their business will be ruined, and the fisheries so highly prized by the early statesmen, so important in many respects to the country, be given over to their British competitors; they complain still further that they are deprived of the small advantages which they might derive from the Treaty, and for which this country has paid so dearly by colonial legislation and by illegal action by the British fishermen, and thus far without redress or protection. And they give proof of the sincerity of these complaints by asking for the abrogation of these Treaty provisions.

It is easy to understand the advantages derived by the British fishermen from the freedom of our markets. Statistics show that their business is increased and ours diminished by the operation of these provisions.

After the abrogation of the reciprocity Treaty in 1866 to the Treaty of 1871, the tonnage of United States' vessels over 20 tons, engaged in the fisheries, increased 27,418 tons. Since the Treaty it has decreased in Massachusetts alone 12,709 tons.

During the last period the Canadian tonnage has steadily and rapidly increased. From 1871 to 1877 (we have not the statistics for the subsequent years) this increase was 35,580 tons in 645 vessels, manned by 11,181 fishermen. These figures tell the story of the results of the Treaty upon the fishing interests of the two countries. Is it any wonder that our fishermen ask to be relieved from the results of diplomacy and friendly arbitration, and to be left once more to their own resources unaided by the advantages of British concessions?

But it is not necessary to rely wholly upon these statistics. A brief consideration of the fishery business as at present conducted will enable us to understand why the so-termed Treaty concessions are of so little value to our fishermen.

The Atlantic fisheries, as pursued by American fishermen, comprise the cod, halibut, mackerel, and herring fisheries. The cod fishery is unqualifiedly an ocean fishery, extending from 10 to 100 and more miles from the shore; the most prolific grounds are the banks on the inner edge of the Gulf Stream, from Hatteras to Cape Race, thence north indefinitely, following the Arctic and Greenland currents. None of these banks are under British jurisdiction, but are the common property of all nations. No cod of any consequence are taken by American vessels within 3 miles of British territory. The concession of in-shore fishing, so far as this branch of the fisheries is concerned, is of no considerable value.

Halibut are now taken by American fishermen in the deepest water upon the ocean banks; they have been taken at particular seasons in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, but never continuously, and of late years not to any considerable extent at any time. The American fishermen are content to take the halibut from the same localities where they take the cod. In-shore halibut fishing in British waters is of no value to them.

The habits and grounds of the mackerel are more uncertain and varying. They make their appearance off Hatteras in April, and apparently move north. In June they are found off Massachusetts and Maine, and at nearly the same time in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. From the time of their appearance in April, until November, they are found at all these points, varying in quantity and quality at different times, and at from 1 to 100 miles from shore. Even of the small proportion of the entire catch taken by American fishermen in the Gulf of St. Lawrence not more than one-quarter is taken within three miles of the shore. The quality of these is inferior to that of those taken off our own shores, especially of late years. In the present condition of this much-changing and uncertain fishery, our fishermen may, about as well as not, keep entirely out of British waters; certainly the benefit of entering them is very small. The trade to the inhabitants of the provinces and islands from our fishermen, and the advantages they would derive from observation of their superior methods, would alone be ample compensation for this advantage. It certainly is no object for us to retain this petty privilege to be practised in the midst of a jealous and hostile population.

The herring fishery, different from the others, is almost wholly a shore fishery. They are taken on the shores of Massachusetts and Maine, and of nearly all the British provinces and islands. But the Americans have heretofore not been accustomed to use British waters for taking herring in such a way as to make it an American fishery. They have either hired the boats and apparatus of the British fishermen, or bought their herring from them to be sold in our market or used as bait in the cod fishery. The least valuable of all the fisheries, the profit is scarcely large enough to engage the attention of our fishermen. While it is admitted to be of some advantage to them to have the right to fish for herring in British inshore waters, and to be the one concession in the Treaty which is of the greatest value to them, yet it is by no means an indispensable advantage. The right to fish can be wholly abandoned, and the commercial right of purchase from British fishermen, now very largely used, be the sole dependence. It is worth something, but a mere trifle compared with what is paid for it.

All the above statements of the value of these fisheries to our fishermen were made by our counsel before the Halifax Commission, and sustained by testimony. The British counsel, on the other hand, claimed that they were of immense value, amounting in their claim, in the aggregate, to 12,000,000 dollars. We now prove the honesty of our claim by the offer to terminate, without consideration, the Treaty provisions which concede these privileges. It is probably too much to anticipate that British sincerity will bear an equal test.

But there is another branch of this subject which demands our consideration. Without reviving old recollections, forgetfulness of which is most conducive to the kindly feeling we desire to entertain towards Great Britain, we can at least assume that we now deal with her on equal terms. Never second in anything tending to promote such an intercourse as should exist between Christian nations of kindred blood and instincts, we shall not fail to exact for our citizens the same treatment which we accord to others under Treaty or International Law, and to demand and obtain restitution for all violation of these laws and obligations toward our citizens. It smacked a little of the old spirit when the British counsel at Halifax deemed worthy of consideration the privilege of our fishermen to put into their bays and harbours for shelter and trade. These are common international privileges.

It seems to this Committee that what we receive in this respect we return; that it is not necessary to provide in a Treaty that the vessels of a friendly Power are to have the privilege of shelter and trade in our ports, but that the enforcement of this common privilege can safely be left to the operation of charity and mutual interest.

Scarcely had the heavy price been paid, rather as a tribute to national honour than because it was due on any principle of equity or fair dealing, when the jealousy of the British fishermen and the ingenuity of provincial legislators was set at work to devise means of depriving us of the paltry privileges of mackerel and herring fishing, and of trade and shelter, which we had so dearly bought. Legislative measures were proposed, and some of them enacted, the result of which would be to restrict and hamper us in the exercise of our Treaty privileges.

Legislation restricting the sale of bait and of ice for packing to American fishermen were discussed in the Newfoundland Legislature. A Statute was enacted April 1876 prohibiting the taking of herring and other fish used for bait on Sundays. It may well be argued that any restrictive legislation in conflict with the Treaty concessions would not be applicable to American fishermen. In the discussions before the Halifax Commission, the British concessions were rated at full price, as without restriction, and whatever local laws might be made, the Treaty stipulations should override them as to American fishermen. The inshore herring fishery, as has been seen, was almost the only concession of the Treaty worth anything to Americans. By it they could catch their own herring instead of buying them from the British fishermen.

But to make this privilege worth anything they must do their fishing in their own way; they are at a distance from home; the British live on shore in sight of the fishing grounds; they must use vessels built strongly and of the best material, fitted to withstand the roughest ocean weather; these vessels are from 50 to 150 tons burthen, and cost from 5,000 to 10,000 dollars a-piece; the British fish in boats worth perhaps 100 dollars a-piece. Under these circumstances, the Americans must fish at the most advantageous times and in the most expeditious manner. They have but a few days for their season's work, while the British have nothing else to do the year round. As a consequence, the Americans use seines in the herring fishery of much larger capacity than those used by the British. By use of them they can catch herring enough in a day, when they appear, to load an entire fleet. With these preliminary statements we can better understand the events which took place at Fortune Bay, Newfoundland, 6th January, 1878. We give the statement of the owners of two of the American vessels made to the Secretary of State, which is as follows :—

"To the Hon. William M. Evarts, Secretary of State.

"Respectfully represent John Pew, Charles H. Pew, and John J. Pew, all of Gloucester, county of Essex, and commonwealth of Massachusetts, co-partners under the firm-style of John Pew and Son, that they are American citizens, and engaged in the fishing business at said Gloucester, and were and are owners and fitters of fishing vessels; that they are the sole owners of the American fishing schooners 'Ontario' and 'New England,' of said Gloucester, and were such owners in the months of November, December, and January last past; that both of said schooners were fitted for the herring fisheries in the month of November, 1877, and for voyages to Newfoundland, and provided with seines for catching herring; that said schooner 'Ontario,' whereof Peter McAulay was master, sailed on the 1st day of December, 1877, from said Gloucester, and the said schooner 'New England,' whereof John Dago was master, on the 28th day of November, 1877; that both schooners had a full supply of men and outfits for said voyage; that said schooner 'Ontario,' when she sailed from said Gloucester on said voyage with her outfits and seine, was worth the sum of 7,500 dollars, and the said 'New England,' with her outfits and seine, was then and there of the value of 8,500 dollars; that said schooners both returned to said Gloucester from said voyage on the 17th day of February without any herring, except that the said 'Ontario' had about fifty barrels purchased by her.

"And we further represent that we are informed by the masters and crews of said schooners, and believe the same to be true, that the reason why they returned without any herring, and made disastrous voyages, is that they arrived at Long Harbour, Fortune Bay, Newfoundland, on or about the 16th day of December, 1877, and found herring scarce, and were unable to obtain any considerable quantity of herring, and that the masters and crews of said schooners waited at said Long Harbour until the 6th day of January, 1878, to catch or purchase herring, as they might be able to do; that on said 6th day of said January, the 'signs for herring being good,' the masters and crews of both of said schooners joined their purse seines, thereby making a double seine, which was the value of at least 1,400 dollars, and making a seine of about 2,400 feet long, and 150 feet deep; that the masters and crews of said schooners threw said double seine at said Long Harbour, and caught and secured therein a very large quantity of herring, amounting to at least 2,000 barrels of herring, and more than sufficient to load both of said schooners; that at about 4 o'clock of said 6th day of said January, some 200 men who belonged about Fortune Bay, and had gone ashore from English vessels in said Long Harbour, made a warlike demonstration against the masters and crews of said schooners, and seized hold of said double seine, tore it in pieces, and carried it off, and thereby freed all of said herring, and prevented the masters and crews of said schooners from obtaining them, and thereby destroyed all hope of their obtaining a cargo for either of said vessels; that of said 200 men some sixty took hold of said seine and destroyed it, and the others were participating in the destruction of the seine by inciting and encouraging those who were destroying it; that the masters and crews of said schooners were pursuing their business of catching herring at said Fortune Bay in a lawful manner, and were not in any manner or form interfering with the rights of any party or parties at said Newfoundland, and that the action of said parties in destroying said seine was a most wanton destruction of the property of said firm, and was without the least justification in law or good conscience, and was intended to be a warlike demonstration against the American vessels, their owners, masters, and crews, and to intimidate them and prevent them from prosecuting the herring fisheries in the waters of Newfoundland by catching herring, and thereby compel them to buy herring of the inhabitants of Newfoundland, if they would obtain them, at such prices as said people of Newfoundland might ask for them; that all the American vessels at said Newfoundland on said 6th day of said January were from said Gloucester, and were there for herring, and among them were the schooners 'Moses Adams,' 'Herbert M. Rogers,' 'John W. Bray,' 'F. A. Smith,' 'Hereward,' 'William E. McDonald,' 'Moro Castle,' 'Ed. E. Webster,' 'Bonanza,' 'Wildfire,' 'Bunker Hill,' and 'Isaac Rich;' that said schooners 'Ontario' and 'New England' were, by reason of the destruction of said seine and the freeing of the herring therein, both prevented from obtaining cargoes for said schooners.

"That, after the destruction of said seine, as above set forth, the said parties who had destroyed the same returned to their vessels, and on the evening thereafter, to wit, on the evening of the 6th day of said January, they made a jubilant demonstration, blowing horns, firing guns, and shouting as if celebrating a victory, to impress upon the masters and crews of the American vessels in said harbour that they were prepared to stand by and justify what had been done, and that the Americans might expect to be treated in future in the same manner should they attempt to catch herring in Newfoundland waters. And we further respectfully represent that, in view of the treatment of the American fishermen by the British subjects at said Newfoundland, it is wholly unsafe for American vessel owners to fit vessels for and send them to Newfoundland waters to catch herring, and that it is unsafe for American fishermen to attempt to catch fish in said waters, and that the demonstration against the American fishing-vessel owners, masters, and crews is of such a character as to make it a public violation of the rights of the citizens of the United States wishing to catch herring and attempting to catch herring there. That the loss to said firm by reason of the warlike demonstration of the people of Newfoundland hereinbefore set forth, and the destruction of said seine in the voyages of said two schooners 'Ontario' and 'New England,' amounts to at least the sum of 6,700 dollars. In verification of the facts herein set forth, we beg leave to refer to the affidavits of the masters and crews of both of said schooners 'Ontario' and 'New England,' herewith submitted.

"Wherefore we respectfully ask that your Department will cause our said damage to be paid by the British Government, and such action to be taken as will secure to American ship-owners and fishermen the rights to which they are justly and legally entitled by the laws and Treaties of the United States. And as in duty bound will ever pray.

American fishermen had been in the habit of purchasing herring from the British rather than of taking them themselves. This was the source of a profitable trade to the Newfoundlanders; the loss of this trade by the concession of inshore fishing to the Americans was made one of the points of damage to be paid for by the British counsel at Halifax.

It was also made a farther point that the Americans, taking their herring under the circumstances already referred to, would use large seines, and thus not only do their work more speedily than the British, but, perhaps, to such an extent as to reduce the supply. Both these points were considered, if anything was considered, in making up the Award. For the first time after the Treaty the attempt to catch herring under its provisions was made on any considerable scale. Twenty-two vessels went from Gloucester to Fortune Bay, for the purpose of taking herring, in the winter of 1877-78; they waited there from the 15th December until the 6th January, awaiting the arrival of the expected schools of herring. On Sunday, the 6th January, these schools arrived. The Americans at once proceeded to improve the opportunity they had so long waited for. They got out their boats and seines, and commenced proceedings. Had they been permitted to proceed, they claim that they could have taken herring enough on that day to load all their vessels. But they were attacked by a large and violent mob of the Newfoundlanders, their seines were injured or destroyed, and they were compelled to desist. They made no further attempts to fish, and most of them went home in ballast. This wholesale outrage was but the culmination of a long series of petty annoyances by which American fishermen, seeking to avail themselves of the Treaty privileges, had been harassed after the ratification of the Treaty. Thus were they deterred by local prejudice, culminating in mob violence, from enjoying the petty privileges for which this Government had opened our markets to British fishermen and paid in addition 5,500,000 dollars. The Secretary of State made complaint to the British Government of the outrages at Fortune Bay. The 23rd August, 1878, Lord Salisbury replied. He excused the inhabitants of Newfoundland, on the ground that the American fishermen had, on that occasion, committed three distinct breaches of the law:—

1. They had used seines for catching herring.
2. They were catching herring on Sunday.
3. They were barring the herring.

The first and third of these points were correct, if the local law superseded the Treaty provision; but that would seem to be settled in our favour by the 28th section of the Statute in which the prohibitions were contained, which is as follows:—

"§ 28. Nothing in this chapter shall affect the rights and privileges granted by Treaty to the subjects of any State or Power in amity with Her Majesty."

The Sunday law was created subsequently to the Treaty. This construction of the territorial law, which we understand to be insisted upon by the British Government in a late despatch, and the inferred approval of the hostile action against our fishermen, deprives us of all the privileges which the British Government priced so highly and for which we paid their price.

As the matter now stands, we got but little by the Treaty, and that little is taken from us by unlawful violence apparently sustained by the British Government. We gave a great deal in return, part of which has already been finally paid and is beyond our recall; but a portion of the consideration is in the opening of our markets to the British fishermen free of duty. That privilege they are still enjoying, to their great gain and our great loss. In view of the position assumed by the British Government in regard to the outrages at Fortune Bay, it would seem proper for our Government to declare the Treaty terminated for violation of its provisions by the other Contracting Party, and for Congress to sustain such action. Such a course would seem almost the only one consistent with proper national self-respect. But, whatever may be deemed the wisest course in this respect, it would not seem a debateable question that our Government should take measures to terminate the fishery Articles of the Treaty at the earliest possible moment. The Committee, therefore, recommend the adoption of the following joint Resolution :—

"Whereas American fishermen are deprived of the privileges of fishery conceded to the United States by the Treaty with Great Britain dated the 8th May, 1871, by hostile legislation and the unlawful violence of the inhabitants of the British provinces; and whereas said hostile legislation is sustained and said unlawful violence is not rebuked or restrained by the Government of Great Britain: therefore,

"Resolved, that the President be and he is hereby respectfully requested to take such measures as will secure indemnity to our citizens for the damages sustained by them from past unlawful violence committed against them by the inhabitants of Newfoundland, and protection from any repetition of such violence; and to procure the early abrogation or termination of the Articles in the Treaty of 1871 relating to the fisheries."

No. 30.

Mr. Herbert to Sir J. Pauncefote.—(Received September 18.)

(Extract.) Downing Street, September 17, 1880.

I AM directed by the Earl of Kimberley to transmit to you, to be laid before Earl Granville, the accompanying copy of a despatch from the Governor of Newfoundland, transmitting a Report by Commander Hall, R.N., of Her Majesty's ship "Flamingo," on an alleged case of obstruction offered to some American bait-vessels at Job's Cove, Conception Bay, on or about the 3rd August.

Attached to the Report is a copy of the deposition of Loren B. Naus, of the American schooner "Moro Castle," the vessel interfered with by the Newfoundland fishermen.

Inclosure 1 in No. 30.

Governor Sir J. Glover to the Earl of Kimberley.

My Lord, Government House, Newfoundland, September 2, 1880.

I HAVE the honour to transmit, for your Lordship's information, six printed copies of the Report of Commander Hall, R.N., Her Majesty's ship "Flamingo," whom I desired to inquire into a case of obstruction offered to some American bait-vessels at Job's Cove, Conception Bay, on or about the 3rd August.

2. On the 10th August I heard that some obstruction had been offered to certain vessels at the before-named place, and I at once placed myself in communication with Commander Hall, in order that immediate steps might be taken to investigate the case

3. I also transmit, attached to the Report, a copy of the deposition taken upon oath, of Leven B. Naus, of the American schooner "Moro Castle," the vessel interfered with, from which your Lordship will observe that no injury was done to himself, his crew, or his vessel.

4. I will report further on this case by the next mail.

I have, &c.

Inclosure 2 in No. 30.

Captain Kennedy to Governor Sir J. Glover.

"Druid," at St. John's, August 24, 1880.

SUBMITTED for the consideration of his Excellency the Governor of Newfoundland, observing that the original and duplicate Reports have been forwarded to the Commander-in-chief.

(Signed) W. R. KENNEDY.

Commander Hall to Captain Kennedy.

Sir, "Flamingo," at St. John's, August 23, 1880.

I have the honour to inform you that on the 16th instant I received two telegrams from his Excellency the Governor of Newfoundland, requesting me to inquire into the obstruction offered to some American bait vessels at Job's Cove, Conception Bay, about the 3rd instant.

2. I proceeded to Job's Cove on the 18th instant, and made the necessary inquiry, and beg to forward herewith a report of the same.

3. I took the depositions, on oath, of five of the inhabitants of the cove.

4. Two happened to be on shore when I landed, and the others came in from fishing later on.

5. I examined each man separately, and I am satisfied they had no opportunity of consulting together during the inquiry, and agreeing as to what should be said.

6. It will be noticed that four of the men examined are named English; this, I was informed, is a very common name at Job's Cove, nearly the whole population being more or less related to one another.

7. The facts of the case appear to be as follows:—

8. About the beginning of this month several American and British bankers came to Job's Cove for squid.

9. The former anchored in the middle of cod nets laid down by the Job's Cove people, one vessel anchoring on top of a net belonging to one of the men examined; the latter (the British vessels), anchored nearer the shore and clear of the nets.

10. The day was fine, with but little wind or sea, and the nets were all marked by large buoys, which were distinctly visible.

11. The same afternoon the Americans commenced to jig for squid from their vessels.

12. Upon seeing this the Newfoundland fishermen, comprising men from Job's Cove and several of the neighbouring settlements, from 200 to 400 in number, including four of the five men examined, who were jigging for squid from boats nearer the shore, the usual squid grounds, pulled off to the American vessels and told the crews they must not jig for squid there, as it was in the middle of their nets and their best fishing ground, and they would draw the squid out of the bight into the tide, when they would be swept away.

13. They further told them they should either bring their vessels nearer the shore where the British bankers were anchored, or else come into the bight in their dories and jig for squid, where they could do so without any hindrance.

14. On being told this the Americans ceased jigging, and the Newfoundland fishermen returned to the bight.

15. The next morning, observing that the Americans had resumed jigging from some of their vessels, they (the Newfoundland fishermen) went off alongside them, and told them the same thing again, upon which the Americans ceased jigging.

16. On the Newfoundland fishermen returning to the bight they observed jigging going on again from some of the American vessels, and went off alongside one or more of them for the third time, and told the same thing they had said on the two previous occasions.

17. The Americans again ceased jigging, but recommenced as soon as the Newfoundlanders left.

18. On seeing this the Newfoundlanders went off for the fourth time to one of the vessels they had spoken to before, and about thirty to forty jumped on board.

19. These men then told the captain that if he did not stop jigging there they would heave his anchor up, and they again told him to come into the bight if he wanted squid, either in his vessel or his boats, and offered to pilot him in, or to another good squid ground nearer the shore, and about half a mile off, which offers were declined.

20. They also told him he must cast off the punts made fast to his vessel, in which some Newfoundlanders were jigging for squid.

21. The captain replied that he would leave when he was ready.

22. Shortly after (one witness said while they were actually on board), a strong breeze sprung up from the westward, blowing right into the cove, obliging all the vessels, British as well as Americans, to weigh at once and leave the anchorage.

23. The British bankers anchored further to windward under the land on the squid ground before mentioned, and the Americans proceeded to Northern Bay, about $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles to the westward.

24. The next day several of the Americans came to Job's Cove in their dories, and bought bait, and amongst them was the captain of the vessel which had been boarded.

25. One of the men examined stated that when he took up his net the day after the American vessels had left he found it almost destroyed, and believes it was damaged by the American vessels which anchored on top of it

26. One of the American vessels is also stated to have dragged about her own length when the breeze sprung up.

27. I have been unable to obtain any information relative to the specific complaint made by the Americans, and am therefore not in a position to say whether the inquiry has been sufficiently comprehensive.

28. By the Treaty of Washington of 1871, the provisions and stipulations of which, as regards Articles XVIII to XXV inclusive, have been extended to the Colony of Newfoundland, Americans have, in common with British subjects, the liberty to take fish of every kind, except shell-fish, on the sea coasts and shores of this Colony without being restricted to any distance from the shore; but this liberty cannot be exercised to the detriment of British subjects.

29. In this case the anchoring of the American vessels in the midst of cod nets set by British subjects, marked by easily-seen buoys, the significance of which is known to all engaged in fishing operations, was, in my opinion, detrimental to the owners of these nets, as one net was damaged by one of the vessels.

30. The anchoring of these vessels amongst their nets, and on their best fishing ground, naturally annoyed the Job's Cove fishermen, and this annoyance was increased when they found their remonstrances unheeded.

31. Although they boarded one vessel with the avowed intention of weighing her anchor if she did not stop the practice complained of, jigging from this vessel, not any the others left in consequence of this threat, but because the strong westerly wind which sprung up, blowing right into the cove, obliged all the vessels anchored there to weigh.

32. With regard to the Americans, it seems to me that, in anchoring in the midst of well-marked nets, they were interfering with and impeding British subjects in the free exercise of their rights of fishing, which they were not justified in doing by the terms of the Treaty of Washington.

33. As regards the proceedings of the Newfoundland fishermen, their proper course would appear to have been to complain to the nearest magistrate, if there was no man-of-war at hand, when they found their remonstrances were unheeded, and invoke the aid of the law; but on this point there is something to be said on their side.

34. The nearest magistrate, I understand, resided at Old Perlican in Trinity Bay, 7 miles in a straight line by land, and 23 miles by water, from Job's Cove, and whoever went to him would lose his fishing for the time being, for which he would receive no compensation; moreover, immediate action was considered absolutely necessary to prevent the squid being driven out of the bight and swept away by the tide, a result which is stated to have actually occurred in consequence of the Americans' proceedings.

35. I believe the Newfoundland fishermen acted mainly from ignorance of the law, as I was several times asked whether the Americans had any right at all to come to Job's Cove; and I have, during my cruize round the coast, found the fishermen, as a rule, always willing to abide by the law when it has been explained to them by some one of authority.

36. I understand the bankers come to the coast chiefly in the latter end of May and beginning of June for caplin; and again the latter end of July and beginning of August for squids; and that as a rule they all come together at the same time and to the same place each year.

37. At Carbonear this year forty-five bankers arrived in one day.

38. The recurrence of these disputes may, I believe, be prevented by informing the inhabitants of the outlying settlements, which are frequented by bankers, in clear language, of the right of the Americans, under the Treaty of Washington, and warning them that in the event of their having any complaints against any bankers, whether foreign or British, they are at once to make them known to the nearest magistrate, or British man-of-war if one is at hand, who will be instructed to make immediate inquiry into such complaints, and by further warning them that they are on no account to take action themselves.

39. In order to facilitate communication with the magistrates, I would further suggest that when the bankers arrive on the coast the magistrates of the districts visited be at hand in some central settlement and give notice to the inhabitants of the respective settlements under their jurisdiction that they are there, and that if there is any cause of complaint against any of the bankers, it is at once to be made known to them, and they will proceed immediately to inquire into it, and that they are on no account to take action themselves.

40. I believe if this course can be adopted it will effect the desired end. (Copies of depositions inclosed.)

I have, &c.
(Signed) W. H. HALL.

The deposition of Philip English, taken upon oath, and who saith :—That about the beginning of August about five or six American vessels came here for squid, and anchored about three-quarters of a mile off the bight. One of them anchored right on top of a net I had down, the position of which was shown by large wood buoys. As soon as they anchored they commenced to jig for squid from the vessels. In the bight, about halfway between the American vessels and the shore, the Newfoundland fishermen, from Job's Cove, Gull Island, Northern Bay, Burnt Point, including myself, about 300 or 400 in all, were jigging for squid on their usual ground. We went off the afternoon they anchored alongside one vessel and told them they mustn't jig there, as they would bring the squid out of the bight into the tide and they would be swept away. We also told them that where they were was our best fishing ground then, and we hailed the other vessels and told them the same. They then knocked off jigging, and we returned to the bight. The next morning the Americans went on jigging again, and we went off alongside the same vessel again and told them the same thing again. They knocked off jigging then, and we returned to the bight. They then went on jigging again from the vessels. We went alongside the same vessel the same morning the third time, and told them that if they did not come in the proper bight and jig, we would haul their anchors up. We returned to the bight and then they went on jigging again. Then we went off a fourth time alongside the same vessel, and went on board her, and told the captain he mustn't jig squid there, but that we would pilot him into the bight, where several Newfoundland vessels were anchored, or he must come into the bight in his dories and jig, otherwise we would haul his anchor up. Shortly afterwards it blew hard from the westward, and they all left, Newfoundland vessels as well. Some of the Newfoundland vessels returned next day. The Americans went to Northern Bay. The next day the captain of the American vessel we boarded came over in a dory and bought squid in Job's Cove. Since the American vessels left the squid have all disappeared from the bight.

The evening after the American vessels left I hauled up my net, and all I found was a bit of twine in one end of it, and the foot-rope broken in three or four places. I believe this was done by the vessel that anchored on top of it. The net was two years old, and made of three-thread caplin twine, and was in thorough good order when I laid it down.

We offered no violence, nor were any threats used towards the Americans.

The deposition of Richard English (son of Edward English), taken upon oath, and who saith that about a fortnight ago, one afternoon, four or five American vessels (bankers) came here for squid, and anchored from ½ to ¾ of a mile off the bight, one of them inside three of my nets and outside of one, about 150 yards from them; these were large bottom cod-nets with wooden buoys. The Americans commenced to jig squid from their vessels. In the bight, about midway between the Americans and the shore, Newfoundland fishermen from Job's Cove, Burnt Point, Gull Island, and Northern Bay, about 200 in all, including myself, were jigging for squid, that being the usual squid ground. We all went off alongside three of the Americans, and told them it was not allowed here to jig squid on our fishing ground, they should come in their dories into the Bight where we were jigging. We told them that where they were jigging was our prime fishing ground; they knocked off jigging then. The next morning the Americans went on jigging from three of their vessels. We all went alongside one of these vessels, the first one visited the day before, and told them again it was not allowed to jig squid there, and that if they wanted squid they must come in their dories and jig squid in the bight. They stopped jigging then, and we returned to the bight. They then went on jigging again from the vessels, and we went off a third time to another of the three vessels visited before, and told them they should either bring their vessels into the Bight or go in their dories there for squid. They knocked off jigging then, and we offered to pilot their vessels into the bight, where four Newfoundland vessels were anchored, for squid, or else to pilot them to another good squid-jigging ground, about ½ a mile away; but they refused these offers, and we returned to the bight. The Americans went on jigging again from their vessels, and then we all went off to one of the vessels, the last one we had seen jigging, and a good many, including myself, went on board. We told them we would heave their anchors up if they did not knock off jigging there, and cast off all the punts which had come from other places, and were made fast to her, jigging. The captain said he should leave "When he'd see his own time when he would be ready." While we were on board it came on to blow hard from the westward, and all the schooners, both American and Newfoundland, had to get under weigh, and one of the latter had to slip her chain and the Newfoundlanders anchored on the jigging ground before mentioned. The Americans went to Northern Bay, but came back in their dories the same evening and next day, and bought squid from us. We offered no violence, nor were any threats used towards the Americans.

The deposition of Patrick Kinsella, taken upon oath, and who saith that about a fortnight since several American vessels came here for squid, and anchored between ½ to ¾ mile off the bight. They anchored inside some cod-nets and outside others. I had three bottom-nets down, buoyed by large wood buoys, and two of these were outside and one inside them. One of the vessels was within 70 yards of one of my outside nets, and about the same distance from the inside one. There was very little wind when they came, and the buoys could be readily seen. In the evening the Americans commenced to jig squid from their vessels. The deposition of Richard English (son of James English), taken upon oath, and who saith that about a fortnight ago several American vessels came here for squid, and anchored about ½ a-mile from the bight, right among the nets, and inside two of my bottom cod-fish nets, marked by two large buoys. There was very little wind when they came in, and the buoys could be very readily seen. The American vessels commenced to jig squid. About 200 of us were jigging squid about half-way between the American vessels and the shore, our usual squid ground. We went off alongside two of the vessels and told them to knock off jigging squid, as they were on our best fishing ground, and they were amongst our nets. We also told them they were drawing the squid out of the bight, and we should get no more for bait. We told them to come in in their dories into the bight and jig for squid, and there would be no hindrance to them. They stopped jigging then. Next morning they commenced jigging again, and we went off alongside the same vessel and told them the same thing, and that if we had to come the third time they should either leave or we should have to drive them away. They stopped jigging then, and we were scarcely back in the jigging bight when they commenced jigging again. We then went alongside the same vessel again, and told them for the third time to knock off jigging. They stopped again and we went back to the bight. They commenced jigging again, and we then went alongside one of the same two vessels, and about thirty of us, myself amongst them, went on board. We told the captain to get under weigh and leave, as he wouldn't do what he was told, and he said he would go when he was ready. Shortly after it came on to blow hard from the westward, and they all left, Newfoundlanders as well, one of the latter having to slip her chain. The vessel we were on board of, when the wind sprung up from the westward, dragged about the length of herself, and then brought up again. Some of the Newfoundlanders went under the land to another good squid ground. The Americans went to Northern Bay, and the same evening and next day the captain of the vessel we boarded came here and bought squid. I spoke to him when he came here, and he made no complaint about having to leave, nor did he seem annoyed when we were on board. When we were on board when he was heaving up, a gust of wind came down, and we all had to jump into our boats, and we offered to pilot him into smooth water under the land.

The deposition of Patrick James English, taken upon oath, and who saith that about three weeks since several American bankers came to Job's Cove for squid, and anchored between ½ to ¾ mile from centre of the bight; there were bottom cod-nets set all round them; they were there when they anchored. They commenced to jig for squid from the vessels. The Newfoundland fishermen, who were jigging for squid from punts from a ¼ mile off to close in shore, the usual ground for jigging squid, went out to the American vessels and told them to knock off jigging for squid where they were, as they would bring the squid out of the bight into the tide, where they would be swept away, and told them to come into the bight and jig as much as they liked, which they did not do, but went on jigging from the vessels the next morning. That day the Newfoundland fishermen, consisting of men from Job's Cove, Burnt Point, Gull Island, Northern Bay—about 300 in number—went alongside the American vessels and told them they were spoiling the fishing ground altogether, and must knock off jigging there and come in their dories in the bight and jig, but the Americans still continued jigging from their vessels. Finding that they were going on jigging from the vessels, the Newfoundland fishermen went off a third time the same morning, and, I believe, told them they must leave the bight. About an hour after, finding there were no sign of them going, the Newfoundland fishermen went off to one vessel which was going on jigging, and went on board her. I don't know what happened then, but shortly afterwards all the American vessels left. There were several St. John's vessels in the jigging bight. I believe there were no nets interfered with or damaged by the Americans. Since the American vessels left the squid have all left the bight.

Northern District, Carbonear, to wit.

The examination of Loren B. Naus, of the schooner "Moro Castle," belonging to Gloucester, United States of America, taken upon oath before Israel L. McNeil, Esq., one of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the said district, this the 23rd day of August, in the year of our Lord 1880, who saith that on the 4th day of the present month I anchored my vessel at Job's Cove, in the district of Bay de Verd, for the purpose of purchasing squid bait; I succeeded in purchasing a quantity from the inhabitants who came off in boats. On the following day, about 8 olclock, A.M., I left my schooner and went toward Northern Bay, to ascertain if bait was to be got there. When about two-thirds of a mile from my vessel I noticed my mainsail being hoisted, and suspecting something to be wrong I immediately turned back and found a large body of men had gone on board my vessel and taken charge of her, and stated they intended running her on shore for having seen parties jigging squid from boats alongside, and from her deck. When I boarded my vessel the anchor was just breaking ground, and she was drifting towards the shore. I heard some one say, "Cut away the jib." I ordered them to leave the vessel, which they accordingly did, after getting a promise from me to take my vessel away. I and my crew, after using great exertions, succeeded in getting the vessel out of danger, and proceeded on my voyage to the banks, and continued to prosecute the fishery, there being no injury done to myself, my crew, or my vessel. I had secured from 17,000 to 19,000 of squids at the time of leaving Job's Cove.

My Lord, Government House, Newfoundland, September 15, 1880.

WITH reference to paragraph 4 of my despatch of the 2nd instant, relating to the alleged obstruction offered to some American bait-vessels at Job's Cove, Conception Bay, I would observe that the report of meteorological observations taken at St. John's shows that on the day in question the wind, which was originally gentle from the south-west, freshened in the course of the morning, causing a strong wind to blow right into the Cove, and thus corroborating the statement in paragraph 22 of Commander Hall's Report as to the cause of all the vessels, British as well as Americans, weighing and leaving the anchorage.

The "Moro Castle," like the rest of the vessels in the anchorage, put to sea in consequence of this strong wind, and if there had been any intention on the part of those on board to run the vessel on shore they would not have set the mainsail, but rather the jib.

My Lord, Newport, September 20, 1880.

I HAVE the honour to bring to your notice the inclosed extract from one of the daily papers, from which it appears that two American fishing-vessels, on the 3rd and 4th ultimo, were prevented from catching squid in Conception Bay, Newfoundland, and it is stated that violence was used by the natives on both occasions.

The cause appears to be the old complication growing out of the difference between the inshore fishing rights guaranteed by the Treaty of Washington and the Municipal Fishing Regulations of Newfoundland.

Remarks on this present fishery trouble are being made in the press. One paper gives as its opinion that "the proper mode of settlement would seem to be upon the plan of as absolute freedom to the fisheries as is at all compatible with the enforcement of necessary laws to prevent the fish and fisheries from being destroyed."

It will be of great benefit both to Great Britain and the United States when arrangements can be made of such a character as will for ever prevent future controversies of this nature arising, which, although having the appearance of no great importance, become irritating to both countries, and thereby cause dissensions between them.

VIOLATIONS OF THE FISHERY TREATY.—The schooner "Morro Castle," Captain J. B. Naus, which arrived at Gloucester from a Grand bank cod-fishing trip this morning, reports that on Wednesday, the 4th August, she anchored near Job Cove, about a mile from the shore, in Conception Bay, Newfoundland, for the purpose of procuring bait. After purchasing squid, left during the absence of Captain Naus, Thursday morning, the crew attempted to catch a few squid with jigs, when the vessel was boarded by two or three hundred natives, who drove the crew into the cabinway and forecastle, and attempted to get the vessel under way. Captain Naus returned and found the Newfoundlanders very threatening, but as the vessel began drifting on the rocks, they were frightened and left. The vessel came very near going ashore. The day previous the schooner "Victor," of Gloucester, was boarded in a similar manner, and violence used to prevent her fishing. The Newfoundland Government's objection to Sunday fishing and use of the seine does not hold in this case, as the crew of the "Morro Castle" were line fishing, and had taken but ten or a dozen squid.

Inclosure 2 in No. 37.

Extract from the "Evening Telegram" of September 24, 1880.

ANOTHER NEWFOUNDLAND RIOT: TWO GLOUCESTER FISHING SCHOONERS DRIVEN FROM THE FISHING-GROUNDS.—Under the above startling heading the "Cape Ann Advertiser" of Friday last makes what looks like a very serious charge against the people of Job's Cove, Conception Bay. If it can be proved that the statements of the "Advertiser" are correct, if the "outrages" complained of were actually committed, why, then, we shall probably have a renewal of the fishery difficulties, and possibly the Premier may ere long see another opportunity of earning a "big fee" in connection with the "Commission business."

Here is what our Cape Ann contemporary says about the matter:—

Schooner "Moro Castle," Captain Loren B. Naus, arrived from a Grand Bank cod-fishing voyage yesterday, bringing information of further riotous proceedings on the part of the Newfoundland fishermen, and the forcible prevention of Gloucester fishing vessels taking squid for baiting purposes.

The "Moro Castle" had been on the Grand Bank trawl fishing, and having exhausted her bait, went to Newfoundland to procure a supply of squid. She anchored in Conception Bay, in Job or Devil Cove, on the afternoon of Wednesday, the 4th August, about a mile from the shore. That afternoon Captain Naus purchased of the natives 18,000 squids at 60 cents per 100, paying them 108 dollars. The next morning (Thursday) Captain Naus left the vessel in a dory to go in search of more bait, having learned that some could be procured at a neighbouring cove. While absent he saw the mainsail of the schooner start, and knowing that something must be wrong, hurried back, and found his vessel surrounded by boats, and that some 200 or 300 Newfoundlanders had boarded and taken possession of her. He ordered the intruders to leave the vessel, but they took no notice of him, and being all alone, his crew, mostly of Nova Scotians, having been frightened and taken refuge in the cabin and forecastle, he was without the means of enforcing his orders. The natives were very threatening, and the captain feared for his life if he attempted unaided to regain control of the schooner. These men had come on board because some of the crew had been seen jigging for squid, although they had taken only ten or a dozen. The squid were plenty, and it would have been easy to have secured a sufficient supply for bait if the crew had been allowed their rights to free fishing without intimidation. The invaders had broken the anchor from bottom and put the schooner under mainsail and jib, and she was fast drifting towards the rocks. Seeing that there was danger of the vessel being wrecked, the invaders became frightened, and hurriedly took their departure, and she was rescued from shipwreck with considerable difficulty.

Captain Naus reports that on the previous day, Wednesday, the 4th August, the schooner "Victor," of this port, engaged in the Grand Bank cod-fishery, was prevented by violence from securing a supply of bait.

These outrages cannot be justified by the Newfoundland Government on the ground of their objection to Sunday fishing or the use of seines, as both assaults occurred on week days, and the men were engaged in line fishing.

Even had there been a violation of Treaty rights, or of local laws, there can be no justification of the resort to mob law. We trust that these additional outrages upon unoffending American fishermen will result in some authoritative settlement of the meaning of the Treaty stipulations, and, unless suitable redress is promptly made, to the abrogation of the Fisheries Treaty.

MORE FISHERY TROUBLE. CAPTAIN MCKENZIE AND THE SPOUT'S COVE "OUTRAGE."—We are informed that Captain McKenzie, of the schooner "Minnesota," of Provincetown, Massachusetts, has forwarded to the Washington authorities a report of another "outrage" alleged to have been committed by the people of Conception Bay. Captain McKenzie says: "I was prevented from using seine to procure caplin bait at Spout's Cove, near Small Point, on the 21st ultimo. Thomas Goss, of Torbay, was pilot of my vessel, and his seine was hired by me. The people would not allow me to shoot the seine, telling me that I should purchase bait from them. One man named John Trickett demanded 4 dollars for the privilege of using the seine, which sum was paid."

At present we are not in a position to say how far the captain's version of this "outrage" agrees with the facts of the case. It may be true in its entirety, or it may not. We hope, however, to be in a position in a day or two to lay before our readers "the other side of the story," with such comment as the case may warrant.

Deposition of Thomas Goss.

Central District, St. John's, to wit.

THE examination of Thomas Goss, of Torbay, in the said Central District, planter, who saith: On or about the 20th day of June last I hired a boat and seine to one John McIntyre, captain of the United States' schooner "Minnesota," in order to obtain bait for his use to carry on the fishery. I went with him as pilot in his vessel, leaving Torbay at 11 o'clock in the morning, and anchored at 4 o'clock the same evening at Upper Small Point, on the north shore of Conception Bay. We put the seine in boat, went into the beach, where there was abundance of caplin, shot the seine, and hauled a big lot of caplin, and were in the act of dipping them in from the seine into the boat, when five or six big boys attacked us with stones from the cliff, and we had to throw away the caplin in the seine and leave the place. A boat came from the bay as we were going off, and came alongside of our boat. I asked the man in the boat, who appeared to have charge of her, "What was up that we would not be allowed to haul caplin?" He said "There was no one allowed to haul caplin here unless they bought them from the people."

Captain McIntyre said to me, "What are we going to do now for bait?" I asked the man in the boat what was his name. He said "Trickett," and he said he would go with us in our boat and try and prevent them from throwing stones, and further would go with us to Spout's Cove, about a quarter of a mile distant, to obtain bait, we agreeing to give him 9 dollars. Captain McIntyre took him into his boat, and we hauled bait, and had sufficient on board at 4 o'clock. Paid Cricket and he went off, and we returned to Torbay the next morning early.

*Earl Granville to Mr. Lowell.

Sir, Foreign Office, October 27, 1880.

HER Majesty's Government have carefully considered the correspondence which has taken place between their predecessors and the Government of the United States respecting the disturbance which occurred at Fortune Bay on the 6th January, 1878, and they have approached this subject with the most earnest desire to arrive at an amicable solution of the differences which have unfortunately arisen between the two Governments on the construction of the provisions of the Treaties which regulate the rights of United States' fishermen on the coast of Newfoundland.

In the first place, I desire that there should be no possibility of misconception as to the views entertained by Her Majesty's Government respecting the conduct of the Newfoundland fishermen in violently interfering with the United States' fishermen, and destroying or damaging some of their nets. Her Majesty's Government have no hesitation in admitting that this proceeding was quite indefensible, and is much to be regretted. No sense of injury to their rights, however well founded, could, under the circumstances, justify the British fishermen in taking the law into their own hands, and committing acts of violence; but I will revert by and by to this feature in the case, and will now proceed to the important question raised in this controversy, whether, under the Treaty of Washington, the United States' fishermen are bound to observe the fishery regulations of Newfoundland in common with British subjects.

Without entering into any lengthy discussion on this point, I feel bound to state that, in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government, the clause in the Treaty of Washington which provides that the citizens of the United States shall be entitled, "in common with British subjects," to fish in Newfoundland waters within the limits of British sovereignty, means that the American and the British fishermen shall fish in these waters upon terms of equality; and not that there shall be an exemption of American fishermen from any reasonable regulations to which British fishermen are subject.

Her Majesty's Government entirely concur in Mr. Marcy's Circular of the 28th March, 1856. The principle therein laid down appears to them perfectly sound, and as applicable to the fishery provisions of the Treaty of Washington as to those of the Treaty which Mr. Marcy had in view. They cannot, therefore, admit the accuracy of the opinion expressed in Mr. Evarts' letter to Mr. Welsh of the 28th September, 1878, "that the fishery rights of the United States conceded by the Treaty of Washington are to be exercised wholly free from the restraints and regulations of the Statutes of Newfoundland," if by that opinion anything inconsistent with Mr. Marcy's principle is really intended. Her Majesty's Government, however, fully admit that, if any such local Statutes could be shown to be inconsistent with the express stipulations, or even with the spirit of the Treaty, they would not be within the category of those reasonable regulations by which American (in common with British) fishermen ought to be bound; and they observe, on the other hand, with much satisfaction, that Mr. Evarts, at the close of his letter to Mr. Welsh of the 1st August, 1879, after expressing regret at "the conflict of interests which the exercise of the Treaty privileges enjoyed by the United States appears to have developed," expressed himself as follows:—

"There is no intention on the part of this [the United States'] Government that these privileges should be abused, and no desire that their full and free enjoyment should harm the colonial fishermen.

"While the differing interests and methods of the shore fishery and the vessel fishery make it impossible that the regulation of the one should be entirely given to the other, yet if the mutual obligations of the Treaty of 1871 are to be maintained, the United States' Government would gladly co-operate with the Government of Her Britannic Majesty in any effort to make those regulations a matter of reciprocal convenience and right, a means of preserving the fisheries at their highest point of production, and of conciliating a community of interest by a just proportion of advantages and profits."

Her Majesty's Government do not interpret these expressions in any sense derogatory to the sovereign authority of Great Britain in the territorial waters of Newfoundland, by which only regulations having the force of law within those waters can be made. So regarding the proposal, they are pleased not only to recognize in it an indication that the desire of Her Majesty's Government to arrive at a friendly and speedy settlement of this question is fully reciprocated by the Government of the United States, but also to discern in it the basis of a practical settlement of the difficulty; and I have the honour to request that you will inform Mr. Evarts that Her Majesty's Government, with a view to avoiding further discussion and future misunderstandings, are quite willing to confer with the Government of the United States respecting the establishment of regulations under which the subjects of both parties to the Treaty of Washington shall have the full and equal enjoyment of any fishery which under that Treaty is to be used in common. The duty of enacting and enforcing such regulations, when agreed upon, would, of course, rest with the Power having the sovereignty of the shore and waters in each case.

As regards the claim of the United States' fishermen to compensation for the injuries and losses which they are alleged to have sustained in consequence of the violent obstruction which they encountered from British fishermen at Fortune Bay on the occasion referred to, I have to state that Her Majesty's Government are quite willing that they should be indemnified for any injuries and losses which upon a joint inquiry may be found to have been sustained by them, and in respect of which they are reasonably entitled to compensation; but on this point I have to observe that a claim is put forward by them for the loss of fish which had been caught, or which, but for the interference of the British fishermen, might have been caught by means of strand fishing, a mode of fishing to which, under the Treaty of Washington, they were not entitled to resort.

The prosecution by them of the strand fishery being clearly in excess of their Treaty privileges, Her Majesty's Government cannot doubt that, on further consideration, the United States' Government will not be disposed to support a claim in respect of the loss of the fish which they had caught, or might have caught, by that process.

My Lord, Washington, October 18, 1880

WITH reference to my despatch of the 20th ultimo, bringing to your Lordship's attention extracts from certain American papers, mentioning complaints made by United States' fishermen of the treatment which they had received from Newfoundland fishermen, I have the honour to inclose herewith an extract from the "New York Herald," which shows that the Governor of Newfoundland has taken notice of these complaints, and that the deposition of the pilot on board one of the United States' fishing vessels which suffered has been taken. The "New York Herald" has a leading article on this occurrence, herewith inclosed, which I consider shows that later, when Congress meets, the soreness still continuing on account of the Fortune Bay difficulty, the question will again be brought forward with a view to the greater protection of United States' fishermen from the apparent lawlessness of the Newfoundland fishermen.

Inclosure 1 in No. 42.

Extract from the "New York Herald" of October 5, 1880.

AMERICAN FISHERMEN ATTACKED.—The notice of the Newfoundland authorities has been directed to some complaints made by Gloucester fishermen of ill-treatment at the hands of Newfoundland fishermen and an interference with the just rights of United States' fishermen in British waters. The Governor of Newfoundland accordingly sent for Mr. Thomas Goss, of Torbay, the only trustworthy witness that so far can be procured. Goss acted as pilot in Conception Bay for Captain MacEntyre, of the Gloucester schooner "Minnesota." Before Judge Conrey Goss deposed that he started from Torbay on Monday, the 20th June, in the capacity of pilot on the "Minnesota." They reached Upper Small Point, where they had discovered that bait was plentiful; here they commenced to operate, and while taking the caplin on board their boats they were attacked by the people on shore and furiously pelted with showers of stones. Men, women, and children were engaged in the assault. The Americans immediately withdrew to their vessel, their lives being every moment imperilled. A man named Trickett offered his services to Captain MacEntyre to procure bait if paid the sum of 4 dollars. Trickett brought him to Spout Cove, near his own home, and for half the sum first asked the "Minnesota" obtained all her required bait, and then, having landed the pilot, proceeded to the banks. The deposition of Goss has been transmitted by the Governor of Newfoundland to the Secretary of State for the Colonies, and the other cases will be investigated and brought under imperial notice as soon as evidence can be obtained.

THE FISHERY OUTRAGES.—At last, after a great deal of delay, the Newfoundland authorities have felt compelled to take some notice of the outrageous misconduct of their people toward our American fishermen. The "Herald" correspondent at St. John's relates that the Governor recently sent for a Newfoundland pilot, Thomas Goss, "the only reliable witness who can so far be procured," he adds, and took his testimony. Goss, it seems, was engaged as pilot by the master of the American schooner "Minnesota," and while he was so acting the schooner came upon the ground where, under the Treaty, Americans are allowed to take bait. Our people began to catch bait, whereupon Goss—a Newfoundland man himself—testifies that the Americans were set upon by a furious crowd from the shore, men and women, who pelted them with "showers of stones," so that our people had difficulty in reaching their vessel alive. They had gone out in boats to take the bait.

Having been thus prevented from exercising their rights under the Treaty, and violently driven off, a Newfoundland man came along and offered to procure what bait the "Minnesota" needed near his own home for the sum of 4 dollars, and the captain of the "Minnesota," being a practical as well as a peaceable man, accordingly paid for his bait and went on his way to the fishing banks.

WITH reference to the letter from this Department of the 23rd ultimo, respecting a case of obstruction alleged to have been offered to an American vessel at Spout's Cove, Conception Bay, Newfoundland, I am directed by the Earl of Kimberley to transmit to you, for the information of Earl Granville, a copy of a further despatch from the Governor of the Colony on the subject, together with one of a despatch which Lord Kimberley has addressed to Sir J. Governor Sir J. Glover to the Earl of Kimberley.

My Lord, Government House, Newfoundland, October 13, 1880.

IN reference to my despatch of the 30th ultimo, on the subject of an alleged case of obstruction offered to American fishermen from the schooner "Minnesota," of Provincetown, Massachusetts, at Spout's Cove, Conception Bay, I have the honour to inform your Lordship that the depositions taken by the local magistrate are of so illusory a character as to be quite worthless, and I trust I may induce my Government to undertake legal proceedings against the offenders.

2. Had one of Her Majesty's vessels been available, as in the case of obstruction at Job's Cove, Conception Bay, referred to in my despatch of the 2nd September, I am of opinion that sufficient evidence would have been obtained by the officer commanding, in his judicial capacity, as would have led to the conviction of the people who threw stones at the Americans, and I am hoping that such result may yet be obtained.

3. I would respectfully suggest that one of Her Majesty's vessels of the fishery squadron be detailed especially to visit the coast between Cape Bonavista and Fortune Bay. The bays, harbours, and coves comprised between the above-named points being those visited by the Americans during the bait season, such vessel need never be for more than three or four days without being in telegraphic communication with St. John's, as there are various telegraph stations between the points mentioned.

4. I have represented to my Government that they should cause the people of the parts of the coast visited by the Americans to be made aware of the rights which the Americans have paid for, and that we are bound to secure them in the exercise of a right for which we have received from them a money award.

IN reference to my despatch dated the 13th October last, I have the honour to transmit, for your Lordship's information, a copy of the Report of a second magisterial inquiry into the case of stone-throwing at Americans at Spout's Cove, Conception Bay.

This, together with Mr. Justice Pinsent's address to the Grand Jury at Harbour Grace, a copy of which is inclosed herewith, will, I trust, have a salutary effect in checking, for the future, attempted interruptions to Americans when in search of bait.

Inclosure 2 in No. 46.

Mr. McNeill to Sir W. V. Whiteway.

Sir, Carbonear, October 28, 1880.

I HAVE the honour to report that Inspector Canty, accompanied by one of the police force from this station, proceeded to Spout Cove and Small Point, distant 10 miles from here in the Bay de Verde district, on Wednesday, the 26th instant, and succeeded in finding the boys (four in number) charged with having thrown stones at the crew of the United States' schooner "Minnesota," McIntyre master, while engaged hauling caplin at Small Point in June last.

The four boys were brought before me yesterday. The youngest, Stephen Hayden, being a mere child 8 years of age, I dismissed; and after a careful inquiry into the case, in presence of Thomas Goss, who was pilot of the "Minnesota" at the time the affair took place, and having the evidence of Edward Trickett, of Spout Cove, fisherman, who was employed by the master of the "Minnesota" in hauling bait for that vessel, the three boys were convicted of rolling and throwing stones down the cliff at Small Point, where the men of the "Minnesota" were engaged hauling caplin, but they all maintained they were ignorant of the presence of men on the beach under them until they noticed some boats going off from the beach.

From the evidence taken in the case, I am satisfied the boys had no malicious intention in the act; and, further, I find it is a common practice with the boys along the shore, after school hours, to amuse themselves in throwing or rolling stones over the steep cliffs (at places some hundreds of feet in height from the beach), and often to the annoyance and danger of their own neighbours who may happen to be on the beach under.

In order to put a stop to such practices, I sentenced the eldest boy, John Hayden, who is 14 years of age, to pay a fine of 5 dollars and costs; and the other two, John King and William Short, who are about 12 years of age, to a fine of 3 dollars each. The mothers of the boys Hayden and King were present in Court during the trial, and paid the fines. The widowed mother of the boy Short, being a pauper, I shall not exact the fine in his case. I reprimanded the boys severely, and pointed out to them that the possible consequence of the habit of rolling stones down the cliff might, if continued, at some time cause the loss of life or limb.

I believe the result of the punishment inflicted in this case will have a salutary effect in putting a stop to such practices, not only in the neighbourhood of Small Point and Spout Cove, but also on the whole range of shore between here and Island Cove, at the entrance of the bay.

I beg to transmit herewith copy of proceedings in the case; also the examination of the pilot, Thomas Goss.

Deposition of Thomas Goss.

Northern District, Carbonear, to wit.

THE examination of Thomas Goss, of Torbay, in the Central District, planter, taken upon oath before Israel L. McNeill, Esq., one of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the said northern district, the 27th October, in the year of our Lord 1880, who saith:—That on or about the 20th June last I hired a boat and seine to one John McIntyre, master of the United States' fishing schooner "Minnesota," for the purpose of procuring bait for his use at the fishery. I also went with him as pilot in his vessel. We left Torbay at 11 o'clock on the morning of that day, and anchored at 4 o'clock the same evening at Upper Small Point, on the north shore of Conception Bay, we put our seine in the boat and went to the beach, where there was abundance of caplin; we shot out the seine and hauled a quantity of caplin, and were in the act of dipping them in from the seine into our boat, when five or six big boys attacked us with stones from the cliff, and we had to throw away the caplin we had hauled and leave the place. A boat from the bay came up as we were going off, and when alongside of our boat I asked a man in the boat, who appeared to have charge of her, "What was up that we would not be allowed to haul caplin?" He made answer that no one was allowed to get bait there unless they bought it from the people. I said to him, "This is my own vessel, and I think it hard not to be allowed to get bait for her, and that I had got bait in that place forty years ago, and that my mother was born at Broad Cove, near Small Point." I also said I had plenty of friends on the north shore. Captain McIntyre then said to me, "What are we going to do for bait now?" I asked the man in the boat to whom I had been talking what was his name. He answered "Trickett," and he said he would go with us in our boat and try and prevent the boys throwing stones at us, and further, if we wished, he would go with us to Spout Cove (about a quarter of a mile distant) and assist us in getting bait, having agreed to give him 4 dollars for his services. Captain McIntyre took him into his boat and we hauled bait, and having taken sufficient on board by 9 o'clock that night paid Trickett, who went off, and we returned to Torbay early the following morning. The interference of the boys throwing stones at us did not cause a delay to us of more than an hour at furthest. We met with no further annoyance while the vessel remained at Spout Cove. We were very fortunate in procuring our bait that evening at Spout Cove; otherwise we should have been obliged to proceed to Carbonear for that purpose.

Taken and sworn at Carbonear aforesaid, the day and year within written.

Inclosure 4 in No. 46.

Police Office, Carbonear, October 28, 1880.

Before ISRAEL L. McNEILL, Esq., J.P., Stipendiary Magistrate.

Thomas Goss, Complainant, v. John Hayden, William Short, John King, and Stephen Hayden, Defendants.

Complaint: Assault.
Defendants severally plead not guilty.

EDWARD TRICKETT, sworn and examined, saith:—I was on the bank at Spout Cove, where I reside, one afternoon last summer, during the caplin school; cannot remember the exact date. I noticed a vessel come in and anchor at Small Point. I went off to her in my boat, but before I got alongside I noticed some boats had left her and gone to the beach. I saw some boys on the cliff over the beach where the boats had gone; among them I recognized Stephen Hayden and William Short (two of the boys now at the bar). The boys were throwing stones over the cliff, or, rather, rolling stones down. I noticed one or two of them throwing stones at times. I heard the men who were on the beach sing out to the boys to cease throwing stones; there were four boys on the cliff; I did not know the other two. I also called out to them to knock off throwing stones. The men left the beach in their boats and came off to the vessel. Thomas Goss, now present in Court, was with the crew of the vessel; I did not know where the vessel belonged. Goss agreed to give me 4 dollars to go with them and help them haul bait for the vessel. I consented, and went with them in their boat to Spout Cove, where we hauled sufficient caplin for their use; they then paid me the 4 dollars agreed upon between us, and I got into my boat and went to my bultows, and some time during the same night the schooner left Spout Cove.

For the defence:—

John Hayden (a boy about 14 years of age), sworn, saith:—I was in company with my brother Stephen, John King, and William Short one afternoon in June last, on the bank near Small Point; we were rolling stones down the cliff to the beach; did not see any boat or men on the beach. There was a schooner at anchor in the bight. I saw some men go off in two boats from the shore or beach, and when we saw them we stopped rolling stones down the cliff. From the top of the cliff to the beach is about 100 fathoms, and it is very steep, so that I would not venture out to the edge of the cliff to look down. Cannot say whether any of the stones struck the men who were going off in the boats. They went over to Spout Cove when they left the beach. No person told us to throw stones at the men or down the cliff. I may have thrown two or three stones, but not with the intention of hurting any one. There were no other boys present at the time but us four, whom I have named and who are now present. We were not rolling stones down the cliff. There was no man or men near us on the cliff, and no one told us to throw stones.

William Short and John King each admitted they were with John Hayden and Stephen Hayden rolling and throwing stones on the occasion. Stephen Hayden, being a boy under 10 years of age, was admonished and discharged.

Judgment.

John Hayden, convicted of assault upon complainant and others by throwing stones at them, and being the oldest boy of the four, was sentenced to pay a fine of 5 dollars and costs; and John King and William Short, being convicted of the same offence, were each sentenced to pay a fine of 3 dollars and costs.

(Signed) ISRAEL L. McNEILL, J.P.

Inclosure 5 in No. 46.

Extract from Mr. Justice Pinsent's Charge to the Grand Jury.

THE Judge then referred to a letter he had just received from Mr. McNeil, the Magistrate at Carbonear, excusing his non-attendance at the Court to-day on the ground that he was engaged in trying some lads belonging to Small Point charged with throwing stones at the crew of an American fishing vessel last summer. The Government was prosecuting, and the Inspector of Police was then in Carbonear on the business. His Lordship said he greatly regretted to hear of such interference not only on account of the offence itself, but as the national honour was involved in the peaceable recognition and observance of the rights accorded to Americans by the Treaty of Washington and by the Local Enactment which gave effect to it in this colony. However obnoxious to some persons in some localities this cession of fishing rights might be, it would nevertheless have to be borne in mind that the law must sustain the rights possessed by fishermen of the United States with as much vigilance and effect as it does those of British subjects. He wished this to be clearly understood and attended to.

I HAVE laid before my Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty your letter of the 8th instant, inclosing copies of two despatches from the Governor of Newfoundland, suggesting that one of Her Majesty's vessels employed on the Newfoundland fisheries should be detailed to visit the coast between Cape Bonavista and Fortune Bay from the 25th April to the 25th September.

2. In reply, my Lords desire me to acquaint you, for the information of the Earl of Kimberley, that they concur in the opinion of Sir John Glover, that it is important one of Her Majesty's ships should be on the part of Newfoundland indicated at the commencement of the bait season, viz., 25th April, when practicable. With regard, however, to the proposal to station a man-of-war within the limits mentioned during the whole of the fishing season, my Lords consider that the Senior Officer employed in the protection of these fisheries must be left to direct the movements of vessels under his orders. He will be ordered to arrange that frequent visits are to be made to those ports where American fishermen procure bait, especially Fortune Bay, and out-of-the-way ports where there are no resident magistrates or any Government officials.

3. I am to add that it would seem to be the duty of the Colonial Government, by the location of magistrates or otherwise, to endeavour to prevent the breaches of the peace and of the fishery laws, which appear to be only too frequent in the localities mentioned, and not to rely entirely upon Her Majesty's ships for that purpose.

Sir, Downing Street, January 10, 1881.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your despatch of the 21st ultimo, informing me that your Government are prepared to take steps to notify to the inhabitants of outlying settlements, frequented by the Americans, the rights which the latter have under the Treaty of Washington.

I have learnt with satisfaction this intention on the part of your Government, and I should be glad if you would be so good as to furnish me with copies of any notice which may be issued by them pursuant to this decision.

Mr. Herbert to Sir J. Pauncefote—(Received January 28.)

Sir, Downing Street, January 27, 1881.

WITH reference to previous correspondence respecting the claims of the United States' fishermen for compensation in respect of injuries and losses sustained by them on the occasion of the disturbances at Fortune Bay in January 1878, I am directed by the Earl of Kimberley to acquaint you, for the information of Earl Granville, that his Lordship has informed the Governor of Newfoundland, by telegraph, that it is proposed that an inquiry should be held by a Representative of Her Majesty's Government and a Representative of the United States, with a view to the assessment of compensation to which American fishermen may be reasonably entitled on account of such injuries and losses. The Governor has been asked to ascertain as soon as possible whether his Government will abide by the decision which may be arrived at in the matter by Her Majesty's Government and that of the United States.

Governor Sir J. Glover to the Earl of Kimberley.

(Extract.) Government House, Newfoundland, January 10, 1881.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt on the 29th ultimo of your Lordship's despatch of the 1st December, 1880, transmitting a printed copy of a letter addressed by Earl Granville to Mr. Lowell upon the subject of the Fortune Bay Fishery disputes.

2. Your Lordship will observe by the inclosed extracts from the "Royal Gazette" and other newspapers that the letter in question had, previously to the above date, viz., 29th December, been published in the local papers, and, I may add, was read with very general satisfaction.

Mr. Herbert to Sir J. Pauncefote.—(Received February 12.)

Sir, Downing Street, February 12, 1881.

WITH reference to previous correspondence respecting the Fortune Bay case, I am directed by the Earl of Kimberley to acquaint you, for the information of Earl Granville, that he has received a telegram from the Governor of Newfoundland, dated the 11th instant, in which it is stated that the Government of the Colony respectfully contend that no American claims can be regarded as admissible except those for damages to fishing gear from the use of excessive force, supposing that such excessive force was used. The Colonial Government consider that the inquiry should be limited to that basis, and also claim the right of Newfoundland to be represented at the proposed inquiry, with full power to investigate, cross-examine, and produce witnesses.

Lord Kimberley proposes, with Lord Granville's concurrence, to address a telegram to Sir J. Glover in reply, stating that it will be impossible to limit the inquiry to the basis suggested, but that every opportunity will be given to his Government to state their case, and that the fullest care will be taken by Her Majesty's Government to guard the interests of the Colony, more particularly as it will be necessary that the Colony should be held ultimately responsible for any damages which, upon a friendly investigation, or, if necessary, an arbitration, may be found due to the United States, as his Government will at once perceive.

No. 57.

Mr. Evarts to Mr. Lowell.—(Communicated to Earl Granville by Mr. Lowell, February 16.)

Sir, Department of State, Washington, February 4, 1881.

THE communication from Her Britannic Majesty's Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, Lord Granville, of the 27th October, 1880, respecting the disturbance which occurred at Fortune Bay on the 6th January, 1878, was duly received in your despatch of the 28th October, 1880.

As the separation of the questions raised by that occurrence and the method of their solution were general suggestions on the part of Her Britannic Majesty's Government, I had naturally supposed that this despatch would have been followed by such definite propositions as this Government could either accept or decline; the more so, as I had (on the 12th June, 1880), in reply to your telegraphic Report of a conversation with Lord Granville, authorized you to say that "the President will be quite ready to entertain any considerations which may be presented to the Secretary of State to relieve the question of the fisheries from its present difficulties."

If, however, as circumstances would seem to indicate, I am to consider this communication as a preliminary inquiry from Lord Granville for the purpose of learning whether such suggestion would be so favourably received by this Government as to justify the opening of direct negotiation, it becomes my duty to put you in possession of the impressions which this inquiry has made upon the Government of the United States.

As I understand the purport of Lord Granville's communication, Her Britannic Majesty's Government desires to arrange the compensation due to the United States fishermen for the disturbances at Fortune Bay, without the formal consideration or decision of any questions of Treaty construction which the facts of that disturbance might seem to raise, resting the right of compensation solely upon the unlawful violence exercised by British subjects in Newfoundland.

The facts in this case are not complicated, and the calculations are simple. The United States Government does not see in its present condition or character sufficient grounds to require any very elaborate method of decision such as a Commission or the necessity for any protracted inquiry. If Her Britannic Majesty's Government will propose the submission of the computation of damages to the summary award of the Secretary of State of the United States and Her Britannic Majesty's Representative at Washington (this function to be exercised either directly or by such delegation as may seem to them judicious), the Government of the United States will accept the proposition and close this controversy on the basis of that award.

But in signifying to Her Britannic Majesty's Government the willingness of the United States to accede to such a proposition, you will carefully guard against any admission of the correctness of those views of our Treaty rights which are expressed either explicitly or by implication in Lord Granville's communication of the 29th October, 1880.

The views of this Government upon the proper construction of the rights of fishery guaranteed by the Treaty of Washington have been fully expressed in my former despatches, and no reasons have been furnished to induce a change of opinion. The delay in the settlement of the Fortune Bay case has been already too long protracted. It has provoked a not unnatural feeling of irritation among the fishermen of the United States at what they conceive to be a persistent denial of their Treaty rights, while it is to be feared that it has encouraged among the provincial fishermen the idea that their forcible resistance to the exercise of these rights is not without justification in their local law and the construction which Her Britannic Majesty's Government is supposed to have placed upon the provisions of the Treaty.

It is now three years since twenty-two vessels belonging to the United States, and engaged in what by them and their Government was considered a lawful industry, were forcibly driven from Fortune Bay under circumstances of great provocation, and at very serious pecuniary loss. And this occurred at the very time when, under the award of the Halifax Commission, the Government of the United States were about paying to Her Britannic Majesty's Government a very large amount for the privilege of the exercise of this industry by these fishermen. In March of the same year, 1878, this very grave occurrence of January was brought to the attention of the British Government, in the confident hope that compensation would be promptly made for the losses caused by what the United States Government was willing to believe was a local misconstruction of the Treaty, or a temporary, and from ignorance, perhaps, an excusable, popular excitement.

It is unnecessary to do more than recall to your attention the long and unsatisfactory discussion which followed the presentation of this claim, and especially the fact that, in its progress, the Government of the United States was compelled to express, with emphatic distinctness, the impossibility of accepting the subordination of its Treaty rights to the provisions of local legislation, which was apparently put forward by Her Majesty's Government as a sufficient ground for the rejection of the claim. And it was not until April 1880 (a delay of two years, during which the importance of an early settlement was urged upon Her Majesty's Government), that, after what this Government understood and accepted, at least as a satisfactory modification of the assumption, we were informed by Lord Salisbury that "Her Majesty's Government are of opinion that, under the circumstances of the case, as at present within their knowledge, the claim advanced by the United States fishermen for compensation on account of the losses stated to have been sustained by them on the occasion in question is one which should not be entertained."

This decision of Her Majesty's Government terminated any further discussion, and the Government of the United States found itself compelled to protect the interests of its citizens by such methods as might commend themselves to its judgment. In addition to the Halifax Award which we had paid for the privileges and rights, the exercise of which is now denied our citizens, we were also continuously paying, in the shape of a remission of duties, some 300,000 dollars per annum for this abortive right. Thus forced into position of antagonism, which it profoundly regretted, the Government of the United States was about to take such action as would at least suspend this annual payment until the two Governments were in accord upon the construction of the Treaty, when Her Majesty's Government, through the United States Minister in London, suggested, June 9, 1880, that the consideration of the subject be resumed between the two Governments, and that, in such consideration, the two questions of the interpretation of the Treaty and the attack upon the American fishermen be separated. To that suggestion I replied, June 12, 1880, communicating my great gratification at the friendly disposition of the British Cabinet, and saying that, "the President would be quite ready to entertain any consideration which may be presented to the Secretary of State to relieve the question of the fisheries from its present difficulties."

On October 27, 1880, Lord Granville addressed you the communication which is the subject of this despatch. I regret to find in this communication a disposition to restrict a liberal compensation for an acknowledged wrong by limitations of the fishing rights accorded by the Treaty to which this Government cannot consent. The use of the strand, not as a basis of independent fishing, but as auxiliary to the use of the seine in these waters, where seine-fishing is the only possible mode of taking herring, has been maintained by this Government in my former despatches, and would seem to be justified by the explicit declaration of Her Majesty's Government in the "case" submitted by them to the Halifax Commission, in which, referring to the use of the shores, it is affirmed, "without such permission the practical use of the inshore fisheries was impossible." But as Lord Granville distinctly refers the propriety and justice of these limitations to further negotiations I will not now discuss them, reserving what I deem it right to say for a future despatch in reference to the second of his Lordship's suggestions.

I have recalled to your attention the history of the Fortune Bay outrage, in order that you may express to Her Britannic Majesty's Government the great disappointment which this long delay in its settlement has occasioned. The circumstances under which it occurred were such as to induce this Government to anticipate prompt satisfaction, and it is impossible not to feel that the course which the British Government has thought fit to pursue has seriously affected public opinion as to the worth of the Treaty, which it was hoped by both countries had promoted an amicable solution of long-standing difficulties.

The United States Government cannot feel that justice has been done its citizens in the protracted discussion which this occurrence has provoked, and while perfectly willing to endeavour, in concert with Her Britannic Majesty's Government, to find some practical and friendly solution of the differences of construction as to the Treaty provisions which their application seems to have developed, this Government cannot consent that, pending such discussion, its citizens shall be exposed to the indignity and loss which have been imposed upon them by these and like occurrences.

You will intimate courteously but firmly to Lord Granville that in accepting what we understand to be the proposition of Her Majesty's Government, it is understood as carrying the idea that the settlement suggested will be put in course of immediate execution, and that the determination of the amount of compensation will not be formally confined by any limitation arising from any construction of the Treaty which may be matter of difference between the two Governments.

So useful to the great interests involved do I regard the prompt settlement of this incident in our fishery relations, that I should be glad to hear by telegraph that Lord Granville concurs in the simple form of award which I have proposed.

In imparting to the British Government these views, you may, in your discretion, read this despatch to Lord Granville, and, if he desires it, leave him a copy.

I am, &c.

Earl Granville to Sir E. Thornton.

Sir, Foreign Office, February 18, 1881.

THE United States' Minister at this Court called upon me here on the 16th instant.

Mr. Lowell read to me a despatch addressed to him by the United States' Secretary of State, dated the 4th of this month, relative to the occurrences at Fortune Bay; when he had finished reading it, I observed that I could only reply to it officially after having considered the despatch, a copy of which he communicated to me, for a day or two, in consultation with my colleagues, but I added that its tone was one of complaint, and hardly in unison with the conciliatory course which Her Majesty's Government have taken in the matter.

Mr. Lowell, however, assured me that he did not believe that it was intended to convey this impression, but that inasmuch as public opinion in the United States had been somewhat excited upon the subject, his Government had deemed it necessary to place once more their views upon record.

I went on to say that in any case I did not wish to dwell on a matter of form, but that as to the substance of the despatch, there seemed to be propositions in it with which I believed that Her Majesty's Government would be disposed to agree; that there would be no objection to the reservation by each Government of their opinion as to their respective rights, but it might be hoped that such questions would be set at rest both by the agreement which would be come to as to the amount of damages to be paid to the United States' fishermen, as well as by the Regulations which might be established in the future.

I added that the proposal of the United States' Government, that the question of damages should be arranged by negotiation between the Secretary of State and yourself, or by parties delegated by each of you respectively for that purpose, appeared to me to be good.

Mr. Lowell said that whilst unwilling to precipitate the discussion, he was desirous of impressing upon me the great importance of the right to the strand fishery, and of the bait question.

But I suggested that we should not go further into these matters at present.

I am, &c.

Sir, Foreign Office, February 18, 1881.

I AM directed by Earl Granville to state to you, for the information of Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies, that the United States' Minister at this Court called upon his Lordship at the Foreign Office on the 16th instant to read to him a despatch which he had received from his Government, a copy of which is inclosed herewith,* relative to the Fortune Bay case.

This despatch is a reply to the communication addressed by Lord Granville to Mr. Lowell on the 27th October, a copy of which was transmitted to you in my letter of the 28th of that month.

I am further to transmit the accompanying copy of a despatch addressed to Her Majesty's Minister at Washington,† embodying the substance of the conversation which ensued between Lord Granville and Mr. Lowell; and I am to request, that in laying these papers before the Earl of Kimberley, you will move his Lordship to favour Lord Granville with his observations thereon.

*Earl Granville to Sir E. Thornton.

Sir, Foreign Office, February 21, 1881.

MR. LOWELL informed me to-day that, in addition to the despatch from Mr. Evarts of the 4th instant, he had received another on the subject of the occurrences at Fortune Bay, of which he communicated to me the substance, to the following effect:—

There had been, Mr. Evarts stated, more than one attack upon American fishermen, and the President was of opinion that the long delay which had arisen in coming to a settlement of the Fortune Bay case had encouraged the fishermen there to these acts of violence, which the Government of the United States saw with dissatisfaction.

There could be no question between the two Governments as to the illegality of these further outrages to which he had referred, and he was desired to call the immediate attention of Her Majesty's Government to these complaints.

I said that I would tell him what had occurred to me with regard to the previous despatch from Mr. Evarts. I had not much to add to what I stated to him as my first impression of that despatch. The two propositions contained in it appeared to me to be acceptable, viz., that each Government should reserve their respective Treaty rights, and that, in accordance with the proposal of Mr. Evarts, the amount of damages should be settled by him and by yourself, or by Delegates appointed by either, but I thought that it was desirable, in case there was a difference, which I hoped would not occur, that there should be a previous agreement to refer it to a third person.

It had, however, occurred to me that it would be a still shorter and more satisfactory mode of procedure, that I should at once propose a fair and reasonable sum to settle the matter. If Mr. Lowell would telegraph to ascertain whether this suggestion commended itself to Mr. Evarts, I would in the meanwhile inquire, from the best authority obtainable, what would be an equitable calculation of the amount, in order to make a fair and liberal offer of a round sum. The calculations of the fishermen themselves were obviously such as were likely to be put forward by the parties interested.

Affidavits of Joseph Bowie and Charles G. Ferguson.

I, JOSEPH BOWIE, master of the American schooner "Victor," of Gloucester, Massachusetts, do on oath depose and say that I sailed from Gloucester on or about the 7th June, 1880, for a trip to the Grand Banks for codfish. I went into Musquito, Newfoundland, three times for bait, and bought capelin from the local fishermen, which they had taken in seines of their own. I paid for bait (and ice to preserve it) 66 dollars for the three baitings.

The next time, I went to a place called Devil's Cove on the chart, but it is called

* Substance telegraphed, February 22.

Job's Cove by the people. This was on the 4th August, and the only bait to be obtained was squid. I anchored in the cove about a quarter of a mile from the shore, and commenced to catch squid with the common hooks or jigs used for that purpose. I had no nets or seines on my vessel. I had been fishing about fifteen minutes when some sixty boats that had been fishing inshore from us, manned by at least 150 men, rowed up alongside of us, and forbade our taking any squid. I was not interfering in any way with their fishing, they being a long distance inside of us; in fact, we were outside of the cove, in open water. I had intended to buy my squid, but finding them plenty, I found I could catch them, and save the expense of buying. I was acting in perfect accordance with my Treaty rights, and knew what my rights were. I tried to reason with these people, and told them that I had a right to take bait or other fish without being restricted to any distance from shore, and that I should not interfere with them, and they had no right to molest me. I told them the United States had paid a large sum for this privilege; but they declared they knew nothing about it, and cared nothing about it. They told me I should not catch my bait, but should buy it of them. I kept on fishing, and they then attempted to board my vessel; they threatened to cut my cable, and threatened other violence. Finding myself powerless against so many, I told my crew to haul in their lines and stop fishing, which they did. This pacified the mob, and they then left me.

The next morning I determined to fish, and not submit to this violence.

I manned my lines and commenced to fish. The boats came off in larger numbers, and the men were very violent. They said, "We warned you not to fish yesterday, and we will cut your cable and drive you on shore if you don't stop;" they came alongside, struck at my men with their oars, and some ten men leaped on the vessel and gathered around the windlass.

I went forward and asked them if they were aware what they were doing; they told me they were, and that I should not fish there. At the same time I saw a heavy oar lifted over my head, and jumped one side to avoid the blow, which, if it had struck me, would have struck me down.

In the meanwhile the mob had entirely destroyed our lines and jigs, leaving me no means of fishing.

The boats being around my bow at the cable, and knowing if it was cut my vessel would be likely to go on shore, as the wind blowed directly on, I had to submit again to mob violence, and agreed not to fish any more. They then left my vessel, and went for the American schooner "Moro Castle," which had come in, and was trying to catch bait. The wind blowed so hard that I was obliged to get under weigh, and leave without my bait; as my trip depended on my getting bait speedily, I returned there and bought my bait the next day, paying 120 dollars for squid; I was obliged to do this, as there was no squid at any other place.

It is universal in the baiting-places at Newfoundland to experience the same feeling and action, and it is impossible for American vessels to take their own bait, as the local fishermen will not allow it, but compel us to purchase it of them.

We are thus compelled to pay at least 100,000 dollars yearly, although the Treaty of Washington gives us a perfect right to take these fish, and I am satisfied that the United States receives absolutely nothing for the immense sum paid for the privilege of fishing on the coast of British North America.

(Signed) JOSEPH BOWIE,
Master of Schooner "Victor."

I, Charles G. Ferguson, one of the crew of the schooner "Victor," of Gloucester, Massachusetts, do on oath depose and say that I was on board the schooner, and know that all the facts stated by Captain Bowie are true.

(Signed) CHARLES G. FERGUSON,
One of the Crew.

Affidavit of John Dago.

I, JOHN DAGO, master of the American schooner "Concord," of Gloucester, Massachusetts, do on oath depose and say that I left Gloucester on the 1st April, 1880, "for a trip to the Grand Banks." Our first baiting was at Freshwater Bay, Newfoundland, buying capelin and ice to the amount of 25 dollars. On the 9th August, 1880, we went into a cove in Conception Bay, called Northard Bay, for squid. I put out four dories and attempted to catch my bait with the squid jigs, or hooks used for that purpose.

My men went in to the immediate vicinity of where the local shore boats were fishing for squid, but in a short time they returned and reported to me that they were not allowed to fish by the men on board the shore boats, and not wishing any trouble they returned on board. I then manned my lines on the vessel and commenced to catch squid. The men in the shore boats seeing us fishing came off to us to the number of sixteen boats with some thirty men. These men demanded that I should stop fishing or leave, or else buy squid from them. They were very violent in their threats, and, to avoid trouble, I bought my squid, paying them 150 dollars for the squid, which I could easily have taken if I had not been interfered with.

Wherever I have been in Newfoundland I find the same spirit exists, and that it is impossible for any American vessel to avail herself of the privileges conferred by the Treaty of Washington, that the Fishery Articles of that Treaty are entirely useless and valueless, and in no sense does the American fisherman receive any benefit from the Treaty.

(Signed) JOHN DAGO, Master.

Personally appeared the above John Dago, and made oath to the truth of the above affidavit.

No. 62.

Sir E. Thornton to Earl Granville.—(Received February 23)

(Extract.) Washington, February 11, 1881.

DURING a visit which I paid to the State Department yesterday, Mr. Evarts read to me two despatches which he had addressed on the 4th instant to Mr. Lowell, the United States' Minister in London.

One of these referred to a claim made by some United States' fishermen on account of having been prevented in November last from catching bait on the coast of Newfoundland.

It stated that Newfoundland fishermen had intimated to the American fishermen that they would not allow them to fish for bait; that this prohibition was the act of the Newfoundland fishermen only without any intervention on the part of the authorities either for or against it; that there was no question as to the legality or otherwise of Americans fishing for bait, or of their mode of fishing, whether as regarded their nets or anything else; but that the Newfoundland fishermen simply forbade the Americans to fish for bait on the ground that it interfered with their rights and profits in selling bait. The despatch was accompanied by affidavits which, however, Mr. Evarts did not show me.

The other despatch related to the Fortune Bay affair, with regard to which it suggested that there should be a summary settlement of the amount of indemnity due to American fishermen on account of the damage done to their nets, &c., on the above occasion, either between him and myself, or by two persons delegated by us for that purpose. I gave to Mr. Evarts my opinion that no two persons, one on each side, could ever come to an agreement upon the subject, and that the assistance of a third and impartial person would always be necessary. But Mr. Evarts replied that it was a small business, that it was not advisable to make a great affair of it, and that he thought any two reasonable persons could come to an agreement upon it. I, however, maintained my opinion, and the more so because, although Mr. Evarts read the despatch very quickly, it appeared to me that it insisted upon the right of American fishermen, in the enjoyment of the permission granted them by the XVIIIth Article of the Treaty of the 8th May, 1871, "To take fish of every kind, except shell-fish, on the sea-coasts and shores, &c." also to make use of the strand for the purpose of carrying on that mode of fishing.

The despatch complains of the delay which has taken place in the settlement of the Fortune Bay affair, and charges that by this delay the Newfoundland fishermen had been encouraged in their opposition to the American fishermen. I said to Mr. Evarts that the delay could not be attributed entirely to us, although there was much more reason for it on our side on account of the investigations and inquiries which it was necessary to make, and the distance from England of the scene of the occurrences.

Mr. Lowell may, perhaps, have communicated to your Lordship the contents of the two despatches before this can reach the Foreign Office.

Sir, Foreign Office, February 23, 1881.

I TRANSMIT to you herewith, for your information, the accompanying copy of a letter from Mr. Lowell, inclosing copies of affidavits respecting the further complaints of American fishermen referred to in his communication to me on the 21st instant, as stated in my despatch to you of that day.*

Mr. Lowell, in giving me these papers, suggested that these new claims to which the affidavits relate should be referred to Mr. Evarts and yourself, together with those arising out of the proceedings at Fortune Bay.

There has already been a correspondence with the Colonial Office respecting one of these cases, that which occurred at Jobs Cove, and I have forwarded the papers to Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies.

No. 64.

Earl Granville to Sir E. Thornton.†

Sir, Foreign Office, February 24, 1881.

THE United States' Minister called upon me this afternoon, and informed me that he had received a telegram from Mr. Evarts, in which the latter expressed satisfaction at the suggestion I had made of the offer of a lump sum in compensation for the losses suffered by the United States' fishermen at Fortune Bay.

Mr. Evarts added that he preferred this mode of settlement, and that he considered the total amount of the claims, with interest, amounted to about 120,000 dollars.

I told Mr. Lowell that I had had an opportunity of consulting my colleagues on the question, that we had agreed that it would be best not to look too narrowly at the intrinsic value of the claims put forward by the American fishermen, but to have regard to the more general considerations involved. I said I was not authorized to enter into any process of bargain as to the exact amount which would actually cover the losses, but to offer, on behalf of Her Majesty's Government, the payment of a lump sum of 15,000*l.*, or, say, 75,000 dollars, in full settlement of the question of damages, including interest, and also the two smaller cases which he had been instructed to bring to my notice a few days ago. With regard to these latter, I observed that the only testimony we had was all on one side, and that, if they had to be separately considered, it would be necessary to call for counter-evidence. They were, however, cases in which, primâ facie, the Newfoundland fishermen appeared not to be in the right. At the same time, it was clear that the amount of pecuniary damage must be very small.

* No. 61.

† Substance telegraphed.

I added that, if our offer was not acceptable, we should be quite ready to adopt the proposal made in Mr. Evarts' despatch, that the matter should be referred to you and him, or to Delegates chosen by each of you. Each party, I observed, were agreed to reserve the question of the rights which they respectively claimed under the Treaty, and to treat this matter separately from the discussion of the pecuniary payment.

I mentioned to Mr. Lowell that I had at first been taken by surprise at an idea put forward in the despatch of which he had told me the substance last Monday, namely, the possibility of the President sending a ship to protect the American fishermen on the coast of Newfoundland; but that, on consideration, it appeared to me that such a course might be taken which might be of great advantage, if each Government sent vessels with Commanders who received identic and conciliatory instructions for the purpose of keeping the police among the fishermen of their respective countries.

Such a practice has been in force with good effect for some time on the part of the British and French Governments.

Earl Granville to the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury.

My Lords, Foreign Office, February 26, 1881.

YOUR Lordships are aware that a correspondence has taken place with the Government of the United States with regard to certain claims of American fishermen on account of the interruption of their fishing on the coasts of Newfoundland, amounting to about 120,000 dollars, including interest.

The Government of the United States suggested that these claims should be referred for assessment to the United States' Secretary of State and Her Majesty's Minister at Washington, or to Delegates named by them, but it appeared to Her Majesty's Government that it was, for many reasons, desirable to avoid so dilatory a process of investigation, and I was accordingly authorized by the Cabinet to offer a sum of 15,000*l.*, or 75,000 dollars, in full settlement of the claims.

The United States' Minister has informed me to-day that this offer is accepted, and I have stated to him in reply that Her Majesty's Government are ready to hold this sum of 15,000*l.* at the disposal of the Government of the United States on receiving his assurance that it is accepted in full of all claims arising out of any interruption of American fishermen on the coasts of Newfoundland and its dependencies up to the present time, and without prejudice to any question of the rights of either Government under the Treaty of Washington.

I have now therefore to request that your Lordships will be good enough to give the necessary directions for this amount to be held in readiness.

I have forwarded a copy of this letter to Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies, with whom it will rest to make application to the Governor of Newfoundland for the ultimate refund of this payment.

I am also to inclose a copy of a letter to the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, requesting that this sum may be held in readiness.* Lord Kimberley will observe that I have informed their Lordships that a copy of this letter would be forwarded to him, as it will rest with him to make application to the Government of Newfoundland for the ultimate refund of this payment.

No. 72.

Sir E. Thornton to Earl Granville.—(Received March 12.)

(Extract.) Washington, February 28, 1881.

ON the morning of the 23rd instant Mr. Evarts wrote to me that he had received a telegram from Mr. Lowell, and begged that I would call upon him at the State Department as soon as I could. On my arriving there he read to me the telegram which related to the Fortune Bay affair. It was much shorter, and contained less detail than your Lordship's telegram of the 22nd instant,‡ which I had had the honour of receiving on the previous evening. It stated that Her Majesty's Government was disposed to accept the proposal that the amount of damages caused to American fishermen should be settled by Mr. Evarts and myself, or by Delegates appointed by us, but thought that there should be a previous agreement to refer the matter to a third person, in case the Delegates should fail to agree. The telegram added that Her Majesty's Government would prefer to make an offer of a fair sum to settle the claims of the American fishermen.

I then communicated the substance of your Lordship's telegram to Mr. Evarts, and observed that I had understood it to signify that the question should be referred to a third person, whether it was he and I or the Delegates named by us who should disagree; but he expressed the opinion that Mr. Lowell had rightly interpreted what your Lordship had said.

He went on to say that the Government of the United States would prefer that Her Majesty's Government should make an offer of a lump sum in satisfaction of the damages caused to American fishermen in the Fortune Bay affair. He hoped, however, that it would be a generous offer; for that an illiberal one would be worse than none. He believed that a liberal view of the matter would create a good feeling and would contribute to the success of, and facilitate, any future negotiation which must come on sooner or later with regard to the fisheries question.

I replied that your Lordship's note of the 27th October last and the offer now made was a sufficient proof that Her Majesty's Government wished to deal with the question in a spirit of liberality.

On the evening of the 25th instant your Lordship's telegram of that day reached me,§ and on the following day I called upon Mr. Evarts, who read me a telegram which he had received from Mr. Lowell on the evening of the 24th instant, informing him that your Lordship had offered the sum of 15,000*l.* in settlement of the claims comprised in Mr. Evarts' two despatches to Mr. Lowell. He also read me his answer, which he had forwarded on the 24th instant, to the effect that the United States' Government accepted the offer, expressing the hope that the amount would be available at once, though it did not make this a condition of its acceptance.

No. 73.

Sir E. Thornton to Earl Granville.

(Substance received by telegraph, February 28, and March 2 and 5.)

My Lord, Washington, March 7, 1881.

AFTER I had written my despatch of the 28th ultimo, Mr. Evarts requested me to call at the State Department, when he repeated that he had received another telegram from Mr. Lowell with regard to the Fortune Bay and other claims. This telegram he read to me; it was similar to that which I had had the honour to receive from your Lordship on the 26th ultimo.

Commenting upon it, Mr. Evarts said that it appeared to him impossible to give such an assurance as was desired by your Lordship, to the effect that the sum offered by Her Majesty's Government should be accepted in full of all claims arising out of any interruption of American fishermen on the coast of Newfoundland and its dependencies up to the present time. He had understood that the offer had been made for definite claims, viz., those arising out of the Fortune Bay affair and the further claim mentioned in his despatch No. 109 to Mr. Lowell.

Mr. Evarts argued that if he accepted the lump sum as for all claims up to the present time, he would be under the necessity of advertising, in order to ascertain whether any other claimants existed, and that he would thus encourage the presentation of new claims which might have no foundation whatever, but which would have to be examined. Nor could the sum mentioned be distributed amongst the Fortune Bay claimants until it had been proved that there were no others.

Mr. Evarts stated, however, that he had caused an examination to be made, and had found that the Fortune Bay claims, and those mentioned in his despatch No. 109 to Mr. Lowell, were the only claims which had been presented to the State Department, except one concerning the American fishing-vessel "Mist," with respect to which a communication had been made to your Lordship some time ago. The claimant in this case, he said, had been informed that, as the claim was then presented, it could not be entertained by the United States' Government, and nothing further had been heard from him.

Mr. Evarts added that, at this moment, something might be occurring on the coasts of Newfoundland of which we must necessarily be ignorant. The United States' Government would, however, be willing to give an assurance that the sum offered would be accepted in satisfaction of all claims which had been presented to either Government. Mr. Evarts expressed the strongest conviction that there were none besides those mentioned above.

I am myself of opinion that this conviction is well-founded, for it is almost impossible that such occurrences should not come to our knowledge.

I communicated to Mr. Evarts the contents of your Lordship's telegram of the 1st instant.* He repeated the same arguments which I have reported above, and observed further that although it had been at first proposed that a summary settlement of the matter should be made by him and myself, it was now said that the alternative should be a reference to assessors named by us.

Your Lordship's telegram of the 3rd instant, the contents of which I communicated to Mr. Evarts, satisfied him upon that point.

In more than one of my interviews with him he has assured me that his Government was ready, and thought it would be expedient to proceed as soon as possible with the negotiation of an arrangement concerning the regulations which were to govern the fisheries hereafter.

On the evening of the 5th instant Mr. Evarts called at the Legation and read me a telegram which he was then sending to Mr. Lowell, referring to the two despatches which had been read to your Lordship, and instructing him to inquire whether Her Majesty's Government would offer a separate sum for the claims mentioned in each of those despatches, and repeating his assurance that he knew of no others. He asked me at the same time to telegraph, if I thought proper, to your Lordship, giving the reasons he had put forward for not being able to give so comprehensive an assurance as your Lordship desired to have. To this I assented in the hope that my communication might possibly contribute in some small degree to the settlement of this long vexed question.

Sir, Foreign Office, March 1, 1881.

WITH reference to your telegram of the 28th February, I have to instruct you to inform Mr. Evarts that, when Her Majesty's Government offered to pay to the Government of the United States a lump sum, they did so in the expectation of securing a final and immediate settlement of all claims up to the present date, as this result alone would justify them in offering such an amount.

Unless this settlement can be secured, they prefer to revert to Mr. Evarts' original proposal, to the effect that the claims should be referred to assessors named by Mr. Evarts and yourself, with the addition that provision should be made for reference to a third person in case of disagreement.

Whichever alternative Mr. Evarts may now adopt, Her Majesty's Government take it for granted that the Government of the United States are willing at once to confer for the purpose of establishing such Regulations for the fisheries as shall in future prevent misunderstanding.

My Lord, Legation of the United States, London, March 2, 1881.

I HAVE the honour to acquaint your Lordship that, having inquired of Mr. Evarts, by telegraph, of the nature of the assurance that I might give your Lordship upon the receipt of the proposed indemnity in the Newfoundland fishery transactions, I received from him an answer, by cable, late last evening to the following effect:—

The assurance I may give is this: that the sum paid is accepted in full of all claims arising out of any interruption of American fishermen on the coasts of Newfoundland and its dependencies up to this time presented to either Government, and without prejudice to any question of the rights of either Government under the Treaty of Washington.

I am also permitted to say to your Lordship, in giving this assurance, that, as a matter of fact, no other claims than those embraced in the Fortune Bay list and those named in Mr. Evarts' despatch No. 109, which I have shown to your Lordship, are within the knowledge of my Government for presentation or for its own consideration.

I have already communicated to your Lordship orally the substance of this cable message, at the interview which I had the honour of having with you this morning. I understood your Lordship to say, in answer to this communication, that Her Majesty's Government adhered to the terms they had finally offered: that is to say, that the sum of 15,000*l.* should be considered as received in full of all demands arising out of the interruptions of American fishermen on the coasts of Newfoundland up to date; otherwise, that you would prefer to fall back upon the plan of a reference, already suggested.

I sent a telegram to Mr. Evarts this morning informing him of your views.

THE United States Minister called upon me to-day, and communicated to me the substance of a telegraphic despatch from Mr. Evarts, of which a copy is inclosed.* I observed that I shared Mr. Evarts' regret at our being unable so far to arrive at an agreement, as I had looked forward to the great satisfaction of settling the matter with him; but that if it was the fear of new claims which made him hesitate to give the assurance required by Her Majesty's Government, he must remember that they ran a similar risk. I was not, however, aware of any claims, excepting those which he had mentioned, though there had been brought to the notice of Her Majesty's Government two cases, of which I furnished him with the particulars, in which complaints had been made of the interruption of American vessels, the "Moro Castle" and "Minnesota" when engaged in collecting bait. It did not appear that either of these cases was of importance.

SECRETARY'S offer, as communicated to me by your telegram of the 24th February, was 15,000*l.* for Fortune Bay, and those mentioned in Number hundred nine.

This I accepted by my telegram of the 25th February. This completed the subject, and the amount as definitely ascertained, and showed no indistinctness or discrepancy of views. All the previous communications either way related to Fortune Bay claims. Claims of Number hundred nine were introduced specifically by Secretary as additional to Fortune Bay, and I accepted the sum offered for both. I cannot consent to any modification of the completed settlement of specific claims. I have at no time treated except of definite pecuniary interests of claimants in my charge. The agreed sum measured these claims and goes to these claimants. I have been willing to give every assurance to cover all claims brought to the knowledge of either [? a] Government, and authorized you to inform Secretary that as a matter of fact no others were entertained by this Government. All this was no part of the offer made and accepted, and came in as new matters [? of controversy]. You will explain to Secretary the impossibility of my changing [? the subject] of negotiation after an agreed valuation of that subject should the offer be retracted after its acceptance, or new conditions be imposed afterwards which would not have been entertained as an original subject. I must regret that the effort to remove a serious obstacle to friendly disposition of the fishery controversy should have increased difficulties [? are] which embarrass it. If the money is paid under the assurance authorized by my last, telegraph me; if it is not, you may say to the Secretary that this Government will await his early attention to Numbers hundred nine and hundred ten, which must stand unaffected [? by] anything which has passed since.

REFERRING to our conversation this afternoon in regard to the settlement of claims for damages growing out of the interruption of American fishermen on the coasts of Newfoundland, I have the honour, agreeably to your request, to inclose herewith such portions of a telegram received by me yesterday from Mr. Evarts as he instructs me therein to communicate to your Lordship.

Perhaps it may seem superfluous in me, after our late conversation, to endeavour further to impress upon your Lordship my sense of the very great importance of a speedy settlement of these long-standing claims, but I cannot refrain from adding my conviction, that such a settlement would tend to allay a growing irritation, and would remove an obstacle to that understanding between the two Governments as to their respective rights and duties under the Treaty of Washington, which would greatly lessen, if it did not exhaust, the sources from which similar claims would be likely to arise hereafter.

*Earl Granville to Sir E. Thornton.

Sir, Foreign Office, March 8, 1881.

I CONVERSED with Mr. Lowell yesterday upon the subject of the fishery claims. I told him that I should have been very much gratified had I been able to have arranged them with Mr. Evarts. The sole reply I could make to his further representations was, that I was prepared to revert to the proposition for a reference of the claims to Mr. Evarts and to yourself, or to Delegates nominated by you, but that the form of assurance required by Her Majesty's Government could not be modified.

I entertain some doubt, which Mr. Lowell was unable to clear up, as to whether the telegraphic despatch of the 5th instant was a repetition only of the former statement of Mr. Evarts, or whether some modification was intended. He considered, however, that no change was indicated.

I observed that Mr. Evarts' argument to you, that if he accepted a lump sum he was bound to advertise, and by so doing would invite claims, to be by no means self-evident.

I added that Her Majesty's Government would not object to the substitution of the words "up to the end of last year" for "up to the present time."

I have communicated the substance of this despatch to you by telegraph.

Sir, Foreign Office, March 9, 1881.

THE United States' Minister called upon me this afternoon to resume the discussion of the mode of settling the claims of United States' fishermen for interference with their fishing off the coast of Newfoundland.

I thanked Mr. Lowell for his letter of the 7th instant, and told him that I had had an opportunity of consulting my colleagues, who agreed with me in the desire to arrive at a speedy settlement of this part of the question. It had been with this object that I had offered the payment of a lump sum as an alternative to the plan of reference to yourself and Mr. Evarts, or to Delegates to be named severally by you and him. When we were accused of having shifted our ground, I must observe that the offer was originally made under the impression and with the understanding that it would settle off-hand all claims of this nature up to the present date, as we knew of no others that had been made beyond those brought forward by the United States' Government. But when—although the Government of the United States assured me of their belief that there were no other claims—exception was taken to the wording of our offer, on the ground that it would debar them from advancing possible further claims on account of past occurrences, we felt that the objection made it necessary for us to adhere to the form we had adopted.

We now thought the best plan would be to revert to the proposal of reference of the claims to you and Mr. Evarts or his successor, or to persons to be named by you on either side.

I asked Mr. Lowell to inquire what were the views of his Government as to my suggestion of a combined naval force on the coast to keep the police, with identic instructions to the Commanders.

(Substance received by telegraph, March 12.)

(Extract.) Washington, March 14, 1881.

I HAVE the honour to inform your Lordship that, on Mr. Blaine's invitation, I called upon him at the State Department on the 12th instant, for the purpose of conferring with him upon the proposed settlement of the Fortune Bay and other claims of American fishermen.

Mr. Blaine said that, after due reflection, he had come to the conclusion that the discussion of the matter could be carried on more satisfactorily here than in London. He adverted to the position which had been taken by his predecessor, and pointed out that, as Mr. Evarts had declined to give the full assurance required by your Lordship on the receipt of 15,000*l.* from Her Majesty's Government, he did not think it was in his power at once to agree to the same terms without at least making further inquiries as to the existence of other claims. Upon my observing that your Lordship had since then offered to substitute the phrase "up to the end of last year" for "up to the present time," Mr. Blaine said that, though this made a slight alteration in the wording, the substance of the assurance to be given was the same, for that it was hardly to be supposed that any claims could be originated at this season of the year. But he authorized me to inform your Lordship that he hoped that he and I could come to an agreement upon the question at issue without reference to a third person, and that, after further inquiries and when he had satisfied himself as to the probable existence of other claims, and should have complete control of the claimants and of the whole matter, he would even be able to accept your Lordship's offer of 15,000*l.*, coupled with a statement, on its acceptance, in the terms desired by Her Majesty's Government.

Upon my inquiring what steps it was proposed to take with a view to an agreement as to the rules and regulations which are to prevail hereafter respecting the fisheries, Mr. Blaine replied that this question would meet the early consideration of the United States' Government, and that he thought it was very desirable that a decision should be arrived at as soon as possible.

Mr. Blaine was most cordial in his manner, and expressed his earnest hope that there might be no obstacle to friendly relations between the two Governments.

or less in the same words as those contained in your Lordship's telegram above mentioned.

Upon my asking him what he meant to imply by the reference of the Fortune Bay affair to him and myself, whether he intended that we should merely assess the damages for the claims contained in Mr. Evarts' despatches Nos. 109 and 110 to Mr. Lowell,* or whether his object was that we should agree upon a lump sum upon his giving the assurance required by Her Majesty's Government, he replied that he wished that the reference should be as wide as possible, so that we might agree upon a lump sum coupled with an assurance to be given by the United States' Government in the terms required by Her Majesty's Government, or if we could not agree upon this mode of settlement, then we should apply ourselves to an assessment of the damages suffered by the claimants above mentioned.

Mr. Blaine said that he would much prefer the former mode of settlement, and that he was now making searching inquiries with a view to being able to give to Her Majesty's Government such an assurance as would satisfy it. He hinted at a slight increase of the lump sum offered by your Lordship, but said nothing definite. With regard to the form of receipt, he thought he would be able, and it would be expedient, to fix the 4th March as the time up to which all claims of that nature should be considered as cancelled.

Mr. Blaine seemed to dislike negotiation by means of telegraphic communication, and said that a good deal of misapprehension had already arisen from its being employed.

With regard to sending cruizers to the coast of Newfoundland during the fishing season, Mr. Blaine said that he saw no objection to such a step, but thought that, before doing so, it would be desirable to agree upon the Regulations which such cruizers would have to enforce, so that there might be no disputes between the commanders of the respective vessels.

Mr. Herbert to Lord Tenterden.—(Received March 18.)

Sir, Downing Street, March 18, 1881.

I AM directed by the Earl of Kimberley to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 15th instant, inclosing a communication from the United States' Minister at this Court, with a telegram received by him from the United States' Secretary of State, upon the subject of the compensation claimed by United States' fishermen for damages caused by the occurrences on the coast of Newfoundland, and requesting Lord Kimberley's opinion as to the reply which should be returned to the latter part of Mr. Blaine's telegram.

Lord Kimberley desires me to state, for the information of Earl Granville, that, in his opinion, no further steps should be taken in regard to the question of the joint

Mr. Wingfield to Lord Tenterden.—(Received March 19.)

My Lord, Downing Street, March 19, 1881.

WITH reference to the letter from this Department of the 14th January last respecting the rights of the inhabitants of the United States in connection with the Newfoundland fisheries, I am directed by the Earl of Kimberley to transmit to you, for communication to Earl Granville, a copy of a despatch from the Governor of the Colony, inclosing a copy of a notice which his Government intends to issue for the purpose of notifying to the inhabitants of outlying settlements, frequented by the Americans, the right to which the latter are entitled under the Treaty of Washington.

Lord Kimberley proposes, with Lord Granville's concurrence, to approve the terms of the notice, and to instruct the Governor to cause it to be widely circulated on the coasts of the Colony.

Notice.

(Signed) JOHN HAWLEY GLOVER. (L.S.)

By his Excellency Sir John Hawley Glover, Knight Grand Cross of the Most Distinguished Order of St. Michael and St. George, Governor and Commander-in-chief in and over the Island of Newfoundland and its Dependencies.

To all to whom these presents shall come, greeting:

WHEREAS by Article XVIII of the Treaty of Washington of the 8th May, 1871, it is agreed by the High Contracting Parties that, in addition to the liberty secured to the United States' fishermen by the Convention between Great Britain and the United States, signed at London on the 20th October, 1818, of taking, curing, and drying fish on certain coasts of the British North-American Colonies, therein defined, the inhabitants of the United States shall have, in common with the subjects of Her Britannic Majesty, the liberty, for the term of years mentioned in Article XXXIII of this Treaty, to take fish of every kind except shell-fish, on the sea-coasts and shores, and in the bays, harbours, and creeks of the Provinces of Quebec, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick, and the Colony of Prince Edward's Island, and of the several islands thereunto adjacent, without being restricted to any distance from the shore, with permission to land upon the said coasts and shores and islands, and also upon the Magdalen Islands, for the purpose of drying their nets and curing their fish. Provided that in so doing they do not interfere with the rights of private property or with British fishermen in the peaceable use of any part of the said coasts in their occupancy for the same purpose.

It is understood that the above-mentioned liberty applies solely to the sea fishery, and that salmon and shad fisheries, and all other fisheries in rivers and the mouths of rivers, are hereby reserved exclusively for British fishermen.

And whereas, by Act of the Local Legislature, 37 Vict., cap. ii., and by the Governor's Proclamation thereunder, dated the 30th May, 1874, the above recited section was made applicable to Newfoundland.

I do therefore enjoin all Her Majesty's subjects in this Colony to respect the fishing privileges granted to American citizens by the said Treaty, and not to hinder or molest them in any way whatsoever in the exercise of the same.

Given under my hand and seal, at the Government House in St. John's, this 21st day of February, A.D. 1881.

By his Excellency's command,
(Signed) E. D. SHEA, Colonial Secretary.

WITH reference to the letter from this Department of the 7th January last,* upon the subject of the proposal that one of Her Majesty's ships on the Newfoundland Station should be detailed to visit especially the coast of Newfoundland between Cape Bonavista and Fortune Bay during the bait season, I am directed by the Earl of Kimberley to transmit to you, to be laid before Earl Granville, a copy of a letter from the Admiralty, inclosing one from the Commander-in-chief on the North American Station, from which it will be seen that Sir Leopold McClintock has arranged that Her Majesty's ship "Druid" shall be on the part of the coast in question by the 25th April, the commencement of the bait season.

Inclosure 1 in No. 91.

The Secretary to the Admiralty to Mr. Herbert.

(Extract.) Admiralty, February 14, 1881.

I AM commanded by my Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty to send you herewith, for the consideration of the Earl of Kimberley, copy of a letter from the Commander-in-chief on the North American Station, dated the 25th January, written in reply to Admiralty letter of the 14th December last, the purport of which was communicated to you in my letter of the same date relative to the desirability of one of the ships employed in protecting the Newfoundland fisheries being sent specially to the part of the coast between Fortune Bay and Cape Bonavista.

It will be seen that Sir L. McClintock has arranged that Her Majesty's ship "Druid" shall be on the part of the coast in question by the 25th April, the commencement of the bait season, to prevent breaches of the peace and fishery laws.

The Secretary to the Admiralty to Mr. Herbert.

(Extract.) Admiralty, March 21, 1881.

I AM commanded by my Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty to request that you will state to the Earl of Kimberley that a letter has been received from the Commander-in-chief on the North American and West Indian Station, in which he reports that the officers he has selected for employment on the Newfoundland and Labrador fisheries this year, under the orders of Captain Kennedy, of Her Majesty's ship "Druid," are Commander W. C. Karslake, Her Majesty's ship "Fantôme," and Lieutenant F. A. Moysey, commanding Her Majesty's ship "Contest."

The "Druid" will leave Bermuda early in April to proceed to Fortune Bay, and the "Fantôme" and "Contest" will leave that island about the second week in May to proceed to St. John's.

Earl Granville to Sir E. Thornton.‡

Sir, Foreign Office, April 2, 1881.

I HAVE received your telegram of the 31st ultimo, in which you inform me that Mr. Blaine is extremely anxious to learn whether Her Majesty's Government are prepared to accede to his request that the claims connected with the Fortune Bay dispute should be settled at Washington between himself and Her Majesty's Minister.

I have to state to you, in reply, that should there be any misunderstanding with regard to Mr. Blaine's meaning in pressing this mode of settlement, it is desirable that it should be made clear. If, however, he is ready to agree that the claims of the American fishermen should be referred to himself and yourself, or to Delegates to be named by both, for assessment, Her Majesty's Government are prepared to accept this arrangement at once.

This mode of proceeding is now preferred by the Colonial authorities in this country to the payment of a lump sum, in view of the desirability of obtaining the co-operation and concurrence of the Government of Newfoundland.

I should be glad to learn whether anything has passed between Mr. Blaine and yourself with regard to a reference to a third party in case it should be found impossible to come to an agreement between yourselves, or that the same difficulty should occur in the case of the Delegates.

Her Majesty's Government do not wish to raise any difficulties, and they give you full discretion to arrive at the best solution you can make with the Secretary of State, either as regards an assessment of the claims, or the payment by Her Majesty's Government of a lump sum. Under present circumstances they would prefer an arrangement by assessment.

I need not remind you how desirable it is, in view of the approach of the fishing season, that a settlement of these claims should be arrived at as speedily as possible, and also an understanding with regard to the Regulations to be framed for the fisheries, with a view to the prevention of future misunderstandings.

Sir E. Thornton to Earl Granville.

(Substance received by telegraph, April 5.)

(Extract.) Washington, April 4, 1881.

WITH reference to your Lordship's telegram of the 2nd instant, I have the honour to inform you that I called this morning upon Mr. Blaine at the State Department, and stated that Her Majesty's Government acceded to his request that the fishery claims should be referred for assessment to him and myself, or to Delegates named by us. I presumed that by the fishery claims your Lordship intended to signify the Fortune Bay claims and those described in Mr. Evarts' despatch to Mr. Lowell No. 110,† the contents of which were communicated to you by the latter.

I went on to say that I was afraid that we should not be likely to agree upon the amount of damages to be paid on account of the claims in question, and that it would therefore be very desirable that we should name a third person who should decide in the event of our disagreeing. But Mr. Blaine replied that Mr. Evarts' original proposal, to which he had now reverted, did not include any reference to a third person, and that his Government was not prepared to acquiesce in such a reference, to which he thought the subject of the claims was not adapted.

In answer to my inquiry, Mr. Blaine said that he would rather negotiate the matter with me than leave it to Delegates named by us. He added that he would examine the documents upon the subject as soon as he could, and would then invite me to meet him.

In the course of the conversation Mr. Blaine said that he should have preferred to have negotiated on the basis of a lump sum, and that, having now carefully examined the claims already presented, and considered possibility of any further claims which might be brought forward, he would have been prepared, on behalf of his Government, to accept the sum of 16,000*l.*, and to give a receipt in full for all claims for interruption of American fishermen on the coasts of Newfoundland or of its dependencies which may have arisen up to the 4th March, 1881.

I replied that Her Majesty's Government now preferred that the claims should be assessed, and was disinclined to negotiate upon the basis of a lump sum.

Sir J. Pauncefote to Mr. Bramston.

(Extract.) Foreign Office, April 6, 1881.

I AM directed by Earl Granville to state to you that on the receipt of your letter of the 2nd instant, the instruction respecting the Fortune Bay dispute, of which the text was inclosed with the letter from this Department of the preceding day, was immediately forwarded to Sir E. Thornton, who has now returned the reply of which a copy is inclosed herewith.*

You will observe that Mr. Blaine is prepared to agree that the amount of compensation to be given for the Fortune Bay claims should be settled between himself and Her Majesty's Minister at Washington, in conjunction with those referred to in the communication made by Mr. Lowell to Lord Granville on the 21st February last. In making that communication, no copy of Mr. Evarts' despatch on the subject appears to have been left by Mr. Lowell with Lord Granville, but on the 22nd February he forwarded to the Foreign Office the affidavits of the masters of two American fishing-vessels which had formed the subject of his conversation with Lord Granville on the 21st February. Copies of the correspondence on this particular point were forwarded to the Colonial Office on the 23rd of that month.

Mr. Blaine now absolutely declines to acquiesce in the proposal that in case of disagreement reference should be made to a third person, and has intimated that he would prefer the assignment of a lump sum as a settlement of all claims in full up to the 4th March last, which sum he seems disposed to fix at 16,000*l.*

I am to request that you will lay the accompanying papers before the Earl of Kimberley, and move him to favour Lord Granville, at his earliest convenience, with any observations he may wish to make upon Sir E. Thornton's telegram of the 4th instant.

In reply, I am to request that you will have the goodness to inform the Secretary of State for the Colonies that Lord Granville concurs in the terms of the proposed notice, and that he agrees with Lord Kimberley that it will be desirable that Sir J. Mr. Blaine considers that the offer which he had made to accept 16,000*l.* in full of all claims of the class above mentioned up to the 4th March last was really better for Her Majesty's Government than that made by your Lordship of 15,000*l.* up to the end of last year. With a view, however, to a prompt settlement of the question, and to entering upon a negotiation as to the regulations respecting the fisheries which were to prevail hereafter, he was ready to accept the sum of 15,500*l.* for the Fortune Bay claims and those of American fishermen who had been prevented from fishing for bait, as well as for all claims arising out of any interruption of American fishermen on the coasts of Newfoundland and its dependencies up to the 4th March last.

(Substance received by telegraph, May 5 and 7.)

My Lord, Washington, May 9, 1881.

WITH reference to your Lordship's telegrams of the 28th ultimo and of the 3rd instant, I have the honour to inform your Lordship that I had an interview with Mr. Blaine at the State Department on the 5th instant upon the subject of the

* See No. 112. † Substance telegraphed.

Fortune Bay claims. I informed him that I was instructed by your Lordship to state that Her Majesty's Government could not consent to increase its offer of a lump sum of 15,000*l.*, which it considered to be a large concession, without a previous inquiry, but that it was prepared to abide by the proposal accepted by him, that the amount should be referred to him and myself for inquiry and adjustment.

Mr. Blaine said that he was perfectly willing and ready to enter upon a detailed examination of the claims in question; but it was evident that, unless we rested upon the affidavits which had been already presented on the American and British sides of the question, it would be necessary to summon witnesses and call for documentary evidence, which would be a very tedious operation, and would probably cause the inquiry to extend over a great length of time.

If we were to rely solely upon the affidavits sworn to upon each side, it is pretty clear that the assessment would be much above the 15,000*l.* which have already been offered by Her Majesty's Government. I am also convinced that the summoning of witnesses and the calling for further documentary evidence would have a similar result.

Mr. Blaine stated, however, that since he had entered upon his office he had caused searching inquiries to be made as to whether there existed any other claims besides those which had been already brought before the two Governments, and that he had satisfied himself that there were none. As his Government, therefore, did not wish to place any obstacles in the way of the settlement of the claims in question, it would be prepared to accept the sum of 15,000*l.* originally offered by Her Majesty's Government in full of the Fortune Bay claims and of all claims arising out of wrongs done to United States' fishermen on the coasts of Newfoundland and of its dependencies up to the 4th March last.

I then pointed out to Mr. Blaine that, in examining the affidavits and accounts which had been submitted to Her Majesty's Government by the instructions of Mr. Evarts, and from which the latter had stated, in his despatch to Mr. Welsh of the 1st August, 1879,* that the claims amounted to 105,305 dol. 2 c., I had not been able to understand how this amount had been reached, unless claims of American fishermen for being deterred from fishing for bait in Aspee Bay, Cape Breton, were included among the Fortune Bay claims. I had, therefore, concluded that, although Aspee Bay was not on the coast of Newfoundland, these claims were among those for which a demand had been made by Mr. Evarts of the sum of 105,305 dol. 2 c.

Mr. Blaine acquiesced in my view of this matter, and said that they would be included among those for which he now stated that the Government of the United States would accept the sum of 15,000*l.*

Affidavits with regard to the Aspee Bay claims are to be found at pp. 138 to 141 inclusive of Inclosure No. 1 in my despatch of the 7th June last.†

Mr. Blaine then said that he would address me a note to the above effect, and that he would be glad to receive an answer at once from me that Her Majesty's Government acquiesced in this settlement of the claims in question; but I replied that I did not consider myself authorized to give such an answer without asking for instructions from your Lordship, which I would do at once by telegraph.

I have now the honour to inclose copy of the note which Mr. Blaine has addressed to me in consequence of the above-mentioned interview, and I venture to hope that Her Majesty's Government will be able to agree to the settlement indicated therein, which I believe to be the most favourable which can be now obtained.

Your Lordship will perceive that Mr. Blaine states in his note that at my convenience he will discuss the subject of joint cruizers on the fishing-grounds and the code of instructions under which they should sail, which subject he understands to have been also referred by your Lordship. As this, however, is a matter of considerable importance and delicacy, it would certainly be desirable that I should be aided by the advice of some person from Newfoundland who is well acquainted with the subject.

I have, &c.

Inclosure in No. 113.

Mr. Blaine to Sir E. Thornton.

Sir, Department of State, Washington, May 6, 1881.

I WAS advised by Mr. Lowell by his despatch of the 9th March last that Lord Granville would either pay 15,000*l.* in the Fortune Bay matter for a receipt in full against all claims up to and including the close of the past year, or he would refer the matter to yourself and me for adjustment.

I chose the latter because I had at that time no means of knowing with definiteness whether there might not be claimants whom I could not properly bar by a receipt given without an opportunity of a hearing assured to them.

As I told you in our first consultation, I did not seek the reference with any desire to urge you to a larger sum than was offered by Lord Granville unless new facts could be found which would warrant the demand.

Both of us have discovered and think that we have no practical means of assessing the damages except by taking the facts as stated in the American Case, unless, indeed, we should resort, at great expense and with endless trouble, to a new, independent, and exhaustive investigation by original testimony in each and every claim.

Under these circumstances, it is proper that I should frankly state to you that I find no other claims than those already presented for wrongs inflicted in the waters of Newfoundland and its dependencies; and, as I originally advised you, I have no desire to urge you to increase the sum offered by Lord Granville on the old claims.

My investigations have included the period up to the 4th March, 1881; and in giving the receipt I would, if desired, be willing to cover that period. I make this offer in the hope that you will recognize in it a disposition on the part of the United States to be, not merely just, but liberal in dealing with Her Majesty's Government on this complicated and somewhat delicate question.

Your understanding, communicated verbally, that the injury at Aspee Bay was to be included, is correct; and the receipt which I shall give will cover that case.

In accepting Lord Granville's offer in this matter, I desire to state that at your convenience I will discuss the subject of joint cruizers on the fishing-grounds, and the code of instructions under which they should sail. I understand this subject to have been also referred by Lord Granville.

I have, &c.

Sir, Foreign Office, May 6, 1881.

WITH reference to your letters of the 27th ultimo and 3rd instant, I am directed by Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs to transmit to you a copy of a telegram,* dated the 5th May, which has been received from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington, announcing that Mr. Blaine has signified his readiness to accept the sum of 15,000*l.* which has been offered by Her Majesty's Government in satisfaction of the claims of the American fishermen on account of the interruption caused to their fishing operations by the proceedings of the Newfoundlanders.

Mr. Blaine has intimated that he is prepared to comprise in this arrangement the claims arising out of the occurrences at Fortune Bay, and also all claims on account of any interruption of American fishing on the coasts of Newfoundland and its dependencies up to the 4th March last, and at Aspee Bay, Cape Breton, in the month of June 1879.

The particulars of the last-named claims are given with the documents annexed to the President's message of the House of Representatives of the 17th May, 1880, of which a copy is forwarded herewith for convenience of reference (see pp. 138–141).

I am to request that you will submit this letter, with its inclosure, to the Earl of Kimberley, and that you will move him to inform Lord Granville at his earliest convenience whether he concurs with Lord Granville in thinking that, as Mr. Blaine is now prepared to give the full assurance required by Her Majesty's Government when they made the offer of 15,000*l.*, Sir E. Thornton should be authorized to agree to this settlement?

No. 115.

Mr. Herbert to Lord Tenterden.—(Received May 7.)

My Lord, Downing Street, May 7, 1881.

I AM directed by the Earl of Kimberley to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of yesterday, transmitting a copy of a telegram dated the 5th instant from Sir E. Thornton, announcing that Mr. Blaine has signified his readiness to accept the sum of 15,000*l.* in satisfaction of the claims of the American fishermen on account of the interruptions to their fishing operations by the Newfoundland fishermen.

As Earl Granville is aware, a telegram was sent to Sir J. Glover on the 3rd instant, informing him that Sir E. Thornton and Mr. Blaine would probably soon commence an informal inquiry into the matter of the United States' claims, and desiring to be informed whether the Newfoundland Government could send a competent person to assist and confer with Sir E. Thornton, in order that he might know the views and calculations of the Newfoundland Government; and Sir J. Glover has replied that he thinks the Premier, Sir William Whiteway, is disposed to visit New York for this purpose.

As the Newfoundland Government has thus been officially informed that at the inquiry which was about to take place an opportunity would be given them to state their views as to the amount payable as compensation to the United States' fishermen, it appears to Lord Kimberley that it is necessary, before any further action is taken, to acquaint the Newfoundland Government that Sir E. Thornton and Mr. Blaine, after a preliminary consideration of the question, have concurred in thinking that there is no prospect of their agreeing to an assessment; that in these circumstances the United States' Government has preferred to revert to an arrangement which was under consideration while Mr. Evarts was in office for the settlement of the claims, namely, the immediate payment of a lump sum of 15,000*l.*, which will be in satisfaction of Fortune Bay claims, and all other claims arising out of any interruptions of American fishermen on the coast of Newfoundland and its dependencies up to the 4th March last, including the Aspee Bay claims, and that Her Majesty's Government are of opinion that this offer should be agreed to.

If Lord Granville concurs, Lord Kimberley will address a telegram to this effect to the Governor of Newfoundland.

Sir, Foreign Office, May 9, 1881.

I AM directed by Lord Granville to transmit to you, to be laid before the Earl of Kimberley, the decypher of a further telegram which has been received from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington,* stating that he had received from Mr. Blaine the note referred to in his telegram of the 5th May, a copy of which was forwarded to you with my letter of the following day.

Sir E. Thornton adds that Mr. Blaine states in that note that he is now prepared to enter upon the question of the dispatch to the Newfoundland fisheries of joint cruizers on the part of the American and British Governments, and of the instructions under which these Commanders should act.

The Earl of Kimberley to Governor Sir J. Glover.

(Telegraphic.) Downing Street, May 9, 1881, 10·5 P.M.

WITH reference to my telegram of the 3rd instant, I have to inform you that Sir E. Thornton and Mr. Blaine are of opinion, after preliminary consideration, that they see no prospect of their coming to an agreement as to assessment; and the United States' Government have therefore decided that the preferable course will be to revert to an arrangement for the settlement of American claims by the payment of a lump sum. This course was considered at the time that Mr. Evarts was in office. The United States' Government are willing to accept 15,000*l.*, to be paid at once, in full satisfaction of the claims known as the Fortune Bay and Aspee Bay claims, and all other claims up to the 4th of March last, arising out of the interruptions from which American fishermen on the coasts of Newfoundland and of its dependencies have suffered.

This arrangement appears to Her Majesty's Government to be satisfactory; and it is hoped that, as this solution of the question renders Sir William Whiteway's proposed visit to Washington unnecessary, he may be enabled to carry out his original plan of leaving for England by the steamer of the 11th instant.

In reply, I have to refer you to the instructions contained in my despatch of the 25th March last, and to add that Her Majesty's Government still think that it would not be desirable to take any steps relative to this point before they have had an opportunity of consulting with the Governor of Newfoundland and Sir William Whiteway, who are expected to arrive in England towards the end of this week.

Sir, Foreign Office, May 23, 1881.

I AM directed by Earl Granville to state to you, for the information of Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies, that a despatch has been received this morning from Sir E. Thornton, of which a copy is forwarded herewith,* in which he communicates the substance of what passed at his interview with Mr. Blaine on the 5th instant relative to the proposed settlement of the Fortune Bay claims by the payment to the United States' Government of a lump sum of 15,000*l.*

Sir E. Thornton also transmits with the same despatch a copy of the note addressed to him by Mr. Blaine on the following day, in which he expresses his readiness to accept the sum of 15,000*l.* in satisfaction of the American claims for the occurrences complained of in the waters of Newfoundland and its dependencies up to the 4th March, 1881.

In laying these papers before the Earl of Kimberley, I am to request that you will call his attention to the intimation conveyed in Mr. Blaine's letter that he is prepared to enter upon the discussion of the question of the joint American and British cruizers in Newfoundland, and the Code of Instructions under which they should sail, and that Sir E. Thornton considers it expedient that some person from Newfoundland who is versed in the subject should aid him with his advice in this negotiation.

Instructions will at once be drawn up, which will be submitted for Lord Kimberley's concurrence, directing him to close with the settlement of all the claims for the sum of 15,000*l.*, on account of disturbances caused to the operations of the American fishermen on the coasts of Newfoundland and its dependencies up to the 4th March last, including the occurrences at Aspee Bay.

I am to add that Lord Granville presumes that, as Sir W. Whiteway and the Governor of Newfoundland are now in England, Lord Kimberley will soon be in a

Mr. Herbert to Sir W. Whiteway.

(Extract.) Downing Street, May 26, 1881.

LORD GRANVILLE has expressed a strong opinion, in which Lord Kimberley concurs, that it is desirable to adopt the alternative course which had been proposed, and to settle this question at once by the payment of the sum of 15,000*l.*, which Mr. Blaine is willing to accept, in satisfaction of all claims up to the 4th March. Apart from the great advantage of terminating at once an irritating controversy, it appears to Her Majesty's Government that even if the United States' Government should, after an inquiry in which evidence might have been adduced, have consented to a reduction of their original demand, the cost of the inquiry added to the compensation would probably have amounted to at least as much as the United States' Government is now prepared to accept.

Instructions will accordingly be sent to Sir E. Thornton to inform Mr. Blaine that Her Majesty's Government are prepared to settle the United States' claims in the manner above indicated, on the clear understanding that the payment is made without prejudice to any question of the rights of either Government under the Treaty of Washington.

The amount will be advanced by the Imperial Treasury, and a communication will in due course be made to the Government of Newfoundland with regard to its repayment by the Colony.

I accordingly addressed to you a telegram this afternoon, authorizing you to inform Mr. Blaine that Her Majesty's Government are prepared to settle this question by the payment to the Government of the United States of the above-named sum, on receiving the assurance that it is accepted in full satisfaction of all claims, up to the date agreed upon, arising out of any interruption of American fishermen in their fishing operations in the localities which have been the subject of discussion between the two Cabinets, and without prejudice to any question of the rights of either Government under the Treaty of Washington.

My Lord, Washington, May 30, 1881.

I HAVE the honour to inform your Lordship that on the receipt of your telegram of the 27th instant relating to the Fortune Bay affair, I wrote the note, of which a copy is inclosed, and the terms of which will, I hope, be found by your Lordship to be in entire conformity with the instructions contained in that telegram.

I took this note to Mr. Blaine on the 28th instant, and asked him whether he had any remarks to make upon it before I signed it. He replied at once that it was in accordance with the conditions which had been already agreed upon. I therefore signed it in his presence, and gave it to him. He promised to send me an answer, conveying the acquiescence of the Government of the United States in the terms of the agreement, and the conditions on which the payment was to be made.

Early the same afternoon I received the note, of which I inclose a copy, and to the contents of which there seems to me to be no objection.

With regard to the payment of the amount agreed upon, Mr. Blaine said that whatever was most convenient to Her Majesty's Government would be agreeable to that of the United States. He added that, if it were thought convenient, he would be ready to receive a bill of exchange drawn upon Her Majesty's Government, and signed by myself. Upon this point I shall have the honour of awaiting your Lordship's instructions.

The understanding of this Government is, as you state, that the payment of 15,000*l.* sterling is in full satisfaction of all claims for disturbances of American fishermen in their fishing operations on the coasts of Newfoundland and its dependencies up to the 4th March last, including the occurrences at Aspee Bay, Cape Breton, Nova Scotia, in the dominion of Canada, a statement of which is made at pp. 138 to 141, inclusive of executive document No. 84 of the House of Representatives of the 46th Congress.

He assumes that no further reference is now necessary, and invites me to join him, at my earliest convenience, in closing the transaction.

I called upon Mr. Blaine on the following day at the State Department, and explained to him that I had not considered myself authorized to come to a definite conclusion of the Fortune Bay affair until I should receive further instructions; that I had telegraphed to your Lordship upon the subject, and had received on the 13th instant a telegram from you to the effect that, owing to the misapprehension which so frequently arises from trusting entirely to telegrams, Her Majesty's Government preferred awaiting the arrival of his note of the 6th instant, which I had not been able to forward till last Tuesday, the 10th instant, so that it would not reach your Lordship till quite the end of this week.

IT is quite desirable, for some reasons not necessary to explain, that this Department bring to a prompt and definite settlement the Fortune Bay affair.

I consider that in our last conversation we had, under authority of the reference made to us by both Governments, reached a conclusion satisfactory to both parties, and my note of the 6th instant was the record on the part of the United States' Government of its acceptance of that conclusion.

As the subject was committed to our decision, no further reference can now be necessary, and it would be agreeable to me if you would join me, at your earliest convenience, in closing the transaction.

It is a source of great satisfaction to me that the discussion has been conducted in so amicable a spirit, and reached so satisfactory a result.

Sir, Foreign Office, May 30, 1881.

I AM directed by Earl Granville to transmit to you, to be laid before Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies, a copy of a despatch which has been received this morning from Sir E. I am, &c.

No. 131.

Lord Tenterden to the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury.

My Lords, Foreign Office, May 30, 1881.

IN a letter dated the 26th February last I requested that your Lordships would be good enough to give the necessary directions that the sum of 15,000*l.* should be held in readiness, in order that it might be placed at the disposal of the Government of the United States, as had been sanctioned by the Cabinet, on the terms indicated in that letter, on account of certain hindrances caused to American fishermen in their fishing operations in the waters of Newfoundland and its dependencies.

Since that date an active correspondence has been carried on between London and Washington, in order to arrive at a clear understanding that this sum would be accepted by the Government of the United States as a complete settlement of all the claims on the part of the American fishermen, which should include not only claims on account of occurrences in the Newfoundland waters, but also those at a place called Aspee Bay, in Cape Breton Island, up to a given date, which has been fixed as the 4th March last.

In consequence of the satisfactory assurances on this point which have been received by Her Majesty's Minister at Washington from Mr. Blaine, the United States' Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, instructions were sent to Sir E. Thornton on Friday last, desiring him to inform Mr. Blaine that Her Majesty's Government were now prepared to close this question by the payment to the United States of the sum of 15,000*l.*, in full satisfaction of all claims for disturbance caused to American fishermen on the coast of Newfoundland and its dependencies up to the 4th March last, including those at Aspee Bay, on the understanding that this payment is made without prejudice to any question of the rights of either Government under the Treaty of Washington.

* No. 129.

Mr. Blaine having now informed Sir E. Thornton that he acknowledges the correctness of the conditions under which it had been agreed between the two Governments that this payment would be made, Sir E. Thornton has applied by telegraph for authority to draw for 15,000*l.* on Her Majesty's Paymaster-General, and he inquires at the same time at how many days' sight this should be done, if sanction is given to his drawing such a bill.

I have to request, therefore, that your Lordships will enable me to answer Sir E. Thornton's inquiry at your earliest convenience.

Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies has caused Sir William Whiteway, the Premier of Newfoundland, who is now in this country, to be informed that a communication will, in due course, be made to the Government of Newfoundland with regard to the repayment of this sum by the Colony.

Their Lordships have directed me to state, in reply to the request contained in your Lordship's letter, that Her Majesty's Minister should be instructed to draw a bill for this sum on Her Majesty's Paymaster-General at ten or thirty days' sight, as may appear to him most desirable.

Inclosure 1 in No. 137.

The Earl of Kimberley to the Officer Administering the Government of Newfoundland.

Sir, Downing Street, June 7, 1881.

I HAD the honour to inform you, in my telegram of the 31st ultimo, of the settlement of the Fortune Bay question by the payment of 15,000*l.* to the United States' Government.

The inclosed copy of a letter which I caused to be addressed to Sir William Whiteway will place you in possession of the reasons which, in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government, rendered it advisable to agree that 15,000*l.* should be paid to the United States' Government in satisfaction of all claims up to the 4th of March last, rather than to enter upon an inquiry with a view to determine the amount of the compensation due to the American fishermen.

In this amount has been included the settlement of the claims of United States' fishermen, known as the Aspee Bay claims, and I have addressed a despatch to the Governor-General of Canada, informing him of the agreement which has been arrived at.

The papers relating to the subject will shortly be laid before Parliament, and will be communicated to you in due course.

Inclosure 2 in No. 137.

The Earl of Kimberley to the Marquis of Lorne.

My Lord, Downing Street, June 2, 1881.

I HAD the honour to inform you in my telegram of the 31st ultimo, that the Aspee Bay question has been settled in conjunction with the Fortune Bay claims.

The depositions of the American fishermen with regard to the occurrences at Aspee Bay are contained on pp. 138-141 of the message from the President of the United States (46th Congress, 2nd Session, Ex. Doc. No. 84), a copy of which is no doubt in the possession of your Lordship's Government.

Her Majesty's Government had been for some time in communication with the United States' Government on the subject of the Fortune Bay claims, and in order to avoid an expensive inquiry with a view to the assessment of compensation to the American fishermen, and the consequent protraction of an irritating controversy, it was at length agreed that the question should be settled at once by the payment of a sum of 15,000*l.*

In this amount has been further included the settlement of the Aspee Bay claims and all other claims up to the 4th March last, it being understood that this payment is made without prejudice to any question of the rights of either Government under the Treaty of Washington.

I have, &c.

In laying these documents before the Earl of Kimberley, I am to request that you will state that Lord Granville proposes, with his Lordship's concurrence, to approve the terms of Sir E. (Substance received by telegraph, June 22.)

My Lord, Washington, June 22, 1881.

WITH reference to your Lordship's telegram of the 20th instant, I have the honour to state that the claim made by certain United States' fishermen for having been prevented from fishing for bait in Aspee Bay has always appeared to me a very small affair, and has, I know, been so considered by both Mr. Evarts and Mr. Blaine. But such little claims, if neglected, are apt to be magnified in course of time, and as it could not be considered as one having arisen in a dependency of Newfoundland, I thought it would be desirable to mention it separately.

I am, however, of opinion that 150*l.* would fully satisfy the Aspee Bay claims mentioned above, and I am convinced that the United States' Government will not assign more than that sum to their satisfaction.

The occurrence at Aspec Bay, Cape Breton, in June 1879, where James Anderson, of the schooner "Cadet," of Gloucester, Massachusetts, alleged that he was prevented by the inhabitants from taking squid with his seine, and thereby suffered loss, and certain other masters of American schooners alleged that in consequence of the prohibition they suffered similar loss, was of a comparatively unimportant character, and did not in fact present itself for consideration until a late stage of the negotiations, when, in coming to an agreement that the fixed sum to be paid should cover all outstanding claims, it was observed that there was this claim against the Dominion Government, in addition to the claims against the Government of Newfoundland.

3. Her Majesty's Government felt it their duty, having an opportunity of settling this matter, of which advantage could not have been taken if the decision had been delayed in order to give time for consultation with the Dominion Government, to act at once in the interest of your Government in the manner which they could not doubt that your Ministers would approve; more especially as it was clear that this course would commit Canada to the payment of a very inconsiderable sum, far less than the cost of an inquiry would have been if the affair had not been summarily disposed of.

4. I have requested the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs to ascertain from Sir E. Thornton what proportion of the sum of 15,000*l.* represents the amount of the claims in respect of the Aspee Bay transaction, and Sir E. Thornton has replied that 150*l.* should be amply sufficient to cover it.

5. I trust that your advisers will be of opinion that in this matter Her Majesty's Government have acted for the best in the interests of the Dominion, and I shall be obliged by your requesting them to make the necessary provision for the repayment to Her Majesty's Exchequer of the amount thus paid on account of Canada.

MY LORD,

Enclosure in No. 1.

MOST GRACIOUS SOVEREIGN,

WE, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Senate and Commons of Canada, in Parliament assembled, desire most earnestly, in our own name, and on behalf of the people whom we represent, to renew the expression of our unswerving loyalty and devotion to Your Majesty's person and Government.

1. We have observed, may it please Your Majesty, with feelings of profound regret and concern, the distress and discontent which have prevailed for some time among Your Majesty's subjects in Ireland.

2. We would respectfully represent to Your Majesty that Your Irish subjects in the Dominion of Canada are among the most loyal, most prosperous, and most contented of Your Majesty's subjects.

3. We would further respectfully represent to Your Majesty that the Dominion of Canada, while offering the greatest advantages and attractions for those of our fellow-subjects who may desire to make their homes amongst us, does not receive that proportion of emigrants from Ireland which might reasonably be expected, and that this is due, in a great measure, in the case of many of our Irish fellow-subjects who have sought foreign homes, to their feelings of estrangement towards the Imperial Government.

4. We would further most respectfully represent to Your Majesty, that in the interests of this, Your loyal Dominion and of the entire Empire, it is extremely to be desired that Your Majesty may not be deprived in the development of Your Majesty's possessions on this continent of the valuable aid of those of Your Majesty's Irish subjects who may feel disposed to leave their native land to seek more prosperous homes.

5. We desire respectfully to suggest to Your Majesty, that Canada and its inhabitants have prospered exceedingly under a Federal system, allowing to each Province of the Dominion considerable powers of self-government, and would venture to express a hope that if consistent with the integrity and well-being of the Empire, and if the rights and status of the minority are fully protected and secured, sure means may be found of meeting the expressed desire of so many of Your Irish subjects in that regard, so that Ireland may become a source of strength to Your Majesty's Empire, and that Your Majesty's Irish subjects at home and abroad may feel the same pride in the greatness of Your Majesty's Empire, the same veneration for the justice of Your Majesty's rule, and the same devotion to, and affection for, our common flag, as are now felt by all classes of Your Majesty's loyal subjects in this Dominion.

6. We would further express a hope that the time has come when Your Majesty's clemency may without injury to the interests of the United Kingdom be extended to those persons who are now imprisoned in Ireland charged with political offences only, and the inestimable blessing of personal liberty restored to them.

R 2903. Wt. 2903.

We pray that the blessings of Your Majesty's Reign may, for Your people's sake, be long continued.

No. 2.

The Right Hon. the EARL OF KIMBERLEY to Governor-General the MARQUIS OF LORNE, K.T., G.C.M.G.

My Lord, Downing Street, June 12, 1882.

I have received and laid before the Queen the Address to Her Majesty from the Senate and House of Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled, which was transmitted in your Lordship's despatch of the 16th of May.*

I am commanded by Her Majesty to request that you will convey to the Senate and House of Commons her appreciation of the renewed expression of their unswerving loyalty and devotion to Her Majesty's person and Government.

Her Majesty will always gladly receive the advice of the Parliament of Canada on all matters relating to the Dominion, and the administration of its affairs; but, with respect to the questions referred to in the Address, Her Majesty will, in accordance with the Constitution of this country, have regard to the advice of the Imperial Parliament and Ministers, to whom all matters relating to the affairs of the United Kingdom exclusively appertain.

I have, &c.

CANADA
(EMIGRATION TO THE UNITED STATES).

RETURN to an Address of the Honourable The House of Commons, dated 15 August 1882;—for,

"COPY of the REPORT (dated the 29th day of December 1881) by the SECRETARY of the DEPARTMENT of AGRICULTURE to the MINISTER of AGRICULTURE in Canada, with reference to the alleged EMIGRATION from Canada to the United States."

Colonial Office, August 1882. } EVELYN ASHLEY.

(Mr. Torrens.)

Ordered, by The House of Commons, to be Printed, 24 October 1882.

COPY of the REPORT (dated the 29th day of December 1881) by the SECRETARY of the DEPARTMENT of AGRICULTURE to the MINISTER of AGRICULTURE in Canada, with reference to the alleged EMIGRATION from Canada to the United States.

REPORT on alleged Exodus from Canada to the United States.

Sir, Ottawa, 29 December 1881.

I HAVE the honour to report to you the following results of a further examination, undertaken at your request, into the alleged extent of the emigration of Canadians to the United States, and particularly on our western frontier, at Port Huron.

I obtained a copy of a printed statement, issued by the United States Collector of Customs, at Port Huron, for the year ending 30th June 1881, in which the number of immigrants said to have entered the United States from Canada at that point during the fiscal year, was 111,170.

This statement of numbers I subsequently found was not alone issued by the Collector of Customs, at Port Huron, but published officially by the Bureau of Statistics of the Treasury Department, at Washington, over the signature of Mr. Joseph Nimmo, junr., Chief of the Bureau.

Before entering upon a particular examination of the figures of the Port Huron Collector, it is better to give a statement of the alleged total emigration from Canada into the United States, as published in the Report of the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics of the United States, for the four quarters of the fiscal year ending 30th June 1881. It is as follows:—

STATEMENT showing the Number of IMMIGRANTS, by Nationality, arrived in the United States, during the Year ending 30th June 1881.

	Males.	Females.	Total.
Quebec and Ontario - - - -	62,033	40,889	102,922
Manitoba - - - - - -	674	405	1,079
Nova Scotia - - - - -	7,977	6,460	14,437
New Brunswick - - - -	2,837	1,497	4,334
Prince Edward Island - - -	617	916	1,533
British Columbia - - - -	640	138	778
Newfoundland - - - - -	124	184	308
TOTALS - - -	74,902	50,489	125,391

It

It thus appears that the figures furnished by the Port Huron Customs Collector form the great bulk of the alleged emigration from Canada, for if we subtract 111,170 from the above total, we have only a remainder of 14,221 for all the other ports along the whole of the United States frontier, from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

I find it important for the purpose of this inquiry further to take from the quarterly Reports of the Chief of the United States Bureau of Statistics, some of the details with which this alleged immigration from Canada into the United States at Port Huron, is stated. These purport to give, in addition to the gross numbers, the age and sex of the immigrants, and, further, the numbers of both males and females, within three periods of life:—

Recapitulating for the four quarters we have:—

September quarter	43,979
December „	29,101
March „	8,951
June „	29,139
TOTAL for Fiscal Year at Port Huron	111,170

This total of immigration, as taken from the four quarters of the fiscal year in the Report of the Chief of the Bureau, exactly coincides with the figures for the year furnished by the Port Huron Customs Collector.

It is further indicated in Mr. Nimmo's reports that all the immigrants were aliens, not one of them coming under the head of Returned Citizens of the United States.

In Mr. Nimmo's Bulletin of "Immigration during the Month of June 1881, "and during the Year ended 30th June 1881," I find the following item in small type:—"Note.—A part of the immigration into the United States from "the

" the Dominion of Canada consisted of immigrants from Europe who came by " steamer to Montreal and thence reached the Lake ports of the United States " by railroad." But Mr. Nimmo does not say what " part," nor does he give any figures. And it is to be observed there is no reference whatever to anything of this kind in the published volumes of his final reports. In the text of this Bulletin, too, he gives the total immigration from the Dominion of Canada for the 12 months ended 30th June 1881, as 118,664. But in his published final reports he gives this, as I have above stated, at 125,391, for the same 12 months; and both are precise figures, it will be noticed, down to units. Without, however, at all dwelling on this little eccentricity, I will say I have thought it proper to assume that the final reports contain the figures Mr. Nimmo desires to give to the world.

The first remark to be made with respect to these detailed statements of statistics is, that it is indubitable they could not be obtained with accuracy, nor at all obtained in the absence of some regular registration and forms of questions asked. And with respect to these points I have to state that I visited Port Huron twice, once in August last, and once in November last, in pursuance of this inquiry. I crossed the river as an ordinary passenger with the usual Grand Trunk express trains, on which there were migrants from Canada to Manitoba; and I watched with carefulness the proceedings. No questions of any kind were asked of me, either with respect to my age, or my intention to enter the United States as an emigrant or a traveller simply; and none were asked of any of the migrants to Manitoba or any other persons on these trains. In fact, neither I nor any of the passengers that my careful watching enabled me to discover, were subjected to any of the proceedings necessary to obtain the information published by Mr. Nimmo, and both the trains were ordinarily well filled with passengers. There might have been emigrants from Canada for the United States on the cars, but I could not ascertain the fact except by questioning the passengers, which I did not consider expedient, nor did I feel, being simply a passenger, I was authorised to do. Our luggage was simply opened and examined, under a shed on the United States side of the river, in the same way as is common at other custom houses, and nothing further was done. I took pains to inquire of the railway officials if the proceedings I witnessed were usual, and I was informed that nothing more was ever done.

For further and more detailed reports of the proceedings at this point between the months of January and April 1881, I refer you to those of Mr. G. R. Kingsmill (see Appendix, No. 39),* an officer who was placed at that point by you for the express purpose of watching and reporting such proceedings. His evidence is quite positive, and to the effect that during the four months he was on the spot there was not even a pretence made of any asking of questions, nor any counting or taking down of figures visible to him.

I did not think it advisable to ask any questions of the United States officials in the face of the kind of feeling that prevails after the exposure of last year, for the reason that I had no authority to do so. It is known there was an investigation ordered by an officer from Washington, and that it took place; but his report has not been published.

There remains the unquestioned fact published in my report of last year, as respects the proceedings on the trains, of the statement made to me at an interview by the United States Customs officer, who had the duty confided to him of making up these so-called statistics, that " questions were not asked, because it " would be an impossibility to ask them and record the answers within the time " afforded; that 20 men could not do this on some days." " That when he looked " in the door of a car he saw at a glance what it contained and the numbers it " contained, and that he could tell whether the passengers were immigrants or " not; that he made up the figures after he had done examining the train. " That he could not ask the questions required by the Government, but had to " arrive at the information as best he could." I notice that the details of the " occupations " of the immigrants are not this year given by the Chief of the Bureau.

Bureau. But why strain a point of this kind? When all those details of age and sex are given, when it is determined that all the immigrants are aliens, that none of them are United States citizens returning from abroad, and when all the provinces from which it is alleged they came are stated; and all this without a single question being asked. It is even doubtful if every car door is opened by the officer who makes up the figures, or, in his own words "arrives at "the information" in the best way he can.

There is, however, an easy and positive means of applying a test of criticism to the figures to which the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics has lent his official sanction. The great bulk of all the travel both east and west at the point of Port Huron is by the Grand Trunk Railway. There is a branch of the Great Western Railway at Sarnia, but this is not much used for the conveyance of through passengers, as these, for the most part, take the main line: and there is a ferry between the points of Sarnia and Port Huron, by which, as stated in my report last year, a few immigrants may pass with teams; but the only considerable movement possible is by the railways. And, fortunately for the purposes of this inquiry, the total numbers of passengers going east and west at this point are facts of exact official record.

The total number of passengers, that is of individuals, the half tickets being counted of all kinds, crossing at this point from east to west, by the Grand Trunk Railway, for the 12 months ended 30th June, were as follow:—

Passengers having purchased tickets in Canada to points in Canada, viâ United States.	5,658
Passengers from Canada to United States - - -	53,641
Ditto - - United States to Canada, N.W. - -	173
Ditto - - United States to United States - -	25,046
TOTAL going West - - -	84,518

This total includes all travellers for business and for pleasure, immigrants from Europe using Canadian steamships and railways to go to the Western States, migrants from the older Provinces of Canada to the Canadian North-West, and all passengers and migrants between the Eastern United States and the Western.

The corresponding figures for the same period by the Sarnia Branch of the Great Western Railway were as follow:—

From Canada to Western points in the United States -	1,345
From Eastern United States points to Western United States.	57
TOTAL - - -	1,402
Making a GRAND TOTAL of all Passengers going West by all Railways at this Point -	85,920

This claim of immigration, at Port Huron, as stated by the United States Customs' Collector, and officially published to the world on the authority of the Treasury Department at Washington, by the Chief of the United States Bureau of Statistics, is therefore 29·38 per cent. more than the total travel at that point. It is equivalent to the feat of exaggerating, by nearly 30 per cent., all the passengers who enter France at the ports of Calais and Boulogne, and then claiming the result as immigration into that country from England.

It is thus established that such a claim is both impossible and absurd. But this view will become more striking when we more closely examine the figures.

The item of 53,641 of passengers who obtained tickets in Canada for points in the Western United States, includes 14,624 immigrants from Europe who obtained tickets at Quebec, and 491 immigrants from Europe who obtained tickets at Halifax for points west of Port Huron, in the Western United States, and were therefore simply passengers from Europe (largely from Scandinavia) using Canadian routes. These must be deducted.

The

The deductions therefore are:

Passengers from Europe viâ Quebec - - - - -	14,624
Immigrants at Halifax obtaining tickets for points West of Port Huron.	491
Passengers and migrants from Eastern Canada to North-West Canada.	5,658
From Eastern United States to North-West Canada -	173
From Eastern United States to Western United States -	25,046
TOTAL - - -	45,992

Taking these deductions from the Grand Total of all passengers going West, viâ Port Huron, namely, 85,920, we have a total of all passengers, of all sorts, from points in Canada to points in the Western United States, of 39,928, or in other words a little more than one-third of the number of the immigrants claimed to have entered the United States at Port Huron.

These facts relate simply to the West-bound passengers. But the grotesqueness of the pretension will become still more apparent when the East-bound are taken into consideration.

Taking first the Grand Trunk Railway, there passed:—
From North-West Canada to Eastern Canada viâ United States.	947
From North-West Canada to United States - - -	258
From Western United States to Canada - - -	34,267
From Western United States to Eastern United States -	20,835
TOTAL, Grand Trunk Passengers going East - -	56,307
By the Sarnia Branch, Great Western Railway:—
From Western United States to Canada - - -	681
From Western United States to Eastern United States -	18
TOTAL by both Railways going East - - -	57,006

The true emigration is, of course, the difference between the East-bound and West-bound passengers. It therefore follows from the preceding figures that the Western United States made a gain by the Grand Trunk Railway of 4,211 from the Eastern United States, the West-bound passengers having been 25,046, while the East-bound were 20,835; and the Western United States a gain of 39 by the Sarnia Branch of the Great Western Railway, the West-bound passengers having been 57 and the East-bound 18.

The difference of numbers between passengers going from Canada to the Western United States and those coming from the Western States to Canada is 19,374, the total West-bound passengers of this class being 53,641, and the East-bound 34,267. But from this difference there must be taken the 14,624 European immigrants who obtained tickets at Quebec after landing from the steamships; and the immigrants at Halifax who obtained tickets to points west of Port Huron, 491; making a net total difference of 4,259, against the Port Huron claim of 111,170.

And even this difference of 4,259, must be held to include all those immigrants who are alleged to have taken advantage of the special assisted rates of passage between the United Kingdom and Canada, and after remaining for a while went on to the Western States. Also all those immigrants from beyond the sea who have landed at Portland and Boston and entered Canada viâ Montreal and Ogdensburg, proceeding afterwards to the Western States; the numbers of which, I believe, are considerable. There is not, in fact, any evidence of any Canadian emigration of any significance at the point of Port Huron to the United States.

It is noticeable that the claim of 111,170 immigrants at the point of Port Huron is largely in excess of that of the previous year, viz., 94,375, notwithstanding the fact that the self-evident impossibility of those large figures had been clearly proved, and the proofs furnished to Mr. Nimmo, the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics.

If the statistics published on the authority of Mr. Nimmo could be supposed to be well founded, an exodus from Canada of 125,391 in one year, would imply in a decenniad, on a moderate estimate of natural increase, at the ages given by Mr. Nimmo, a loss of population of about a million and-a-half. This would very nearly wipe out all the population in the great Province of Ontario, and more than wipe out the whole of that of the Province of Quebec, supposing, for the sake of measuring the alleged exodus with the known numbers of people living in these provinces, such comparison is made. It is known to everybody that no depopulation in Canada is taking place; but, on the contrary, the figures of the census prove that the increase within the last decenniad has been 18 per cent.; and this considerable increase is over and above all the emigration that has taken place from the Dominion within the period. We have thus, by another test, based upon well-established facts, a further proof of the grossly absurd exaggeration of the so-called statistics, published by the Chief of the Washington Bureau.

The United States Census Returns for 1880, of place of birth, have not yet been published in an available form; but by the United States Census, for the decenniad ended in 1870, the proportion of persons of Canadian birth were 12 per 1,000 of the population; while, on the other hand, the persons of United States birth in Canada by the census of 1871 were a fraction over 18 per 1,000 of the population. The following is a comparison of the differences in the years named in Canada, the figures being the numbers of persons of United States birth per 1,000 in the population of the Provinces named:—

	1871.	1881.
Ontario - - - - - - - -	26·7	23·6
Quebec - - - - - - - -	12·3	14·3
New Brunswick - - - - - -	14·3	15·9
Nova Scotia - - - - - -	5·8	6·6

After the preceding analysis of 111,170, of Mr. Nimmo's figures, out of the alleged emigration from Canada of 125,391, any further examination of the little remainder of 14,221 for all the other ports on the long Canadian frontier has certainly diminished interest. The clear statement, however, in Mr. George Johnson's Report (see Appendix, No. 40) * of an investigation made at your request, shows that the alleged exodus from Nova Scotia has been very weak, although Mr. Nimmo makes a claim of 14,437. It is beyond question that no satisfactory proof can be adduced in support of these comparatively large figures; and it is impossible to read Mr. Johnson's Report without feeling that they are are of the same unsupported texture as the large Port Huron figures.

As respects the Province of New Brunswick, some figures given by Mr. S. Gardner, the Immigration Agent at St. John (see Appendix, No. 44) * show the nature of the movement between the Eastern States and that port. They do not exhibit any sign of exodus, nor even considerable emigration.

It is, however, to be remarked, as respects the Provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, that a considerable portion of the alleged emigration from those Provinces, as claimed by Mr. Nimmo, is at the point of Port Huron, and that has been proved to be utterly fallacious.

I have not the figures of emigration and immigration between the Province of Quebec and the New England States, but these are, I believe, considerable both ways; and also that there is a movement of the nature of that described by by Mr. Kingsmill in his report between the lumber woods of Michigan and other points in the west and the Provinces of Quebec and Ontario.

It is a fact of precise and ascertained record in connection with entries of immigrants' effects at the custom houses along the frontier, during the year 1881, that 15,404 persons immigrated to Canada from the United States. Of these, 9,821 were returned Canadians and 1,963 United States citizens. Undoubtedly, there were very large numbers of others, of mechanics and working men, who passed no free entries with their "settlers' effects," and, therefore, there is no record of them. As between two parts of a continent in the position of Canada and the United States, with a very long frontier, there must always be a considerable flux and reflux of population, in accordance with the relative activity of trade or industries in one or other country, or the attractions of newly-opened lands; but this is a movement altogether different in its nature from that of a depopulating exodus of the kind stated in the grossly erroneous figures of the return of Mr. Nimmo.

There is a particular and very great injustice done to what may be called the immigration interests of Canada by the constant publication and re-publication of these figures in the United Kingdom and the continent of Europe. Mr. Nimmo publishes monthly bulletins which are widely communicated to the press, and these give, month by month, the cumulative numbers. They are constantly telegraphed to and published in the London "Times;" and, in fact, all over America and Europe, under the authority of the Treasury Department of the United States, from figures furnished to editors and newspaper correspondents by the Washington Bureau of Statistics. The argument which is drawn from them and presented to the emigrating classes is, that if Canada is a place from which people flee in a depopulating exodus, it cannot be a good place for emigrants from the Old World to go to. The unfairness and injustice of these proceedings lie in the fact that these published statements fall to pieces under any test that may be applied to them, and yet they are persistently reiterated.

CORRESPONDENCE

RELATING TO THE

FORTUNE BAY FISHERY CLAIMS.

No. 1.

SIR W. V. WHITEWAY, K.C.M.G., to the RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF KIMBERLEY.

MY LORD, May 20, 1881.

I HAVE the honour to enclose the paper to which I referred, and I also send, for facility of reference, the papers which were published in the United States relating to the Fortune Bay affair. I had not all the papers from Her Majesty's Government, and of necessity was obliged to hand the American publications to Judge Bennett.

I have, &c.

The Right Hon. the Earl of Kimberley, &c. &c. &c. (Signed) W. V. WHITEWAY.

Enclosures in No. 1.

MEMORANDUM.

I, THOMAS R BENNETT, Judge of the Northern District Court at Harbour Grace, Newfoundland, do solemnly declare as follows:—

I have resided in Fortune Bay more than 20 years, and have an intimate knowledge of the fishery, especially in its relations with American fishermen, from its inception more than 25 years ago until quite recently. I remember the winter of 1878, and know that the herring fishery was a failure for American and Newfoundland fishermen alike, and that the chief causes to which it is attributable were—

1. An unusual but not unprecedented scarcity of fish;
2. An intermixture of small and useless fish, which made seining unprofitable and tedious work, because of the labour required to pick and cull the fish;
3. Because the winter was exceptionally mild, and unsuited for freezing the fish.

The Honourable Sir William V. Whiteway, K.C.M.G., Premier, and Her Majesty's Attorney-General, having confidence in my knowledge of this subject, has submitted to me the accompanying papers and documents connected with the claim made by the Government of the United States for compensation for alleged wrongs done by fishermen of Newfoundland to certain fishermen of the United States at Long Harbour, Fortune Bay, during the winter of 1878. He has requested me to investigate the claim, for the purpose of ascertaining a reasonable and just amount to be tendered the United States' Government as full compensation for the alleged interference with their fishermen, upon the basis laid down in the Despatch of Lord Granville dated the 27th day of October, A.D. 1880, in order to preserve that amity heretofore existing between the fishermen of the two countries, and to avoid the inconveniences attending an arbitration.

In the following Report I have given a careful consideration to the circumstances connected with the transactions in question.

(Signed) T. R. BENNETT,
Judge of District Court.

REPORT.

BEFORE minutely analysing the claims I would remark that the statements and affidavits on both sides are much exaggerated. Both parties appear to have been irritated; the Americans by being interfered with in the exercise of what they considered to be their rights, for I believe they were under the impression, however erroneous that opinion may have been, that their rights under the treaty extended to fishing from the strand, and the Newfoundland fishermen were doubtless incensed at the breach of a law relating to Sunday fishing, a day which they had always observed as a day of rest.

The greatest harmony and good fellowship had always existed in Fortune Bay between the fishermen of both countries until Sunday, the 6th day of January 1878; and since that day until the present time not a single case of dispute has arisen between them in that locality, although several hundred visits have been made by Americans for bait and cargoes.

There were more than 60 seines belonging to Newfoundlanders lying idle on that Sunday; more than two-thirds of them were of American manufacture, and they were not inefficient means for capturing the fish, nor were the Newfoundlanders inexpert at the business; on the contrary, they were so expert that each American seine owner had engaged a Newfoundland crew to work it for him. These facts show that no feeling of hostility exists against Americans, and that our people were impelled to act as they did by a feeling that the others were not acting fairly towards them in capturing fish on a day which they by custom and law had always observed as a day of rest, and which the Americans had kept decently during their past 25 years' intercourse.

It is quite true that a smaller number of vessels have visited Fortune Bay since, but not for the cause alleged, nor is it credible, if those small schooners could make a net profit of 2,000 to 3,000 dollars for a short voyage when they purchased their cargoes, that they would forego the business, even if they could not safely exercise their right to catch fish for themselves. They would continue to purchase their cargoes rather than lose a trade, if it were as profitable as they represent. The real reason why they do not visit the bay in as great numbers as before is because they can now obtain an abundant supply of excellent herrings from British fishermen at Grand Manan and other places in the Bay of Fundy, within 150 miles of their own port, while Fortune Bay is over 800 miles distant.

That the winter of 1878 was exceptionally mild, and therefore unsuitable for freezing herrings, and that they were very scarce and two-thirds small and unfit for use, are facts within the knowledge of every resident in Fortune Bay, some of which are confirmed by the truthful and reliable Report (p. 16, Message of President to Congress) of W. F. McLaughlin, Esq., the American Consular Agent at St. Pierre Miquelon, at the entrance to Fortune Bay, and about 60 miles from Long Harbour.

All the depositions on both sides show that whatever damage was done occurred on Sunday, the 6th January, and that the Americans continued to haul their seines after that day is asserted by every Newfoundland witness, nor is any specific aggression on any other day alleged by the Americans.

That they were not in fear and were not molested or "driven away" is proved by the attested return from the Customs Department hereto annexed. It shows that some of those who have deposed that they were "driven away" did not leave before the 16th day of March, nearly two and one half months after the alleged "outrage."

If the basis for compensation indicated in the last paragraph of Earl Granville's Despatch* be strictly adhered to it will be difficult to show that any other fisherman is entitled to compensation except the schooners "Ontario" and "New England," whose seines were destroyed. They claim for value of seines 1,400 dollars, and for 2,000 barrels of herrings, the whole amounting to 6,700 dollars. It is to be observed that these herrings were taken by strand fishing, and could not have been caught in any other way. They were, by the destruction of their seines, deprived of the opportunity of using them afterwards during that voyage, and although the herrings said to have been enclosed were taken in violation of treaty rights, yet their value may be taken as a most liberal estimate of the losses they sustained by being interfered with and being deprived of the means to prosecute the fishery within their treaty rights.

The other seines were uninjured. Those that had been set were worked from the shore. They all claim that they intended to fish them by using the strand, and that they had a right to do so under the treaty. They endeavoured in several depositions to show that they were not trespassing on private property, and that they had been using a public beach. (See depositions, Charles Dagle, Willard E. Poole, p. 85, and Michael Murray, p. 86, President's Message.)

Perhaps no stronger argument than these facts could be adduced to show that the Government and people of Newfoundland had not been disposed to interpret the treaty rigidly nor enforce it strictly against American fishermen. They had been permitted to use the strand in common with Newfoundland fishermen so freely that they believed it to be their right. But not content with this generous concession, which they had availed themselves of every day previous to the 6th January, they attempted to exercise it to the prejudice of Newfoundlanders at a time when they were at rest. Hence arose the disturbance and the demand for payment for herrings, which could not have been captured without using the strand.

I know that seine fishing cannot be successfully conducted at Long Harbour except from the strand. Neither Americans nor Newfoundlanders ever attempt it in any other way, and were they to do so it would be a failure.

* No. 60, page 71, of Foreign Office Paper [C.-3059] of 1881.

The whole of these claims, when tested on the basis laid down in Lord Granville's Despatch, are reduced to one doubtful and extravagant demand for 6,700 dollars made by Pew and Sons, owners of the "Ontario" and "New England," and as they unquestionably suffered some loss by the destruction of their property they should be paid without scrutinizing their account too severely.

With regard to the claims made for other vessels, I propose to review them from the American standpoint, and not upon the basis laid down by Lord Granville, and shall endeavour to show the utmost amount which, according to their own affidavits, coupled with the official Customs return of Newfoundland, they would be entitled to receive.

Of the 22 vessels said to have been at Long Harbour on the 6th January, I shall begin with those that had seines, and shall refer again to the "Ontario," McAuly, master, and "New England," Dago, master, owned by Pew and Sons. (Their claim and depositions are on pp. 57, 58, and 59, President's Message.)

They had two seines joined together and these were the only seines destroyed. They allege that these seines were worth 1,400 dollars, and contained by their estinate 2,000 barrels of herrings, more than sufficient to load their vessels.

They estimate their total loss for seines and herrings at 6,700 dollars. This was an enormous haul of herrings, and most improbable at that season of the year. During the spawning season in the month of May at Magdalen Islands, at St. George's Bay, and in one or two localities in Fortune Bay, it might be possible to haul that quantity, but during 20 years I never knew or heard of a haul exceeding 500 or 600 barrels at one time; and it is a striking fact that the only seine whose herrings were not thrown away, hauled 100 barrels (that of Captain Jacobs).

There is a great contrast between the quantity actually secured by one seine and the quantities assumed to have been in the other seines which were not secured.

But these claimants, Pew and Sons, were those alleged to have been the greatest sufferers, and extravagant as is their estimate of loss, I have, for the reasons already given, suggested that they should be paid 6,700 dollars.

Having secured their seine and herrings unmolested on that day they could not have hauled any more during the next ten days, as it would require that time at least to handle and freeze such a large quantity.

If Pew and Sons are allowed the full amount of their claim there can be no further claim by persons alleging that they were depending on Pew and Sons' sales for their herrings, for after the Sunday referred to the other seines which did work (and there was no interference after that day) were unsuccessful.

These vessels remained one month after the 6th January, and cleared out at the Customs on the 4th and 6th February.

"Lizzie and Namari," Dagle, Master.

(Deposition on p. 81, President's Message.)

States that he had sold his seine and boat the previous winter to Newfoundland fisherman.

It was no longer American property, and he could not sell the right to violate our laws, whatever he may do himself.

There is no evidence that this seine was used on that day, and had it been interfered with we are not accountable to the United States' Government for any acts done by our own people to our own people.

This deponent clearly, then, has not been injured, and has not a shadow of claim.

The vessel was cleared at the Customs on the 4th February, nearly a month after the "outrage."

"F. A. Smith," Jas. McDonald, Master.

(Deposition on p. 83, President's Message.)

He states that he had taken 1,000 barrels. If not interfered with he could not have used his seine again until those were disposed of, which would require several days.

These herrings were taken by strand fishing, but I shall test their value by the standard of Pew and Sons' claim (see ante).

	Dollars.
For seines destroyed and herrings (2,000 barrels) - -	6,700
Less value of seines - - - - - -	1,400
Value of 2,000 barrels - - - - -	5,300
Value of 1,000 barrels at this rate - - - -	2,650

This is at a very much higher rate per barrel than is credited in any of the accounts. (See further on, schooners "Bunker Hill," "Izaac Rich," "Bonanza," "Herbert W. Rogers," and "Moses Knowlton.")

This vessel was cleared at the Customs on the 6th February.

"William E. McDonald," McDonald, Master.

(Deposition on p. 82, President's Message.)

The master of this vessel was on shore, and had not attempted to seine on the 6th January.

His seine was probably worked by a Newfoundland crew that had conscientious objections against pursuing their usual avocation on a Sunday. However this may be it is clear from his deposition that at no time during that day did he use his seine, nor is there any indication that he intended doing so. It may be fairly assumed that he was not influenced in his conduct by any action of the mob.

There can be no meritsi n this claim unless it is assumed that every vessel having a seine, whether she used it or not, was entitled to be paid for a catch of herrings which might possibly have been taken by fishing from the strand. If such a principle were adopted then this vessel might be set down for 1,000 barrels at 2,650 dollars, being at the same rate claimed by Pew and Sons.

It is, perhaps, unnecessary to remark that McDonald's affidavit, charging Newfoundlanders with having placed rocks on the hauling-ground where they fished themselves with a large number of seines, and thereby destroying its use for all time, for the mere purpose of injuring Americans, who are using only five or six seines, is too gross and absurd to require refutation, as is his charge that poor net fishermen had placed their gill-nets in a locality where herrings were not usually caught, and permitting them to rot in the water for the purpose of obstructing Americans.

The animus shown in this affidavit discredits his claim, and leaves an impression that it is without foundation.

This vessel cleared at the Customs on the 5th February, one month after the "outrage."

"Hereward," E. Stapleton, Master.

(Deposition on pp. 84 and 85, President's Message.)

Stapleton says he employed a crew of Newfoundlanders, who set his seine in a strong tideway and utterly destroyed it. Such accidents do occasionally happen with old worn-out seines when set on a rough and rocky sea bottom. However this may have been caused it was the act of his own servants, and he should look to them for redress if they did him a wilful wrong. But it is incredible that men depending on his seine for their wages would sacrifice their own interests merely to injure their employer.

This casualty happened before the 6th January when all were working in harmony.

He confirms the testimony of others that no herrings could, because of their scarceness, be taken in seines after the 6th January, thus showing (on the assumption that we are liable) that our liability would be limited to the losses of that day. If we admitted the claim of other seine owners and pay them the value of herrings they say they might have taken he cannot make a further claim on account of any interest he may have had in them.

His owners in their exhibit (p. 48) attribute their loss to the destruction of their seines by their own hired servants.

Stapleton's statement that all the vessels had agreed to assist in loading each other, thereby competing with each other in the New York market (they not being on a joint account, but separate ventures), is most improbable. None of the seine owners mention such an arrangement, nor do Pew and Sons, who suffered most, make any claim on that account. In my experience of many years no such co-operation was known; each man was active to obtain a cargo and get to market before others could load and compete with him.

This vessel has clearly no claim.

She was cleared at the Customs on the 8th February, more than a month after the "outrage."

"Charles C. Warren," Peter Smith, Master.

(Deposition on p. 86, President's Message.)

He says he had his seine in the boat, but took it up because of the disturbance.

He estimates his loss at 3,000 dollars, besides expenses of the voyage. His account is stated in detail on p. 49, and an analysis of it, as well as a few others who have given details, will enable us to form an idea of the character of the claims made, and the extravagant estimate of profits claimed by all.

He charges—

	Dols.	Dols.
For outfits and cash paid for 400 barrels of herrings		4,610
He credits—
800 barrels herrings, at 3 dollars	2,400
30 hogsheads salt	30
		2,430
Expense, loss		2,180
And charges—
500 barrels herrings		2,500
		4,680

He claims that his vessel would carry 1,300 barrels, and that he only got 800 barrels. He has valued the 800 barrels at 2,400 dollars, and the 500 barrels he did not get at 2,500 dollars. He sold the former at 3 dollars per barrel, and charges the latter at 5 dollars per barrel.

Assuming his charges for outfits are correct, his account, on his own showing, would, if he had procured a full cargo of herrings, and no interference had taken place, have resulted in a loss upon the voyage of 150 dollars.

Say from above—

	Dollars.
Outfits and cash paid for herrings	4,610
Less for 400 barrels purchased	560
	4,050
Cr.
1,300 barrels herrings at the rate he sold (3 dollars)	3,900
Net loss	150

Just 4,530 dollars less than he charges in his claim.

Supposing it be admitted that he could have taken the 400 barrels he purchased, and also the 500 barrels to make up the cargo, his claim could not be more than—

	Dollars.
400 barrels herrings purchased	560
500 barrels herrings short at 3 dollars	1,500
	2,160

Apart from his account, and assuming that seines were to be paid for the herrings they might have taken by strand fishing, using Pew and Sons' claim as a standard, this claimant would be put down for 1,000 barrels at 2,650 dollars.

This vessel was cleared at the Customs on the 9th January, an early date for a successful voyage.

"Moses Adams," Job Jacobs, Master.

He does not make any deposition.

David Malleson (deposition p. 48) says: "Captain Jacobs being a Newfoundlander the mob allowed him to take in the herrings he had taken."

His owners, however, in their claim (p. 49), demand for herrings tripped out of seine, but offer no evidence that such an act took place. But if strand fishing is allowed, and its interruption is to be compensated for, there is no distinction can be made between him and the other seine owners, and he would be entitled, on Pew and Sons' basis, to 1,000 barrels of herrings at 2,650 dollars.

This vessel cleared with a cargo of 600 barrels of frozen herrings, very nearly, if not quite, a full cargo, and he credits them in market at a trifle over 1 dol. 50 c. per barrel.

This is the eighth and last seine, and the demand of the owners for 8,586 dols. 5 c. is the most extravagant and outrageous of the 22.

Recapitulation.

(Based on Lord Granville's Despatch.)

"Ontario" and "New England" owned by Pew and Sons.

For seines destroyed and consequential damages, 6,700 dollars.

The damages are allowed on the assumption that Americans might legally use seines during the close months, which is denied and at issue, otherwise the damage would be 1,400 dollars.

Recapitulation.

(On the basis that American fishermen were interfered with, and prevented fishing from the strand.

The above appears to me to be the utmost which can possibly be made up upon the affidavits of the Americans, taking Pew and Sons as a basis, and their claim would doubtless be considered in excess of the actual and legitimate loss sustained by them.

I have taken, although it may be considered as not impossible, but very improbable, the whole quantity of herrings which could possibly have been seined on Sunday, the 6th January with the appliances at hand, at 6,000 barrels, based on Pew and Son's statement. These seven vessels by their tonnage would carry about 700 barrels each on an average, making 4,900 barrels for their cargoes, leaving 1,100 barrels to be disposed of to other vessels; if divided among the other 15 vessels it would give about 73 barrels to each thus showing how small an injury these 15 vessels could have really suffered.

I will now consider the case of the other 14 vessels.

They were at Fortune Bay, but there is no statement or affidavit showing they were at Long Harbour on the 6th January (Rumsey, deposition, p. 74, states there were only 12 American vessels at Long Harbour), but this is immaterial if the following views are correct,

These vessels were on an ordinary trading voyage, such as they had pursued during the past 25 years. They had no seines or other appliances for carrying on a fishery.

They had entered at the Customs for trade, as they had usually done, and had apparently defrauded the revenue of Newfoundland.

Their sworn statements of cargo in their claims are far larger than their sworn entries for duties, as example, schooner "Izaac Rich" (p. 92 in President's Message) claims for cargo 1,030 dollars, and enters at the Custom House (see Returns) in ballast, and makes oath that he has no cargo. All the other entries are of a like character, and some of them will be noticed further on.

There is not the slightest evidence that any one of these vessels was interfered with by the mob. They were, in fact, the very good customers of Newfoundlanders were there any herrings to be caught.

They were not in any sense fishermen following their avocation, nor were they exercising any of the rights conferred on them by the Treaty of Washington. They went to Fortune Bay for the purposes of trade and for no other purpose; consequently had any wrong been done them it must have been in violation of the comity of nations, and could not have been an infraction of the Treaty, which confers fishing privileges only. If we did a wrong to the others in contravention of the Treaty, we are not bound to these traders for that wrong. If we hindered them from trading on a Sunday we had a right to do so because it is contrary to our laws.

For these reasons, and because I have shown that the utmost quantity of herrings at the disposal of the owners of seines would have been 1,100 barrels, that if these 14 vessels had been on a fishing voyage the loss of that quantity, divided among them, would have been so small that it could not have materially affected the results of the voyage, and because I have proposed to pay the owners of seines for the value of their herrings, I am of opinion that these 14 vessels have no claim.

Although these claims are not allowed, it will be interesting to examine a few of them for the purpose of showing their exaggerated character. Most of them have avoided details such as will enable me to thoroughly analyze them, but I shall begin with the schooner—

This vessel cleared at the Customs, on the 23rd February, with 1,080 barrels, which appears to have been a full cargo.

He credits them at something less than 1 dollar a barrel. With these facts it is unnecessary to investigate this account further.

If this be the value of herrings to those who got cargoes, the loss of those who got none must be very small.

"John W. Bray."

(Claim on p. 54, President's Message.)

Charges a loss of 3,580 dol. 7 c.

He cleared at the Customs on the th January, with 500 barrels of frozen herrings about 100 barrels, and certainly not 150 barrels, short of a full cargo for a vessel of her tonnage (83 tons). (Vessels carry more than one-third less frozen herrings than salted.)

He credits these herrings at 1,525 dol. 45 c., thus fixing the value of frozen herrings at a little over 3 dollars per barrel.

He left for market very early, and was not delayed by the "outrage."

He only lost on the 150 barrels he was short (if he were short) at the same rate as those he credits, 3 dollars per barrel; it would be a little over 450 dollars.

Further comment is unnecessary.

"HERBERT M. ROGERS."

(Claim on p. 53, President's Message.)

Claims for his losses 5,876 dol. 30 c.

He cleared at the Customs on the 2nd February, with 517 barrels of frozen herrings. His vessel, being 77 tons (6 tons smaller than the last), would, perhaps, have capacity to carry 100 barrels more. He got away about the usual time.

He credits these herrings at 1,120 dollars, thus fixing their value at a trifle over 2 dollars per barrel.

The 100 barrels short would have yielded him, at that rate, 200 dollars.

In the face of these facts he estimates the profit of a voyage at 3,930 dol. 17 c.

"MAUD AND EFFIE."

(Claim on p. 51, President's Message.)

Makes his account up carelessly, and recapitulates 1,000 dollars more than it adds correctly, and swears it is correct.

Charges his cargo at 1,405 dol. 2 c., and enters it for duty at 125 dol. 80 c.

His cargo and entry, as well as all the others, proves that he and they were traders, not fishermen.

He cleared at the Customs on the 31st January, 25 days after the "outrage."

"WILDFIRE."

(Claim on p. 50, President's Message.)

Her owner swears she was driven away from Newfoundland.

She was the last vessel that left, and cleared at the Customs on the 16th March more than two months after the "outrage."

"MOSES KNOWLTON."

(Claim on p. 53, President's Message.)

Claims 5,356 dol. 60 c.

Neither master nor owner state that she had arrived at Fortune Bay on the 6th January. She did not enter at the Customs until the 11th day of that month.

He cleared at the Customs on the 16th March, with 400 barrels of herrings, and credits only 180 barrels on his account, 305 dollars, being at the rate of about 1 dol. 70 c. per barrel.

I have examined thus far into these claims for the purpose of showing their character. Even were they reasonable in amount I have already said that the evidence is undoubted that not one of these 14 vessels even attempted to exercise fishery rights from her arrival in Fortune Bay until she left. Not one of them was prepared to fish, not one of them was interfered with, and their losses are to be attributed to the mild winter and scarcity of herrings, and were not caused by the conduct of the people of Newfoundland.

All which is respectfully submitted.

COLONIAL OFFICE to FOREIGN OFFICE.

(Extract.) Downing Street, May 21, 1881.

I AM directed by the Earl of Kimberley to transmit to you herewith, to be laid before Earl Granville, a copy of a letter* received from Sir William Whiteway, the Premier of Newfoundland, who is now in London, transmitting a memorandum drawn up by Judge Bennett, of the Northern District Court in the Island, relating to the occurrences at Fortune Bay, in January 1878, and to the claims of United States fishermen in connexion therewith.

If an inquiry with a view to the assessment of compensation to American fishermen were to be proceeded with, this memorandum would afford valuable information, and would, no doubt, be of great assistance to Sir E. Thornton in dealing with the question; but if Lord Granville should be of opinion that it is desirable to agree to the proposed payment at once of the sum which Mr. Blaine is willing to accept in satisfaction of all claims, Lord Kimberley would be prepared to assent to this course. Apart from the great advantage of terminating at once an irritating controversy, it appears to his Lordship that even if the United States Government should, after considering the statement now submitted, consent to a further reduction of their original demand, the cost of the inquiry, added to the compensation, would probably amount to at least as much as the sum which the United States Government is now prepared to accept.

No. 3.

The RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF KIMBERLEY to SIR F. B. T. CARTER, K.C.M.G., Administering the Government of Newfoundland.

SIR, Downing Street, October 11, 1881.

I INFORMED Sir J. Glover by my telegram of the 9th of May last† that the United States were willing to accept the sum of 15,000*l.*, to be paid at once, in full satisfaction of the claims known as the Fortune Bay and Aspee Bay claims, and all other claims up to the 4th of March last, arising out of interruptions from which American fishermen have suffered whilst in the exercise of the rights of fishery allowed to them under the Treaty of Washington; and I added that this arrangement appeared to Her Majesty's Government to be satisfactory.

In my Despatch of the 7th of June,‡ I enclosed copy of a letter which I had caused to be addressed to Sir William Whiteway, explaining the reasons which in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government rendered it advisable that the question should be settled by the payment to the United States Government of the fixed sum mentioned, and I stated that the correspondence upon the subject when laid before Parliament would be communicated to you in due course.

I have now the honour to forward to you the printed correspondence lately presented by command to both Houses of Parliament, from which you will perceive that after prolonged communications with the United States Government, Her Majesty's Government came to the conclusion that the validity of the claim put forward on behalf of the United States fishermen to some compensation must be admitted. With a view to fixing the amount of the indemnity, it was originally proposed that an inquiry should be held by a representative of Her Majesty's Government and a representative of the United States, when it would have been necessary that evidence should be taken, and that the respective sides of the question should be argued by Counsel. Having regard, however, to the length of time already occupied by the negotiations, and to the further delay which such an inquiry would have involved, and also to the considerable expense which would thus have been entailed, Her Majesty's Government came to the conclusion that a more satisfactory, and possibly in the end a less costly settlement would be obtained if the United States Government would consent to accept a fixed sum in satisfaction of all claims. This view met with the concurrence of the United States Government, and after some further discussion Her Majesty's Government, acting upon the information supplied by the Government of Newfoundland, and upon the statements made by the aggrieved fishermen, decided that a sum of 15,000*l.* might with propriety be offered, on receiving the assurance of the United States Government that it would be accepted in full of all claims arising out of any interruption of American fishermen on the coast of Newfoundland and its dependencies up to the 4th of March last, and without prejudice to any question of the rights of either Government under the Treaty of Washington.

The sum of 15,000*l.* was accordingly offered to the United States Government and accepted by them, it being eventually agreed that it should include a claim by American fishermen to compensation for being deterred from fishing for bait in Aspee Bay, Cape Breton. The occurrence at Aspee Bay, where certain masters of American schooners alleged that they were prevented by the inhabitants from taking squid with their seines and thereby suffered loss, was of a comparatively unimportant character, and Sir E. Thornton reported that 150*l.* should be sufficient to cover it. I have accordingly requested the Governor-General of Canada to move his Government to make the necessary provision for the repayment to Her Majesty's Exchequer of the amount thus paid on account of the Dominion.

The remainder of the sum of 15,000*l.* (a bill for which was drawn by Sir E. Thornton upon Her Majesty's Paymaster-General to Mr. Blaine's order) was paid in respect of the occurrences at Fortune Bay and other places on the coast of Newfoundland, the particulars of which are already in your possession, and will be found recorded in the printed correspondence now forwarded.

Her Majesty's Government consented to provide for the immediate payment of the sum awarded out of Imperial funds, in order that this satisfactory settlement, whereby the possible growth of new claims was prevented and the demands upon the Colonial Treasury were reduced to a precise sum of moderate amount, might not be endangered by a protraction of the negotiations. The payment is, however, obviously one which can only be a temporary charge upon the Imperial revenue, as it relates to a matter in which those who contribute to that revenue are not directly concerned, and an intimation was conveyed to Sir W. Whiteway, in the letter referred to above, that a communication would be made to the Governor of Newfoundland in due course with regard to its repayment by the Colony.

I feel confident that your Government will acknowledge that Her Majesty's Government have made the most favourable settlement of this question in the interests of the Colony of which the circumstances of the case admitted, and that they will recognise the justice of the request which I now make for the repayment of the sum advanced, which became payable in consequence of the acts of inhabitants of Newfoundland. I have, therefore, to request that you will move your Government to submit to the Legisture a vote for the repayment of 14,850*l.* to the Imperial Exchequer; and I may remind you that by the prompt payment to the Newfoundland Government of its proportion of the award of the Halifax Fishery Commission the Colony was placed in possession of a fund to which the amount now repayable to Her Majesty's Government may appropriately be charged.

I have, &c.

The Officer Administering the Government. (Signed) KIMBERLEY.

GOVERNOR SIR H. F. B. MAXSE, K.C.M.G. (NEWFOUNDLAND), to the RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF KIMBERLEY. (Received December 15, 1881.)

MY LORD, Government House, November 26, 1881.

I HAVE the honour to report that your Lordship's Despatch of the 11th October,* and the Parliamentary papers which accompanied it, were laid before Council on two several occasions with a sufficiently long interval between the sittings to enable Council to become acquainted with the contents of the papers in question, these having been transmitted in rotation to each member for this purpose.

2. I have now the honour to forward to your Lordship a copy of a Minute of Council on the subject.

3. There is no question but that this payment to the United States is a very burning question here, the Newfoundland view being that they were entirely in the right throughout.

---

* No. 3.

4. The Council naturally share this view. They do not in the remotest degree impugn the conduct or equity of the Imperial authorities, who they are satisfied acted according to their view of the question for the best of the Colony, but they are much annoyed that their case, as exhibited in the papers transmitted from here, was not also printed with the other Parliamentary papers.

5. The enclosed Minute pretty clearly exhibits what the feelings of Council are in this matter, and on the approaching "last session" of the House of Assembly it is about what might have been expected.

6. I pointed out the fact that Sir Edward Thornton had positively declared that had Her Majesty's Government not settled the matter in the way they did the claims would have been much higher, and reminded Council also of the sum of money received by the Halifax award. I must await your Lordship's instructions before proceeding further.

I have, &c.

Enclosure in No. 4.

Extract from Minutes of Council of 22nd November 1881.

The Council having had under consideration the Despatch of the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for the Colonies dated the 11th day of October 1881, with the accompanying printed correspondence presented to both Houses of Parliament, observe the absence of correspondence which took place between Lord Kimberley and the Government of this Colony relative to the proposed submission of the questions at issue to adjudication, when an opportunity would be afforded for a thorough investigation of the claims of the United States.

The Council also notice that whilst Lord Kimberley points in his Despatch to the decision at which Her Majesty's Government had arrived, being based upon information received from this Island, the papers forwarded from this Colony purporting to elucidate the nature of the American claims, notably one prepared by Judge Bennett, are not amongst those which appear to have been laid before Parliament. The Council respectfully refer his Lordship to the papers emanating from this Government as evidencing a strong protest against the legality and equity of the claims of the United States. Confident of the just character of their defence, and conscious of the fictitious basis upon which many of the American claims are founded, as distinct from the principal ground whether the Americans have any claims either legal or equitable under the terms of the treaty, the Council cannot but regret that a sum of money has been paid which appears a general admission of the justness of their claims.

The Council also feel that this payment having been made "without prejudice to any "question of the rights of either Government under the treaty of Washington" leaves the substantive matters in dispute in a most unsatisfactory state, for example, notwithstanding that it was most stoutly contended by the American counsel that the Americans had no right of strand fishing, their claim can only be sustained upon the assumption that they have such right.

Had there been, as proposed by Her Majesty's Government, a full inquiry and investigation, and an amount found to be equitably due to the United States Government, this Council are satisfied that a decision under such circumstances would have been cheerfully acquiesced in.

The Council, moreover, cannot appreciate the distinction drawn between the Aspee Bay case in Canada and others of a similar nature occurring in Newfoundland. In the former the damages sworn to by American affidavit appear to be $7,000. Sir Edward Thornton reduces this to 150*l*. If proportionate reduction were made in the claims against Newfoundland they would amount to about $10,000.

The original proposition for arbitration in which this Government acquiesced having been exchanged for another mode of settlement without reference to the local executive, the Council trust that Lord Kimberley will see how important it becomes that before presenting the documents in this matter to the Legislature the Government should be furnished with the reasons which induced Her Majesty's Government to adopt the course they have taken.

COLONIAL OFFICE to FOREIGN OFFICE.

(Extract..) Downing Street, January 3, 1882.

With reference to your letter of the 28th of September last,* and to previous correspondence respecting the claims of American fishermen arising out of occurrences at Fortune Bay and elsewhere, I am directed by the Earl of Kimberley to transmit to you, to be laid before Earl Granville, a copy of a Despatch† which was addressed to the Governor of Newfoundland on the 11th October last, requesting that repayment might be made by the Newfoundland Government of the sum of 14,850*l.*, advanced by Her Majesty's Government in satisfaction of the claims of the United States Government in respect of the occurrences which took place in Newfoundland.

I am also to enclose a copy of the reply‡ which has been received from the Governor, transmitting a copy of a minute of his Executive Council upon the subject.

The Newfoundland Government draw attention to the omission from the printed papers laid before Parliament relating to this subject, of documents received from Newfoundland purporting to elucidate the nature of the American claims, especially a paper prepared by Judge Bennett, which was communicated to the Foreign Office in the letter from this Department of the 21st of May last,§ and they request that, before presenting to the Colonial Legislature the documents relating to this matter, they may be informed of the reasons which induced Her Majesty's Government to adopt the course they took in regard to the settlement of the American claims.

Lord Kimberley proposes, in reply to the Governor's Despatch, to instruct him to refer the Council to the letter which was addressed to Sir W. Whiteway from this Department, dated the 26th of May last,‖ in which Sir W. Whiteway was informed as follows: — "Lord Granville has expressed a strong opinion, in which Lord "Kimberley concurs, that it is desirable to adopt the alternative course which had "been proposed, and to settle this question at once by the payment of the sum of "15,000*l.*, which Mr. Blaine is willing to accept, in satisfaction of all claims up to "the 4th of March. Apart from the great advantage of terminating at once an "irritating controversy, it appears to Her Majesty's Government that, even if the "United States Government should, after an inquiry in which evidence might have "been adduced in support of the statement of Judge Bennett, have consented to a "reduction of their original demand, the cost of the inquiry, added to the compensation, "would probably have amounted to at least as much as the United States Government "is now prepared to accept.

"Instructions will accordingly be sent to Sir E. Thornton to inform Mr. Blaine that "Her Majesty's Government are prepared to settle the United States' claims in the "manner above indicated, on the clear understanding that the payment is made without "prejudice to any question of the rights of either Government under the Treaty of "Washington." Lord Kimberley proposes to point out to the Colonial Government that, an arrangement having been arrived at in the manner explained in the letter above quoted, a document of the nature of Judge Bennett's statement, on which no action was taken in the negotiations with the United States Government, would clearly not have been within the scope of the papers presented to Parliament.

With regard to the remarks of the Council respecting the Aspee Bay claims, Lord Kimberley proposes to reply to the effect that as the claim in this case lay against the Canadian Government, it was obviously necessary that an assessment should be made in this particular case, in order that the amount might be claimed from Canada. Sir Edward Thornton, who was consulted on the matter, estimated the amount at 150*l.*, and Her Majesty's Government acted on his opinion.

Lord Kimberley desires me to request that you will move Earl Granville to inform him whether he approves of the proposed reply to the Governor, or whether he has any suggestions or observations to make upon the subject of the minute of the Executive Council of Newfoundland.

SIR, Foreign Office, March 3, 1882.

I AM directed by Earl Granville to state to you, for the information of the Earl of Kimberley, that he has had under his consideration your letter of the 3rd of January,* with its enclosures, relative to the repayment by the Government of Newfoundland of the sum advanced by Her Majesty's Government in order to satisfy the claims of the Government of the United States on account of the occurrences at Fortune Bay.

In reply I am to request that you will state to Lord Kimberley that Lord Granville concurs in the answer which it is proposed to return to the Despatch from Sir H. Maxse of the 26th of November last† upon this question.

I am, &c.

No. 7.

The RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF KIMBERLEY to SIR F. B. T. CARTER, K.C.M.G., Administering the Government of Newfoundland.

(Extract.) Downing Street, March 15, 1882.

HER Majesty's Government have had under consideration the extract from the Minutes of Council of the 22nd November 1881, which accompanied Sir F. Maxse's Despatch of the 26th of that month,‡ in reply to mine of the 11th of October,§ respecting the settlement of the claims known as the Fortune Bay and Aspee Bay claims.

The Government of Newfoundland observe that the printed papers laid before Parliament relating to this subject do not contain certain documents received from the Colony which might elucidate the nature of the United States' claims, especially a paper prepared by Judge Bennett, and they request that before the documents relating to this matter are presented to the Colonial Legislature they may be informed of the reasons which induced Her Majesty's Government to adopt the course they took in regard to the settlement of the United States' claims.

I request that you will refer your Ministers to the letter which was addressed to Sir W. Whiteway from this Department on the 26th of May last,‖ in which he was informed as follows :—

Lord Granville has, expressed a strong opinion, in which Lord Kimberley concurs, that it is desirable to adopt the alternative course which had been proposed, and to settle this question at once by the payment of the sum of 15,000*l.*, which Mr. Blaine is willing to accept in satisfaction of all claims up to the 4th of March. Apart from the great advantage of terminating at once an irritating controversy, it appears to Her Majesty's Government that even if the United States Government should, after an inquiry in which evidence might have been adduced in support of the statement of Judge Bennett, have consented to a reduction of their original demand, the cost of the inquiry, added to the compensation, would probably have amounted to at least as much as the United States Government is now prepared to accept.

"Instructions will accordingly be sent to Sir E. Thornton to inform Mr. Blaine that Her Majesty's Government are prepared to settle the United States' claims in the manner above indicated, on the clear understanding that the payment is made without prejudice to any question of the rights of either Government under the Treaty of Washington."

The Government of Newfoundland will doubtless perceive that an arrangement having been arrived at in the manner explained in the letters above quoted, a document of the nature of Judge Bennett's statement, on which no action was taken in the negotiations with the United States Government, would clearly not have been within the scope of the papers presented to Parliament.

With regard to the Aspee Bay claims, as the amount involved in that case was known to be very small, it was thought desirable that the Dominion Government should be at once invited to make provision for its repayment, and it was necessary to ascertain what sum Canada might reasonably be asked to repay. Sir Edward Thornton was accordingly consulted, and he estimated the amount at 150*l.*

As the Newfoundland Legislature is now in session, I request that you will take an early opportunity of drawing the attention of your Government to the desirability of an early settlement of the amount due by the Colony to Her Majesty's Government.

GOVERNOR-GENERAL THE MARQUIS OF LORNE, K.T., G.C.M.G. (CANADA), to the RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF KIMBERLEY. (Received March 28, 1882.)

MY LORD, Government House, Ottawa, March 11, 1882.

IN reply to your Lordship's Despatch, of the 30th June 1881,* acquainting me, for the information of my Government, that the sum of 150*l.* had been applied, out of the 15,000*l.* awarded on account of the Fortune Bay claims, to compensate the owners of certain American fishing vessels for losses alleged to have been sustained by them at Aspee Bay, Nova Scotia, and requesting repayment of the amount from the Government of Canada, I have the honour to forward herewith a copy of an approved report of a Committee of the Privy Council of the Dominion, to which is appended a copy of a report of the Acting Minister of Marine and Fisheries, which states that, in his opinion, Parliament cannot properly be asked to vote any sum of money for the purpose specified.

Enclosure 1 in No. 8.

COPY of a REPORT of a COMMITTEE of the HONOURABLE the PRIVY COUNCIL for CANADA, approved by his Excellency the GOVERNOR-GENERAL on the 1st day of March 1882.

THE Committee of Council have had under consideration the Despatch dated 30th June 1881, from Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies, in which it is represented that in an agreement made between the British and American Governments to settle certain claims made against Great Britain for interference by the inhabitants of Newfoundland with United States fishermen at Fortune Bay, it was considered advisable to include (amongst the definite claims) losses alleged to have been sustained by American fishing vessels at Aspee Bay, Nova Scotia, and that part of the compensation, amounting to the sum of 150*l.*, was applied to that purpose, which amount the Canadian Government is requested to refund.

The Acting Minister of Marine and Fisheries, to whom the Despatch has been referred, states that he is of opinion, considering all the circumstances described in his report, dated 28th February 1882, hereto annexed, Parliament cannot properly be asked to vote any sum of money for the purpose specified in Lord Kimberley's Despatch.

The Committee concur in the report of the Acting Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and submit the same for your Excellency's approval, and they recommend that a copy of this Minute, when approved, and of the report hereto annexed, be forwarded to Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies.

Enclosure 2 in No. 8.

Marine and Fisheries, Canada,
Ottawa, February 28, 1882.

REFERRING to a Despatch of the Earl of Kimberley, dated 30th June 1881, representing that in an agreement made between the British and American Governments to settle certain claims made against Great Britain for interference by the inhabitants of Newfoundland with United States fishermen at Fortune Bay, it was considered advisable to include (amongst the definite claims) losses alleged to have been sustained by American fishing vessels at Aspee Bay, Nova Scotia, and that part of the compensation, amounting to the sum of 150*l.*, was applied to that purpose, which amount the Canadian Government is requested to refund, the undersigned has the honour to report as follows:—

* See Enclosure in No. 148 of Foreign Office Paper [C.—3059] of 1881.

1. The Government of Canada having been invited to assist in negotiating the Fishery Articles of the Treaty of Washington, which were afterwards ratified by the Dominion Parliament and the Provincial Legislature of Prince Edward Island, since included in the Dominion, it is presumable that in carrying out these articles all differences affecting matters of detail would necessarily be referred before settlement to the Canadian authorities, who are sincerely desirous to maintain their reciprocal obligations, and to protect, if necessary, United States citizens in the full enjoyment of the rights and privileges accorded to them by that treaty. They would be also ready and willing to make just compensation for any injury or loss to American fishermen which, upon inquiry, they should be found to have sustained through interference with their legitimate fishing operations by inhabitants of Canada. It is, however, considered essential that any such instances, where claims to indemnity arise, should be carefully investigated, as otherwise precedents might occur which would involve the Government, sooner or later, in frequent disputes of a trivial character.

2. The present correspondence between the British and American Governments, and the accompanying documents, show that complaints were made by the American Government of interference with American fishermen when exercising, or about to exercise, the rights claimed to them by the treaty.

These complaints are of two classes:—

(a.) Where it is alleged in the complaint that violence was used, and the nets and seines of American fishermen were destroyed, and they themselves driven from the fishing-ground, viz., at Fortune Bay and Job's Cove, in Newfoundland, and damages were alleged to the amount of $105,000.

(b.) Where the complaint did not charge violence, but simply that resident fishermen (having no legal or judicial authority) forbid them to fish in certain localities and by certain means, as in the case of the schooner "Mist," Captain Cozzens, master, who complains of threats at Broad Cove, Newfoundland, and claims $800 damages; also of the schooner "Cadet," James L. Anderson, master, who makes a similar complaint against certain fishermen at Aspee Bay, in Cape Breton, within the Dominion of Canada.

In the voluminous correspondence which passed between the British and American Governments, and in the action of the United States House of Representatives, the latter class of complaints (which includes the occurrence at Aspee Bay) is evidently dropped, and forms no part of the grounds upon which a formal claim for damages exceeding $100,000 is urged.

Under date 7th March 1881, in referring to one of these cases, that of the "Mist," Mr. Evarts specifically states that he "does not entertain the claim, and had so informed "the claimant."

3. The first mention made in the correspondence connected with these negotiations of any claim arising out of alleged interference at Aspee Bay, in Nova Scotia, occurs in a reported conversation between Sir Edward Thornton and Mr. Blaine on the 5th May 1881, after the lump sum had been settled, when Sir Edward Thornton voluntarily "concluded that although Aspee Bay was not on the coast of Newfoundland, these "claims were among those for which a demand had been made by Mr. Evarts of the "sum of $105,305.02."

The Aspee Bay depositions having been made in September 1879, about a month after the claims forming the demand for $105,305.02 were made up by Mr. Evarts and presented to Mr. Welsh, it seems impossible that any sum could have been reckoned on account of the occurrence at that place.

The original claims for the Fortune Bay affair (class a.), in 1878, amounted to $103,162$\frac{73}{100}$. There were 22 specific claims, ranging from $2,496$\frac{09}{100}$ to $8,506$\frac{05}{100}$ each, the total of which amounted to that sum of $103,162$\frac{73}{100}$. Other two claims for cases at Job's Cove, in 1879, were afterwards admitted without specifying their amount, but the ultimate demand on the British Government was for $120,000, being the original demand with interest, and these two special claims added. The telegram of Mr. Evarts to Mr. Lowell, dated 3rd March 1881, makes this conclusive as follows:—"* * * All "the previous communications either way related to Fortune Bay claims. Claims of "number hundred nine (Job's Cove claims) were introduced specifically by Secretary as

" additional to Fortune Bay, and I accepted the sum offered for both. I cannot consent " to any modification of the completed settlement of specific claims. I have at no time " treated except of definite pecuniary interests of claimants in my charge. The agreed " sum measured these claims, and goes to these claimants. I have been willing to give " every assurance to cover all claims brought to the knowledge of either Government, " and authorise you to inform Secretary that as a matter of fact no others were enter- " tained by this Government. * * * *"

4. On the 27th October 1880, long after the occurrence at Aspee Bay, Earl Granville, in a Despatch to Mr. Lowell, says:—" Her Majesty's Government have no hesitation in " admitting that the conduct of the Newfoundland fishermen in violently interfering " with United States fishermen and destroying or damaging some of their nets is " indefensible and much to be regretted," and further informs him that, " Her Majesty's " Government are quite willing that they (the American fishermen) should be indemni- " fied for any injuries and losses which, upon a joint inquiry, may be found to be " sustained by them, and in respect of which they are reasonably entitled to compensa- " tion."

For the purpose of a full inquiry it is presumed that the Newfoundland Government was duly notified of the claims preferred; and assurances were given by Her Majesty's Government that every opportunity would be afforded for a defence, particularly in view of the probable necessity of requiring the Colonial Government to refund whatever damages might be awarded.

The undersigned cannot suppose that Her Majesty's Government would have been less considerate to the Dominion of Canada had the Aspee Bay occurrence been entertained or considered by either of the negotiating parties as forming a portion of the injuries on account of which compensation was claimed.

5. It is shown by the correspondence that an offer of a lump sum of 15,000*l., or 75,000$*, was made by the British Government as a settlement in full. Exception was taken by the United States Government to the words "in full" because of the possibility, as remarked by Mr. Evarts to Sir Edward Thornton, on the 28th February 1880, that " something might be occurring on the coasts of Newfoundland, of which we must " necessarily be ignorant."

The proposition was then made to refer the claims to Sir Edward Thornton and Mr. Blaine for assessment of damages, and on the 2nd April 1881, Earl Granville, in his Despatch to Sir Edward Thornton, informs him that the Colonial authorities prefer this mode of settlement to the payment of a lump sum, in view of the " desirability of " obtaining the co-operation and concurrence of the Government of Newfoundland," and authorises him to settle either by a lump sum or by assessment of individual claims, and adds " under present circumstances they would prefer an arrangement by assess- " ment."

The original mode of settlement preferred by Her Majesty's Government being by a lump sum, it is presumable that this change was made at the instance of the Government of Newfoundland.

On the 3rd May 1881 concurrent instructions were given by the Earl of Kimberley to communicate with the Government of Newfoundland to send a competent person to assist Sir Edward Thornton in the settlement, and by Lord Granville to Sir Edward Thornton to arrange that time be afforded to Her Majesty's Government to communicate with the authorities of Newfoundland.

Her Majesty's Government having more than two months previously, on the 24th of February 1881, offered 15,000*l.* in settlement of the American fishery claims, which sum was eventually accepted, it would, after the careful consideration shown towards the Newfoundland authorities, be unjust to Her Majesty's Government to suppose that they held or admitted that the Dominion of Canada had any pecuniary interest in the settlement either by lump sum or assessment.

6. On the 4th of April 1881, Mr. Blaine offers to accept 16,000*l.*, and give a receipt in full. On the 25th, he offers to take 15,500*l.*, as he is convinced there are no other claims than those presented. On the 27th, Her Majesty's Government refused to exceed 15,000*l.*, the original offer of February 1881. On the 5th May, Mr. Blaine informed Sir Edward Thornton that he had caused searching inquiries to be made as to whether there existed any other claims besides those which had been already brought before the two Governments, and that he had satisfied himself " that there were none; " and as his Government, therefore, did not wish to place any obstacles in the way of " the settlement of the claims in question, it would be prepared to accept the sum of " 15,000*l.* originally offered by Her Majesty's Government in full of the Fortune Bay

" claims, and of all claims arising out of wrongs done to United States fishermen on the " coasts of Newfoundland and its dependencies up to the 4th March last."

This closes the negotiations, and the final settlement is effected.

7. The earliest intimation of the existence of a claim of this nature made to the Dominion Government was by the Despatch of the Earl of Kimberley to his Excellency the Governor General on the 2nd June 1881, stating that it had been settled, in conjunction with the Fortune Bay claims. A later Despatch of the 30th of the same month refers to the case as of a comparatively unimportant character, which was settled without consulting the Government of Canada, because such a reference would have delayed the general settlement agreed upon. If, however, the matter had been considered in the nature of a serious claim when referred to in Sir Edward Thornton's Despatch to Earl Granville, dated 7th June 1880*, there was ample time to communicate the fact to Canada. Also between the date 5th May 1881†, when Sir Edward Thornton voluntarily suggested to Mr. Blaine the inclusion of such a claim in the pending settlement, there was sufficient time for the Government of Canada to be consulted. It was two days later that the Newfoundland Government was notified to send a representative to Washington. The whole matter was closed on the 30th May 1881.

Had the Canadian Government at any time since the occurrence been informed of this complaint, the particulars would have been investigated, and, if the complaint was well founded, prompt reparation would have been offered.

8. Apart from these substantial reasons, there is another serious objection to the recognition of this payment as a " claim against the Dominion Government," to which it is desirable in this connexion to advert. The documents referred to this Department, with the Despatch of the Earl of Kimberley, embrace copies of reports by the Committee of Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives, on which the proposed Bill of 1880, to reimpose customs duties on fish imported into the United States from Newfoundland and Canada, was based.

These reports and the preamble to the Bill set forth :—

" Whereas the fishermen of the United States have been driven by violence from the fishing grounds in which such freedom of fishery has been granted by said treaty, and laws in limitation of their rights have been passed by the Local Legislatures of said Dominions, and Her Britannic Majesty's Government have refused all redress therefor, and have supported the claim of the said Dominions to enforce said legislation," &c.

The Committee on Foreign Affairs also reported a joint resolution in terms following :—

" Whereas American fishermen are deprived of the privileges of fishery conceded to the United States by the treaty with Great Britain, dated the 8th May 1871, by hostile legislation, and the unlawful violence of the inhabitants of the British provinces; and whereas said hostile legislation is sustained and said unlawful violence is not rebuked or restrained by the Government of Great Britain," &c., &c., &c.

The state of affairs to which these documents relate existed solely in Newfoundland, and although it was proposed by the Bill to collect duties also on fish imported from Canada to form a fund for the satisfaction of claims against that Colony, no such interference and no such legislation had taken place in the Dominion of Canada.

In 1879, agents were commissioned by the American Government to inquire into " the conduct of the inshore fisheries by American fishermen, and the treatment which " they had received at the hands of the local authorities and population."

These Commissioners are reported in the Despatch of Sir Edward Thornton to Earl Granville, dated 7th June 1880,* to have found but this single occurrence at Aspee Bay of which to complain. The acceptance of any responsibility whatever for the dissatisfaction thus forcibly expressed, coupled as it is with phrases and proposals affecting Canada, which the adoption of this payment, however small the sum, might seem to admit, ought therefore to be carefully avoided.

The present opportunity should also be taken to disclaim the unfriendly acts and illiberal spirit imputed to Canada by these unqualified statements. It is sufficient corroboration of this disclaimer to observe that, while the only appreciable interruptions of the pursuits of American fishermen were confined to " the waters of Newfoundland and its " dependencies," on the occasions described in these negotiations, United States citizens have, with this single exception, at Aspee Bay, which both Mr. Evarts and Mr. Blaine appear to have treated as an incident of no practical moment, during nearly ten years past, exercised their treaty rights in the inshores of Canada, without any restriction and free from molestation.

9. The undersigned is of opinion that, considering all the circumstances above described, Parliament cannot properly be asked to vote any sum of money for the purpose specified in Lord Kimberley's Despatch.

The whole respectfully submitted.

Acting Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

No. 9.

The Right Hon. the EARL OF KIMBERLEY to Governor-General the MARQUIS OF LORNE, K.T., G.C.M.G. (Canada).

My Lord, Downing Street, April 11, 1882.

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Lordship's Despatch of the 11th ultimo,* enclosing a copy of a report of a Committee of your Privy Council, with a memorandum by the Acting Minister of Marine and Fisheries, stating that in his opinion the Parliament of the Dominion cannot properly be asked to vote a sum of money in repayment of the amount of 150*l.* advanced by the Imperial Government in settlement of what are known as the Aspee Bay claims.

2. Her Majesty's Government have received with regret this expression of opinion on the part of the Government of Canada. The repayment of the amount at which the Aspee Bay claims were assessed by Her Majesty's Minister at Washington was requested in my Despatch of the 30th June last,† not on the ground that the responsibility of Canada for the alleged occurrences at Aspee Bay had been established or admitted by Her Majesty's Government, but on the ground that an inquiry could not be refused if pressed for, and that it did not appear worth while, when the opportunity presented itself of settling these claims at once for a trifling sum in connexion with the settlement of the Fortune Bay claims, to incur the cost and trouble of a formal investigation. There can be no difficulty in placing on record that in reimbursing Her Majesty's Government the sum in question Canada in no way admits the validity of these claims or its responsibility for the transaction, and Her Majesty's Government will be much disappointed if their action in this matter is now repudiated by the Dominion Government.

3. With regard to the contention in Mr. McLean's memorandum that Canada should have been consulted before any decision was arrived at, you will assure your Ministers that the action of Her Majesty's Government did not proceed from the slightest desire to pass them over; they fully recognise that it would on every ground have been proper and desirable to obtain the previous concurrence of the Dominion Government had the circumstances permitted; but it was felt that such a consultation would involve considerable delay and correspondence which might have prejudiced the whole negotiation, and in so very small a matter as the Aspee Bay claims Her Majesty's Government had confidence that the Government of the Dominion would not decline to acquiesce in a settlement made in their interests by the diplomatic representative of Her Majesty, acting as he believed for the best at the moment.

I have, &c.

The Marquis of Lorne. (Signed) KIMBERLEY.

Sir F. B. T. CARTER, K.C.M.G., Administering the Government of Newfoundland, to the Right Hon. the EARL OF DERBY. (Received June 16, 1882.)

Government House, Newfoundland, June 2, 1882.

My Lord,

With reference to your Lordship's Despatch of the 29th April last,‡ respecting the repayment by this Colony of the amount paid by Her Majesty's Government to the Government of the United States as compensation for the losses alleged to have been sustained by American fishermen in consequence of the occurrences at Fortune Bay, I have the honour to state that no movement was made before the Legislature in the Session just closed by the Executive Government on this subject, as they believed that from the intense adverse feeling in both branches, and the country generally, they would not have succeeded in carrying the vote if proposed, and that a failure in this respect would operate prejudicially in accomplishing a final settlement, as I advised your Lordship by telegram of the 25th May last.*

2. I have heard from Sir William Whiteway that it is his intention to visit England some time next month, when he will have an opportunity of explaining at large to your Lordship the position of this question in the Colony.

3. As an illustration of the strong feeling that prevails on the subject I am enclosing for your Lordship's information the reported speech of the Hon. Mr. Harvey in the Legislative Council when the matter in some way was adverted to in debate. And the opinions he expressed may, I think, be regarded as those which are entertained generally in the Colony.

I have, &c.

The Right Hon. the Earl of Kimberley, &c. &c. &c. (Signed) F. B. T. CARTER, Administrator.

Enclosure in No. 14.

April 18, 1882.

Hon. A. Harvey.—It may not be proper at the present time to ask such a question, but it is highly proper and pertinent for us to express our opinions upon that matter; and under no circumstances should the Colony bear any portion of the 15,000*l.* paid by the British to the American Government for the alleged losses arising from the trumped up Fortune Bay case. That money was paid without consultation with this Colony, and in direct opposition to the known wishes of the Colony, and although he (Mr. H.) was not in the secrets of the cabinet, he should venture to assert that nothing has transpired up to the time that payment was made that would encourage or warrant the British Government in demanding from Newfoundland a reimbursement for an expenditure made of their own volition, and without authority or sanction from this Colony. They have no case whatever upon any principle of reason or justice in making such a requisition, and if a principle of that kind were to be upheld, involving as it would, a complete negation of our legislative independence, then responsible government is so only in name, and would be little better than a delusion and a snare. It might very well suit the views of the British Government to yield to the demands of the Americans so as to smoothen the path of their diplomatic relations at Washington, but with any such motive or actions we have no concern, and if it were done to make soft the couch of Lord Granville let the money come out of the pocket of the British Government, and let not a poor humble struggling colony be called on for an outlay to conserve the interests of Imperial diplomatic expediency. We should firmly decline to respond to any such demand, because besides denying any liability as a matter of right and justice, by yielding to it we should be recognizing a dangerous precedent against ourselves. By our firm but respectful refusal we should show the British Government that in future, when assuming to deal with the financial affairs of Newfoundland, they should first consult the Colony and obtain its approval before undertaking to pay out money on the Colony's account. If a local government, in the absence of the authority of an Act of our own Legislature, should dare to pay any part of that 15,000*l.* they would deserve the reprobation of the whole Colony, which they would undoubtedly receive. Our local Executive has already taken becoming stand in denying the right of the British Government to oblige us to pay for imaginary injuries to the American fishermen, and they should determinedly abide by that decision. Even were we fairly liable for any portion of the alleged damages, it was ultra vires on the part of a British Minister to deal with the matter in the highhanded way that characterised the transaction, completely ignoring the Colony, its wishes and feelings. He hoped no authority will ever be conceded by our Legislature to liquidate any part of the claim, and even should there be in power a government sufficiently strong numerically to carry any such measure, it is well they should be warned in time that it is at their peril they would attempt it. They have but to look at the case of Governor Musgrave in Jamaica, and the trouble that arose there from his act in incurring a liability on behalf of his Imperial masters. That liability was undertaken by him at the instance of the British Government, and then attempted to be saddled upon the Colony, but the Colony refused to foot the Bill. The case tested in the courts was decided against Governor Musgrave, though he acted on behalf of the British Government and in a Crown Colony ; and here where we have responsible rule, should any such payment as that they were now discussing be made upon Executive responsibility, and an indemnity therefor should be asked of our Legislature, he should not feel surprised, indeed he should hope, that the Legislature would manfully refuse to give it. In such case let those who acquiesced in the demand, and undertook to deal with the Colony's funds by refunding the British Government the amount demanded, put their hand in their own pockets and make up the sum between them. As a matter of payment by the Colony it should not for a single moment be entertained.

Hon. Colonial Secretary thought this discussion hardly in place just now, as the consideration of the matter in question is not before the house, and the hon. gentleman will understand that as it continues to form the subject of correspondence between the Imperial and local Governments, he (C. S.) was debarred from dealing with it in such a manner as he might otherwise wish to do.

MY LORD, Citadel, Quebec, July 29, 1882.

WITH reference to your Lordship's Despatch of the 30th June 1881,* and to my reply, of the 11th March last,† I have the honour to forward herewith a copy of an approved report of a Committee of the Privy Council of Canada, embodying a report by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, recommending, for the reasons stated therein, that payment of 150*l.* be made to Sir John Rose, Bart., to settle the claim preferred by Her Majesty's Government against the Government of Canada on account of the Aspee Bay affair.

Enclosure in No. 16.

CERTIFIED COPY of a REPORT of a COMMITTEE of the HONOURABLE THE PRIVY COUNCIL FOR CANADA, approved by his Excellency the Governor-General on the 22nd day of July 1882.

THE Committee of Council have had under consideration a Despatch, dated 30th June 1881, setting forth a claim on the Dominion Government for payment of 150*l.* sterling as a part of the sum paid by the Imperial Government to the Government of the United States, in settlement of certain claims for alleged interruptions of their fishery rights under the Washington treaty by inhabitants of Newfoundland, including "the affair of Aspee Bay."

The Minister of Marine and Fisheries, to whom the said Despatch was referred, reported, under date 28th February 1882, that he saw no sufficient reasons why such payment should be made; but since that time there has been placed before him communications of a confidential nature which lead him (notwithstanding the circumstances set forth and the reasons given in his report of the 28th February last) to advise the payment, and he, the Minister, therefore recommends that payment of 150*l.* sterling be made to Sir John Rose, Bart., G.C.M.G., to settle the Aspee Bay claim with the Imperial Government.

The Committee concur in the foregoing recommendation of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and submit the same for your Excellency's approval. At the same time the Committee must repeat their regret that this claim was entertained without the knowledge or consent of the Canadian Government, and they desire that it should not be understood that they admit the justice of the claim. They also desire that this Minute be communicated to Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the Colonies.

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Despatch of the 17th ultimo,* transmitting copies of the "Royal Gazette," containing the speech with which on the 15th ultimo you opened the first session of the fourteenth General Assembly of Newfoundland.

I notice that your speech contains no direct reference to the question of the repayment of the sum of 14,850*l.* advanced by Her Majesty's Government on account of the Newfoundland Government in settlement of the Fortune Bay claims; but I presume that the Despatches from the Imperial Government, which will be laid before the Council and Assembly, as mentioned at the end of your speech, will comprise those bearing on this subject.

I need hardly again remind you that Her Majesty's Government rely upon your urging your Government to lose to time in directing the serious attention of the Legislature to this matter in order that a speedy settlement may be arrived at.

Government House, Newfoundland,

My Lord, April 2, 1883.

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Lordship's Despatch of the 13th of March last,§ received on the 31st, same month, acknowledging the receipt of copies of the "Royal Gazette" containing the speech with which I opened the present session of the Legislature.

Your Lordship adverts to the absence of reference in my speech to the question of the repayment of the sum of 14,850*l.*, advanced by Her Majesty's Government on account of this Government in settlement of the Fortune Bay claims, and promises that the Despatches from the Imperial Government to be laid before the Council and Assembly, mentioned in the speech, will comprise those bearing on the subject.

* Not printed. † Not printed. ‡ No. 18. § No. 18.

When the speech was being prepared, I called the attention of my Ministry to this subject, but they, after consideration, deemed it unadvisable that reference should then be made to it, as, until after the meeting of new members consequent on the general elections, they were not in a position to assume that a more favourable view would be taken than by the members of the former House, that there had been no communication from Her Majesty's Government since my last Despatch of 2nd June 1882,* and they wished to avoid an adverse pronouncement at so early a stage, and your Lordship will perceive that, however desirous to carry out the directions of Her Majesty's Government, I had no alternative at that juncture than to acquiesce in the advice tendered by my Ministers. Copies of the Despatches have been furnished for both branches.

I had a special meeting of the Executive Council convened this forenoon, when this matter was freely discussed, and the unanimous opinion was that, in both Chambers, an adverse determination would be the result if a vote were proposed, and from all I can gather I am inclined to concur with this view. The Government have a large following on most questions, but on this I fear a negative vote would be given on both sides.

The Government in justification of their position, for the information of Her Majesty's Government, deemed it advisable to formulate a minute embodying their views on this important subject, a copy of which I have now the honour to enclose to your Lordship.

I shall make diligent inquiry respecting any action that may be taken in either branch, which I shall cable to your Lordship, if I should deem it expedient to do so.

Enclosure in No. 20.

Extract from Minutes of Council, 2nd April 1883.

The application by Her Majesty's Government for reimbursement of the sum of 14,850*l.* paid in satisfaction of the Fortune Bay fishery claim, is one to which the general feeling of the Colony is strongly adverse; and it is most improbable, from what has transpired in relation to this matter, that a grant for the amount could be obtained from the Legislature.

It is contended in the first place that the amount is largely in excess of any conceivable merits of the case, and that these, at their utmost, would not have warranted a payment beyond that which was stated in Judge Bennett's memorandum, upon a minute and careful examination by him of the testimony furnished by the accounts of the American claimants themselves. This view is further established in a published letter of Mr. Whicker, of Ottawa, Commissioner of Fisheries, who quotes a statement of receipted American claims, showing that after all these were discharged from the 14,850*l.*, there remained a surplus of $22,000 (twenty-two thousand dollars) or 4,500*l.* sterling wholly unclaimed and without any defined purpose of appropriation.

It is moreover held that Her Majesty's Government having regarded the question at issue as one which was to be solved by a payment from the Colonial funds, the assent of the Colony to any proposal was a rightful and necessary preliminary. Her Majesty's Government in initiating proceedings appeared to recognise the right of the Colony by their proposition of a reference to Commissioners before whom the case might have been heard; and this Government informed the Right Hon. the Colonial Minister of its concurrence in this course. It was deemed wiser, however, by Her Majesty's Government to dispense with the investigation at first contemplated, and to arrive at a settlement by the payment of 14,850*l.* The Council do not overlook the reasons assigned by the Right Hon. the Colonial Minister for departure from the original mode of adjustment; but they are obliged also to bear in mind that this Government was not invited to acquiesce in the alternative preferred by Her Majesty's Government and was not informed of it until the whole case had been fully concluded.

No question is raised as to the sufficiency, from an Imperial point of view, of the grounds on which the decision of Her Majesty's Government was based. But the Council respectfully submit that the circumstances of this decision being peculiar and exceptional, the Colony cannot be considered accountable for a procedure to which it had not acceded, and that any possible equities would be satisfied by a repayment from the funds of the Colony of the amount shown by Judge Bennett's statement to be the maximum to which the Americans could lay claim.

Sir, Downing Street, April 30, 1883.

With reference to the letter from this Department of the 16th ultimo,* and to previous correspondence respecting the repayment by the Legislature of Newfoundland of the sum of 14,850*l.* advanced by Her Majesty's Government in settlement of the Fortune Bay claims, I am directed by the Earl of Derby to transmit to you, to be laid before the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury / Earl Granville, a copy of a Despatch† from the Officer Administering the Government of the Colony, containing an extract from the minutes of Council on the subject.

Lord Derby is disposed to think that, looking to the strong probability that any proposal for the repayment of the whole sum would receive no support in the Colonial Legislature, it deserves consideration whether Her Majesty's Government should not assent to the modified proposal for repayment by the Colony of the sum of 17,300 dollars (approximately 3,400*l.*), which appears to be the maximum of the assessment of Judge Bennett in his statement communicated to this Department by Sir W. Whiteway on the 20th of May 1881,‡ a copy of which is herewith enclosed (to Treasury) / accompanied the letter from this Department of the following day (to Foreign Office).

Sir, Treasury Chambers, May 31, 1883.

The Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury have had under their consideration Mr. Bramston's letter of April 30th§ and its enclosures on the subject of the repayment by Newfoundland of the sum of 14,850*l.* advanced by Her Majesty's Government in settlement of the Fortune Bay claims.

Lord Derby in that letter recommends in effect that this country should accept a sum of little more than 3,400*l.* in discharge of an advance of 14,850*l.* made by it on behalf of that Colony. The latter sum was paid to the Government of the United States in settlement of a much larger claim on account of damages stated to have been inflicted by inhabitants of Newfoundland upon the property of citizens of the United States.

There can be no doubt that the Colony, and no other country, is liable for damages arising from such a cause, and my Lords cannot admit that Newfoundland has any claim on equitable grounds to be relieved of this charge. They take note, however, of Lord Derby's statement as to the reluctance of the Colony to discharge this obligation, and they will be prepared, upon receipt of an immediate and substantial payment on account, to consider favourably any application he may make for a remission of the remainder of the debt. They will leave it to Lord Derby to fix the sum (not being less than $17,300) which should be recommended to the Newfoundland Legislature to be

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of Sir F. Carter's Despatch of the 2nd of April,* enclosing an extract from the minutes of the Executive Council in reference to the repayment by Newfoundland of the sum advanced by Her Majesty's Government in satisfaction of the Fortune Bay fishery claim.

2. Your Ministers contend that the amount of 14,850*l.* paid to the United States Government on this account was largely in excess of the merits of the case, which at the utmost would not have warranted a payment beyond that stated in Judge Bennett's memorandum of the 4th of May 1881† to be the maximum to which the American fishermen could lay claim, and they urge that the equity of the case would be satisfied by a repayment from the funds of the Colony of the amount so assessed by Judge Bennett, viz., $17,300.

3. In the opinion of Her Majesty's Government the Colony of Newfoundland and not the taxpayers of this country are liable for the damages arising from the action of the Newfoundland fisherman on the occasion of the Fortune Bay disturbances, and they cannot admit that the Colony has any claim on equitable grounds to be relieved of a charge caused by such action.

4. In consideration, however, of all the circumstances connected with this case, and looking to the fact that the mode of settlement desired by the Colonial Government was not proceeded with, and considering also the little hope which your Ministers hold out that the whole amount paid by Her Majesty's Government will be voted by the Legislature, Her Majesty's Government will be prepared to consider favourably any application which may be made by the Government of Newfoundland to be relieved from the repayment of the whole sum of 14,850*l.* if your Government will undertake to pay at once into the Imperial Exchequer the amount of Judge Bennett's assessment, it being clearly understood that in case the suggested sum is not paid the claim of this country to repayment of the whole sum is not prejudiced.

5. I trust that this proposal will be appreciated by the Government and Parliament of Newfoundland as being considerate and liberal.

CHAPTER xxx.

An Act respecting the sale of Intoxicating Liquors, and the issue of licenses therefor.

[Assented to 25th May 1883.]

Preamble. WHEREAS it is desirable to regulate the traffic in the sale of intoxicating liquors and it is expedient that the law respecting the same should be uniform throughout the Dominion, and that provision should be made in regard thereto for the better preservation of peace and order: Therefore Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:—

Short title. 1. This Act may be cited as "The Liquor License Act, 1883."

Definition of terms used. 2. In this Act the words and expressions following shall, unless such interpretation be repugnant to the subject or inconsistent with the context, be construed as follows:—

License Districts.

Establishment of license districts by O. C.

4. The Governor in Council shall, as soon as conveniently may be after the commencement of this Act, establish districts for the purposes of this Act to be called "License Districts," and may, from time to time, alter and re-define the same; and the "License Districts," when so established and when altered, shall be announced by proclamation in the Canada Gazette;

Boundaries thereof.

Such districts shall, as far as possible and convenient, be identical and co-terminous with existing and future—

(1.) Counties,
(2.) or Electoral Districts,
(3.) or Cities.

License Commissioners.

Board of Commissioners; of whom composed.

5. There shall be a Board of License Commissioners, to be called "The Board," composed of three persons for each License District;

First Commissioner in the several Provinces.

(a.) The first Commissioner shall be, in the Provinces of Ontario, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Manitoba and Prince Edward Island, a County Court Judge, or a Junior Judge of a County, as may be selected by the Governor in Council; in the Province of Quebec, the Judge of a Judicial District, a Judge of Sessions of the Peace, the Prothonotary or a Registrar of the County or registration division, as the Governor in Council may appoint; in the Province of British Columbia, such one of the Judges as the Governor in Council may appoint;

Second Commissioner.

(b.) The second Commissioner shall be the Warden of the county or Mayor of the city. When there is both a Warden and a Mayor, having jurisdiction within the License District, the former shall be second Commissioner. In the cities of Montreal and Quebec, in the Province of Quebec, the Recorder, and in the Counties of the Province of Prince Edward Island, the Sheriff of the County shall be the second Commissioner; but in the Province of Nova Scotia where the license district embraces two or more municipalities, then the Warden of such of the said municipalities as the Governor in Council may appoint shall be the second Commissioner;

Proviso as to Nova Scotia.

Third Commissioner.

(c.) The third Commissioner shall be a person appointed by the Governor in Council, who shall hold office for one year, or for the portion of the year yet unexpired in which he is appointed, but he shall continue to hold office until his successor is appointed;

Commissioners in certain counties in Quebec.

2. In the Counties of Chicoutimi and Saguenay, Gaspé and Bonaventure, in the Province of Quebec, the Governor in Council may appoint two Commissioners, who, with the Warden, shall form the Board; and in any unorganised district, the Governor in Council may appoint three Commissioners;

Chairman and quorum.

3. The Judge shall be chairman of the Board, and two of the said Commissioners shall form a quorum. In the absence of the Judge, the Warden or Mayor, as the case may be, in the cities of Montreal and Quebec the Recorder, in the Province of Prince Edward Island the Sheriff, and in any unorganised district such one of the Commissioners as the Governor in Council shall designate, shall be the Chairman.

License Inspectors.

Chief Inspector and inspectors for each district.

6. A Chief Inspector of Licenses, and one or more Inspectors, shall be appointed by the Board of License Commissioners from time to time for each district, as the Board may see fit, and each License Inspector shall, before entering upon his duties, give such security as the Board may require for the due performance of his duties, and for the payment over of all sums of money received by him under the provisions of this Act; and the salary of the Inspectors shall be fixed by the Board, subject to the approval of the Governor in Council;

Security and salaries.

Bond.

2. The security required by this section shall be by bond to Her Majesty;

Secretary-Treasurer.

3. The Chief License Inspector shall be the Secretary-Treasurer of the Board, and all moneys payable to the Board shall be paid to him.

Duty imposed by Provincial Legislatures, under B.N.A. Act, s. 92, to be paid.

2. But hotel, saloon and shop licenses and such other of the licenses by this Act authorised to be issued, as to which a Provincial Legislature may impose a tax in order to the raising of a revenue, shall be subject to the payment of such duty as the Legislature of the Province, under the power conferred on it by the ninth enumerated class of subjects in section ninety-two of "The British North America Act, 1867," may impose for the purpose of raising or in order to raise a revenue for provincial, local, or municipal purposes.

Under authority of what Board license shall issue.

8. Every license shall be issued by the authority and under the direction of the Board of License Commissioners for the district in which the premises to which the license is to apply are situate, except in the case of licenses for vessels, which may be issued under the authority of the Board for any district to or from any port in which the vessel sails, or at any port in which she calls.

Regulations at meeting of Board in February, 1884, for certain purposes.

9. The Board shall hold a meeting during the month of February, 1884, and may thereat pass a resolution or resolutions for regulating the matters following :—

Qualifications and conditions for licenses.

a. For defining the conditions and qualifications requisite to obtain hotel or saloon licenses for the retailing, within the district or any part thereof, of liquors, and also shop licenses for the sale, by retail, within the district or any part thereof, of liquors in shops or places other than hotels, taverns, inns, ale-houses, beer-houses, or places of public entertainment, not contrary to, or inconsistent with the provisions of this Act ;

Number of licenses and times and localities for issuing.

b. For limiting the number of hotel, saloon and shop licenses respectively within the maximum prescribed by this Act, and for defining the respective times and localities within which and the persons to whom such limited number may be issued within the year, from the first day of May of one year till the thirtieth day of April inclusive of the next year ;

c. For declaring the number of saloon licenses that may be issued in any year ;

d. For regulating the hotels, saloons and shops to be licensed ;

e. For fixing and defining the duties, powers and privileges of the Inspectors of Licenses of their district.

Resolutions in subsequent years.

2. In subsequent years the Board may pass the resolution or resolutions herein-before prescribed at their meeting herein-after provided for, but the resolution or resolutions so adopted shall have effect only as respects the licenses of the succeeding year ;

How promulgated.

3. Any resolution or resolutions adopted by the Board shall be promulgated within ten days thereafter, in such manner as they may determine.

Yearly meetings of Board Notice.

10. The Board shall meet on some day in the month of March, of which notice shall be given as herein-after mentioned, for the purpose of taking into consideration all applications for certificates for such licenses as by this Act are authorised to be granted :

Adjournment for want of a quorum.

2. If any cause shall prevent a quorum of the Board being present on the day fixed for the meeting, or at any adjournment of a meeting on the appointed day, the said meeting or adjourned meeting shall stand adjourned from day to day until a quorum shall be present to hold such meeting ;

Notice of meeting by Chief Inspector.

3. The Chief Inspector of any district in which an annual meeting is to be held shall, one calendar month at least before the holding of such meeting, cause a notice thereof to be fixed to the outer door of the Court House or other building where the meeting of the Board is to be held, and shall also cause an advertisement of the time and place of holding such meeting to be inserted at least thrice, in at least one newspaper published in the district, or if no newspaper be published therein, then in a newspaper published nearest to the said district.

Applications for Licenses.

As to the neighbourhood.

18. Every petition having reference to the granting of a license shall have, in addition to each signature thereon, a statement of the approximate distance from the premises to which such petition refers, of the residence or property of each person signing the same. Particulars as to persons signing objections.

19. Any petition against the granting of a license shall be lodged with the Chief Inspector, not less than four clear days before the day appointed for the meeting of the Board. Time for filing.

20. The Chief Inspector shall keep a list posted in his office for three days previous to the meeting of the Board, of all certificates and petitions lodged with him as aforesaid, and every such petition or memorial shall be open for public inspection without fee. Posting list of petitions, &c.

21. The Board shall, on receiving any petition as aforesaid, erase therefrom all names in respect of which the particulars hereby required to be set forth are not appended. Examination of signatures.

22. Every application for a license, and all objections to every such application, shall be heard and determined at a meeting of the Board for the district wherein the premises in respect of which the license is sought, or to which it relates, are situate : Hearing and determining objections.

2. Every such hearing shall be open to the public, and every applicant for a license shall attend personally at such hearing, unless hindered by sickness or infirmity ; and the Board may summon and examine on oath such witnesses as they may think necessary, Proceedings at hearings.

and as nearly as may be in the manner directed by any Act now or hereafter to be in force relating to the duties of Justices in relation to summary convictions and orders:

Adjourning meetings.

3. Any license meeting may, at the discretion of the Board, be adjourned from time to time to the same or any other Court House or building within the district.

Report of Inspector on applications.

23. On every application for a license the Inspector shall report in writing to the Board, and such report shall contain,—

As to premises.

1. A description of the house, premises and furniture;

Conduct of applicant if previously licensed.

2. And if the application be by a person who held a license for the same premises during the preceding year, a statement as to the manner in which the house has been conducted during the existence of the previous license, and the character of persons frequenting the house;

As to licensed houses in the neighbourhood.

3. A statement of the number, position, and distance from the house in respect of which a license is applied for of other licensed houses in the neighbourhood;

Fitness of applicant.

4. A statement whether the applicant is a fit and proper person to have a license, and is known to be of good character and repute;

Necessity of licensed house.

5. A statement whether the house or premises sought to be licensed is or is not, in his opinion, required for public convenience;

Whether applicant owns the business.

6. A statement whether the applicant is or is not the true owner of the business of the hotel, saloon, or shop proposed to be licensed.

Report of Inspector to be for information of Board.

24. The report of the Inspector shall be for the information of the Board, who shall, nevertheless, exercise their own discretion on each application.

Accommodation.

Accommodation required in and at an hotel.

25. Every hotel authorised to be licensed under the provisions of this Act shall contain, and during the continuance of the license shall continue to contain, in addition to what may be needed for the use of the family of the hotel-keeper, in cities and towns not less than six bed-rooms, and in other places not less than three bed-rooms, together with, in every case, a suitable complement of bedding and furniture; and (except in cities and incorporated towns) there shall also be attached to the said hotel proper stabling for at least six horses besides his own:

Not to communicate with a shop.

2. No hotel or saloon shall form a part of, or communicate by any entrance with, any shop or store wherein any goods or merchandise are kept for sale:

Hotel or saloon must have sufficient eating accommodation, and for serving meals.

26. In addition to the accommodation required by the last preceding section, each hotel or saloon shall be shown, to the satisfaction of the Board, to be a well-appointed and sufficient eating-house, with the appliances requisite for daily serving meals to travellers; and the requirements of this section shall apply to all hotels or saloons, save as herein-after excepted, and continuously for the whole period of the license:

Board may dispense with such accommodation in certain cases.

2. The Board may, by resolution to be passed before the first day of May in any year, dispense, as to a certain number of saloons in any city or town, with the necessity of their having the accommodation in the last preceding section mentioned.

City or municipal council may require additional accommodation.

27. The Council of any city, incorporated village, town, township or parish, may, by byelaw to be passed before the first day of March in any year, prescribe for the then ensuing license year beginning on the first day of May, any requirements in addition to those in the last two preceding sections mentioned, as to accommodation to be possessed by hotels and saloons, which the Council may see fit; and the Board, upon receiving a copy of such byelaw, shall be bound to observe the provisions thereof; and such byelaw shall continue in full force for such year and any future year until repealed.

Stabling to be provided with hay, etc.

28. Every hotel-keeper whose license is granted in respect of premises to be provided with stabling, shall, at all times, keep upon his licensed premises a sufficient supply of hay, corn, or other provender, for the accommodation of travellers.

Duties of the Board.

29. The Board shall ascertain that the requirements of this Act as to the petition of the applicant, the certificate of the electors when necessary, and the report of the Inspector, have been complied with : To see that requirements are complied with.

2. If the said pre-requisites have been complied with (but not otherwise), the Board shall entertain the application : Entertaining application or not.

3. Where the applicant for an hotel or shop license resides in a remote part of the district, or where for any other reason the Board see fit, they may dispense with the report of the Inspector, and act upon such information as may satisfy them in the premises. Applicants in remote parts.

4. The Board shall hear and determine all applications, and also all objections which may be made to such applications on such evidence as shall seem to them sufficient, whether the same be strictly legal evidence or not. Hearing and determining applications.

5. Any person who has signed a memorial against the granting of a license may be heard in opposition thereto. Hearing objectors.

6. The Council of any city, town, or incorporated village, or of any municipality or parish, may authorise any person to appear in a similar manner on behalf of the ratepayers of such city, town, incorporated village, municipality or parish, as to the granting of a license, and such person so authorised shall have a right to be heard before the Board against the granting of such license. And those authorised by municipalities.

7. No objection in respect of the character of any applicant shall be entertained, unless three days' notice has been given to the applicant. As to objections to character.

8. No objection from an Inspector shall be entertained, unless the nature of the objection shall have been stated in the report furnished to the Board. Objections by Inspectors.

9. Notwithstanding anything in this Act contained, the Board may, of their own motion, take notice of any matter or thing which, in their opinion, would be an objection to the granting of a license, although no notice or objection has been given or made as by this Act provided : in any such case the Board shall notify the applicant, and shall adjourn their hearing of the application, if requested by him, for any period not exceeding fourteen days and not less than seven days, in order that any person affected by the objection may have an opportunity of answering the same : Board may notice matters not mentioned by objectors. Notice to applicant in such case.

10. The decision of the Board, when once announced by the chairman, shall not be questioned or reconsidered : Decision of Board final.

11. If any applicant for a license has, at any time or in any place, been refused on the ground that he is not a fit person to hold a license, no application by such applicant shall be entertained by any Board within a period of two years of the last of such refusals. Applicants refused as unfit disqualified for 2 years.

30. If it appears that the applicant is the true owner of the business of such hotel, saloon, or shop, and has complied with the requirements of the law and with the regulations and requirements of the Board, the Board may grant such applicant a certificate under the hands of any two members of the Board, stating that he is entitled to a license for a certain time, and for a certain hotel, saloon, or shop within the district. Certificates to applicants found entitled to license.

31. No hotel license shall be granted in respect of any house in any city, town, or incorporated village, unless such house has a separate front entrance, in addition to the entrance to the bar or place where liquors are sold. Entrance to hotel separate from bar.

32. No license shall be granted if two-thirds of the electors in the sub-division petition against it, on the grounds herein-before set forth, or any of such grounds. Two-thirds majority of electors may prevent license.

33. No license shall be granted to any person declared, in pursuance of this Act, to be a disqualified person, during the continuance of such disqualification : any liceens issued to a person so disqualified shall be void. No license to person disqualified.

34. No license shall be granted under the provisions of this Act to or for the benefit of any person who is a License Commissioner or License Inspector, and any license so issued shall be void. Nor to a Commissioner or Inspector.

Nor if Commissioner or Inspector owns the premises.

35. An hotel, saloon, or shop license shall not be issued under the provisions of this Act for premises within any district of which any of the License Commissioners or of the Inspectors for such district is the owner; and every License Commissioner who knowingly issues, and every License Inspector who knowingly recommends the issue of a license for any such premises, contrary to the provisions of this section, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor:

Proviso: as to joint stock companies.

2. The provisions of this section shall not extend or apply to premises owned or occupied by a joint-stock company in which a License Commissioner is a shareholder, but in every such case such License Commissioner shall not vote upon any question affecting the granting of a license to such company, or for premises owned or occupied by it.

Licenses for vessels or for wholesale.

36. The Board may also direct to be issued licenses for vessels, or wholesale licenses which have been applied for within the time herein-before prescribed.

Condition of wholesale license.

37. No wholesale license shall be granted to any person who does not carry on the business of selling by wholesale or in unbroken packages.

As to partnership.

38. Wholesale licenses may be issued in the name of a co-partnership, when two or more persons are carrying on business as one, but a separate license shall be required in every district wherein the firm carries on its business.

Extension of licenses in certain cases.

39. In any case where the Board of any district do not think fit, or are unable to grant a new license to any applicant who has been licensed during the preceding twelve months, or any part thereof, they may, nevertheless, by resolution, provide for extending the duration of the existing license for any specified period of the year, not exceeding three months, at their discretion; and such license, when a certificate of the extension aforesaid has been endorsed thereon, under the hand of the Chief Inspector for the district, shall remain valid for the period specified in the resolution of the Board, and no longer; but this provision shall not be construed to confer on the Board any authority to exceed the limit prescribed by this Act as to the number of licenses to be granted in any year.

Proviso.

Issue of license and fee.

40. Upon the obtaining by the applicant of the certificate authorising the issuing of a license, the Chief Inspector shall, on the demand of the applicant so authorised, and upon the payment of a fee of five dollars, and upon his giving security by bond as hereinafter mentioned, when it is an hotel, saloon, or shop license that has been directed to issue, issue to him the license to which he is entitled:

Proviso: Applicant must have paid or tendered any lawful Provincial duty.

2. Provided always, that in any Province in which, in order to the raising of a revenue for Provincial, local or municipal purposes, a duty has been imposed under the authority of "The British North America Act, 1867," on any license, before the license issues, the person entitled thereto shall establish, to the satisfaction of the Chief Inspector, that he has paid or tendered such duty.

Security to be given.

Form, amount, and conditions of bond.

41. Before any hotel, saloon, or shop license is granted, the person applying for the same shall enter into a bond to Her Majesty in the sum of five hundred dollars, with two good and sufficient sureties (to be approved of by the Chief Inspector), in the sum of one hundred and fifty dollars each, conditioned for the payment of all fines and penalties which such person may be condemned to pay in respect of any offence against any Act, byelaw or provision in the nature of law, relative to hotels, taverns, inns, or houses of public entertainment then and thereafter to be in force, and to do, perform, and observe all the requirements thereof, and to conform to all byelaws and regulations that may be established by competent authority in such behalf; and such bond shall be in the words or to the effect of the Third Schedule to this Act, and when executed shall be filed in the office of the Chief Inspector, to be by him transmitted to the Secretary of State.

Number of Licenses.

Number limited.

42. The aggregate number of hotel and saloon licenses to be granted, except as herein-after provided, in the respective municipalities or parishes, shall not, in each year, be in excess of the following limitations:—

1. In cities, towns, and incorporated villages respectively, according to the following scale, that is to say, one for each full two hundred and fifty of the first one thousand of the population, and one for each full five hundred over one thousand of the population; Provided, that two hotel licenses may be granted in any town or incorporated village wherein the population is less than five hundred; In municipalities generally. Proviso.

2. In incorporated villages, being county towns, five licenses may be granted, notwithstanding that according to the population that number could not be issued: In villages being county towns, and—

3. In the town of Niagara Falls, in the province of Ontario, three hotels near the Falls of Niagara, which may be licensed, may be added to the number which would otherwise be the maximum limit under this Act. Niagara Falls

4. In townships or parishes and in places where there is no municipal organisation, the Board of the district shall, by resolution to be passed at their first meeting in each year, limit the number of licenses to be issued in each year: Where there is no municipal organisation.

5. The Board may authorise the granting of two additional hotel licenses beyond the number limited by this Act in a locality largely resorted to in summer by visitors, but such licenses shall only be for a period of six months, commencing on the first day of May in each year; but this provision is not to apply to the town of Niagara Falls: Places of summer resort. Proviso.

6. In incorporated villages, townships, or parishes, no saloon licenses shall be granted. No saloon licenses in certain places.

43. The number of shop licenses to be granted in the respective municipalities shall not in each year be in excess of the following scale:— Number of shop licenses.

One for each full four hundred up to twelve hundred of the population, and

One for each full one thousand beyond twelve hundred of the population.

44. The council of any city, town, or village may, by byelaw to be passed before the first day of March in any year, reduce, within any limit by this Act provided, the number of hotel, saloon, and shop licenses to be issued therein for the then ensuing year, or for any future license year until such byelaw is altered or repealed: Municipal council may further limit the number of licenses.

2. The council shall cause a certified copy of such byelaw to be sent immediately after the passing thereof to the Chief Inspector of the district in which the municipality is situate. Notice to Chief Inspector.

45. No provision in this Act contained shall affect the powers conferred on the Municipal Councils in the Province of Quebec of each county, city, town, village, parish, and township by the laws in force in the said Province, on the first day of July 1867, to restrict or prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in the limits of their respective territorial jurisdiction, and the said powers, and the byelaws now in force passed under the authority of the said laws are hereby preserved and confirmed. Certain powers of Municipal Councils in Quebec, at time of confederation, saved.

46. The number of the population which is to determine the number of licenses at any time under this Act shall be according to the then last preceding census, except where the Board are at any time of opinion that, owing to a large increase of population since such census, an increased number of licensed hotels is needed for the convenience and accommodation of travellers; and in that case, if the Board so certify, and the council of the municipality memorialise the Governor for an increase of the number of hotels, the Governor in Council may authorise a new census to be taken at the expense of the municipality, and the limit for the number of licenses shall thereafter, upon each such new census, be one for each full two hundred and fifty of the population under one thousand, and one for each five hundred over one thousand of the population: How population shall be computed for purposes of this Act. New census in certain cases under O. C.

2. In case of the alteration or formation of any municipality subsequent to the taking of any census, the population of such municipality, for the purposes of this Act, may be ascertained by the said Board by reference to the enumeration on which such census took place, or by a new census taken under the provisions of this section: Municipalities altered since census.

3. Where, since the general census, a census has been taken in any municipality under the authority of the Council having jurisdiction, the limit may be the same as in the case of a census taken under this section for the purposes of this Act. The same.

47. No license shall be granted by the Board for the sale of liquors within the limits of a town, incorporated village, parish, township, or other municipality (save and except counties and cities) when it shall have been made to appear to the Board in manner No license in municipalities where three-fifths of the electors have so voted.

herein-after provided, that a majority of three-fifths of the duly qualified electors therein, who have voted at a poll taken as herein-after specified, have declared themselves to be in favour of a prohibition of the sale of intoxicating liquors in their locality, and against the issue of licenses therefor.

Requisition by one-fifth of electors to Commissioner that poll may be taken.

2. When a requisition is presented to any Commissioner from one-fifth of the electors of any town, incorporated village, township, parish, or other municipality (save and except counties and cities), requiring a vote to be taken as to whether or not such license shall issue or be granted therein, it shall be the duty of such Commissioner, upon the receipt of such requisition, to scrutinise the names of the electors attached to such requisition, and being satisfied that the said electors whose names are attached to the said requisition are duly qualified, and after the person or persons, who have witnessed the signatures to the said requisition, shall have sworn before a Justice of the Peace or a Notary Public, that he the said witness or they the said witnesses, were present and saw the said electors sign the said requisition, and that the signers constitute one-fifth of the electors of such town, incorporated village, parish, township, or other municipality, to command the holding of a public meeting of the said electors, to ascertain whether or not such licenses shall be granted, and the taking of a poll to that effect,—the Commissioner to whom the requisition has been presented shall, by an order inserted in the Register: Firstly, appoint the Chief Inspector or other person to preside at such meeting and act as returning officer, and: Secondly, fix the place and day at and in which the poll shall be taken. The returning officer, in accordance with the order, shall give public notice of such meeting in some newspaper within the Municipality or District, or if there be no newspaper within the Municipality or District, then in some newspaper as near thereto as may be, the publication to be continued in at least one number of such paper each week for three successive weeks, and also by posting up such notices, or copies of the same, at the polling places within such Municipality or District, fixed in the order, and also at two or more of the most public places in the Municipality or District. Such meeting shall be held in the month of January or February next ensuing, on such day as shall be most convenient, and not less than four weeks, and not more than seven weeks from the date of the first publication of such notice,—the said poll to be taken between the hours of nine a.m. and five p.m. of the day so appointed. Should any riot or disturbance take place so as to disturb the polling, such poll shall be continued on the next succeeding lawful day.

How to be attested and proved.

Duty of Commissioner as to the taking of such poll;

And of returning officer.

Notices to be given.

Day and hours for holding the poll.

Provision in case of disturbance.

Duties and powers of returning officer.

Constables.

3. On the day appointed for taking the poll the Chief Inspector, or person appointed as returning officer, shall preside over the meeting; and such officer shall have all the powers for the preservation of the peace which are by law vested in a returning officer at any election of a Member of the House of Commons of Canada, and shall have the powers of appointing and swearing constables.

Oath of office of returning officer and clerks.

Penalties for neglect of duty.

4. The returning officer and the clerks whom he shall employ, shall subscribe and take the oath for the due and proper performance of the duties of their respective offices according to the forms (mutatis mutandis) prescribed in the Schedule to "The Dominion Elections Act, 1874," before the nearest resident Justice of the Peace or a Commissioner for taking affidavits, and shall be subject to the same penalties for the neglect or improper discharge of their respective duties as are imposed on similar officers in case of an election of a Member of the House of Commons.

List of electors to be furnished.

Oath of elector if required.

5. The Clerk of the Municipality shall furnish the returning officer with a correct list of the electors within the municipality for which the poll is to be taken; and such returning officer shall, in case of doubt, have power to administer to the voters the oath as to qualification required in the case of the election of a Member of the House of Commons.

Provisions of 41 V., c. 16, to apply.

6. The vote of the electors shall be taken by ballot in the manner provided by "The Canada Temperance Act, 1878," and the several clauses thereof under the headings "The Poll," "Scrutiny," "Penalties," "Preservation of the Peace," "General Provisions," "Prevention of Corrupt Practices," and "Penalties and Punishments Generally," shall be read and construed as part of this Act, except where the same may be inconsistent with any of the provisions herein contained.

Adjournment on first day if all votes not polled.

7. If, at five o'clock in the afternoon of the first day of the poll, the votes of all the electors present have not been polled, the meeting shall be adjourned to the hour of nine in the forenoon of the following day, for the purpose of proceeding with the polling of such votes;

Closing on second day.

The poll shall be closed at five o'clock in the afternoon of the second day:

If at any time after the votes have commenced to be polled, either on the first or on the second day of the said election, one hour elapses without any votes having been polled, the presiding officer shall close the election : Or on either day in default of voters.

8. At the close of the poll the returning officer shall count the "ayes" and "noes," and ascertain and certify on the face of the poll-book the number of votes given for or against the granting of licenses, respectively ; the certificate shall also be signed by the poll clerk ; the certificate, with the poll-book, shall be deposited in the office of the Board within two days after the close of the poll. Certificate of result by returning officer to Board.

9. Objections to any act or proceeding under this section must be made in writing and filed in the office of the Board of License Commissioners, within eight days after the certificate is deposited in the said office : such objections shall be considered and adjudicated upon by the Board at their next regular meeting : the decision of the Board shall be final ; and in the event of the objections being maintained, they shall have the power to cause another poll to be taken on the question whether or not licenses shall be granted. Objections to be heard and determined. Decision of Board to be final.

10. Nothing in this section shall be construed as permitting any of the proceedings had, or paper writings filed, or notices required therein, to be vitiated or set aside by reason of any mere want or defect of form, or any irregularity in the drawing up or execution of the same. Want of form not to invalidate proceeding.

11. The decision of the three-fifths of the electors against the granting of licenses as declared at the poll, shall come into force in the then ensuing license year, beginning on the first day of May, and such prohibition shall continue in full force for such year and any future year until repealed ; and each and all of the provisions of this section shall apply to the proceedings to be taken in reference to such repeal. When the decision shall take effect, and for how long.

48. Subject to the provisions of this Act as to removals and the transfer of licenses, every license for the sale of liquor shall be held to be a license only to the person therein named and for the premises therein described, and shall remain valid only so long as such person continues to be the occupant of the said premises, and the true owner of the business there carried on. License to apply to person and premises.

Transfer of Licenses.

49. In case any person having lawfully obtained a license under this Act dies before the expiration of his license, or sells, or by operation of law or otherwise assigns his business, or removes from the house or place in respect of which the said license applies, his said license shall, ipso facto, become forfeited and be absolutely null and void to all intents and purposes whatsoever,—unless such person, his assigns or legal representatives, within one month after the death, assignment, or removal of, or sale by the original holder of such license, or some other period in the discretion of the Board of the district in which the said license has effect, obtain its written consent or the consent of the Chairman, countersigned by the Inspector, either for the continuance of the said business or the transfer of such license to some other person, and thereupon forthwith transfer the same to such other person, who, under such transfer, may exercise the rights granted by such license, subject to all the duties and obligations of the original holder thereof, until the expiration thereof, in the house or place for which such license was issued and to which it applies, but in no other house or place. Conditions on which transfer shall be allowed and its effect.

2. In every such case of transfer of an hotel license, the person in whose favour any such transfer is to be made shall first produce to the Board, or to the chairman thereof, a report of the Inspector similar in effect to that mentioned in section twenty-three of this Act. Report of Inspector required.

3. Except in case of the death of the licensee no transfer of any license shall be made, nor shall any application for leave to transfer be entertained until the expiration of three months from the time of the granting of such license. When to be applied for.

50. Where a licensee has been legally ejected from any licensed premises, the Board or the Chairman may, notwithstanding the non-production of the license, on the application in writing of the owner of the premises and the proposed new tenant, grant a special certificate of transfer of such license to such new tenant, in such form as he or they shall think applicable, such certificate to be countersigned by the Chief Inspector. Case of licensee ejected.

Authority to continue business for remainder of term in certain cases.

51. Any two members of the Board may, by order, authorise any person they may think entitled to the benefit of any license to carry on the business in the licensed premises for the remainder of the term for which the license was granted, in the same manner as if such license had been formally transferred to such person, in any of the following cases, that is to say :—

Desertion of premises.

1. Whenever any person to whom a license has been granted deserts the licensed premises, or refuses or neglects to transfer the license when justly required so to do; or—

Ceasing occupation.

2. If, during the currency of any such license, the holder thereof ceases to occupy the premises in respect whereof the license is held, or his tenancy of such premises is determined by effluxion of time, or by notice to quit, or by any other means whatsoever.

Case of licensee convicted of an offence disquaiifying him or entailing forfeiture of license.

52. Where any licensed person is convicted of any offence, and in consequence either becomes personally disqualified or has his license forfeited, any two members of the Board, upon the application by, or on behalf of, the owner of the premises in respect of which the license was granted (where the owner is not the occupier), and upon being satisfied that such owner was not privy, nor a consenting party to the act of his tenant, and that he has legal power to eject the tenant of such premises, may by order authorise an agent to carry on the business specified in the license relating to such premises until the end of the period for which such license was granted, in the same manner as if such license had been formally transferred to such agent.

Case of marriage of female licensee.

Proviso.

53. In case of the marriage of any female being a licensee the license held by her shall confer on her husband the same privileges, and shall impose on him the same duties, obligations, and liabilities, as if such license had been granted to him originally: Provided that the Chairman of the Board, on the application of the husband of the licensed woman, has confirmed to him his wife's license for the remainder of the term of the duration thereof, and granted him a certificate to that effect, which must be countersigned by the Chief Inspector. Such confirmation shall be granted if the Chairman is satisfied that no objection can be made to the character of the husband, and that he has not forfeited a license within the next preceding three years.

Removal of Licensee.

Grant of leave to remove.

Proviso.

54. Any Chief Inspector may, after resolution allowing the same by the Board, or permission in writing granted by the chairman thereof, endorse on any hotel, saloon, or shop license, permission to the holder thereof to remove from the house to which his said license applies, to another house to be described in the endorsement to be made by the said Inspector on the said license: Provided always, that the house to which the licensee proposes to remove has all the accommodation required by law.

Effect of leave to remove.

Proviso: Report of inspector required.

Bonds to apply.

2. Such permission, when the approval of the said Inspector is endorsed on the said license, shall authorise the holder of the said license to sell the like liquors in the house mentioned in the endorsement, during the unexpired portion of the term for which the said license was granted, in the same manner, and upon the same terms and conditions as he might do in the premises to which the license originally applied; but no such permission shall be granted unless and until the person applying therefor has filed in the office of the Chief Inspector, a report of the Inspector containing the information required by law in case of application for a license; and any bond or security which such holder of a license may have given for any purpose in relation to such license shall apply to the house or place to which such removal is authorised; but such permission shall not entitle him to sell at any other than such one place.

Certificate of electors required.

3. An application for the removal of any hotel, saloon, or shop license from the house to which it applies must be accompanied by a certificate, signed by one-third of the electors of the polling sub-division in the same manner as is required by section thirteen of this Act as to applications for a license.

Fees in cases of removal, &c.

55. For each transfer of a license, for each certificate permitting the continuance of the business, for each certificate of confirmation of a license to the husband of a licensed woman, and for each endorsement of permission to remove to other premises there shall be paid a fee of ten dollars.

License Fund.

56. All sums received on applications for and on the issue of licenses, or received by the Inspector for fines and penalties, shall form the License Fund of the district. How formed.

3. The License Fund shall be applied, under regulations of the Governor in Council, for the payment of the salary and expenses of the Commissioners and Inspectors, and for the expenses of the office of the Board, or otherwise incurred in carrying the provisions of the law into effect; and the residue, on the thirtieth day of June in each year, and at such other times as may be prescribed by the regulations of the Governor in Council, shall be paid over to the Treasurer of the city, town, village, parish or township, municipality in which the licensed premises are respectively situate, for the public uses of the municipality; and in the province of Prince Edward Island, except in the cities and towns thereof, to the Treasurer of that Province; and in unorganised districts the residue shall be paid to the Receiver General. How to be applied. And in P. E. Island and unorganised districts.

3. Cheques upon the license fund account shall be drawn by the Chief Inspector, and countersigned by the Chairman, or any two of the License Commissioners, subject to the regulations made by the Governor in Council. Cheques upon the fund.

57. Two-thirds of any penalty in money recovered under this Act, in cases in which an Inspector is the prosecutor or complainant, shall be paid by the convicting magistrate to the Inspector, and paid in by him to the credit of the "License Fund Account." Application of pecuniary penalties.

2. In case the whole amount of the penalty and costs is not recovered, the amount recovered shall be applied, first, to the payment of the costs, and the balance shall be appropriated as herein provided. If not all recovered.

3. In any case where the Inspector has prosecuted and obtained a conviction, and has been unable to recover the amount of costs, the same shall be made good out of the License Fund. Conviction but no recovery of costs.

4. In any case where the Inspector has prosecuted and failed to obtain a conviction, he shall be indemnified against all costs out of the License Fund, if the magistrate before whom the complaint is made certifies that such officer had reasonable and probable cause for instituting such prosecution or preferring such complaint. Indemnity of Inspector in cases of no conviction.

Revocation of Licenses improperly obtained.

58. The Judge of the County Court of the county or the Judge of the Superior Court having jurisdiction in the county in which a municipality is situate, in any part of which a license granted is intended to take effect, upon the complaint of any person that such license has been issued contrary to any of the provisions of this Act, or of any byelaw in force in the said municipality, or that such license has been obtained by any fraud, shall summon the person to whom such license has been issued, to appear before him, and shall proceed to hear and determine the matter of the said complaint in a summary manner; and may, upon such hearing, or in default of appearance of the person summoned, determine and adjudge that such license, for any of the causes aforesaid, ought to be revoked, and thereupon shall order and adjudge that such license is and stands revoked and cancelled accordingly, and such license shall then be and become inoperative and of none effect, and the person to whom such license issued shall thereafter, during the full period of three years, be disqualified from obtaining any further or other license under this Act. Proceedings for such revocation and powers; Judge. Hearing and judgment, and its effect.

Permits to sell in Municipalities where no License is granted.

59. In municipalities, parishes, or townships, in which "The Canada Temperance Act, 1878," is not in force, and where there is no person licensed under an hotel, saloon, or shop license to retail liquors, the sale of such liquors is permitted, as herein-after provided, for medicinal purposes only, or for use in divine worship, on the certificate of a physician or of a clergyman, residing in the municipality or parish, and not otherwise; or for bonâ fide use in some art, trade, or manufacture, on the certificate of two justices: Permits to sell for certain purposes only.

2. Such certificate may be given by a resident physician, but only to a patient under his immediate care, or by a clergyman, but only to a person whose spiritual adviser he bonâ fide is, under a penalty of thirty dollars for each contravention of this provision: Certificate by and to whom to be given.

Conditions of issue of certificate.

3. Before the two justices shall grant a certificate to a person authorising the sale to him of liquor for use in any art, trade, or manufacture, they shall cause a declaration to be made before them by the applicant to the effect that the liquor is to be used only for the purpose set forth in the declaration, and they shall attach the said declaration to their certificate:

Limit of quantity to be sold.

4. In any case, not more than one pint shall, at any one time, be sold in virtue of such certificate, and no liquor so sold shall be allowed to be drunk on the premises, under a penalty of forty dollars for each contravention of this provision:

By whom to be sold.

5. The sale of liquor permitted by this section shall be made by such person only as may be appointed for that purpose by a resolution of the Board, and the Board may grant to such person a "permit to sell for medicinal purposes, or for use in divine "worship only, or for use in any art, trade, or manufacture:"

Report by person so selling.

Penalty for default.

6. The person so permitted to sell shall make a report, sworn to before a Justice of the Peace, on the first day of each month, to the Chief Inspector, showing the names of the persons to whom he has sold liquor during the previous month, the quantity sold in each case, and upon whose certificate the sale was made, and such certificates shall accompany the report: any violation of, or failure to comply with any of the provisions of this section, shall subject the offender to a penalty of twenty dollars, for each contravention.

Register of Licenses.

Who shall keep.

60. The Chief Inspector of each district shall keep, in such form as may be prescribed by the Board,—

Particulars required.

Licenses.

Forfeitures, &c.

a. A register, to be called "The Register of Licenses," containing the particulars of all licenses granted in the district, the premises in respect of which they are granted, the names of the licensees, and the names of the sureties to any bond given by such licensee in pursuance of the provisions of this Act; there shall also be entered on the register all forfeitures of licenses, disqualifications of licensees, records of convictions, and other matters relating to the licenses then on the register;

Applications to Board.

b. A record of all applications made to the Board, showing the names of the applicants, the nature of the applications, the premises in respect of which the applications are made, the date on which the applications were heard, and the manner in which the same were disposed of, including, in cases of refusal, the cause thereof;

Furnishing extracts.

2. Every Chief Inspector shall, on request, forthwith transmit extracts from any such register of licenses or record of applications, to any other Inspector or to the clerk of any court.

Annual reports of Boards to Minister of Inland Revenue; and what they must show.

61. The Board shall report annually to the Minister of Inland Revenue, and their report shall contain,—

a. A statement of the number and description of licenses and of the names of applicants to whom licenses were granted during the year;

b. The names of those to whom licenses were not granted;

c. Any other statement required to be entered in the Register of Licenses;

d. The prosecutions for infractions of this Act, and the result of the same;

e. General remarks as to the working of the law within the district;

f. And also any other matters asked for by the Minister of Inland Revenue:

Moneys received and expended.

2. They shall also report as to and account for the moneys received and expended during the year.

Regulations and Prohibitions.

Licenses to be kept exposed.

Penalty for default.

62. All licenses shall be constantly and conspicuously exposed in the warehouses and shops, in the bar-rooms of hotels, saloons, or other places of public entertainment, and in the saloon or cabin of vessels, to which the licenses respectively relate, under a penalty of five dollars for every day's wilful or negligent omission so to expose them, to be recovered with costs from the licensee, or the master, captain, or owner of the vessel so making the default.

Inscription over door of licensed premises.

63. Every person who keeps an hotel or saloon or any other licensed place in respect of which an hotel or saloon license has duly issued and is in force, shall exhibit over the door of such hotel, saloon or other licensed place in large letters, the words: "Licensed to sell spirituous or fermented liquors," and in default thereof shall be liable to a penalty of five dollars, besides costs for each and every day on which such default continues.

Lamps over doors.

64. Every hotel-keeper shall keep a lamp affixed over the door of his licensed premises, or within twenty feet thereof, lighted during the whole of every night, from sunset to sunrise, during the time of his holding such license:

Penalty for default.

2. Every person who acts in contravention of, or who fails to comply with any provision of this section, shall forfeit and pay for each such offence a penalty not exceeding five dollars:

Exemption by Inspector.

3. The Chief Inspector may, by endorsement on his license, exempt any hotel-keeper from compliance with this provision in cases where he thinks the street or particular place where the licensed premises are situate, is otherwise sufficiently lighted.

One bar only.

65. Not more than one bar shall be kept in any house or premises licensed under this Act.

Prohibition of sales; certain days and at certain hours.

66. As respects all places where intoxicating liquors are, or may be sold by wholesale or retail, no sale or other disposal of liquors shall take place therein, or on the premises thereof, or out of or from the same, to any person or persons whomsoever, save as herein-after provided, from or after the hour of seven of the clock on Saturday night till six of the clock on Monday morning thereafter, nor from or after the hour of eleven o'clock at night until six o'clock the following morning on all the other nights of the week, save and except in cases where a requisition for medical purposes, signed by a licensed medical practitioner, or by a Justice of the Peace, is produced by the vendee or his agent; nor shall any such liquor, whether sold or not, be permitted or allowed to be drunk in any such places during the time prohibited by this Act for the sale of the same: Provided always, that in hotels liquor may be sold on Sundays to the guests bonâ fide residing or boarding in such houses, during meals, between the hours of one and three, and five and seven in the afternoon, respectively, to be drunk or used at their meals at the table, but this provision shall not permit the furnishing of liquor at the bar, or place where liquor is usually sold in such houses.

Proviso as to guests in hotels.

No sales on polling days of Dominion elections, &c.

2. And no sale or other disposal of liquor shall take place in any licensed place within the limits of a polling sub-division, on any polling day for or at any Parliamentary Election, or election of a member for a Legislative Assembly, or any municipal election, from or after the time of six o'clock in the morning of the said day until the following lawful day at six o'clock in the morning.

Penalty for refusing lodging, &c.

67. Every hotel-keeper failing or refusing, either personally or through any one acting on his behalf, except for some valid reason, to supply lodging, meals or accommodation to travellers, shall, for each offence, be liable, on conviction, to forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding twenty dollars.

As to mode of payment for liquor, &c.

68. If any hotel-keeper receives in payment, or as a pledge, for any liquor or entertainment supplied in or from his licensed premises, anything except current money, or the debtor's own cheque on a bank or banker, he shall for each offence pay a penalty not exceeding twenty dollars; the person to whom anything given as a pledge, as aforesaid belongs, shall have the same remedy for recovering such pledge, or the value thereof, as if it had never been pledged; no hotel-keeper shall receive payment in advance for any liquor to be supplied, and any payment so made in advance may be recovered, notwithstanding that any liquor may have been supplied subsequently to such payment.

Recovering of pledges.

Payment in advance forbidden.

Licensee not to purchase certain articles, or receive them in pledge.

Restitution may be ordered and enforced.

69. If any person holding a license purchases from any person any wearing apparel, tools, implements of trade or husbandry, fishing gear, household goods, or furniture, either by way of sale or barter, directly or indirectly, the consideration for which, in whole or in part, is any intoxicating liquor or the price thereof, or receives from any person any goods in pawn, any Stipendiary or Police Magistrate, or any two Justices of the Peace, or any parish court commissioner, on sufficient proof on oath being made before him of the facts, may issue his warrant for the restitution of all such property, and for the payment of costs; and in default thereof, the warrant shall contain directions for levying by sale of the offender's goods to the value of such property so pawned, sold, or bartered, and costs, and the offender shall also be liable to a penalty not exceeding twenty dollars.

Penalty for permitting drunkenness, &c.

70. If any person licensed under this Act permits drunkeness, or any violent, quarrelsome, riotous or disorderly conduct to take place on his premises, or sells or delivers intoxicating liquor to any drunken person, or permits and suffers any drunken person to consume any intoxicating liquor on his premises, or permits and suffers persons of notoriously bad character to assemble or meet on his premises, or suffers any gambling or any unlawful game to be carried on on his premises, he shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding fifty dollars.

Penalty for harbouring constables when on duty.

71. If any licensed person knowingly harbours or knowingly suffers to remain on his premises, any constable during any part of the time appointed for such constable to be on duty, unless for the purpose of keeping or restoring order, or in the execution of his duty, or supplies any liquor or refreshment whatever by way of gift or sale, to any constable on duty, unless by authority of some superior officer of such constable, or bribes, or attempts to bribe, any constable, he shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding fifty dollars.

Power to refuse liquor to or to eject any intoxicated person.

72. Any person licensed under this Act may refuse to admit to the premises in respect of which his license is granted, any person who is intoxicated, and may refuse to admit to and may turn out of the premises any person who is violent or quarrelsome, or disorderly, and any person whose presence on his premises would subject the licensee to a penalty under this Act; and any such person who, upon being requested in pursuance of this section, by such licensed person or his agent, or servant, or any constable, to quit such premises, refuses or fails to do so, shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding twenty dollars; and all constables are required, on demand of such licensed person, his agent or servant, to expel or assist in expelling every such person from such premises, and may use such force as may be required for that purpose.

Constables to aid.

Penalty for using prohibited internal communications.

73. Every person who makes or uses, or allows to be made or used, any internal communication between any licensed premises and any unlicensed premises which are used for public entertainments or resort, or as a refreshment house, shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding fifty dollars for every day during which such communication remains open.

Penalty for allowing liquors to be consumed on the premises by a minor.

74. Any licensed person who allows to be supplied in his licensed premises, by purchase or otherwise, any description whatever of liquor to any person apparently under the age of sixteen years, of either sex, not being resident on the premises or a bonâ fide guest, lodger or traveller, shall, as well as the person who actually gives or supplies the liquor, be liable to pay a penalty not exceeding twenty dollars for every such offence.

As to such offence by a shop licensee.

75. No person having a shop license to sell by retail, shall allow any liquor sold by him or in his possession, and for the sale of which a license is required, to be consumed within his shop, or within any building of which such shop forms part, or which communicates by any entrance with such shop, either by the purchaser thereof, or by any other person not usually resident within such building, under a penalty not exceeding fifty dollars.

Conditions for obtaining shop license.

2. No shop license shall be granted to any person to sell liquors in any store, shop, place or premises where groceries or other merchandise are sold, or exposed for sale, or in any store, place or premises, connected, by any internal communication, with such first-mentioned store, shop, place or premises: Provided always, that this sub-section shall not apply to any licensee in cities and towns, having a license at the time of the passing of this Act, prior to the first day of May in the year one thousand eight hundred and ninety, and elsewhere prior to the first day of May in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-seven.

Proviso.

Licensee not to treat any person on the premises. Penalty.

3. If any person having a shop license gives or treats any person to any liquor on the licensed premises, he shall, on conviction, incur a penalty of not exceeding fifty dollars.

Wholesale licensee not to allow liquor to be consumed on his premises.

76. No person having a license to sell by wholesale, shall allow any liquors sold by him or in his possession for sale, and for the sale or disposal of which such license is required, to be consumed within his warehouse or shop, or within any building which forms part of or is appurtenant to, or which communicates by any entrance with any warehouse, shop or other premises wherein any article to be sold or disposed of under such license is sold by retail, or wherein there are kept any broken packages of such articles.

Punishment for allowing liquor to be unlawfully consumed on premises.

77. If any person having a license to sell liquors not to be drunk on the premises, himself takes or carries, or employs or suffers any other person to take or carry any liquor out of or from the premises of such licensed person for the purpose of being sold on his account or for his benefit or profit, and of being drunk or consumed in any other house, or in any tent, shed or other building of any kind whatever, belonging to such licensed person, or hired, used or occupied by him, or on or in any place, whether enclosed or not, and whether or not a public thoroughfare, such liquor shall be deemed to have been consumed by the purchaser thereof, on the premises of such licensed person, with his privity and consent, and such licensed person shall be punished accordingly, in manner provided by this Act:

What proof of offence sufficient.

2. In any proceeding under this section it shall not be necessary to prove that the premises, or place or places to which such liquor is taken to be drunk belonged to or were hired, used or occupied by the seller, if proof be given to the satisfaction of the court hearing the case, that such liquor was taken to be consumed thereon or therein with intent to evade the conditions of his license.

Vessel licensee not to sell in port, &c.

78. Where a vessel license is issued under this Act, no sale or other disposal of liquor shall take place thereon or therefrom, to be consumed by any person other than a passenger on the said vessel, whilst such vessel is at any port, pier, wharf, dock, mooring place or station:

Penalty for contravention.

2. In case any such sale or other disposal of liquor takes place, the said license shall ipso facto be and become forfeited and absolutely void, and the captain or master in charge of such vessel, and the owner or person navigating the same, as well as the person actually selling or disposing of liquor contrary to this section, shall be severally and respectively liable to a penalty of one hundred dollars; and any person who sells or disposes of any liquor contrary to the provisions of this section shall also be liable to the same penalty and punishment therefor as is herein-after prescribed in the eighty-eighth section of this Act.

Adulteration.

Penalty for selling, &c. adulterated liquor.

79. Every person who sells or offers for sale any liquor with which is mixed any ingredient or material injurious to health, or whereby such liquor is rendered injurious to the health of persons drinking the same, and every person who sells as unadulterated any liquor which is adulterated, shall, on conviction, be liable for every such offence to a penalty not exceeding fifty dollars:

Duty of Inspector in case of conviction when license not forfeited.

2. Where a licensed person is convicted of any offence for adulteration of drink, and his license is not forfeited for such offence, the Chief Inspector or inspector, or any constable of the district, shall cause a placard stating such conviction to be affixed to the premises; such placard shall be of such size and form, and shall be printed with such letters, and shall contain such particulars, and shall be affixed to such part of the licensed premises, as the convicting justices may think fit, and such licensed person shall keep the same affixed during two weeks after the same is first affixed; and, if he fails to comply with the provisions of this section with respect to keeping such placard affixed, or defaces or allows such placard to be defaced, or if the same is defaced and he fails forthwith to renew the same, he shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding fifty dollars for every day on which the same remains so defaced and unrenewed; and any Inspector or any constable may affix or re-affix such placard during the said two weeks, or such further time as may be directed by a court of summary jurisdiction.

Penalty in cases not specially provided for.

102. Every person who shall violate any of the provisions of this Act, for which violation no penalty is herein specially provided, shall incur and pay a penalty not exceeding twenty dollars.

PENALTIES NOT TO BE REMITTED.

No power to remit.

103. No Magistrate, License Commissioner, or Inspector, or Municipal Council or Municipal officer, shall have any power or authority to remit, suspend or compromise any penalty or punishment inflicted under this Act.

PROSECUTIONS.

Limitation of time for prosecutions.

104. All informations or complaints for the prosecution of any offence against any of the provisions of this Act shall be laid or made, in writing, within thirty days after the commission of the offence.

Prosecutions, how brought.

105. Such prosecution may be brought—

In Quebec.

a. In the Province of Quebec, if the offence was committed in the City of Montreal or in the City of Quebec, then before the Recorder or Judge of the Sessions of the Peace at Montreal or Quebec, as the case may be, or, if the offence was committed in any other part of the Province, then before a Stipendiary Magistrate, or before any two other Justices of the Peace for the district wherein the offence was committed; or, if the district is other than that of Quebec, or that of Montreal, before the Sheriff of such district;

In Ontario.

b. In the Province of Ontario before any Stipendiary Magistrate or before any two other Justices of the Peace for the county, city or district wherein the offence was committed; or, if the offence was committed in any county, city or town having a Police Magistrate, then before such Police Magistrate, or, in his absence, before the Mayor or any two Justices of the Peace; or, if the offence was committed in any city or town not having a Police Magistrate, then before the Mayor thereof, or before any two Justices of the Peace;

In Nova Scotia.

c. In the Province of Nova Scotia before a Stipendiary Magistrate or before any two other Justices of the Peace of the county in which the offence was committed;

In New Brunswick.

d. In the Province of New Brunswick before any Police, Stipendiary or Sitting Magistrate or Commissioner of a Parish Court, or before any two other Justices of the Peace in and for the county in which the offence was committed;

In Manitoba.

e. In the Province of Manitoba before the Police Magistrate within whose territorial jurisdiction the offence was committed, or before any two Justices of the Peace in and for the county in which the offence was committed;

In British Columbia.

f. In the Province of British Columbia before any Stipendiary Magistrate or before any two other Justices of the Peace for the territorial division or jurisdiction within the limits of which the offence was committed;

g. In the Province of Prince Edward Island before the Stipendiary Magistrate for the city or town, or before any two other Justices of the Peace of or for the county in which the offence was committed. In Prince Edward Island.

106. If such prosecution is brought before any such Stipendiary Magistrate, Recorder, Judge of the Sessions of the Peace, Sheriff, Police Magistrate, Sitting Magistrate, Commissioner or Mayor, no other Magistrate shall sit or take part therein. Who may not sit in such case.

107. If such prosecution is brought before any two other Justices of the Peace, the summons shall be signed by one of them; and no other Justice than one of them shall sit or take part therein, unless by reason of their absence, or the absence of one of them, nor yet in the latter case, unless with the assent of the other of them. If prosecution is before Justices.

108. The description of any offence under this Act in the words of this Act or in words of like effect shall be sufficient in law, and any exception, exemption, proviso, excuse, or qualification, whether it does or does not accompany the description of the offence in this Act, may be proved by the defendant, but need not be specified or negatived in the information; but if it be so specified or negatived, no proof in relation to the matter so specified or negatived shall be required on the part of the informant or complainant. What description of the offence sufficient; and provision as to exemptions, &c.

109. Several cases of contravention of this Act, committed by the same person, may be included in one and the same information or complaint, provided that such information or complaint, and the summons issued thereon, contains specifically the time and place of each contravention. Several cases may be included in one complaint.

Form of Informations and other Proceedings.

110. In describing offences respecting the sale or other disposal of liquor, or the keeping, or the consumption of liquor, in any information, summons, conviction, warrant, or proceeding under this Act, it shall be sufficient to state the sale, disposal, keeping, or consumption of liquor simply, without stating the name or kind of such liquor, or the price thereof, or the name of any person to whom it was sold or disposed of, or by whom it was consumed; and it shall not be necessary to state the quantity of liquor so sold, disposed of, kept, or consumed, except in the case of offences where the quantity is essential, and then it shall be sufficient to allege the sale or disposal of more or less than such quantity, as the case may require. What shall be sufficient statement in the information, &c.

111. In the event of any variance between the information and the evidence adduced in support thereof, the Magistrate may amend or alter such information, and may substitute for the offence charged therein, any other offence against the provisions of this Act; but if it appears that the defendant has been materially misled by such variance, the said Magistrate shall thereupon adjourn the hearing of the case to some future day, unless the defendant waives such adjournment. Amendment of variances.

Adjournment if necessary.

112. The forms set forth in the fourth and subsequent schedules to this Act, or any forms to the like effect, shall be sufficient in the cases thereby respectively provided for; and when no forms are prescribed by the said fourth and subsequent schedules, new ones may be framed in accordance with those appended to the Act intituled "An Act respecting the duties of Justices of the peace, out of Sessions, in relation to Summary Convictions and Orders." Forms in schedule sufficient.

Or if framed on 32 & 33 Vict. c. 31.

Procedure in Cases where previous Conviction is charged.

113. The proceedings upon any information for committing an offence against any of the provisions of this Act, in a case where a previous conviction or convictions are charged, shall be as follows:— Proceedings in case of previous conviction.

1. The Magistrate shall, in the first instance, inquire concerning such subsequent offence only, and if the accused be found guilty thereof, he shall then, and not before, be asked whether he was so previously convicted, as alleged in the information, and if he answers that he was so previously convicted, he may be sentenced accordingly; but if he denies that he was so previously convicted, or stands mute of malice, or does not answer directly to such question, the Magistrate shall then inquire concerning such previous conviction or convictions: Last offence to be first tried.

As to alleged previous convictions.

Proof thereof.

2. The number of such previous convictions shall be provable by the production of a certificate purporting to be under the hand of the convicting Magistrate, or of the Clerk of the Peace, without proof of his signature or official character, or by other satisfactory evidence:

Case of second or subsequent conviction being set aside, provided for.

3. In the event of any conviction for any second or subsequent offence becoming void or defective, after the making thereof, by reason of any previous conviction being set aside, quashed, or otherwise rendered void, the Justices or other authority by whom such second or subsequent conviction was made, may, by warrant under their or his hand, summon the person convicted to appear at a time and place to be named in such warrant, and may thereupon, upon proof of the due service of such warrant if such person fails to appear, or on his appearance, amend such second or subsequent conviction, and adjudge such penalty or punishment as might have been adjudged had such previous conviction never existed; and such amended conviction shall thereupon be held valid to all intents and purposes, as if it had been made in the first instance:

Provision in case of convictions under several sections of this Act.

4. In case any person who has been convicted of a contravention of any provision of any of the sections of this Act, mentioned in section one hundred and one is afterwards convicted of an offence against any provision of any of the said sections, such conviction shall be deemed a conviction for a second offence, within the meaning of the said section, and may be dealt with and punished accordingly, although the two convictions may have been under different sections.

Conviction as for first offence non abstante.

114. A conviction may in any case be had as for a first offence notwithstanding that there may have been a prior conviction or convictions for the same or any other offence.

Several offences on one day. Proviso.

115. Convictions for several offences may be made under this Act, although such offences may have been committed on the same day; but the increased penalty or punishment herein-before imposed shall only be incurred or awarded in the case of offences committed on different days, and after information laid for a first offence.

Convictions, &c. not void for defects, in certain cases

116. No conviction or warrant for enforcing the same or any other process or proceeding under this Act shall be held insufficient or invalid by reason of any variance between the information and the conviction, or by reason of any other defect in form or substance, provided it can be understood from such conviction, warrant, process or proceeding, that the same was made for an offence against some provision of this Act, within the jurisdiction of the justice, justices or magistrate who made or signed the same, and provided there is evidence to prove such offence, and that it can be understood from such conviction, warrant, or process, that the appropriate penalty or punishment for such offence was intended to be thereby adjudged.

Proceedings on application to quash conviction on ground of variance, &c.

2. Upon any application to quash any such conviction, or the warrant for enforcing the same, or other process or proceeding, whether in appeal or upon habeas corpus, or by way of certiorari or otherwise, the court or judge to which such appeal is made or to which such application has been made upon habeas corpus or by way of certiorari, or otherwise, shall dispose of such appeal or application upon the merits, notwithstanding any such variance or defect as aforesaid; and in all cases where it appears that the merits have been tried, and that the conviction, warrant, process, or proceeding is sufficient and valid under this section or otherwise, such conviction, warrant, process, or proceeding shall be affirmed, or shall not be quashed (as the case may be); and such court or judge may, in any case, amend the same if necessary, and any conviction, warrant, process or proceeding so affirmed or affirmed and amended, shall be enforced in the same manner as convictions affirmed on appeal, and the costs thereof shall be recoverable as if originally awarded.

Who may prosecute.

117. Any person may be prosecutor or complainant under this Act.

Who shall not try a complaint under this Act.

118. No License Commissioner or Inspector of Licenses who is a justice, shall try or adjudicate upon any complaint for an infraction of any of the provisions of this Act committed within the limits of the License District for which he is a Commissioner or Inspector; except that this section shall not be construed to apply to a Judge, or Junior Judge or Deputy Judge of a county, a Judge of Sessions, or a Recorder.

119. All the provisions of the Act intituled "An Act respecting the duties of Justices of the Peace, out of Sessions, in relation to Summary Convictions and Orders," and the Acts already passed, or which may be hereafter passed, amending the same, shall apply to all prosecutions and proceedings under this Act, so far as the same are consistent with this Act: 32 & 33 Vict. c. 31. to apply to proceedings under this Act.

2. The Magistrate shall in all cases reduce to writing the evidence of the witnesses examined before him, and shall read the same over to such witnesses, who shall sign the same. Evidence to be reduced to writing.

120. Whenever a licensee is convicted of any offence against the provisions of this Act, a record thereof shall be endorsed on the license of the person convicted, and the following provisions shall have effect, that is to say:— Endorsement of conviction on license, and its effect.

1. The magistrate before whom any licensed person is accused, shall require such person to produce and deliver to him the license under which such person carries on business, and the summons shall state that such production will be required: Production of license.

2. If such person is convicted, the court shall cause the short particulars of such conviction and the penalty imposed, to be endorsed on his license before it is returned to the offender: Conviction; and penalty imposed to be endorsed.

3. The Chief Inspector shall enter the particulars respecting such conviction, or such of them as the case may require, in the register of licenses kept by him under this Act: Entry in register of licenses.

4. Where the conviction of any such person has the effect of causing the forfeiture of the license or of disqualifying any person for the purposes of this Act, the license shall be retained by the magistrate, and notice of such forfeiture or disqualification shall be sent to the Chief Inspector of the proper District. In case of conviction disqualifying licensee.

121. The magistrate on any conviction against a licensed person, for an offence against this Act, shall send forthwith to the Chief Inspector of the proper district, a certificate of such conviction. Certificate of conviction to be sent to Inspector.

122. For the additional duties imposed by the two next preceding sections, the magistrate shall be entitled to charge as costs in the proceedings the following sums:— Allowance to Magistrate.

For making out and forwarding certificate of conviction to the Chief Inspector the sum of fifty cents. For recording the conviction on the license, the sum of fifty cents.

Appeals.

In Cases under Section 91.

123. In all cases of prosecution for any offence against any of the provisions of this Act, for which any penalty or punishment is prescribed by the ninety-first section of this Act, the conviction or order of the Justices or Magistrate, as the case may be, shall, except as herein-after mentioned, be final and conclusive, and, except as herein-after mentioned, there shall be no appeal against such conviction or order to the Court of General Sessions of the Peace, or to any other court. No appeal allowed in cases under section 91. Exception.

2. An appeal shall lie from a conviction for any offence for which a penalty or punishment is prescribed by the ninety-first section of this Act, in Ontario, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Manitoba, British Columbia, and Prince Edward Island, to the Judge of the County Court of the county in which the conviction is had, or to the judge of a superior court, sitting in Chambers without a jury, and in the Province of Quebec, to a Judge of the Superior Court of the judicial district in which the conviction is had, provided a notice in writing of such appeal is given to the prosecutor or complainant within five days after the date of the said conviction, subject to the following provisions. Appeal under section 91. In certain Provinces. In Quebec. Conditions.

3. The person convicted, in case he is in custody, shall either remain in custody until the hearing of such appeal before the said judge, or (where the penalty of imprisonment with or without hard labour is adjudged) shall enter into a recognizance with two sufficient sureties, in the sum of two hundred dollars each, before the convicting magistrate, conditioned personally to appear before the said judge, and to try such appeal and abide his judgment thereupon, and to pay such costs as he may order; and in case the appeal is against a conviction whereby only a penalty or sum of money is adjudged to be paid, the appellant may, (although the order directs imprisonment in default of payment,) instead of remaining in custody as aforesaid, give such recognizance as aforesaid, Offender to remain in custody or give security. Provision for recognizance or deposit in certain cases.

or may deposit with the magistrate convicting, the amount of the penalty and costs, and a further sum of twenty-five dollars to answer the respondent's costs of appeal:

Liberation of prisoner on recognizance or deposit.

4. Upon such recognizance being given or deposit made, the Magistrate shall liberate such person if in custody, and shall forthwith deliver or transmit by registered letter, post-paid, the depositions and papers in the case, with the recognizance or deposit as the case may be, to the clerk of the court of which the judge to whom the appeal is made is the judge or a member.

Procedure on appeal.

124. The practice and procedure upon such appeal, and the proceedings thereon shall, as nearly as possible, be as follows:—

Summons for cause to be shown.

1. Within ten days after the date of the conviction, but not afterwards, unless it is made to appear to the judge that the delay arose wholly from the default of the convicting magistrate, the judge, if he is of opinion from the evidence that the conviction may be erroneous, may grant a summons calling upon the County Crown Attorney, in any Province in which there is a County Crown Attorney, and the prosecutor, to show cause why the conviction should not be quashed:

Time limited.

2. Such summons shall not be granted in any case after the expiration of one month from the date of the conviction:

Proceedings on return of summons.

3. Upon the return of the summons the judge, upon hearing the parties, may either affirm or quash the conviction, or, if he thinks fit, may hear the evidence of such other witness or witnesses as may be produced before him, or the further evidence of any witness already examined, and may then make an order affirming or amending and affirming or quashing the conviction as he may think just, and may order the payment of costs, and may fix the amount thereof:

Effect of Judge's order.

4. Upon the production of the judge's order affirming or amending and affirming the conviction, the magistrate who has made the conviction shall, if the case is one in which a recognizance has not been given, issue his warrant for payment of such further sum for costs as the sum deposited with him is insufficient to pay; if the conviction is quashed the judge shall order a return of the money deposited, and shall have authority to order payment of such sum for costs, as he may tax and allow; and unless the sum is paid by the complainant, the magistrate shall issue his warrant to levy the costs:

Proceeding when imprisonment is awarded and conviction affirmed.

5. If by the conviction it is adjudged that the person convicted should be imprisoned and the conviction is affirmed, or amended and affirmed, or if the person convicted fails duly to prosecute the appeal, the judge shall issue his warrant for the commitment to the proper gaol or other place of imprisonment of the person convicted, and unless such person, within one week thereafter surrenders himself into the custody of the constable or other officer entrusted with the execution of the warrant, the condition of the recognizance shall be deemed broken and the recognizance forfeited, and upon proof of the default being made, by affidavit of the officer or otherwise, the judge may certify the default on the back of the recognizance, and shall thereupon transmit the recognizance to the Clerk of the Peace or to the proper officer in that behalf according to the practice of the court of which the judge is a member:

Escheat of recognizance and effect thereof.

6. Such recognizance shall be thereafter proceeded upon at the General Sessions of the Peace in the same manner as a recognizance taken upon an appeal to the sessions from a summary conviction may be proceeded upon; and the said certificate shall be deemed primâ facie evidence of the default of the defendant; but such proceedings shall not relieve the person convicted from undergoing the term of imprisonment to which he was sentenced, and the warrant of the judge issued in that behalf, or any new warrant issued by him, may be executed in any part of the Province in which the conviction was had, in the same manner and subject to the like conditions as a warrant of a justice for the apprehension of an offender:

Proceeding when money penalty only is imposed.

7. If by the conviction only a money penalty is imposed, the judge, upon being satisfied by affidavit or otherwise, that default has been made upon a recognizance given on an appeal in such a case, shall certify in like manner as is provided in sub-section five of this section, and similar proceedings shall thereupon be had in respect of such recognizance.

Term of imprisonment.

8. In case it is proved to the satisfaction of the judge that the person convicted had previously served a portion of his term, the judge shall only issue his warrant for the commitment of the defendant for the residue of the term of imprisonment to which he was sentenced; the judge may, if he thinks fit, transmit his said warrant to the convicting magistrate in order that he may place the same in the hands of a constable for execution.

Execution of warrant.

9. Any warrant issued under this section may be directed in the same manner, and executed by the like officers, as a warrant of commitment upon a summary conviction under any Act of the Parliament of Canada heretofore passed.

Appeal to be heard on the merits.

10. In all cases of appeal to a judge from any conviction under this Act had before a magistrate, the Judge to whom such appeal is made shall hear and determine the charge or complaint on which such conviction has been had, upon the merits, notwithstanding any defect of form or otherwise in such conviction; and if the person charged or complained against is found to have been guilty, the conviction shall be affirmed and the judge shall amend the same if necessary.

Disposal of moneys deposited.

11. The magistrate shall retain any moneys deposited with him as aforesaid for the period of six months, unless judgment is sooner given, and upon the judgment in appeal being given, or upon the expiration of six months from the day of the date of the conviction, the magistrate shall pay over such moneys to the person or persons entitled thereto, in accordance with the judgment; and if the judgment in appeal is not delivered within six months from the day of the date of the conviction, the conviction shall stand, but the respondent shall not be entitled to any costs of appeal; and in case imprisonment was adjudged by the conviction, the convicting magistrate shall, or any other magistrate may, issue his warrant for the commitment of the person convicted for any portion of the term which he has not served, and no further proceedings shall be taken on the appeal.

Effect of delay of judgment.

No removal by certiorari, &c.

12. No conviction affirmed or amended and affirmed on appeal by the judge shall be quashed for want of form, or be removed by certiorari into any of Her Majesty's superior courts of record; and no warrant or commitment shall be held void by reason of any defect therein, provided it is therein alleged that the party has been convicted and there is a good and valid conviction to sustain the same.

Powers of the Judge.

13. In every process and in all proceedings before a judge under this section, the judge shall, with reference to the matters herein contained, have all the powers which belong to or might be exercised by him in the court of which he is a member; and all necessary process may be issued from the office of the clerk of the court.

Forfeiture of license on third conviction.

125. When not otherwise provided, a third conviction of a licensed person under this Act for any violation or contravention of the provisions of this Act shall ipso facto operate as a forfeiture of his license, and disqualify the person convicted from obtaining a license for three years thereafter.

Penalties how disposed of.

126. The penalties in money under this Act or any portion of them which may be recovered, shall be paid to the convicting magistrate, and two-thirds thereof shall by him, in case an Inspector is the prosecutor or complainant, be paid to the Chief Inspector, and in case such Inspector is not the prosecutor or complainant, then two-thirds thereof shall be paid to the treasurer of the municipality wherein the offence was committed, and the remaining one-third shall be paid to the prosecutor or complainant.

Evidence, &c.

Inspector's certificate to be evidence.

127. In any prosecution or proceeding under this Act, in which proof is required respecting any license, a certificate purporting to be under the hand of the Chief Inspector of the district shall be primâ facie proof of the existence of a license, and of the identity of the person to whom the same was granted or transferred; and the production of such certificate shall be sufficient primâ facie evidence of the facts therein stated and of the authority of the Chief Inspector, without any proof of his appointment or signature.

Resolution of Board, how authenticated.

As to copies thereof.

128. Any resolution of a Board passed under the ninth or twenty-sixth sections of this Act, shall be sufficiently authenticated by being signed by the Chairman of the Board which passed the same; and a copy of any such resolution written or printed, and certified to be a true copy by any member of such Board, shall be deemed authentic, and be received in evidence in any court of justice without proof of any such signature, unless it is specially pleaded or alleged that the signature to any such original resolution has been forged.

What shall be deemed a place where liquor is sold.

129. Any house, shop, room or other place in which it is proved that there exists a bar, counter, beer pumps, kegs, jars, decanters, tumblers, glasses, or any other appliances or preparations similar to those usually found in taverns and shops where liquors are accustomed to be sold or trafficked in, shall be deemed to be a place in which liquors are kept or had for the purpose of being sold, bartered or traded in, in contravention of the eighty-third section of this Act, unless the contrary is proved by the defendant in any prosecution; and the occupant of such house, shop, room or other place shall be taken conclusively to be the person who has, or keeps therein, such liquors for sale, barter or traffic therein.

What shall be evidence of sale or disposal.

130. In proving the sale or disposal, gratuitous or otherwise, or consumption of liquor, for the purpose of any proceeding relative to any offence under this Act, it shall not be necessary to show that any money actually passed, or any liquor was actually consumed, if the magistrate hearing the case is satisfied that a transaction in the nature of a sale or other disposal actually took place, or that any consumption of liquor was about to take place; and proof of consumption or intended consumption of liquor on premises under license, or in respect to which a license is required under this Act, by some person other than the occupier of the premises, shall be evidence that such liquor was sold to the person consuming, or being about to consume, or carrying away the same, as against the holder of the license or the occupant of the said premises.

Evidence of sale during prohibited hours.

131. In cities, towns and incorporated villages, in all cases where any person or persons other than members of the family or household of the keeper of a licensed hotel or saloon, is or are found frequenting or present, or where gas or other light is seen burning in the bar-room of such hotel or saloon where liquor is trafficked in, at any time during which the sale or other disposal of liquors is prohibited by any provision of this Act, any such fact, when proved, shall be deemed and taken as primâ facie evidence that a sale or other disposal of liquors by the keeper of such licensed place has taken place contrary to the provisions of the sixty-sixth section of this Act; and such keeper may thereupon be convicted of an offence against the said section, and shall, upon conviction, be subject to the punishment prescribed in and by the eighty-eighth section of this Act.

Responsibility of occupant of place where such sale is made.

132. The occupant of any house, shop, room or other place in which any sale, barter or traffic of liquors, or any matter, act or thing in contravention of any of the provisions of this Act, has taken place, shall be personally liable to the penalty and punishment prescribed in the eighty-eighth and eighty-ninth sections of this Act, as the case may be, notwithstanding such sale, barter or traffic be made by some other person, who cannot be proved to have so acted under or by the directions of such occupant; and proof of the fact of such sale, barter or traffic, or other act, matter or thing, by any person in the employ of such occupant, or who is suffered to be or remain in or upon the premises of such occupant, or to act in any way for such occupant, shall be conclusive evidence that such sale, barter or traffic, or other act, matter or thing, took place with the authority and by the direction of such occupant.

What particulars need not be deposed to.

133. In any prosecution under this Act for the sale or other disposal of liquor without the license required by law, it shall not be necessary that any witness should depose directly to the precise description of the liquor sold or bartered or the precise consideration therefor, or to the fact of the sale or other disposal having taken place with his participation or to his own personal and certain knowledge, but the justices or magistrate trying the case, so soon as it appears to them or him that the circumstances in evidence sufficiently establish the infraction of law complained of, shall put the defendant on his defence, and in default of his rebuttal of such evidence, shall convict him accordingly.

Proof of defendant's license to be given.

134. In any prosecution under this Act, whenever it appears that the defendant has done any act or been guilty of any omission in respect of which, were he not duly licensed, he would be liable to some penalty under this Act, it shall be incumbent upon the defendant to prove that he is duly licensed, and that he did the said act lawfully.

135. The fact of any person, not being a licensed person, keeping up any sign, writing, painting or other mark, in or near to his house or premises, or having such house fitted up with a bar or other place containing bottles or casks displayed so as to induce a reasonable belief that such house or premises is or are licensed for the sale of any liquor, or that liquor is sold or served therein, or that there is on such premises more liquor than is reasonably required for the persons residing therein, shall be deemed primâ facie evidence of the unlawful sale of liquor by such person. What shall be deemed evidence of unlawful sale.

136. The production of a license which on its face purports to be duly issued, and which were it duly issued, would be a lawful authority to the defendant for such act or omission, shall be primâ facie evidence that the defendant is so authorised; and in all cases the signature to and upon any instrument purporting to be a valid license shall primâ facie be taken to be genuine. Effect of production of license.

Witnesses.

137. In any prosecution under this Act the magistrate trying the case may summon any person represented to him as a material witness in relation thereto; and if such person refuses or neglects to attend pursuant to such summons, the magistrate may issue his warrant for the arrest of such person; and he shall thereupon be brought before the magistrate, and if he refuses to be sworn or to affirm, or to answer any question touching the case, he may be committed to the common gaol of the county or place or to a lock-up, there to remain until he consents to be sworn or to affirm and to answer. Summoning and attendance of witnesses.

138. Any person summoned as a party to, or as a witness in any proceeding under this Act, may, by the summons, be required to produce, at the time and place appointed for his attendance, all books and papers, accounts, deeds and other documents in his possession, custody or control, relating to any matter connected with the said proceeding, saving all just exceptions to such production; and shall be liable to the same penalties for non-production of such books, papers or documents, as he would incur by refusal or neglect to attend, pursuant to such summons, or to be sworn or to answer any question touching the case. Party or witness may be required to produce books, &c. Penalty for non-production.

139. Every person, other than the defendant, summoned or examined as a witness in any prosecution brought under this Act, is bound to answer all questions put to him, and which are pertinent to the issue, notwithstanding that his answers may disclose facts tending to subject him to any penalty imposed by this Act; but such evidence shall not be used against him in any prosecution. All questions pertinent to the issue must be answered.

140. On the trial of any information or complaint under the provisions of this Act the person charged, or husband of such person, shall be competent and compellable to give evidence as a witness in the said matter. Certain parties may be examined as witnesses.

Municipalities under the Temperance Act.

141. Nothing in the foregoing provisions of this Act shall be construed to affect or impair any of the provisions of "The Canada Temperance Act, 1878;" and no hotel, saloon or shop license shall be issued or take effect within any county, city, town, incorporated village or township in Canada within which the second part of the said Act has been brought into force as by the said Act provided, or within which any byelaw for prohibiting the sale of liquor under "The Temperance Act of 1864" or any other Act is in force. Provisions of 41 Vict. c. 16. not impaired.

142. A Board of Commissioners may, notwithstanding that such Act or any such byelaw affects the whole of any county, be nominated therefor; and the said Board and the Inspectors shall have, discharge and exercise all such powers and duties respectively for preventing the sale or disposal of, or traffic in liquor contrary to the said Acts or this Act as they respectively have or should exercise or perform under this Act. But Commissioners and Inspectors may be appointed under this Act.

Their duties as to the Temperance Act.

143. The Board and the Inspectors shall exercise and discharge all their respective powers and duties for the enforcement of the provisions of "The Canada Temperance Act, 1878," and "The Temperance Act of 1864," as well as of this Act, so far as the same apply, within the limits of any county, city, incorporated village or township or parish, in which the first mentioned Act or any byelaw under the secondly mentioned Act is in force.

As to wholesale license.

144. A wholesale license to be obtained under and subject to the provisions of this Act, shall be necessary, in order to authorize or make lawful any sale of liquor in the quantities allowed under the provisions of "The Canada Temperance Act, 1878."

Sale without license a contravention of this Act, notwithstanding Temperance Act.

145. The sale of liquor without license in any municipality, where "The Canada Temperance Act, 1878," is in force, shall nevertheless be a contravention of sections eighty-three and eighty-four of this Act, and the several provisions of this Act shall have full force and effect in every such municipality, except in so far as such provisions relate to granting licenses for the sale of liquor by retail.

Certain Provincial Acts to be valid until 1st May 1884.

146. Until the first day of May in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-four all the laws of Provincial Legislatures of the Dominion passed for regulating or restraining the traffic in liquors shall be and they are hereby made as valid and effective to all intents and purposes as if enacted by the Parliament of Canada.

When this Act shall come into force.

147. Subject to the provisions in the next preceding section contained, this Act shall come into force on the first day of January, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-four, but the licenses to be issued thereunder shall not be operative until the first day of May following.

No. 1.

MEMORANDUM by MR. GEORGE STEPHEN, President of the Canadian Pacific Railway, explaining a SCHEME for the SETTLEMENT of IRISH FAMILIES in the CANADIAN NORTH-WEST.

FOR the sum of 1,000,000*l.* sterling, 10,000 small farmers with their families, averaging five persons to each family, say 50,000 people in all, can be comfortably brought from their homes in Ireland to the New Canadian North-West, and each family provided with 160 acres of the finest wheat growing lands, a comfortable wooden house, a cow, and the implements necessary to enable them to begin the cultivation of their land, including the cost of ploughing and seeding a few acres for their first year's crop.

The money required, to be provided by the Government and advanced, by way of loan, to the North-West Land Company of Canada, and to such other Corporations interested in the Settlement of the Canadian North-West, as might wish to join in the enterprise, and be able to furnish the Government with such security for the repayment of the loan as might be required.

The loan to be for 10 years without interest.

In consideration of this loan the Land Company to undertake the work of transplanting and settling in the North-West, under the supervision of the Government, these 10,000 families, assuming all the risks incident to the business, and the responsibility of the repayment of the money advanced by the Government.

The Land Company would take a lien on the 160 acres of land given to each family to the amount of 100*l.*, on which the emigrant would be charged interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum after the first two years of his settlement; the emigrant to have the right to pay off the principal at any time.

The chief inducement to the Land Company to undertake this work lies in the increased value that would be given to its own lands adjoining those upon which the emigrants settled.

This scheme is based on the assumption that the emigrants sent out are fit for agricultural work, and have energy and ability to take care of themselves, after getting the fair start thus provided for them.

It will thus be seen that the redundant population of Ireland may be materially reduced without any further cost to the Government than the interest of 100*l.* for 10 years for each family—say 2*l.* 10*s.* per annum or 25*l.* for the whole 10 years.

May 18, 1883.

MY LORD,

I HAD the honour to send to your Lordship to-day a telegraphic message as follows :—

"18th May. Your telegram yesterday*, my Government reply as follows. Canada gives 160 acres free to each head of family on three years' residence. Pecuniary aid up to one hundred pounds operates as statutory mortgage. Government withholds grant till mortgage satisfied. Settlers under safeguard of laws, which give ample protection to all inhabitants. Insuperable objections to Government becoming directly or indirectly creditor of settlers."

I have now the honour to enclose a copy of an approved report of a Committee of the Privy Council, on which the above telegram was founded.

I have, &c.

Enclosure in No. 3.

CERTIFIED COPY of a REPORT of a COMMITTEE of the HONOURABLE the PRIVY COUNCIL for CANADA, approved by HIS EXCELLENCY the GOVERNOR-GENERAL in COUNCIL on the 18th May 1883.

THE Committee of Council have had before them a cable message from the Earl of Derby to your Excellency of yesterday's date, stating that Her Majesty's Government would advance up to one million pounds to be payable without interest in ten years, provided Dominion Government engages to secure repayment and become responsible for treatment of immigrants according to the conditions of Stephen's scheme.

After full consideration the Committee of Council would submit to your Excellency for your approval the following draft of reply by cable :—

"Canada gives 160 acres free to each head of family on three years' residence. "Pecuniary aid up to one hundred pounds operates as statutory mortgage. Govern- "ment withholds grant till mortgage satisfied. Settlers under safeguard of laws which "give ample protection to all inhabitants. Insuperable objections to Government becom- "ing directly or indirectly creditor of settlers." All which is respectfully submitted.

Downing Street, June 16, 1883.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Despatch of the 18th ultimo,† enclosing a copy of an approved report of a Committee of the Privy Council for Canada on the subject of the proposed scheme of emigration from the west of Ireland to Canada.

A copy of your telegram of the 18th ultimo,‡ founded on the report referred to, having been forwarded to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland for his information, he has called attention to the fact that the Canadian Government were asked to guarantee the security of the companies, not to be creditors of the settlers, and I accordingly addressed to you on the 14th instant the following telegram :—"Irish emigration. Despatch, 18th May, "Dominion Government were asked to guarantee security of companies not be "creditors of settlers."

GOVERNOR-GENERAL THE MARQUIS OF LORNE, K.T., G.C.M.G., to the RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF DERBY. (Received July 17, 1883.)

MY LORD, Cascapedia, June 30, 1883.

I HAD the honour to send to your Lordship, on the 25th instant, a telegraphic message, as follows :—

"June 25.—Canadian Government cannot borrow million or give guarantee without previous sanction of Parliament. They believe companies able to give satisfactory security without Government guarantee."

No. 6.

J. F. BOYD, ESQ., to COLONIAL OFFICE.

MY LORD, London, January 10, 1884.

THE proper moment seems to have arrived for making a fresh and definite application in regard to the scheme of State-directed emigration and colonisation, which was submitted to you by a deputation on the 18th June last.

Your Lordship then recommended consultation with the Right Hon. the President of the Local Government Board and the Chancellor of the Exchequer; and it was in consequence of what passed in conference upon the matter shortly afterwards with Sir Charles Dilke, that I recently prepared the enclosed experimental scheme, designed primarily to benefit London, where severe distress, caused by want of employment, notoriously prevails, yet applicable to the whole of Great Britain.

I addressed it by letter, dated November 21, 1883 (of which copy is attached), to Mr. Childers, who finally informed me that although he had followed the progress of the movement with strong interest, and was glad to receive my communication, yet any initiatory action would be, not for him, but rather within the province of the Colonial Office.

Accordingly, I beg to ask the favour of your Lordship's early re-consideration of the subject, and respectfully to inquire whether you are now prepared to recommend the adoption of this scheme in its actual shape or otherwise.

Your Lordship will observe from the passage marked × in my letter to Mr. Childers, that I was able, when it was written, to fortify the proposal with a valuable pecuniary guarantee. I am not to-day precisely in that position, but should you express a distinct readiness on the side of Her Majesty's Government to transact the business upon the bases indicated, I will, of course, do my best to complete the negotiations in the way originally intended, and anticipate no difficulty in doing so.

It may be useful to forward herewith a few out of many newspaper articles* advocating this particular project, and I, therefore, send herewith leaders of

The "Morning Post" - - - -	August 11.
The "Evening News" - - - -	November 5.
The "Daily Chronicle" - - -	December 1.
The "Tablet" - - - -	" "

Although the utmost publicity has been given to this scheme, which at least two London newspapers have printed in full, there has not appeared, I believe, a single notice hostile to it, whether in the Radical, the Liberal, the Conservative, the mercantile, or the religious press; and the character and real weight of such opposition as I have encountered at some public meetings are sufficiently explained by a letter in the "Times" of November 21, from the Vicar of Shoreditch, and by another bearing my signature in the "Times," of November 8.

My opponents were last night admiring listeners at St. James' Hall of the American socialist, who found himself forced to admit the fact of that over population here for which State-directed emigration is, unquestionably, an effective remedy.

In the course of your Lordship's reply to the deputation in June 18, you pointed out the necessity for satisfying the public upon certain points. I trust you will share my opinion that none of the possible objections you enumerated can be urged against the accompanying scheme; offering, as it does, every desirable guarantee to the emigrant-settler, the Colony, the State, and the Treasury.

I remain, &c.

Enclosure in No. 6.

The Right Hon. Hugh C. E. Childers, M.P., Chancellor of the Exchequer, &c.

Sir,

You are aware that on the 18th June last, a large deputation waited upon the Earl of Derby, at the Colonial Office, in order to convey to his Lordship resolutions that, on the 6th June, had been carried with enthusiasm at a crowded public meeting in the East End, attended by about 2,000 persons. The first of these resolutions was:—

"That State-directed emigration and colonisation is, for the United Kingdom, a necessity of the time; and that Mr. Boyd's scheme, dated February 14, 1883, is a practical method of aiding the unemployed poor, diminishing pauperism, reducing local rates, and developing our Colonial resources, deserving the most careful consideration of Her Majesty's Government."

The mover was Mr. H. W. Rowland, General Secretary of the Amalgamated Cab Drivers' Society, a delegate to the Trades' Union Congress, a Radical and land nationaliser; the seconder was the Vicar of Shoreditch, who is Liberal in politics; the mover of the amendment in opposition, for which from 20 to 30 persons in the great assembly voted, being a Mr. Aaron, a local beerseller. The same resolution was carried on the 10th August following at another public meeting, held in the Egyptian Hall of the Mansion House, presided over by the Earl of Shaftesbury, who was supported by the Archbishop of Canterbury, being moved on that occasion by a Liberal peer, Lord Braye, and seconded by Mr. H. S. Northcote, C.B., M.P. for Exeter; while for the opposition amendment only about a dozen hands were held up. A resolution was thereupon moved by Mr. Coope, M.P. for Middlesex, supported by Mr. Alfred Simmons, Secretary of the Kent and Sussex Labourers' Union, and Mr. George Mitchell, M.L.S.B., and carried against four opponents, to the effect that with a view, in the first instance, of aiding the unemployed London poor Her Majesty's Government should be urged to make an experimental trial of the scheme.

The substance of Lord Derby's reply to the deputation which was introduced by Sir J. E. Eardley-Wilmot, Bart, M.P. (reported verbatim in the "Times" of June 20, 1883), was that Parliament might be willing to commit itself to a large expenditure once for all if it saw a prospect of the money coming back, and being used over and over again for the like purpose; that there was now, he feared, a congestion in the labour market in the East End of London; that the difficulty to be dealt with was permanent and ever growing, since the volume of our capital and business did not increase correspondingly with the population, which grew at the rate of something like 1,000 daily, the area of the British Isles remaining a fixed quantity; that, for this, emigration was one of the best and most effective remedies; that, speaking for the Colonial Office, he did not know any great difficulty need be apprehended, while, with the Colonial Governments it would, no doubt, be possible to make arrangements; that the Local Government Board and the Chancellor of the Exchequer must be consulted; that he was prepared to express his opinion of the scheme to his colleagues; and that it would be well to keep the subject before the public.

The concluding recommendation has been followed to the best of my ability.

In submitting the project (which is applicable to the whole of Great Britain) to you, I am happy to say that it is my good fortune to be in a position now to fortify it with a proposition of a most important and an exceptional kind; one which will, I hope, both commend it especially to yourself, and invest it with very high value in the opinion of the general public.

Provided the scheme is adopted by Her Majesty's Government, I have every reason to anticipate I shall be enabled to furnish substantial and sufficient guarantees that the total interest payable to the Treasury for the eight years, as provided and shown in clause 13, upon the estimated sum of one million sterling to be advanced to the Commissioners, shall be paid by them, or in the event of any default not caused by laches on their part, shall be made good to the Treasury to the extent of such default; the guarantors, in the event of their being so called upon, to become creditors of the Emigration and Colonization Commission for the sums they may have had to make good; but such claims on the said guarantors upon the Commission only to rank second to the first charge that the Treasury will have over the entire nett assets of the Commission (as explained in clause 14), and after such first charge shall have been fully satisfied, or provided for to the satisfaction of the Treasury. It follows that the taxpayers of the United Kingdom will be completely secured against loss, and the transactions will be conducted free of charge to them, while on the other hand, as will appear from clauses 8 and 14, a potential source of gain becomes theirs.

The guarantors will naturally stipulate for fair and reasonably effective control over the selection of the emigrants.

The 240,000*l.* guaranteed, to be secured in any way desired by the Treasury.

In regard to the necessity for Government intervention, and to the practicability of obtaining suitable emigrants from among the unemployed in London and other British cities or towns, I may ask your attention to my letter printed in to-day's "Times," and to the following letter addressed to me on May 3rd last, by Mr. Joseph Arch, President of the National Agricultural Labourers' Union :—

"I have carefully read and considered your scheme of State-directed emigration and colonisation enclosed in your circular-letter of the 5th April. As a practical labourer, well acquainted with Canada, I am able to say that your proposals can easily be executed if Government see fit to adopt them. In the country districts of Great Britain there is, however, now no surplus labour; on the contrary, the land needs more and better cultivation (aided by adequate capital) than it receives under the existing system. My views regarding our land laws are well known to the world, so that it is unnecessary to say more here upon that important branch of a great subject. But, from towns and cities throughout the kingdom generally (whither multitudes have been driven, by the operation of bad land laws, from village and hamlet) there is no disputing a large surplus population may be taken away to our colonies with national advantage, under the machinery and methods proposed in your scheme; very careful discrimination in selecting the people who ought to go being, of course, necessary. So far then, but to that extent only, I wish well to your proposals, and am ready to support them. It is a national misfortune that the attention of Parliament is not devoted, before everything else, to the examination of these questions, on the right answers to which such momentous issues turn."

The statement that in country districts "there is now no surplus labour" is too sweeping. It would be easy to name "country districts" in Great Britain which are afflicted by an excessive population.

From another letter, written to me by the Earl of Carnarvon, on the 25th ulto., after a tour in Canada, it is proper here to append an extract extremely relevant to the matter in hand :—

"Though quite aware of the objections which can be urged against the State taking a share in the responsibilities and expense of emigration, yet, looking to the severe distress among many classes at home, to the greater opportunities still open to colonists under our flag, and, lastly, to the advantage to the colony itself from the transference to it of some of our surplus labour, provided always that that labour be of a suitable kind, it seems to me that the time has come when the State may, within certain limits and under certain conditions, give assistance towards an emigration to English colonies.

"Among these conditions there are two of such special importance that it is, perhaps, desirable to mention them: first, that security should be taken for repayment to the State, in whole, or in part, of money advanced to the emigrant for his transport and settlement, and I believe that there is no insurmountable difficulty here; secondly, that the emigrant should be, as regards health, strength, and general aptitude, likely to become a good colonist, and consequently, welcome to the land of his adoption.

"To transplant men physically infirm, or agriculturally unfit to earn their livelihood, is simply to promote an exchange from poverty and distress in England to perhaps still greater poverty and distress in another country. In British North America, at least, the principal, if not the only, chance of success is in agricultural pursuits, and an addition to the population of a colonial town is as useless as it is unwelcome.

"I believe that there is a large field of prosperity and happiness in the colonies now open to English labourers provided that they are fit for ordinary agricultural occupations, and that they have the courage and industry to face the rough work of colonial life for the first few years. In such case they are, humanly speaking, almost certain of success."

I have thought it necessary to quote the foregoing from Lord Carnarvon, not only for the sake of the principles laid down, but in order to make it clear what qualifications will be required in the emigrants under the scheme.

There remains to add the expression of an earnest hope you will be so good as to bestow upon what I am now bringing under your notice a consideration commensurate with its importance; and to mention that the number of persons for whom arrangements can be made in Canada next spring and summer must depend upon the date at which Her Majesty's Government intimate their decision to take action.

If you are willing to receive a deputation with a view to hearing what further can be urged in favour of the accompanying scheme, I shall be glad to make the necessary arrangements for as early a day as may suit your convenience, and

I remain, &c.

London, November 21, 1883.

Outlines of a Scheme of State-Directed Emigration and Colonisation.

1. The organisation to be entirely a State one, adequate for the removal, as quickly as possible, from London and other parts of Great Britain of 10,000 men (with their families), to the north-west territory of Canada, with a view to their settlement in the manner herein-after described, upon land that is offered free (see clause 8) by the Dominion Government.

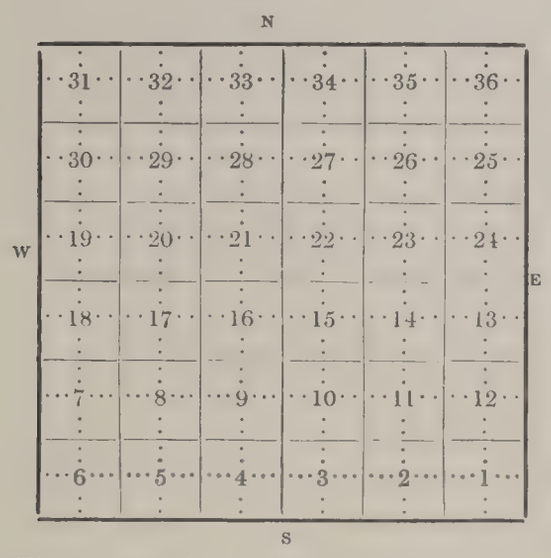
2. The emigrants to be men under 46 years of age, of good character, and must have been at no time convicted of crime. They shall be preferentially chosen if they possess a knowledge of the cultivation of the soil; or (2) if at least they have been accustomed to out-door work; and from the unemployed. The taking single men not members of an emigrating family to be discouraged.

3. A State inspection to be organised, in order to receive applications from, select, and pass, labourers desiring to go; this inspection to be superintended by an official of the Local Government Board, or of the Local Board, as the case may be.

4. Government steamships shall, when convenient, be used for transport, and when and so often as shall be required, vessels other than those belonging to the Government shall be made use of. In both cases the subsidies offered under their system of assisted passages, by the Canadian Government Agency, are to be obtained.

5. The control of the organisation and funds to be vested in an Emigration and Colonisation Commission, consisting of three capable and salaried officials, who will make this their sole business. Two of such three officials to be appointed by Her Majesty's Government, and one to be appointed by the Dominion Government. The head office of this Commission to be in London, with a branch office at Montreal. Power shall be vested in the said Commission to appoint such local commissioners as they may deem necessary, and such local commissioners shall be subject to all such rules and regulations in receipt of such salaries as, and be stationed wherever, the said Commissioners may in their discretion deem fit.

6. After arrangements with Canada have been made, a certain number of artisans and labourers might proceed there (under agreements as to rates of wages) to assist in erecting huts, cottages, &c., under supervision of the Commission, before the first batch of emigrants arrive.

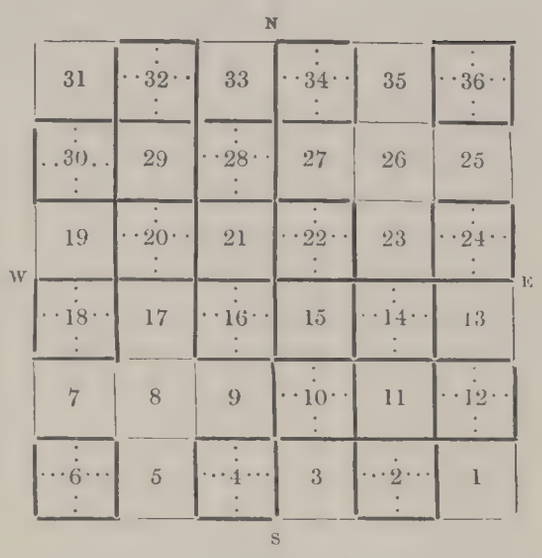


7. The head of a family, before embarking for Canada, shall sign an agreement, undertaking to repay all moneys advanced on their behalf, whether for transport, or under clause 8; and also to proceed to and settle upon the land that may be allotted to him by the Commission or their agent, in accordance with the provisions herein set forth. The emigrants to be sent from the arrival port to their place of destination immediately on arrival of the steamer.

8. The Dominion Government are prepared to co-operate in this scheme by making concessions of land to the Emigration and Colonisation Commission, situated in different parts of the north-west, reasonably near to the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The total amount of such free land grants, it is agreed, shall be 1,600,000 acres. Of these, it is proposed that 800,000 acres shall be absolutely reserved by the Commission, and the remaining 800,000 acres shall be appropriated to the settlement of the emigrants, on farms of 80 acres to each of the 10,000 heads of families.

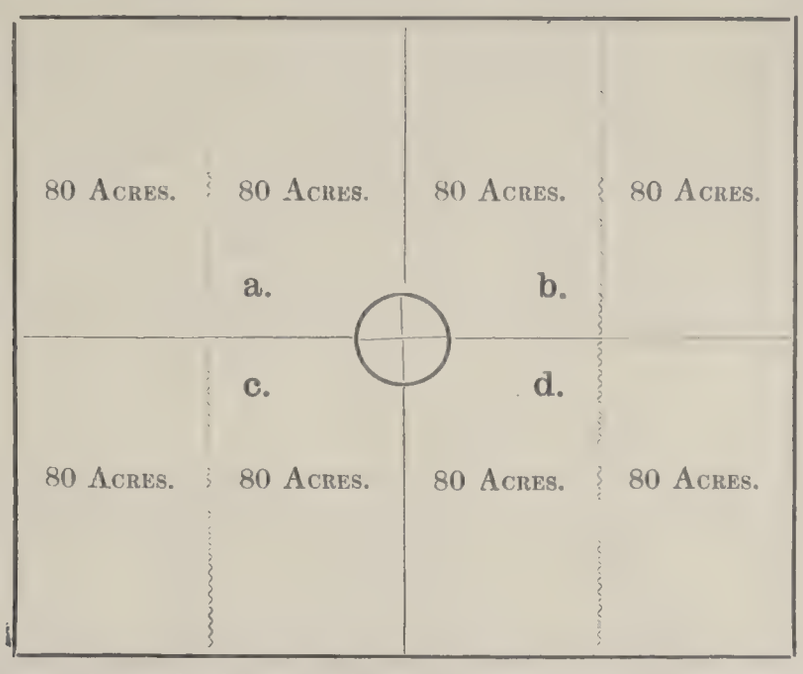
The Canadian north-west is laid out in townships, six miles square, each containing 36 sections of 640 acres each, and these are subdivided into quarter sections of 160 acres.

The diagram A shows the township, with the sections numbered.



A.

The dotted lines show the division of the sections into quarter sections.



Of the 36 sections, as shown above, the Dominion Government holds those numbered 2, 4, 6, 10, 12, 14, 16, 18, 20, 22, 24, 28, 30, 32, 34, and 36, all the even numbers, in fact, except 8 and 26, for free grants and pre-emptions. The Canadian Pacific Railway, Canadian North-west Land, and Hudson's Bay Companies hold the remaining sections, with the exception of Nos. 11 and 29, which are reserved by the Government solely for school purposes. It is these even numbers, in many townships, that would be conceded to the Emigration and Colonisation Commission as shown in B.

B.

The sections marked by the thick and the dotted lines here represent the lands conceded by the Dominion Government.

The following diagram shows the system to be followed in dividing and allotting each section :—

A, B, C, D, are the settlers' lands. The four cottages and byres would be together in the centre shown by the ring. The four outside divisions are the reserved "Commission lands." In disposing of these the original settler, next adjoining each, might have the option of pre-emption. Every man will, on reaching his destination, be set to work, at weekly wages to be fixed by the Commission, under official direction, in order to plough and sow, make roads, &c., &c. All wages paid to him in respect of work fairly chargeable to the allotment which is to be made to him, to be carried to his debit.

9. When the farm upon which a family is to be settled shall be, in the judgment of the local commissioner, ready for them, without further official direction, "possession" shall be given to the male head of such family. It is estimated by the highest authorities that the total amount which will be standing to his debit up to this point, for passage money, railway fare, a comfortable wooden cottage, necessary implements, seed, wages, in respect of his "improvements" of the virgin land, and a per-centage to cover his proportion of management expenses, will not exceed 100*l.*

Prior to being given possession of his allotment the settler shall file an acknowledgment of the debt so incurred, in the Dominion Lands Office, as required by the Act of the Dominion Parliament, 44 Vict. cap. 16. sec. 10*b*, and such debt shall be made a charge against the homestead, subject to the provisions of the said Act.

10. Interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum shall be payable by the settler upon all advances, except that it shall not be charged until one year after the date when he shall have taken "possession" of his allotment, the first payment of six months' interest being made 18 months after such date: or, say, under ordinary circumstances - - - - - - - - - 2 years after leaving England.
During the following - - - - - - - 6 years, interest to be payable by the settler regularly every six months.
The subjoined table, prepared by a gentleman who has himself had many years' experience as a resident in the Canadian North-west, will show the settler's probable position at the end of these - - - 8 years from the date of leaving England.

"In the following calculations, I have made use of the minimum acreage broken by a settler and the minimum yield of wheat per acre. I have taken wheat as my basis, as other grains are about equally profitable:—

1st year of settlement he would have his house and byres erected, and himself and family comfortably settled. In addition to this, if he went out in early spring, he would have 5 acres, say, broken and a partial crop to pay a portion of his first expenses. This partial crop I count for nothing.

"The usual number of acres which a settler can and does break each year in the Canadian North-west ranges from 20 to 40 acres. I have only allowed 10 acres per annum in the foregoing calculations. The usual yield of wheat per acre in the Canadian North-west is from 25 to 30. I have only allowed 20 bushels in my calculations, and the price of wheat ranges from 80 cents (3*s.* 2½*d.*) upwards. I have only allowed 75 cents or 3*s.* My calculations are based on the supposition that there will be no failure of crops. There has been no failure of crops in the Canadian North-West during the past 10 years."

The capital sum represented by the mortgage on the homestead to become due and payable within six months from the end of this period of seven and a half years from entering on possession of the farm; but it may be paid off at any time previously. Until payment in full the patent for the land will not be issued.

11. In the case of the head of a family dying before conveyance of the allotment, his family might be allowed to name somebody to take his place and liabilities: to the local commissioner being reserved a right of veto. Should it be exercised, then the land to lapse into the category of "Commission lands." The cost of the labour actually expended upon such lapsed land would, as a rule, have added to its intrinsic value not less than the total amount of such expenditure. And real loss arising from death, accident, or sickness could be provided for by a special system of insurance at trifling cost, and ought to be so provided against in every case by the Commission, the premiums being carried to the debit of the assured.

12. Some training farms, in size varying up to 960 acres each, ought to be organised by the Commission, to which lads from English orphanages, and able-bodied men quite ignorant of agricultural work might be sent.

13. The funds necessary for executing these plans, according to the methods herein traced, should not exceed one million sterling. They would have to be advanced from the Treasury to the Commission as required (subject to proper control and audit, under regulations to be prescribed by the Treasury), and bear interest at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum. The total interest payable to the Treasury on the advance would not therefore exceed 8 × £30,000 = £240,000 (see Clause 10).

The total estimated amount receivable by the Commission as interest from the settlers is 10,000 × £39 = £390,000 (see Clause 10), so that there is ample margin for defaulters.

14. The security for the funds advanced would include not merely the first charges over the 10,000 farms, with the buildings and improvements, amounting only to=twenty-five shillings per acre; but, in addition, the freehold of the 800,000 acres "Commission lands" (see Clause 8), together with the crops, and in fact the entire nett assets of every kind, of the Emigration and Colonisation Commission. Over these assets the Treasury would hold a first charge to secure their advance.

Sir, Downing Street, January 23, 1884.

I am directed by the Earl of Derby to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 10th instant,* on the subject of State-aided emigration, and in reply I am to inform you that his Lordship has read with interest your proposals, and is of opinion that the principles upon which they are based are such as should afford a good prospect of success.

This department, however, is not in a position to promote actively any emigration scheme, nor could it recommend the Treasury to advance capital for that purpose as suggested by you unless on the application of some strong corporation or other organisation capable of carrying out the scheme practically, and of giving such security for repayments as might be required.

J. F. BOYD, Esq., to COLONIAL OFFICE.

Sir, London, January 29, 1884.

I beg to thank you for your letter dated 23rd instant,* and to express the satisfaction with which I learn that my scheme of State directed emigration, dated November 19, 1883, is approved in principle by the Earl of Derby.

I gather that his Lordship is disposed to recommend its adoption subject to "some strong corporation" engaging to carry out the practical work of selecting, removing, and settling the emigrants, and I have therefore applied to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for co-operation. The directors here have no power to act in such a matter, but copy of your letter was forwarded to the President, Mr. George Stephen, at Montreal, by the last mail.

I am anxious to send him full explanations as to the requirements of the Government by the next mail, and should be much obliged if you would, therefore, be so good as to inform me as soon as convenient whether I correctly interpret Lord Derby's views in supposing that what the Canadian Pacific Railway Company would have to do would be to select, remove, and settle the emigrants under the supervision of the Commissioners to be nominated as provided in clause 5 of the scheme:—

"5. The control of the organisation and funds to be vested in an Emigration and Colonisation Commission, consisting of three capable and salaried officials, who will make this their sole business. Two of such three officials to be appointed by Her Majesty's Government, and one to be appointed by the Dominion Government. The head office of this Commission to be in London, with a branch office at Montreal."

the actual expenses incurred, and interest, being refunded to them by the Treasury.

The following extract from the Dominion Lands Act, 1883 (46 Vict. chap. 17, sec. 38), explains the mode of creating charges on the settlers' allotments in order to secure repayment (in this case, I presume, to the Treasury) of such actual expenses:—

Governor in Council may order advances to immigrants for certain purposes to be a lien upon their homesteads.

"38. If any person or persons thereunto authorised by the Minister of the Interior place immigrants as settlers on homestead lands in Manitoba or the north-west territories, free of expense to the Government, the Governor in Council may order that the expenses or any part thereof, incurred by such person or persons, for the passage money or subsistence in bringing out an immigrant, or for aid in erecting buildings on his homestead, or in providing horses, cattle, farm implements or seed grain for him, may, if so agreed upon by the parties, be made a charge upon the homestead of such immigrant; and in such case the claim for expense incurred on behalf of such immigrant, as above, together with interest thereon, must be satisfied before a patent or certificate for patent shall issue for the land: Provided as follows:—

Proviso.

Conditions on which such lien be allowed.

"(a) That the sum or sums charged for the passage money and subsistence of such immigrant shall not be in excess of the actual cost of the same, as proved to the satisfaction of the Minister of the Interior;

"(b) That an acknowledgment by such immigrant of the debt so incurred shall have been filed in the office of the local agent."

So soon then as an immigrant reached his destination in the North-West, the Company would obtain from him and file in the land office an "acknowledgment of the debt" incurred up to that point for transport and subsistence, and the official certificate of claim thus "made a charge upon the homestead of such immigrant," when vouched by the Commission, might constitute the "security" against which the Treasury would reimburse the Company the amount specified in the said document; a like course being followed from time to time, in each case, as regards other outlay, for buildings, wages, &c.

Under this system of re-imbursing the Company there would be no advance of capital by the Treasury except against mortgage security.

I should be glad to know whether this modus operandi is acceptable to Lord Derby, and I remain, &c.

I am directed by the Earl of Derby to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 29th ultimo* stating that you have applied to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for their co-operation in your scheme of State-aided emigration, and inquiring whether you correctly interpret his Lordship's views in supposing that what the Company would have to do would be to select, remove, and settle the emigrants under the supervision of the Commissioners to be nominated as provided in clause 5 of the scheme, the actual expenses incurred and interest being refunded to them by the Treasury.

In reply I am to inform you that Lord Derby regrets that he is not in a position to state on behalf of Her Majesty's Government whether your present scheme of State-aided emigration or any particular scheme would receive their support, and he had intended in the letter addressed to you from this Department on the 23rd ultimo,† to explain that he could not recommend any scheme to his colleagues unless it were brought forward by persons having the power to carry it into effect.

The CHIEF SECRETARY to the LORD LIEUTENANT OF IRELAND to COLONIAL OFFICE.

Sir, Dublin Castle, March 7, 1884.

With reference to previous correspondence I am directed by the Lord Lieutenant to state that the attention of his Excellency has been called by members of Mr. Tuke's Committee to communications they have received from Mr. Spence, the Secretary of the Ontario Emigration Department, of which I enclose a copy.

His Excellency would be glad if you would be good enough to call the immediate attention of the Secretary of State for the Colonies to the subject.

Lists of emigrants are now being made out, and much dissatisfaction would be caused if those who are provisionally selected for Canada should subsequently be refused.

His Excellency would be quite prepared, should the Dominion Government agree to such a course, to appoint an agent or agents to look after the emigrants on their arrival in Canada; but he desires to act entirely in accordance with the Dominion Government in the matter, and would be unwilling to take any step which has not their entire concurrence and co-operation.

It further occurs to his Excellency that some arrangement might be made with the High Commissioner, under which emigrants desiring to proceed to Canada should be personally inspected by agents of the Colonial Government before they are finally approved.

As time is of great importance in this matter his Excellency would suggest that the Canadian Government should be communicated with by telegram, or, if this is not possible, that a Despatch should be sent to them immediately by post, to which their answer might be sent by wire.

Enclosure in No. 10.

Department of Immigration, Ontario.

Dear Sir, Toronto, February 13, 1884.

I have the honour to enclose a copy of a letter sent to H. Hodgkin, Esq., in reference to the immigration of pauper immigrants. This is sent to you in order that you may see that the Government of Ontario found it necessary to withdraw any special privileges that may have been granted under an arrangement with you, to immigrants sent out under the auspices of the Imperial Government. Will you, therefore, regard this letter as addressed to yourself, and act according to contents.

I have, &c.

Major Gaskell, (Signed) DAVID SPENCE,
Local Government Board, Dublin. Secretary.

Immigration Department, Ontario.

Dear Sir, Toronto, February 13, 1884.

I have the honour, under instructions from the Hon. the Commissioner of Immigration, to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 27th October last, in reference to the prospects of Immigration for the approaching season. It was deemed advisable to wait and see how the immigrants sent out last year under the auspices of the Imperial Government, would fare during the winter, before encouraging more of the same class to follow. So far, their condition is not encouraging, as many of them are now living on charity, and public feeling has been somewhat strongly expressed, in the public press and otherwise, concerning them. This remark really applies to the people sent out by the Unions; but they are so closely associated in the public mind with those sent out by you, that it will be hard to find employment for either class next summer, as the farmers place but little value on their labour, and the people of the cities are afraid of laying the foundations of pauperism. What makes matters worse, a considerable number of families who went to the United States last summer have been sent back to Toronto, and have now to be supported by charity.

The Ontario Government has, therefore, decided that it will no longer be possible to give assistance to any class of workhouse or "union" people either in the way of meals or railway passes. This will apply to the agency at Quebec as well as to all agencies in this Province, nor will this Department assume the responsibility of settling them, or finding employment for them.

Should you send any of that class on your own responsibility, it may be well to appoint an agent here to find work for them, and pay their landing money, &c. Indeed, this would appear to the undersigned to be necessary.

The numbers of union or workhouse people sent out appear to the Commissioner to have considerably exceeded the numbers of that class suggested by Major Gaskell, when here, as likely to be forwarded. They are also inferior, as a class, to those described by him. I do not, in any sense, wish to impute to Major Gaskell a desire to mislead in any way. The difficulties arising in selection are quite understood and appreciated. For these reasons it will not be possible any longer to continue the arrangement made with Major Gaskell in reference to the workhouse or union people who may be forwarded, and therefore, the special privileges which they have been granted under that arrangement must necessarily be withdrawn.

I take the opportunity of stating, for the benefit of your Committee, that while there is ample room in this Province for all able-bodied persons of both sexes who are willing and able to work, yet these two features are essential to the procuring of a livelihood here, namely, ability and willingness to labour. Many persons in the older countries drift into the workhouse from their inability or their unwillingness to earn a livelihood by labour. It is impossible to provide a home here for such people.

I am extremely anxious that you should understand that the foregoing observations are not intended to apply to other than workhouse or union people.

My Lord,

With reference to your Despatch of the 13th of March‖ and enclosures upon the subject of Irish emigration to Canada, I have the honour to inform you that after communication with my Ministers I addressed to you this day a telegram§ to the effect that the change in the arrangements of the Government of the province of Ontario announced by Mr. Spence in his letter to Mr. Hodgkin, of February the 13th,¶ would not affect the policy of the Dominion Government in regard to the promotion of emigration during the present season, and that these arrangements would continue in force except in regard to emigrants of the pauper class.

¶ Enclosure in No. 10.

The action of the Ontario Government in this matter has no doubt had its origin in the dissatisfaction created by the presence during the winter in the city of Toronto of a considerable number of families who have subsisted upon charity; it is also to be in some measure attributed to the jealousy with which, at a time when wages are lower than they have been, the operatives of the province view any considerable accession to the wage-earning class. The action of the province has however been entirely independent of that of the Dominion Government.

It was indeed decided as long ago as 1874 at a conference of the representatives of the various Provincial Governments that the control and direction of all matters connected with the promotion of emigration from Great Britain and Europe to Canada should be vested in and exercised by the Minister of Agriculture at Ottawa.

The Provincial Governments have borne the expense of inland transport after the arrival of the emigrants at the various Dominion agencies. In cases where emigrants have been selected at the port of debarkation by agents employed by the several provinces, these have paid the railway transport from that port. Where such selection has not taken place at the port of debarkation, the Dominion Government has forwarded the emigrants to those points where work was most likely to be obtained. All emigrants are considered to be under Dominion care until they have been delivered either at the provincial agency or at the place of their destination.

In the case of the assisted Irish emigrants who came over last year, special arrangements were made and the province of Ontario assumed the responsibility for a certain number specified by it.

It is to these provincial arrangements for the reception and transmission of emigrants that Mr. Spence's letter has reference.

I have now the honour to enclose copy of a Privy Council Order in which the future policy of the Dominion Government in regard to immigrants from Ireland is stated. I would observe that the stipulation that no assisted passages will in future be given to "inmates of workhouses or persons subsisting on workhouse relief" is intended to guard against the importation, not of persons who during a time of temporary difficulty may have been relieved out of the union funds, but of persons habituated to such assistance and having the usual attributes of chronic pauperism. I have assured my Ministers that it has never been the intention of the Irish Government to send such persons to this country; it is however the case that owing to circumstances which I have already described a widespread impression prevails that persons of this class have been designedly sent here. The use of the expression "union emigrants" to distinguish those who have been sent out through the agency of the Poor Law unions from those selected by other agencies, has I think led to an erroneous impression that the whole of the former class are of the pauper type and consequently objectionable.

It would, I think, be very desirable that every opportunity should be taken of reassuring public opinion here upon this point, and that some steps should be taken, such perhaps as those indicated by Mr. Hamilton, in his letter of the 7th of March,* in order to afford evidence of the desire of the Irish Government to meet in the fullest possible manner the requirements of the Dominion in these respects. An arrangement under which an agent of the Canadian Government would personally inspect and if necessary investigate the antecedents of the emigrants before they proceed to Canada would I think be well received. Such an arrangement might, as Mr. Hamilton suggests, be discussed with the High Commissioner on his return to London.

I observe that in the annual report of the Minister of Agriculture for this year it is stated that the charge for inland transportation from Quebec to Manitoba will be reduced from $30 to $12.

The Right Hon. the Earl of Derby,

Enclosure in No. 14.

CERTIFIED COPY of a REPORT of a COMMITTEE of the HONOURABLE the PRIVY COUNCIL for CANADA, approved by his EXCELLENCY the GOVERNOR GENERAL on the 31st March 1884.

THE Committee of the Privy Council have had under consideration a Despatch dated 13th March 1884, from the Earl of Derby, covering correspondence on the subject of the settlement in Canada of assisted emigrants from Ireland.

* No. 10.

The Acting Minister of Agriculture, to whom the Despatch was referred, reports that in view of the fact of the difficulties which were found in the way of satisfactory settlement of a considerable per centum of the assisted emigrants from the congested districts of the south and south-west of Ireland sent out last year by the Poor Law unions arising from the unsuitability or indisposition of those persons to earn a subsistence for themselves; and also in view of the fact of the prejudice which has been created from this cause against the class of assisted emigrants from the districts in question, he recommends that the dominion assisted passages should not be afforded to inmates of workhouses, nor to persons subsisting on workhouse relief, and further that the Dominion Government should not take any responsibility of settling such persons.

The Acting Minister observes if, however, the Irish Emigration Commissioners send out such persons it should be upon the understanding that they provide the expense of maintenance during the winter in Canada following their arrival, and that one or more of the members of each family, and individual emigrants, shall be of physical ability to earn a living.

The Acting Minister states that the arrangement which has hitherto existed as respects other classes of emigrants remains.

The committee concur in the foregoing report and the recommendations therein made, and they respectfully advise that your Excellency be moved to despatch a cable message in the sense of this report, if approved, to the Earl of Derby, in answer to his Despatch of the 13th of March instant.

EMIGRATION (MR. BOYD'S SCHEME).

RETURN to an Address of the Honourable The House of Commons, dated 20 June 1884;—for,

"COPY of the SCHEME of Mr. Boyd, dated 14th February 1883, relating to EMIGRATION, which was submitted to the Secretary of State for the Colonies by a Deputation from Metropolitan and other Districts on the 18th day of June 1883, and is referred to in page 8 of a RETURN printed by Order of the House of Commons (No. 210), June 1884."

Colonial Office, June 1884. EVELYN ASHLEY.

SCHEME OF STATE-DIRECTED EMIGRATION AND COLONIZATION.

1. THE necessity for a large national system of emigration is found in the fact that the population of the United Kingdom is excessive, and increases at a prodigious rate; hence widely spread distress, much crime and drunkenness (usually allied to misery), and unreasonable competition, evils for which the only practicable ready remedy, if a general upheaval of social foundations is to be avoided, will be found to be national emigration.

2. It is well known that unless new markets are called into being, our foreign trade is likely to decrease steadily; because (a) protective duties hamper us everywhere, and (b) most countries yearly manufacture more of the sorts of goods they used to buy from us. A "new channel" is also indispensable, because there has been such great activity during the last quarter century in building and reconstructing stupendous public works, railways, machinery, manufactories, and maritime tonnage, of a total value impossible to state, but as to which some notion may be gathered from the knowledge that on railways alone 400,000,000 sterling have been expended, all affording means of living for myriads; that little remains to be demolished, erected, or remodelled. Yet the population has increased by 8,000,000, and the agricultural produce of the soil has probably diminished. Such a new channel would be created by systematically colonising Canada, whose unoccupied virgin lands are capable of maintaining perhaps a number equal to the total population of Europe.

3. I propose that the organisation be entirely a State one, adequate for removal annually of 200,000 individuals (of all ages) from the United Kingdom, and their settlement in Canada and the North West Territory of the Dominion, where sufficient land is offered free by the Dominion Government. The poor, who are without, or have next to no resources, are those who would be (on their voluntary application, and on approval) selected; the system to be one of family emigration; and, since five can be reckoned as the average number in a family, 150,000 at least out of the whole number would be composed of aged persons, women and babes, very few among them breadwinners. Thus the country could lose nothing by the departure of people, no small proportion of whom are now partly maintained at the cost of ratepayers and of the benevolent, while all are what is currently (although not technically) called "paupers." Certainly we can easily spare, say, 50,000 able-bodied men and youths every year, and their dependents.

4. The emigrants proper, to be men (with their families), acquainted with the cultivation of the soil. A slight knowledge might suffice; nor can it be disputed puted that the poor quarters in our cities and towns would supply large contingents of men, born and reared in the country, accustomed to farm work. Only men of good character, not convicted of crime, nor more than twice of drunkenness, under 46 years old, and with not exceeding five accompanying members of family, to be eligible; single women to be ineligible; the taking single men to be discountenanced; and young people to be encouraged to marry, in order to become eligible.

5. A State inspection to be organised in order to "pass" applicants. There could be an authorised official in every town; the superior superintendence of this department to be confided to selected persons among the trade union leaders, appointed for the purpose by Government as permanent officers. Their special knowledge of the labour market would be useful in order that surplusage only might be drawn away.

6. For transport, many of the Government steam transports would no doubt be available; other large steamships to be purchased, so as to supply a fleet capable of providing a departure of a steamer carrying, say, 1,000 emigrants daily during the seven suitable months, the departures to be from Glasgow (once), Liverpool (twice), Milford (once), and Southampton (thrice) weekly.

7. The first step of arranging with the Canadian Government being taken, the second, after Parliamentary sanction, would be to send out an adequate staff of artisans and labourers, with their families, under agreements for five years at present trades' rate of wage, in order to erect huts or cottages, houses, stores, &c., before the first batch of emigrants arrive, from two to three months later. These mechanics would be under Government supervision, and must move from place to place as required.

8. The control of the whole organisation and the funds, to be vested in a board, or Imperial Emigration and Colonisation Commission, consisting of five capable and adequately paid gentlemen prepared to make this the business of their lives—two to be Canadians; headquarters, of course, in London; a head Canadian office at Ottawa, with one Canadian and one English Commissioner; local commissioners with sufficient subordinates to be quartered at the various settlements.

9. The average cost of transport, upon the scale and, as indicated, from railway station here to destination in Canada, need not much, if at all, exceed 5 l. per head of all ages; because special emigration rates would be obtainable from the railways on both sides of the Atlantic, the steamers, specially fitted and carrying no cargo, being worked at prime cost.

10. A due number of "centres" being selected in the Dominion, each to have a nucleus settlement of 4,000 souls, the emigrants on reaching Quebec or Halifax would be there furnished with a destination, and at once sent on by the daily through trains. There would be also appointed through emigrant trains on this side to the various ports of embarkation.

11. Prior to embarking, each head of a family to sign articles of indenture binding himself to repay to the Emigration Commission all moneys advanced to him or his family. Should passage be repaid? I think not, but am open to correction on this difficult point.

12. The lands to be brought under cultivation will not maintain a family for several months, or even for a year after cultivation begins. How then are the people to live? Thus: The Canadian Government must co-operate in this work by agreeing to convey to the Emigration Commission the 160 acres they at present offer free for every separate family to be settled. Eighty acres to be absolutely reserved by the Commission as "B. Government lands;" and upon the remaining 80 (or 50 wherever only 100 acres are obtained) the head of the family to be set to work under official superintendence to clear, sow, make roads, &c., all for a fixed weekly wage, being the amount upon which he could live with reasonable carefulness. I estimate this wage at 12*s.* for a single man, 16*s.* for a married couple, 20*s.* for the same with two children, and so on. All such payments as wages to be carried to the debit of the person receiving them, in books kept like the millions of separate post-office savings bank accounts for far smaller smaller sums. Copies would be sent from the settlements to Ottawa; and thence they might even be sent to London; so that at the head office here the exact state of the accounts in each settlement would be known under an organisation like the Post Office Savings Bank system.

13. Whenever the parcel of land upon which a family had been domiciled should be, in the judgment of the local inspector, fit to maintain them without further official "nursing"—then, but not sooner, a conveyance of the ground to be executed to the peasant who had been working upon it, chargeable, by way of mortgage, with the total standing to his debit for wages, seed, stocking, &c., including passage-money (should it be considered right the cost of it be also reimbursed). This total, in the case of a family of five, would not be likely, even including passage-money, to exceed 100 l. In the case of a couple without children it would be much less. In this way, assuming only 50 acres were conveyed to each settler, and the average mortgage amounted to 100 l., the man would obtain in a year or so after leaving home 50 acres of freehold land saddled with 100 l, mortgage at 6 per cent. per annum, equal to a yearly rent of 2 s. 6*d.* per acre for very fertile land. He would become by independent effort, thanks to judicious help, a peasant proprietor at a cost which he would have been able to regulate himself to a certain important extent. The transaction, once completed, there would be no difficulty experienced by the Commission in selling the mortgage bond to private persons or financial corporations to be formed hereafter for the purpose of dealing in these securities, and thus all money advanced would be recouped. Redemption of the bonds might easily be effected within 10 years from issue. No doubt there might be difficulty in selling the bonds, or obtaining repayment of the funds expended which they would represent, if the settlements were few, scattered far apart, and thinly peopled. There would be none if the chief features of the scheme be adhered to; namely, its magnitude and continuity.

14. In the case of the head of a family dying before his allotment were ready for conveyance, his family might be allowed to name somebody to take his place and liabilities; to the local Commissioner being reserved a right of veto. Should it be exercised, then the land to lapse into the category of "B. Government lands." The cost of the labour actually expended upon such lapsed land would, as a rule, have added to its intrinsic value not less than the total amount of such expenditure. And real loss, arising from death, accident, or sickness, could be provided for by a special system of insurance at trifling cost.

15. Another resource for reimbursement and profit would be the "British Government lands." These would be at least equal in acreage to "allotted lands." They would be cultivated for the ultimate benefit of the British Government, representing the taxpayers here, by day-labourers specially engaged here or taken from such among the emigrants as could not well be trusted to farm for themselves; or by volunteer labourers presenting themselves on the spot. These lands could be leased or sold. While they were farmed the crops derived from them would be disposed of for the Commission through usual trade channels.

16. If any man at the first blush should doubt whether returns of this kind could be adequate to outlay, let him reflect that all cities, London itself, and all civilised countries, were once virgin land without value. Their incalculable money value and the enormous revenues they yield now have been brought about precisely in the way I propose to render valuable the valueless North West Territory, namely, by the exercise upon their territory of human labour. The objection, then, is idle, upon the two indispensable conditions that the settlements be on a large scale, and that there be skilled responsible supervision and, as a part of it, rules and discipline.

17. Crime and waste are already guarded against by laws specially passed in the Dominion and Provincial Parliaments whereby local option prevails in every part of Canada, except the North West Territory, wherein it is forbidden to introduce alcoholic or vinous stimulants. This beneficent provision was intended to protect the Indians, of whom about 100,000 still remain. Removal to Canada would consequently mean rescue and redemption for numbers of our people who would gladly quit present surroundings, associations, and temptations, had they the chance.

18. In order to make good the drain on our agricultural population, an essential part of the scheme must be the formation, under some proper system, of large or small training-farms at suitable points throughout the three kingdoms. To these places might be drafted all lads from orphanages, street youths from our great cities, men who hang about the streets picking up a precarious livelihood, and the like, to learn farm-work—the natural occupation of a great majority of mankind.

19. Parliamentary powers would have to be asked to enable the Government of the day to borrow, when required, sums not exceeding 20,000,000 sterling in all, by creating a new Emigration Stock to bear interest at the rate of three per cent. During the first two years about 5,000,000 sterling would be wanted; the interest upon which sum, to be borne by the taxpayers, is only 150,000 l. sterling per annum. The funds raised in this manner to be employed in England and Canada for the general purposes indicated, under proper control and audit in the customary way; the expenses of official staff to come out of these funds, and a percentage to be charged upon the allotted land to defray those expenses. All moneys received by the Emigration Commission as reimbursement of loans, sales of mortgage bonds, of produce raised on "Government lands," or of such lands themselves, to be paid over per contra to the National Debt Commissioners in order to purchase and extinguish consols. I think it fair to expect that, before the power to raise 20,000,000 had been fully used, returns would flow back to us; that the 20,000,000 sterling, if called up, would be all reimbursed before expiry of 10 years; and that, far from any loss of capital resulting from these transactions, there might be immense profits.

20. To attain the ends I have described, a country like ours, which threw away, for the sake of a policy of the moment, 100,000,000 sterling in the Crimea, might sacrifice much. But I cannot see that any sacrifice whatever is needed. For, supposing 200,000 men, women, and children left our shores in the first year, and that 10 l. yearly per head be put as the average cost of maintaining them here, then surely society is benefited to the extent of 2,000,000 l. sterling for that one year alone (to say nothing about the future) by their departure. The food they consume, if they remain, ceases to be imported.

21. If it should be objected a point will be reached when the exodus will cease to be a benefit to us, I answer it can be stayed at that point, for it would be the duty of the Emigration Commission to keep State advantage in view, such being the raison d'être of their office.

22. But the foundation of a new populous and wealthy society, on the other side of the Atlantic, must benefit this country in another way. They will purchase our manufactures from us, thus adding to our wealth, instead of consuming it, as they do while here. For, of course, every individual in Great Britain, be the population 20,000,000 or 30,000,000, has to be fed somehow. And owing to this necessity we are rapidly sinking into national and personal poverty because nothing is done or attempted, by legislators and statesmen, in order to preserve a reasonable proportion between the people and the land they live on. Had we no colonies it would be another matter. The truth of the controversy respecting imports and exports lies here. We import a greater excess year by year, and thus grow poorer instead of richer, simply because we have more mouths to feed each year. While this goes on vast territories belonging to the Empire remain deserts, and others are given away.

23. The existence of great fleets of steamers of vast size which could not have been had a few years ago, the political difficulties and pressing yearly increasing distress in England, the wish of the Dominion Government to settle the North West Territory, which was owned by an exclusive private corporation only 12 years ago, the certainty of a German and probability of a Chinese immigration thither thither* unless we utilize it ourselves instead of abandoning it to the wolf and the jackal, are all considerations favouring the realisation of my scheme.

24. Although the settling may proceed during as many years as there remains unoccupied land, the principal trouble will be during the first two or three years. Once the rudiments of hamlets, towns, and cities are formed, there will be little trouble and not nearly so much expense.

25. The scheme would be greatly helped by the approaching construction or completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway, which will traverse the territory to be settled in order to unite the two oceans, and will provide work for large numbers of labourers. Primarily designed though it is for the poor who have no resources, the fact need not preclude our attracting (by the offer of assistance in the colony) a limited number among classes possessing some small but insufficient capital. Such people would provide employment for labouring peasants whose mental qualifications did not offer sufficient inducement to trust them with land of their own. In short, the whole management requires the exercise of skill and judgment. Many farmers would be well qualified to act as superintendents of some of the departments, and, doubtless, be glad to accept such positions.

26. Upon some collateral aspects of this many-sided scheme it is well to lay stress. This would not be a haphazard, fitful business, now well, now badly done. The emigrants are not to be turned loose on the prairie to do as they please; protection, direction, control, are essential elements in the scheme, which, before all things, is to be entered upon for State advantage. A considerable organisation of skilled educated minds is therefore indispensable. Upon this side of the ocean there will be the personnel devoted to selection, transport and shipment: clerks who must keep the accounts, storekeepers, and so forth. Then come the commanders, officers, engineers, besides crews, of the steamships. To conduct the service with efficiency not fewer than 30 vessels must compose the fleet. On the other side there will be employés who must receive and distribute through the territory the continual arrivals. There will be surveyors and civil engineers, architects and builders, farming superintendents and overseers, resident local commissioners, travelling inspectors, and a respectable battalion of clerks of various grades, some of whom could be chosen from those already in the Government service here. There must also be warehouse keepers, as well as men accustomed to trade operations; since the Colonisation Commission will have crops and produce and lands to dispose of, seeds and stock and implements to buy; the last-named from England. Most of these numerous officials would naturally be drawn from the ranks of the middle classes. Then comes the supreme direction, the posts in which will doubtless be filled from the upper class. It is impossible to catalogue with exactness all the positions that will be necessarily created, and must be filled, greatly to the advantage of the mother country, considered as one community, and to separate families whose heads are nowadays in so many instances thoroughly perplexed to know what is to be done with their young men. My rapid sketch, however, shows that this system of colonisation will find legitimate permanent occupation for much more than mere bone and sinew. Brains are indispensable. Education and natural ability of very diverse kinds and orders could thus obtain a field of exercise hitherto undreamed of; and the widely spread mental, technical, and scientific training that has distinguished the England of the past dozen years will not have been fruitless after all, as many latterly began to fear it might prove to be. But for this training, indeed, it is questionable whether there would be, as there now certainly is, the proper material available to constitute the large body of superintendents and functionaries that is necessary, while, had the scheme been broached in 1870, every one would at once have pronounced it to be impracticable on the scale I propose, pose, if only because the large steamers now built were not even projected; while the cost of "sailing" the smaller boats then in vogue was probably about double what the march of invention has made it to-day, and sea-risks were also greater.

* The prevision (expressed in 1880) has become accomplished fact. "From Victoria, Vancouver's Island, we have reports that ships and steamers are constantly arriving with many Chinese on board. The immigrants are immediately forwarded to the main land of British Columbia, chiefly for railway work. Twenty-four thousand are expected by August, when the Chinese in the province will amount to 32,000, outnumbering the whites. Fears are expressed that the Province will be Mongolianized."—("Times," 11th May 1882.)

27. The climate of Mexico, or even a large portion of the United States scarcely suits Englishmen or Scotchmen, and a serious mortality might result from shipping hosts of old and very young persons to torrid regions. What can be begun in our possessions on the American can be afterwards adapted to those on the African and Australian continents, in New Zealand and Tasmania.

28. It must be remembered the "new channel" discovered and opened by the Stephensons, the Brasseys, the Hudsons, who have gone, is filled and developed to about its utmost extent. We want another. By opening this prolific channel, of far greater intrinsic worth than all the El Dorados ever dreamed about, we should feed the poor, the middle class, and the class above, who are alike crying for bread, in one sense or another.

29. Not only so, but we can justly inscribe upon our emigration and colonisation flag the motto which was once made to ring in the ears of the whole world, "For the interests of England." Her political interests are so manifestly to be promoted by planting her sons and daughters in homes where they shall prosper and be happy, and, doubtless, be loyal, that it is needless to say anything on that head. Is it not almost as plain that, if Canada, with her present population of 4,000,000, can import British merchandise worth 8,000,000 of pounds sterling (besides merchandise from the United States worth nine), she will be enabled and bound to import incalculably more when we shall have raised her population?

30. Furthermore, a great settlement of Canadian territory will inevitably call for numerous public works (new railways among them) of great magnitude over there, for new banks, insurance companies, &c. The capital may, largely, be raised here, and fresh, sound openings for investors be created.

Correspondence respecting the Termination of the Fishery Articles of the Treaty of Washington of the 8th May, 1871.

No. 1.

Mr. West to Earl Granville.—(Received April 3.)

My Lord, Washington, March 18, 1883.

I HAVE the honour to inclose copies of the Resolution, as passed by both Houses of Congress and approved by the President, providing for the termination of Articles XVIII to XXV, inclusive, and Article XXX of the Treaty between the United States of America and Her Britannic Majesty, concluded at Washington on the 8th May, 1871.

PUBLIC RESOLUTION—No. 20.

Joint Resolution providing for the Termination of Articles numbered XVIII to XXV, inclusive, and Article numbered XXX of the Treaty between the United States of America and Her Britannic Majesty, concluded at Washington, May 8, 1871.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,—That, in the judgment of Congress, the provisions of Articles numbered XVIII to XXV, inclusive, and of Article XXX of the Treaty between the United States and Her Britannic Majesty, for an amicable settlement of all causes of difference between the two countries, concluded at Washington on the 8th day of May, A.D. 1871, ought to be terminated at the earliest possible time, and be no longer in force; and to this end the President be, and he hereby is, directed to give notice to the Government of Her Britannic Majesty that the provisions of each and every of the Articles aforesaid will terminate and be of no force on the expiration of two years next after the time of giving such notice.

Section 2. That the President be, and he hereby is, directed to give and communicate to the Government of Her Britannic Majesty such notice of such termination on the 1st day of July, A.D. 1883, or as soon thereafter as may be.

Section 3. That on and after the expiration of the two years' time required by said Treaty, each and every of said Articles shall be deemed and held to have expired and be of no force and effect, and that every Department of the Government of the United States shall execute the laws of the United States (in the premises) in the same manner and to the same effect as if said Articles had never been in force; and the Act of Congress approved on the 1st March, A.D. 1873, entitled "An Act to carry into effect the provisions of the Treaty between the United States and Great Britain, signed in the city of Washington the 8th day of May, 1871, relating to the fisheries," so far as it relates to the Articles of said Treaty so to be terminated, shall be and stand repealed and be of no force on and after the time of the expiration of said two years.

Approved, March 3, 1883.

No. 2.

Mr. Lowell to Earl Granville.—(Received April 20.)

My Lord, Legation of the United States, London, April 18, 1883.

I HAVE received to-day from Mr. Frelinghuysen a despatch inclosing the copy of a joint Resolution of both Houses of Congress of the United States, providing for the termination of certain Articles of the Treaty between the United States of America and Her Britannic Majesty, concluded at Washington on the 8th May, 1871, which Articles, under the Protocol signed on the 7th June, 1873, took effect on the 1st July, 1873, and, by the terms of the original Treaty, are subject to termination by either party on two years' notice given at the expiration of ten years from the 1st July, 1873. This Resolution, which was approved on the 3rd March, 1883, directs the President to give notice to the Government of Her Britannic Majesty that the provisions of each and every of the Articles numbered XVIII to XXV, inclusive, and of Article XXX of the Treaty of the 8th May, 1871, will terminate and be of no force on the expiration of two years next after the time of giving such notice, which the President is further directed to give on the 1st July, 1883, or as soon thereafter as may be.

I am therefore instructed to comply with the directions of Congress in this matter, as set forth in this Resolution, by giving the notice required, and as the 1st July falls on Sunday, I am directed to give this notice on the next succeeding day.

I beg also, in compliance with further directions, to inform your Lordship of the purport of this instruction, and of my contemplated action under it.

I have, &c.

(Signed) J. R. LOWELL.

No. 3.

Earl Granville to Mr. Lowell.

Sir, Foreign Office, April 27, 1883.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 18th instant, in which you acquaint me that, in compliance with the instructions you have received from your Government, you propose to give notice on Monday, the 2nd July (the 1st July falling on a Sunday), of the intention of the United States to terminate Articles XVIII to XXV, inclusive, and Article XXX of the Treaty of the 8th May, 1871, between Great Britain and the United States, which will cease to be in force on the expiration of two years from the date of such notice being given.

I have, &c.

No. 4.

Mr. Lowell to Earl Granville.—(Received July 2.)

My Lord, Legation of the United States, London, July 2, 1883.

REFERRING to my note to your Lordship of the 18th April last, and to your Lordship's reply of the 27th of the same month, I have the honour to recapitulate the statements I made in that note, to the following effect: That I received on the said 18th April a despatch from Mr. Frelinghuysen, inclosing the copy of a Joint Resolution of both Houses of Congress of the United States, providing for the termination of certain Articles of the Treaty between the United States of America and Her Britannic Majesty, concluded at Washington on the 8th May, 1871; which Articles, under the Protocol signed on the 7th June, 1873, took effect on the 1st July, 1873, and, by the terms of the original Treaty, are subject to termination by either party on two years' notice given at the expiration of ten years from the 1st July, 1873. This Resolution, which was approved on the 3rd March, 1883, directs the President to give notice to the Government of Her Britannic Majesty that the provisions of each and every of the Articles numbered XVIII to XXV inclusive and of the Article XXX of the Treaty of the 8th May, 1871, will terminate and be of no force on the expiration of two years next after the time of giving such notice; which the President is urther directed to give on the 1st July, 1883, or as soon thereafter as may be.

I am, therefore, instructed by the President of the United States to comply with the directions of Congress in this matter, as set forth in the Resolution, by giving the notice required; and as the 1st July falls on Sunday, I am further instructed to give this notice on the succeeding day.

I do, therefore, this second day of July, 1883, on behalf of the President of the United States, hereby give notice to the Government of Her Britannic Majesty that the provisions of each and every of the Articles numbered XVIII, XIX, XX, XXI, XXII, XXIII, XXIV, XXV, and XXX of the Treaty of the 8th May, 1871, between the United States of America and Her Britannic Majesty, will terminate and be of no force on the expiration of two years next after the time of giving such notice.

I have, &c.

(Signed) J. R. LOWELL.

No. 5.

Earl Granville to Mr. Lowell..

Sir, Foreign Office, August 22, 1883.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 2nd ultimo, in which you give notice that the provisions of Articles XVIII, XIX, XX, XXI, XXII, XXIII, XXIV, XXV, and XXX of the Treaty of the 8th May, 1871, between Great Britain and the United States will terminate and be of no force on the expiration of two years next after the date of the said notice.

In accepting this notice on behalf of Her Majesty's Government, I have the honour to inquire whether Her Majesty's Government correctly understand the intention of the United States' Government to be that the provisions of Article XXXII, which relate to Newfoundland, shall cease to be in force and operation at the same time as the Articles recited in the notice, which relate to the Dominion of Canada.

I have, &c.

(Signed) GRANVILLE.

No. 6.

Mr Lowell to Earl Granville.—(Received November 19.)

My Lord, Legation of the United States, London, November 16, 1883.

REFERRING to your Lordship's note of the 22nd August last, in which your Lordship inquired whether, in accepting the notice which I gave to Her Majesty's Government on the 2nd July last that the provisions of Articles XVIII, XIX, XX, XXI, XXII, XXIII, XXIV, XXV, and XXX of the Treaty of the 8th May, 1871, between the United States and Great Britain, will terminate and be of no force on the expiration of two years from the date of said notice, Her Majesty's Government correctly understand the intention of the United States' Government to be that the provisions of Article XXXII, which relate to Newfoundland, shall cease to be in force and operation at the same time as the Articles recited in the notice, which relate to the Dominion of Canada, I have the honour to acquaint you that I lost no time in transmitting a copy of your Lordship's note to the Department of State.

I have now received a reply from Mr. Frelinghuysen, in which I am instructed to inform your Lordship that Her Majesty's Government correctly understand the intention of the Government of the United States to be that the provisions of Article XXXII of the Treaty of Washington which relate to Newfoundland shall cease to be in force and operation at the same time as the Articles recited in the notice of the termination given by me on the 2nd July last, which relate to the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. Frelinghuysen states that your Lordship's inquiry does not appear to invite any discussion of the points involved, or to ask anything more than a simple declaration of the intention of the United States' Government as to the scope of the notice of the termination so given. He states, however, for my information, the reasons why the XXXIInd Article must be considered as in force only so long as the other Articles which are specifically terminable are in force. As his views on this subject may be interesting to your Lordship, I venture to send you a copy of his despatch, although I have no instructions to do so.

I have, &c.

Inclosure in No. 6.

Mr. Frelinghuysen to Mr. Lowell.

Sir, Department of State, Washington, October 16, 1883.

ANSWERING your despatch of the 28th August last, I have to instruct you to inform Earl Granville that Her Majesty's Government correctly understand the intention of the United States' Government to be that the provisions of Article XXXII of the Treaty of Washington, which relate to Newfoundland, shall cease to be in force and operation at the same time as the Articles recited in the notice of termination given by you on the 2nd July last, which relate to the Dominion of Canada.

His Lordship's inquiry of the 22nd August does not appear to invite any discussion of the points involved, or to ask anything more than a simple declaration of the intention of this Government as to the scope of the notice of termination so given. For your information I may, however, observe that, while the Treaty itself does not in terms provide for terminating Article XXXII, that Article, so far as it concerns the extension of the fisheries stipulations to Newfoundland, is dependent wholly upon the Articles specified as terminable, and that such extension can only last so long as the privileges to be extended continue to exist, as they do, by virtue of the Treaty and of the ascertained and proclaimed fact of legislation being in force for the execution of the Treaty in both the United States and Newfoundland. The United States' Statute to that end of the 1st March, 1873, in terms continues effective so long as the specifically terminable Articles of Treaty shall continue, and no longer. The XXXIInd Article, therefore, loses all valid operative force with the removal of the sole bases of conjoined Treaty and legislation upon which it rested.

I am, &c.

Sir, Foreign Office, January 16, 1884.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 16th November last, in which you state that it is the intention of the Government of the United States that the provisions of Article XXXII of the Treaty of Washington which relate to Newfoundland shall cease to be in force and operation at the same time as the Articles recited in the notice of termination given by you on the 2nd July last, which relate to the Dominion of Canada.

I have to state to you, in reply, that Her Majesty's Government accept this notice as applying to Newfoundland as well as to the Dominion of Canada.

REPORTS ON FORESTS.

GOVERNOR-GENERAL THE MOST HON. THE MARQUIS OF LANSDOWNE, G.C.M.G., to the RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF DERBY, K.G. (Received December 22, 1884.)

Government House, Ottawa,
December 9, 1884.

MY LORD,

WITH reference to the concluding paragraph of my Despatch of the 28th June last,* on the subject of the proximate exhaustion of forests so far as the question relates to the Dominion of Canada, I have now the honour to forward to your Lordship herewith a copy of a communication from the Department of the Secretary of State for Canada, enclosing copies of the replies received from the Lieutenant-Governors of the various provinces on the subject. 31st Oct. 1884.

On receiving these reports I caused the papers to be referred back for some directions to the Department of the Secretary of State, from which they have now been returned.

I have, &c.

Governor-General's Secretary.

Enclosure 2.

Government House, Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island,
July 7, 1884.

SIR,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Despatch of the 2nd July instant, transmitting to me for the information of my Government, and in order that the information sought for may be supplied for transmission to the applicant, a copy of a Despatch from the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for the Colonies, enclosing a copy of a note addressed by R. D. Lyons, M.P., requesting to be supplied with such information as is obtainable on the reported proximate exhaustion of forests, so far as the question relates to the Dominion of Canada, I beg to state that

Lieutenant-Governor.

Enclosure 3.

Government House, Winnipeg, Manitoba,
October 21, 1884.

Sir,

I have the honour to enclose herewith a letter from my Minister of Agriculture, in reply to a copy of a Despatch from the Right Honourable the Secretary of State for the Colonies, transmitted to me in your Despatch of the 2nd July last, requesting to be supplied with such information as is obtainable on the approximate exhaustion of forests.

I have, &c.

Hon. J. A. Chapleau,
Secretary of State, Ottawa.

(Signed) J. C. Aikins.

Winnipeg, September 9, 1884.

Sir,

I have the honour to state in further reference to your letter of July 14th last, transmitting to this Department a copy of a Despatch from Earl Derby to the Governor-General in reference to the reported proximate exhaustion of forests, as follows:—

The forest and timber limits in this province are entirely under the control and administration of the Dominion Department of the Interior, which is therefore in possession of all official information in reference to them.

During the rapid construction of the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, during the years 1882 and 1883, large quantities of timber were used, but as the main line has now reached the Rocky Mountains the progress of construction is necessarily slower and much less timber is required, and the principal portion of it is obtained from those mountains. This Department has adopted means to prevent as much as possible the destruction of timber by fire, and is endeavouring to secure the rigid enforcement of the Prevention of Fire Act. Steps have also been taken for the establishment of an annual arbor day, on which the general planting of trees throughout the province will be encouraged.

Your obedient servant,
(Signed) A. A. C. La Riviere,
Minister of Agriculture, Statistics of Health.

Enclosure 4.

Government House, Halifax, Nova Scotia.
July 29, 1884.

Sir,

Referring to Mr. Under Secretary Powell's Despatch of the 2nd instant, in which information respecting the proximate exhaustion of forests in Canada was applied for, for the purpose of being forwarded to the Right Honourable the Secretary of State for the Colonies, to be transmitted by him to Mr. R. D. Lyons, M.P., I have now the honour to state that, having requested my Government to furnish me with any information in their power, I have received two reports, one from the present and the other from the former Deputy Commissioner of Crown Lands, which I beg to enclose herewith.

I have, &c.

The Hon. the Secretary of State for Canada, Ottawa.

(Signed) M. H. Richey,
Lieutenant-Governor.

Crown Land Office, Halifax,
July 25, 1884.

Sir,

In reference to the letter of Mr. R. D. Lyons, M.P., referring to the reported proximate exhaustion of Canadian forests, I beg to say that, having made inquiry of several gentlemen engaged in the lumbering business in this province, I find that in all probability all, or nearly all, the timber lands will have been cut over, for the first time by or perhaps before the expiration of six years from this date; but it does not follow that the timber supply will then be exhausted. It is found that by carefully husbanding those trees which are too small for conversion into lumber at the time of the first cutting, after 15 or 20 (years), a second cut nearly equal to the first can in many localities be obtained, consequently, if it were not for forest fires, those lands which are carefully looked after would never become denuded of their timber.

It is true, however, that the supply of pine and spruce is rapidly becoming exhausted, and that the lumbering interests of our province will ere long become of less importance as each year rolls by.

There is a considerable quantity of hemlock timber in this province, but in many sections of the country it is being rapidly destroyed for the purpose of securing the bark, which is extensively used for tanning leather.

This province a few years ago could boast of a large quantity of heavy birch, but of late years much of it has been converted into ton timber and exported.

Of late years portable saw mills have been somewhat extensively used, and, if I am not mistaken, much smaller timber is cut by them than by the Gang Mills.

A large proportion of the area of our province is held by agriculturists, who hitherto appear to have taken but little interest in the preservation of the forests; the most of them have stripped more land of its timber than was actually necessary and have not been as careful of the remainder as they should.

As it is well known, forest fires have done an immense amount of damage in our province, and large tracts of country once covered with a stately growth of pine, spruce, &c., &c. are now almost barren.

It is to be regretted that the lumbering and agricultural portion of our population was not more fully alive to the importance and necessity of preserving the forests of the country. Had proper care been taken to prevent forest fires, and preserve the growing timber, the forests would be in a much more thriving condition than they are to-day.

I have, &c.

Honourable C. E. Church,
Provincial Secretary, Halifax.

(Signed) James H. Austin.

A few generations ago the greater part of the continent of North America was an unbroken forest from ocean to ocean. That those great forests are being rapidly depleted is well known, and the fact is fully recognised by men well informed and in a position to know the evils resulting, physically as well as commercially, from the insensate destruction of forests. Many sections of country in the Old World now sterile were prosperous and fertile before the destruction of their forests, and without proper care and forethought the language put into the mouth of the Indian many years ago (referring to stripping the soil of its trees) may in a degree become true—

> "The realms our tribes are crushed to get,
> "May be a barren desert yet."

This knowledge is well evinced by the much and able writing in the North American press, by able and exhaustive official reports on the subject, and by the various legislative enactments at Washington, Ottawa, and in the several states of the Union. The law of Massachusetts passed in 1878 to encourage plantations of timber trees on land not worth over $15.00 per acre is here referred to, as the climate and trees of that State, as also New Hampshire and Maine, are very similar to those of Nova Scotia, and we may very properly follow their example in this matter.

It is matter of record that the forests of Nova Scotia had not been visited by any great fires until 1784, just 100 years ago. The few Indians then in the province had the forests divided among their families.

The country was then nearly all covered by a soft wood forest. The most thin and rocky portions had a fair mixture of white pine with spruce and fir. The deeper soils of the soft wood land were chiefly occupied by hemlock, with a few large spruce and black birch.

The aborigines, as well as the early French settlers, were careful never to make fires in the woods in the dry season of summer. In 1783, however, a great number of refugees and discharged soldiers came into the country and many new settlements were formed. The following year no rain fell in June, the latter part of May and first ten days of July. Fires were kindled in the clearings by the new settlers, and it is reported that within a fortnight two thirds of the province were burnt over.

Except what is cultivated or under water every part of the peninsula of Nova Scotia would now be covered with trees were it not for the destruction by fires, which scourge the country more or less every season.

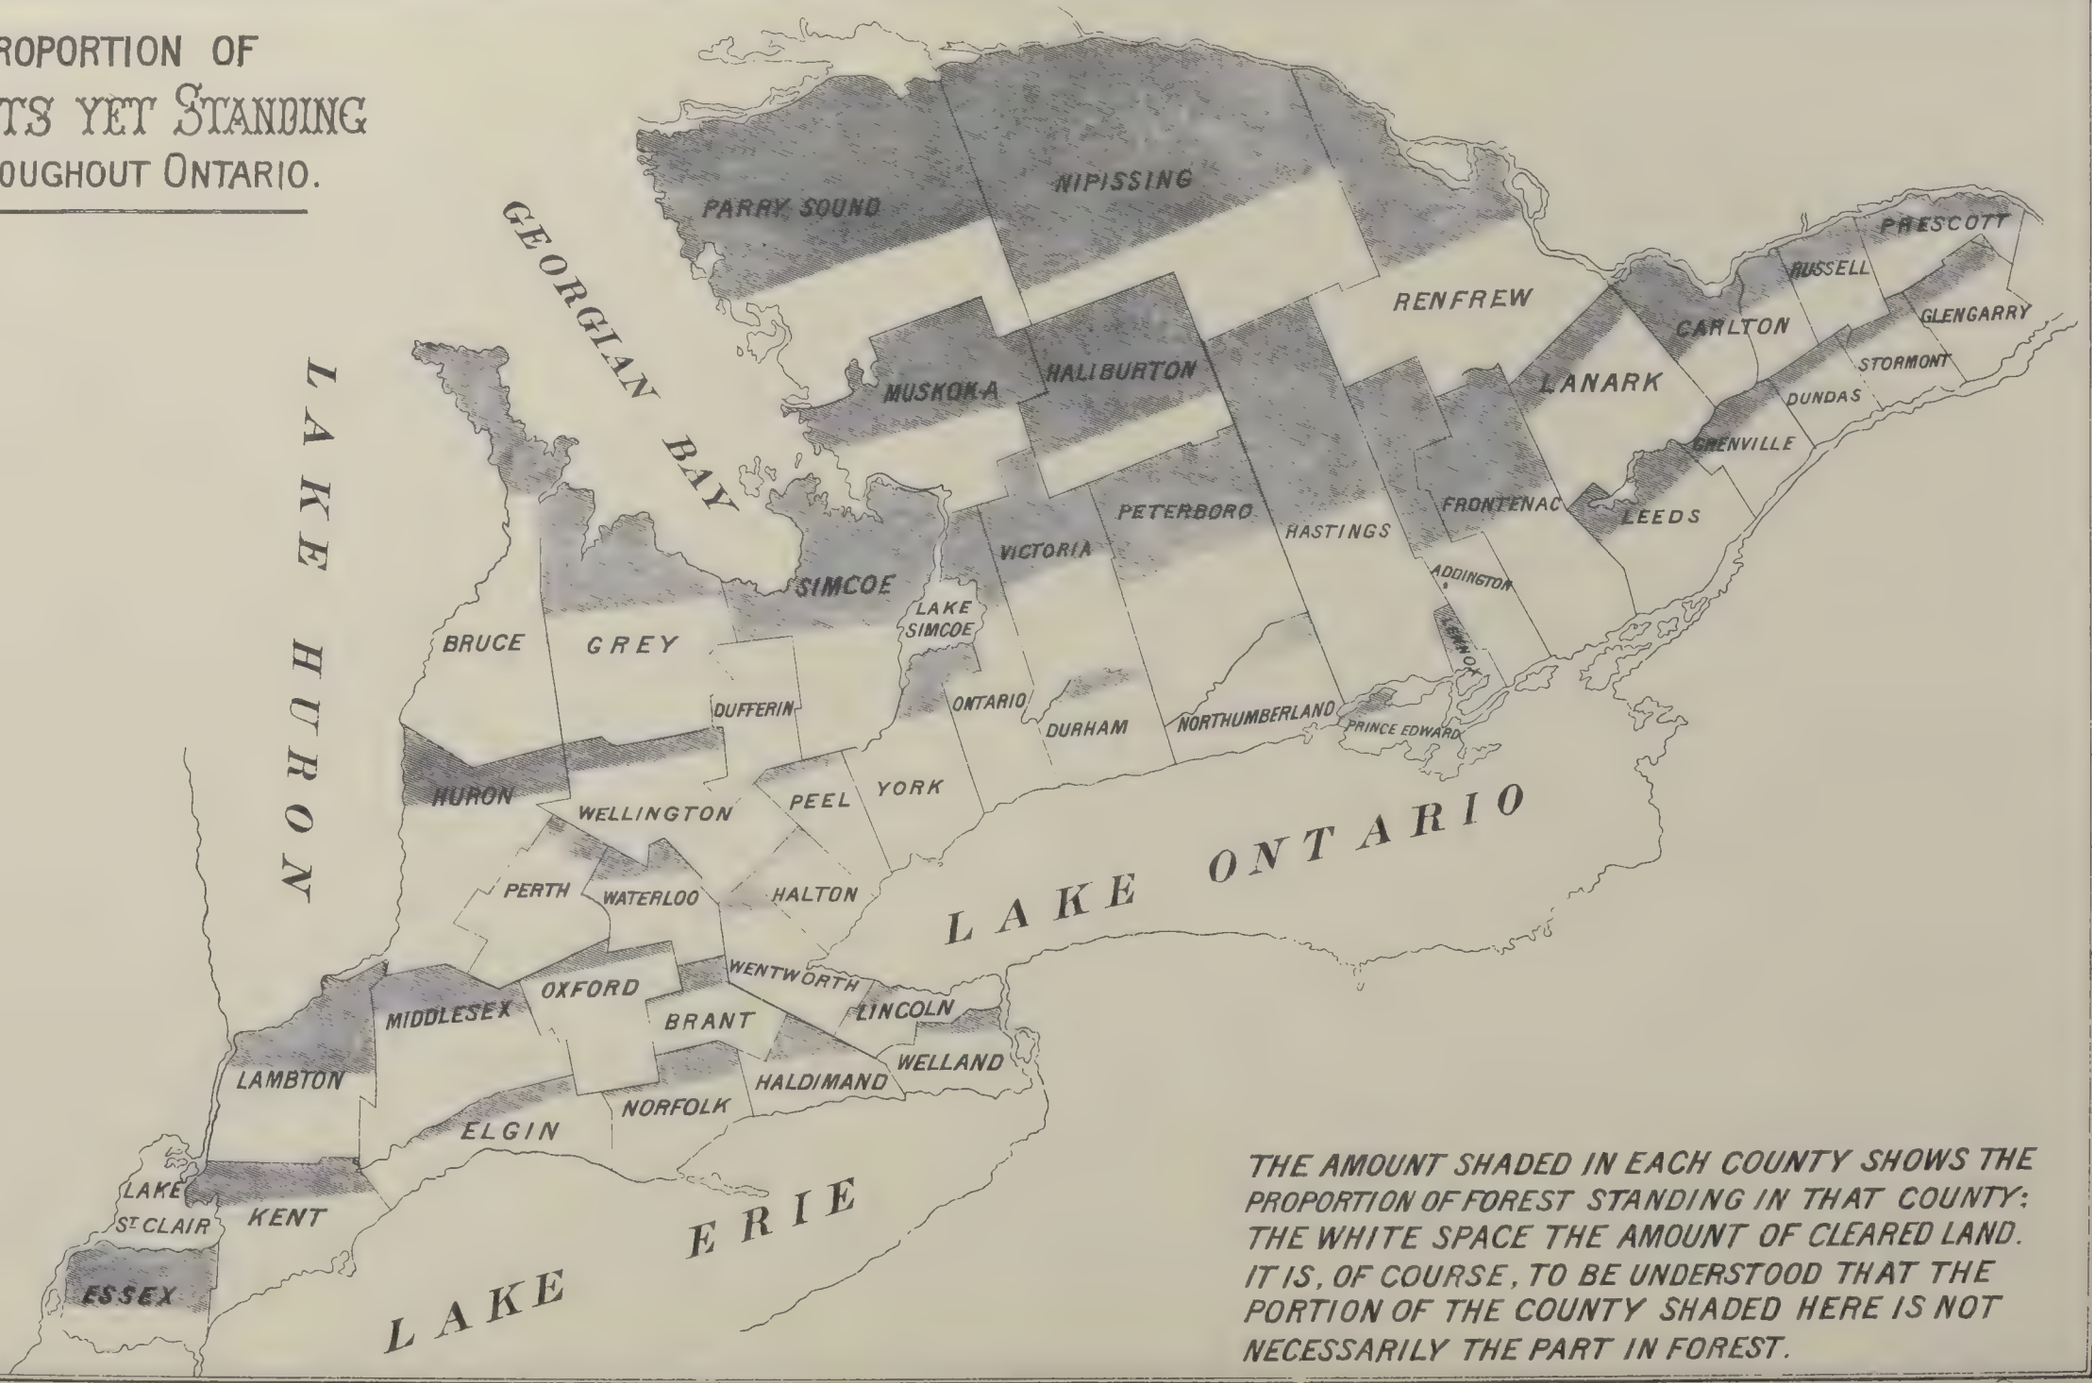
Forests create and gradually improve the soil and climate of a country. The axe makes sad havoc, but may be regulated; fires are terrible. It is to be hoped, however, that an earnest effort to do so on the part of those in authority may prevent a repetition of the destruction from that source.

The writer had occasion upwards of 42 years ago to travel over a large section of wilderness country lying east of Halifax, and in doing so he traversed many miles of open barrens. The burnt stumps, trunks, and roots of spruce and white pine trees, many of large dimensions, were at that time scattered all over the barrens, and their remains may still be seen; although the surface has been burnt over many times within the last 45 years, still the forest goes on reproducing itself and being burnt down and will continue to do so until active means are resorted to for having the forest fires put out as soon as observed.

Nova Scotia as a timber producing country will rank favourably with any section of North America, the trees may not be as large because they are younger, but the timber lands of Nova Scotia possess powers of reproduction that can hardly be surpassed, example:—

Suppose 18 inches diameter to be the standard adopted by a lumberman in felling trees, that is, he will fell no tree of a less diameter, and that he cuts from his land every tree of that dimension and upwards (generally about 50 trees to the acre), let the forest then rest for 15 years when the same quantity of that dimension and upwards may again be taken. If active measures were adopted to put a stop to the ravages of forest fires and to prevent the felling of trees of a less size than inches diameter at 10 feet from the butt, I am sure that Nova Scotia will continue to be a timber producing and exporting country for all time to come, as our best timber lands can never be used for profitable agricultural purposes.

As an instance of the marvellous productiveness of our forests I would instance a small section of 8 or 10 square miles through which the Sackville River flows. Up to the year 1840 every house in Halifax was built of timber from that section, and, as every one knows, it has produced an enormous amount of cordwood, house frames, boards, deals, wharf logs, shingles, &c. ever since. Within three years the writer has travelled through every part of the section referred to, and it appears as far from exhaustion now as it did 40 years ago. The trees are not large, but they are tall and healthy; perhaps, not many up to two feet diameter. When a tree has got to be one foot in diameter it makes wood very fast, and is profitable to cut after it exceeds two feet. This may be assumed as a fair sample of our lumber lands. It is a shortsighted reckless love of gain and a lack of care for the future that induces the cutting down of young trees--the loss is simply enormous.



There is no discretion practised or any protection to the forest in Nova Scotia. Every man is allowed to cut as he pleases. Saw mills of every form and variety are to be found wherever a stream exists large enough to turn a wheel for a few months a year, and the trees are cut and carried to the mill from seven inches diameter and upwards, those not large enough for small deal are made into staves, laths, or shingles.

The annual timber production of Nova Scotia has never been correctly estimated, but from returns obtained I know it to be greater by several millions of feet than is generally supposed.

From the above remarks it will be seen that there is no reason to anticipate any sudden or even defined period for the extermination of our forests, but that they are gradually being exhausted is true, and it is proper to look this fact fairly in the face.

The following brief explanation will make clear. It has already been stated that every tree from seven inches upwards, or large enough to be of commercial value, is felled and carried to the saw mill. The age of a tree may be correctly known by the annual rings or layers of wood observable in a horizontal or cross section of the trunk, a manifest difference in the thickness of the layers proportionally with each other will also be observed, likewise of the same layer in different parts of its circumference; the former difference depends upon the nature of the season in which each individual layer is formed, the latter upon local circumstances, accidents to branches, &c.

This is the only known rule by which the age of a tree may be determined.

Ten trees were examined with the following result—

Red spruce	-	-	9	inches diameter =	43 rings (years).
Black „	-	-	$9\frac{1}{2}$	„ „	51 „ „
„ „	-	-	$9\frac{3}{4}$	„ „	54 „ „

Red spruce	-	-	16	„ „	43 „ „
„ „	-	-	13	„ „	44 „ „
„ „	-	-	12	„ „	47 „ „

The above were taken from within a few hundred feet of each other, but these, however, would probably be a fair average.

The difference in growth could well be accounted for by the different degrees of shelter.

Sir,

Adverting to the request contained in your Despatch of the 2nd ultimo, I have the honour to enclose herewith for transmission to the Right Honourable the Secretary of State for the Colonies, for the information of the applicant, Mr. R. D. Lyons, M.P., (1) a map showing the proportion of forests yet standing throughout that portion of Ontario south of the Ottawa and French rivers, and (2) a copy of a report specially prepared by Mr. R. W. Phipps, Clerk of Forest Preservation, Ontario, upon the subject of the reported proximate exhaustion of forests as far as the question relate to the Dominion of Canada. 15 Aug. 1884.

I have, &c.

Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario.

Sir,

Toronto, August 15, 1884.

In answer to the inquiries contained in the letter of R. D. Lyons, Esq., M.P., Dublin, which, accompanied by letters from the Earl of Derby and the Under Secretary of State for Canada, has been forwarded to me, I beg to reply that—

There are in the province of Ontario 18,000 square miles of land known as timber limits, that is land on which lumbermen have purchased the right to cut lumber for a certain period, renewable yearly, and on which lumber, when cut, they also pay certain dues to Government in proportion to its amount. Some of these limits are but freshly entered upon, having only been given out last year, others have been held for longer periods, and some for many years. There exist, however, no data by which to form an exact idea of how long it would take, at the present rate of consumption, to exhaust the timber of these lands.

Concerning the amount of timber lands possessed by Government on which no license to cut has yet been given, I would say that the timber limits sold last year extended as far north as 15 miles beyond Lake Nipissing. North of this point, and extending east to Sturgeon River, and west to Michipicoten River, is a tract of country which there is reason to believe from various reports of those who have travelled across it, contains about 20,000 square miles of forest, possessing much valuable and merchantable timber.

Concerning the older and more settled parts of Ontario, an idea may be gained of the amount of forest left standing therein from a map which I enclose, forming part of a Forestry Report sent in by myself to the Ontario Government last year. In the darker shaded portions much of the country is yet held under license by lumbermen, and forms part of the 18,000 square miles already referred to. Throughout the lighter shaded districts, which are of course the longest settled, there still remain many small portions of valuable timbered land, now far from the track of the lumberman, used for little but local purposes, and not adding an appreciable item to the amount exported, such large pine trees as grew in these in fact, pine furnishing the principal lumber exported, have to a great extent been removed thence. It would be difficult to estimate the aggregate area of these scattered portions in the hands of private owners, but they would hardly amount to 1,000 square miles.

As the letter of Mr. Lyons asks information concerning Canada generally, as well as the United States, it may be remarked that the province of Quebec possesses 48,000 square miles of timber land which are under license, and 44,000 not under license.

That part of Canada known as the North-west Territories, including Manitoba, and lying beyond Ontario, and this side of the Rocky Mountains, possesses here and there tracts of well wooded land, not containing, however, more timber than, even if these forests be well preserved, will be required for the use of the inhabitants of those regions.

Many of the slopes of the Rocky Mountains are well wooded, and beyond them British Columbia contains very large forests of almost untouched pine and other valuable woods. No exact data, however, exist as to what area the amount of forest in the North-west Territories and British Columbia would comprise.

In the province of New Brunswick there are 9,000 square miles of forest area not under license and 3,500 miles under license.

In Nova Scotia there is no special lumbering law, and though I have written to officials of that province for late information, I have not yet received it. In 1878 the amount of ungranted lands in Nova Scotia was 3,800 square miles.

In the United States the timber lands yet remaining in the possession of the Government amount to 132,000 square miles. Some statistics lately issued by the United States Forestry Department give the amount of pine lumber in 13 of the principal pine producing states of the Union as 248 billion feet, and the last year's cut as 8½ billion feet, or about 28 years' supply.

With regard to the duration of the timber supply of the Dominion of Canada, no accurate calculation can be made, as no data exist whereby to determine the amount of merchantable timber standing in the forest area. To obtain this would require surveys more extensive and costly than any which have yet been attempted. A general idea can be given by observing that altogether the area of timber lands in the Dominion is calculated to be about 280,000 square miles.

For many years past statements have been made concerning the possible exhaustion of Canadian forests, and very diverse opinions have been expressed on the subject by persons of apparently equal experience and knowledge. It appears to me that when it has been stated that there is but five or there is but ten years' supply remaining, this may fairly be understood to refer to the possibility of obtaining timber of the same sizes as we have hitherto cut. It is probable that over a great extent of this territory many of the largest trees have been taken out. But it should be remembered that the forest has great reproductive power, that young trees continually replace the old, and that in 20 years' time trees now but of medium size will furnish excellent timber. The duration of our timber supply also largely depends on the measure of care to be taken in the future in the preservation of our wood lands. For many years little or no pains were bestowed in this matter, and throughout large districts, the settler having followed the lumberman, the field took the place of the forest. The ravages of forest fires, too, have in many places greatly injured our timber lands. Of late years more attention has been paid, and it is probable that throughout all the provinces active measures will shortly be taken for the preservation of the forests. These measures, it is likely, will include the setting aside of large districts for forest purposes, and the regular maintenance of officials charged with the duty of preventing the occurrence of fires. The Ontario Government have been active in prosecuting inquiries concerning this important subject, and further legislation thereon may immediately be expected. Undoubtedly if the careless methods of lumbering pursued in former years were to be still continued, no means of forest preservation adopted, nor any methods employed to prevent the ravages of fire, the duration of the Canadian timber supply would be greatly lessened. But this is not likely to be the case, public attention having been called to the necessity of a more careful method of procedure. In my opinion there is no doubt that if care be taken of the remaining forests of Canada a very large portion of them will continue in a perpetually reproductive condition, capable of furnishing an annual yield equal to the present yearly cut. It is probable that the districts already cut over will not for many years furnish trees of as large a size as some of those originally found there, but they will, with care, constantly yield much excellent timber. On the other hand the forests of British Columbia when railroad and shipping facilities shall have given them better access to markets, will give, it is stated, timber of a size larger than most yet exported.

Yours respectfully,

Clerk of Forest Preservation,
Ontario.

Enclosure 6.

Government House, Victoria,
August 30, 1884.

Sir,

I have the honour to enclose a Minute of my Executive Council, dated the 16th instant, upon the subject of the reported proximate exhaustion of forests within the Dominion referred to in a Despatch of the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for the Colonies, dated November 21st, 1883.

I have, &c.
(Signed) Clement F. Cornwall,
Lieutenant-Governor.

The Hon. the Secretary of State,
Ottawa, Canada.

Report of a Committee of the Honourable the Executive Council, approved by his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor the 16th August 1884.

The Committee of Council have had under consideration a Despatch from the Right Hon. the Secretary of State, dated 21st November 1883, addressed to his Excellency the Governor-General of the Dominion, concerning the reported proximate exhaustion of forests within the Dominion, a copy of which was forwarded to his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of British Columbia, and referred to the Hon. the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works, who reports as follows :—

The southern and western portion of British Columbia is a densely-wooded country, both mountains and plains being covered with thick and stately forests. To the north and east there is less timber and of an inferior quality.

The prevailing timber throughout is coniferous, and of different varieties.

The forests of British Columbia of economic value embrace an area situated between the Cascade range of mountains and the sea coast, and extending from the 49° to the 55° parallel of north latitude, together with Vancouver and adjacent islands and the Queen Charlotte Group.

The Douglas pine, or red fir (A. Duglasii),—which is esteemed the most valuable timber for masts, spars, and lumber, and of which it has been written : " So closely do the trees " stand, and withal so tall and straight, that the united navy yards of the world might " draw thence their supplies for years without more than partially exhausting these " spacious and majestic forests,"—covers that portion of the above area between the southern boundary of the province and about a parallel drawn through the northern extremity of Vancouver's Island.

North of this line, including Queen Charlotte Islands, the Douglas fir does not occur in large areas. Here yellow cypress, red and white cedar, and white pine predominate, and are perhaps of little less commercial value than Douglas fir.

The geographical formation of the coast presents numerous and far-reaching inlets, which afford access to the forests and greatly facilitate lumbering.

The interior of the province is but sparsely timbered. The eastern portion, watered by the Columbia and Kootenay rivers and their tributaries, contain large areas of timber of great commercial value.

In refutation of the assertion that Canadian forests are within six years of exhaustion, so far as this province is concerned an extract may be quoted from the Government prize essay of 1872, by the late A. C. Anderson :—

" The forests of British Columbia are productive of an inexhaustible supply of timber of the most serviceable kind."

Exported and milled timber have so far made no diminution in the available supply.

The Committee concur in the Ministers' Report, and recommend that a copy of this Minute, if approved, (be forwarded ?) to the Hon. the Secretary of State for Canada, with a request that it be transmitted to the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for the Colonies.

Certified.

Clerk Executive Council.

Enclosure 7.

Département des Terres de la Couronne,
Section des Bois et Forêts.

Monsieur, Québec, 2 Octobre 1884.

J'ai l'honneur d'accuser la réception de la dépêche du Très Honorable Secrétaire d'Etat pour les Colonies, en date du 21 Novembre dernier, demandant tous les renseignements possibles relativement à l'epuisement des forêts du Canada.

En reponse j'ai reçu instruction de vous transmettre une Copie du Rapport de Mr. A. J. Russell, ex Agent des bois, à Ottawa, sur la condition dans laquelle se trouvent actuellement les forêts de la Province de Québec, ainsi que Copies des lois et règlements de ce département, concernant la vente et l'administration des bois sur les terres de la Couronne.

Au sujet des Communications de Mr. Little publiées dans le "Times" de Londres, allant à dire que les forêts de l'Amérique du Nord seraient détruites sous une période de six ans, je dois aussi vous dire que ce Monsieur dans une entrevue avec l'Honorable W. W. Lynch, Commissaire des Terres de la Couronne pour la Province de Québec, a declaré que l'avancé en question se rapportait aux forêts des Etats Unis et non a celles du Canada.

Jai l'honneur, etc.
(Signé) Taché,
Asst. Commissaire T. C.

A L'Honorable Secrétaire Provincial,
&c. &c. &c.
Québec.

Memorandum on the Crown Timber Forests of the Province of Quebec and the Subjects submitted at the American Forestry Congress, at Montreal, in August 1882 that might be applicable thereto.

Before proceeding to consider how far the experienced and scientific information and practical suggestions contained in the addresses delivered and the articles read at the meetings of the Forestry Congress, and the discussions that followed, may be of use to us, it may be well to take a glance at the extent and character of our own forest regions; to assist us in judging of their capacity to meet the demand for home use and exportation likely to be made upon them in future.

Laurentian Forest zones.

Commencing on the north shore of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, at the boundary between Canada and Labrador, we first come in view of the great broad band of Laurentian Forest Highlands. After skirting the Gulf and River of St. Lawrence for 650 miles, it falls back above Cap Tourment, and sweeping round westward, in rear of the old Seignorial Settlements that occupy the northern portion of the great plain of the St. Lawrence, strikes the Ottawa below Grenville, and following it, more or less closely, crosses that river at Portage du Fort, covering all that part of Ontario north and east of Lakes Huron and Superior, and extending, throughout, back to the northern boundary of the Provinces and far beyond it, sweeping northward with great breadth, between Lake Winnipeg and the Silurian low lands of Hudson's Bay to the Arctic Ocean.

As the territories included in the 190,000 square miles or thereby that the Province of Quebec embraces of this vast region, though more or less alike in geological and physical formation, differ materially in the character and value of their timber forests, it may be suitable to consider each of them separately before speaking of that part of the Province lying south of the St. Lawrence. It differs from them on the important particular of being a country generally suitable for cultivation, and largely so occupied, while the territories on the north side, though about 177,800 square miles in extent, exclusive of the settled country between the Laurentides and the St. Lawrence and on the Ottawa, and the fertile basin of Upper Saguenay, do not contain a portion of arable land fit for cultivation equal to one fourth part of their area. And much even of that small proportion, from coldness of climate in the northern parts or from difficulty of access and inter-communication where scattered in small blocks, or from both causes combined, will long be too far below the ordinary standard of agricultural value to attract settlement or admit of cultivation being profitable or of the settlers living permanently even in moderate comfort, excepting through the means of the market for produce and the employment afforded them, by a continuance of the manufacture of timber, which to be permanent must be carried on, on a moderate scale, with that ever increasing care for the preservation of the forests, which it is now manifest that the permanent interests of the timber trade, the settlers, the public revenue, and of the country generally will in future require. Generally unarable.

It is evident therefore that by far the greatest portion of this vast forest region of upwards of 177,800 square miles in area, fit for nothing else, must remain a timber forest for ever, increasing in value as timber becomes more scarce elsewhere; though capable nevertheless of maintaining a sparse but hardy population in comparative comfort by the development of the resources of its mines and of its forests, if cared for and preserved. Fit for forest farming for ever.

Returning to our point of commencement, the first or gulf section of this vast forest region may be described as extending from the eastern boundary of the Province of Quebec westward to the line of longitude 65° west, 320 miles in direct length, and its area may be estimated as 32,000 square miles. From the very little we know of it owing to its interior waters being unsurveyed, it seems as yet comparatively valueless as a timber yielding country. Gulf section of it. Laurentian Forest zone.

It is watered by several large rivers, but with little exception there is no information about them before the public, beyond the position of their mouths, of them more is known about the River St. Augustin than any of the others. On it timber of a fair quality is said to abound at 15 miles up from the shore of the gulf, along which the intervening country to a great extent, from actual absence of soil of any kind, is described as excessively barren, likewise the upper parts of the hills, and the same is said of much of the interior plateau. The St. Augustin is the Indian highway to the Ashuawipi, the great River of Labrador, that flows eastward to the Atlantic. There are also the more powerful rivers, the Natasquan, the St. John, and the River Romaine (which is the greatest), and the River à la Pie, or Magpie, which from the ascertained position of its sources seems the longest. Gulf section. Its chief rivers.

The country on these rivers is described by Mr. Chisholm, who had forty years' experience in that country, as being very mountainous, for a hundred miles back, in ridges winding in all directions, and between them glens or ravines in many parts thickly wooded with fir, spruce, and birch, with, in other parts, swamps, where the larch grows tall, though of no great size, being crowded closely. Ascending to the interior, he says the country becomes more level, thinly interspersed with black spruce trees in groves. I would here remark that the black spruce tree, the "Abies nigra" of Michaux, though generally very small, is more valuable for its strength and durability than the white or the grey spruce, and I may add that I found the balsam fir, or sapin, grown near the gulf far more durable than that grown in the interior townships south of Quebec; and I have heard it said by men of experience that vessels built of timber that grew in the maritime parts of Quebec and the Lower Provinces lasted longer than those built at Quebec and Montreal of timber of the same kind from the interior of Canada. Laurentian Forests. Gulf section. Character and superior durability of its timber.

This is a question that merits investigation, as greater strength and durability would render the spruce and larch trees of this territory under consideration much more valuable for use as railway ties than like timber grown in the interior of the Province, and we know the demand for railway ties (which require renewal so frequently) will in future increase enormously, as it has done in the United States, and with it the value of such timber in this territory may become of importance. Gulf section. May yield superior railway ties abundantly.

As the timber of this territory is generally small, and far from abundant, and the rivers are obstructed with high falls and rapids, and even the ruggedness of the country will be an obstruction, lumbering operations on it will be expensive compared with the value of the timber when got out, but expensive river improvements will be much less necessary for the descent of saw logs and railway ties than for square timber. River obstructions less important for them.

The adjoining territory embraced between the line of longitude 65° west and a north-westerly line from the mouth of the River Manicouagan, with a frontage on the Gulf and River St. Lawrence of about 180 miles and a maximum depth back from the mouth of the Manicouagan to the height of land at its source of about 250 miles, is about 48,460 square miles in area. The Manicouagan section.

Though resembling the preceding in physical character, it differs from it in being rather better known, from having had its main rivers generally surveyed or explored by judiciously ordered surveys, but which from the great extent of the country necessarily left extensive tracts between them quite unknown. It differs considerably also in having lumber of a good quality in greater abundance, especially in the southern part of it, say for 40 miles north of the St. Lawrence, including even scattering pine of value.

Mountainous.

The reports of the surveyors show this territory to be more or less mountainous throughout. Near the gulf the summits of the ranges rise occasionally from 1,000 and 1,300 to 1,700 feet in height, and the plateau at the watershed is from 1,500 to 1,700 feet in height, with mountain summit near the sources of the River Moisie, the Outarde River, and the Manicouagan of 3,000 and 3,700 feet above the level of the sea.

Moderate river improvements wanted.

Much expenditure in improvements would be necessary to make these rivers and others of this territory fit for the descent of square timber, but much less would be required for getting out saw logs, and they will no doubt ultimately be got out with profit, and probably flatted tamarac and spruce. Both are to be found occasionally of a fair size even in the northern parts of this territory.

Large birch, spruce and larch on parts.

Professor Hind on descending a hill, burnt bare above, passed through a luxuriant forest of birch, spruce, and larch trees of a size that would have done creidt to Western Canada, and a little before that he found "birch of a "fine growth not less than 15 inches in diameter at an elevation of not less than 1,700 feet, "and a belt of spruce, some very fine, that averaged 18 inches in diameter;" on the other hand he speaks elsewhere of the trees being generally stunted further south (about latitude 51° north), and of the great brulé extending to the plateau of Labrador.

Manicouagan section.

Large spruce on parts, elsewhere timber stunted.

At top of the Ridge Lake he speaks of distant mountains of great height (with well wooded valleys between) on which vegetation ceases at two thirds up their sides.

The River Outarde.

Poorly wooded.

Rear parts may be found better as in other cases.

On the River Outarde Mr. Bignell reports the timber to be fir, spruce, bouleau, aspen, and cypress for 200 miles up from the coast, and beyond that the timber was small black spruce to its source near the height of land. The general character of the timber here shown is not favourable, but we know that the timber on the tributaries of some rivers is better and more abundant than on the main rivers, and I have known extensive timber limits rejected on first exploration as worthless, and wooded only with poplar and birch, that afterwards, when better known, commanded fair prices for timber found on them.

Manicouagan and Outarde are twin rivers in position and character.

The River Manicouagan is a twin river to the Outarde. Their mouths and their sources are adjoining respectively.

River Manicouagan valley fit for settlement in parts.

The timber on them is much alike, only pine is mentioned as occurring occasionally on the lower and middle course of the Manicouagan, the banks of it are more rugged and it flows in a lower bed, which may perhaps be the cause of some appearance of pine, and also of frost in the fall not setting in early which would admit of grain and root crops being raised on some tracts of good land upon its banks. Beyond the long lakes on its two upper banches the timber is only small spruce and tamarac up to the height of land.

River Pentecote has better land and timbers.

On the River Pentecote, which enters the gulf 65 miles north-eastward of the Manicouagan, though the country is mountainous, there is more good land along the river than on the Manicouagan and the timber is better; (some very fine) spruce and tamarac along its course of 80 miles with a little pine near the coast, and the land and timber seems even better on the Trinité, which enters half way between the Pentecote and the Manicouagan, and more pine is to be found on it as reported by Mr. Bignell.

River Trinité still better.

This territory and the one described before it form together the less known, inferiorly wooded and comparatively untouched, as yet, portion of the vast forest region of the province of Quebec. They embrace an area of about 80,460 square miles.

Area of Manicouagan section and general characters.

The general inferiority, and (in) parts, absence of timber, is due to the poverty and shallowness and in parts to the entire absence of soil where successive fires have burned off the thin covering of vegetable matter from the rocks, and not the coldness of the climate, which is really most suitable for the growth of spruce, and fairly so for tamarac.

General character of the Gulf and Manicouagan sections unfavourable in many parts.

The thinness of the coating of vegetable matter over the rocks in parts of these two territories causes it to dry up in hot weather and become exceedingly combustible, greatly aggravating the tendency to wide-spreading forest fires, while the absence of moisture stunts the growth of the trees, such parts of these two territories will necessarily always be unfavourable for the growth of wood; but in the other parts of them, forming the greater part of their area, where the soil is more generally sufficient to sustain even a moderate growth of wood of kinds there prevalent, great quantities of it will, no doubt, be taken out with profit for purposes for which such timber, though generally small, may be serviceable as the timber of more favourable forests becomes scarce and high in price.

Great Central section behind the old settlements.

The next great portion of the northern forest region of the province of Quebec it may be convenient to take a view of as a whole, is that commencing at a north-westerly line from the mouth of the River Manicouagan, and extending westward to the eastern watershed of the River Gatineau, including the Saguenay, the St. Maurice, and the Lower

Ottawa territories, leaving the Upper Ottawa territory to be considered separately for statistical convenience.

Great Central division, including the Saguenay, St. Maurice, and Lower Ottawa territories.

This great division, containing an area of 81,128 square miles, is distinctly different from the foregoing; lumbering operations having for many years been successfully carried on in various parts of it; in its forests pine of the best quality is, or in some parts may be said has been, more abundant, and they adjoin the rear of the older or are associated with the advancing new settlements of the province.

The north-westerly line from the mouth of the Manicouagan is arbitrarily assumed as the eastern boundary of this great division as (though imperfectly) indicating the general position of the gradual and irregular transition to the better wooded country, whose forests have already been more or less lumbered upon or are, to a considerable extent, held under license from the Crown for that purpose.

This great central division embraces the Saguenay, the St. Maurice, and the Lower Ottawa territories.

The Saguenay territory.

The Saguenay territory, embracing two Crown timber agencies, is the first in ascending the St. Lawrence.

In the eastern part of it, between the assumed boundary line, from the mouth of the Manicouagan and the River Saguenay, the chief rivers that fall into the St. Lawrence are the Betsiamites (of which nearly the whole of its course of probably 260 miles flows through this division) the Portneuf, the Sault aux Cochons, and the Escoumains.

Rivers below the Saguenay.

The three latter, though much smaller, have yielded proportionally much more good timber (including some pines), though in parts denuded by old forest fires, and though originally well wooded the future supply from them must be very small.

River Betsiamites

On the Betsiamites, above the 40th mile, the timber is very small and vast brulés are prevalent, which cannot yield timber of value till reproduced in the remote future.

Area of the Saguenay Valley.

The area from which the Saguenay draws its waters seems, as far as known, to be about 24,000 square miles, and its most important feature is its great geological trough or basin (in which Lake St. John is situated) containing over three millions of acres of fertile arable land.

Cause of warm climate around Lake St. John.

As the depression of this basin below the mean surface of the earth, as represented by that of the mountainous country around it, is such as to give it, on Humboldt's data, a climatic temperature equal to that of a latitude two and a half degrees further south, which, together with the richness of the soil, besides making it the best wheat growing country in the province of Quebec, gave it originally a fine growth of wood, including pine of a good quality, which was found on the River Mistassini 85 miles further north than the limit of the growth of pine in the valley of the River St. Maurice.

Pine grows far north on the River Saguenay owing to climate admitting.

Owing to my practical experience I was most forcibly struck with these advantages of soil and climate 30 years ago, while making an exploration in the interior by order of Government for the purpose of verifying the truth of what seemed almost incredible statements on the subject made by a few public spirited clergymen and gentlemen of high standing from the Lower St. Lawrence, which I had the opportunity of most amply sustaining. But, owing to these advantages and the demands of the lumber trade, what remains of the best timber forest of the Saguenay must soon be swept away to make room for what should be the most prosperous settlements in the province.

Other woods prevail in higher parts of this territory. Will yield much spruce and larch.

However, from the generally mountainous character and extensive area from which the many large branches of the Saguenay draw their waters, there will always, with proper care, be a sufficient supply of spruce and larch and other wood, after its pine is almost or altogether cut away, to sustain a considerable export trade in lumber. For there will always be a great preponderance of unarable forest land remaining in the surrounding country, and we know from explorations made, that larch of a great size is found occasionally as far north as the height of land between the St. Lawrence and Hudson's Bay waters.

And, notwithstanding that there are great tracts desolated by fires, even they, when there is soil enough, are undergoing nature's process of restoration by a vigorous growth of deciduous trees, chiefly poplar and birch, whose falling leaves restore fertility. I saw much poplar and white birch of a fine growth for making saw logs in some parts of the Saguenay country, where the land is doubtless now under cultivation, that would be most valuable in prairie lands for house building. Forty years ago I examined, down to the foundation, the walls of an old house then being cut open; they were of hewn poplar, and all perfectly sound. It was built by missionaries 180 years ago, but had ever since then been inhabited.

Fine poplar on parts.

On the southern tributaries of the Saguenay that interlace with those of the St. Maurice there is much good soil, and where the trees fit to make saw logs of have been cut away, the small trees left, if not destroyed by fire, will soon be of a useful size.

Undersized pine left uncut matures rapidly. Striking instances.

This remark is applicable to all timber regions as I have had ample occasion to notice. In one case where no error could occur, a small timber berth with well marked outlines, which had been stripped of every tree fit to be a saw log under an able manager, was cut over again by him eight years afterwards, when, by the increased size of the small trees formerly left as unfit, a greater number of saw logs were made from them than were got by the first cut eight years before; this could not take place where settlement was advancing, where the small pines are more convenient for settlers' use in building and fencing than large ones are. On the Gatineau I passed through an extensive grove of young red pine trees of fine growth that had previously been three times completely cut over since the commencement of lumbering there.

Saguenay territory.

Reverting to the Saguenay, there is an extensive unknown tract, probably upwards of 15,000 square miles in area, commencing about 60 miles north from Lake St. John, seemingly drained on the east side by the head waters of the Paribouka, and westward by the large branches of the Mistassini and of the Chomouchuan. We may safely assume that it is covered by a broad band of poplar, birch, spruce, and tamarac (larch). Much of it, as seen on the south side of it, of a fair growth, and behind that, towards and about the height of land, the there prevalent stunted black spruce with extensive brulés interspersed throughout. The character of the timber of the two Saguenay agencies will be best seen by the totals cut on Crown lands from 1856 to 1881 inclusively, viz., of square timber 7,969 pieces, of which 343 were of white pine, 3,531 of red pine, and 4,095 of spruce and other kinds of wood; of saw logs there were 1,164,844 of pine and 3,432,185 of spruce, or, say, three times as many spruce as pine logs.

Timber and saw logs on which Crown dues were paid 1856 to 1881.

The minor descriptions of wood goods are omitted as unnecessary for this comparison, nor does it include the timber and saw logs of pine and spruce from private lands, the quantity of which from private lands where settlement is advancing is very considerable. In 1856 and 1857 there were nearly twice as many pine logs cut as spruce. In the following 20 years, the proportion of spruce logs gradually increased, and more rapidly during the last five years, in which there were very nearly 13 times as many spruce logs as pine taken out, the annual cut of pine logs during the last five years having fallen irregularly to about half what it was in the early years, indicating that the pine is becoming scare, while the spruce continues abundant in the Saguenay country. The total of Crown timber revenue that accrued from the two Saguenay agencies during the whole period was $369,670\frac{16}{100}$. Of what may have been collected during the several years prior to 1856 that lumbering was carried on in the Saguenay country I have not been able to find any published record.

Saguenay territory. Decrease of pine logs and great increase of spruce.

Crown timber revenue, 1856 to 1861.

The area of them held under licenses from the Crown to cut timber is 4,462 square miles.

St. Maurice territory.

The next section of the great central division of our northern forest region is that of the St. Maurice. Consisting chiefly of the area of 16,000 square miles drained by that river and its tributaries, with the addition of the waste lands of the Crown on the River Batiscan and lesser streams between it and the rear of the seigniories on the St. Lawrence. The area under license from the Crown to cut timber is 9,824 square miles. The St. Maurice territory, though it has no such extensive tract equal in fertility and climate behind its old settlements on the St. Lawrence as the Saguenay has at Lake St. John, surpassed the Saguenay originally in the value of its timber forests, owing to the greater proportion of pine on its middle and lower course and on the tributaries therein joining it. In general position the St. Maurice is from one degree in its upper course to two degrees in its lower course south of the Saguenay, though inferior to the Saguenay in climate, owing to the advantage the latter has in temperature from its comparative depression below its surrounding country. At Kikendatch, on the Upper St. Maurice, potatoes seldom or scarce come to maturity, though it is, on the same latitude as the settlements on Lake St. John in Upper Saguenay, the best wheat growing country in the province of Quebec. The same broad band of poplar, birch, spruce, and tamarac forest, interspersed with extensive brulés already mentioned as prevailing along the northern limit of the growth of pine, sweeps down southward as the line of colder temperature does, covering the head waters of the St. Maurice down to Weymontacheuc, and northward behind this zone of poplar and birch there is here, as elsewhere along the height of land and beyond it, the country where scrubby stunted black spruce woods, interspersed with burnt barrens predominate. But even there, at the height of land, a fine grove of larch trees (some of them of great size) was found by P. L. Surveyor Bignell, in accordance with the important fact that on suitable soil larch could be successfully cultivated in the coldest parts of the province far north of the limits of the growth of pine.

Stunted wood and barren at source. But larch trees of great size found there.

Though the country drained by the St. Maurice and its tributaries is less than two thirds of that of the Saguenay, the growth of pine in its forests has been greater, notwithstanding the unfavourable character of the upper and more elevated part of its valley. But the pine on its lower tributaries has been very much cut away; but where there is a young growth preserved from fire and the axe its yield will doubtless be considerable.

Timber from Crown lands, 1851 to 1882.

Great decrease of pine and increase of spruce cut.

The quantities of timber cut on Crown lands alone in the St. Maurice territory, from 1856 to 1881 inclusively, have been, of square timber, white pine, 56,921 pieces and red pine 5,453 pieces (up to the year 1864, no square pine taken out since). Of other woods, 9,257 pieces. Of white pine saw logs, 4,190,895 pieces. Spruce saw logs 1,740,546 pieces. In the first 15 years the quantities were 2,110,527 pine saw logs against 562,071 spruce, and in the last 10 years 2,080,368 pine against 1,178,475 spruce saw logs. In 1881 the number of pine saw logs was 114,371 and of spruce 112,224, or nearly equal. From which we may infer that it is becoming more difficult to maintain the same superior production of pine, as formerly, over spruce.

Crown timber revenue, 1856 to 1881.

The Crown timber revenue that accrued from the St. Maurice territory, from 1856 to 1881 inclusively, as shown by departmental returns, was $1,103,970\frac{73}{100}$, including dues on all descriptions of wood goods from Crown lands, ground rents, &c., &c.

Lower Ottawa territory.

The next district of this central division of the great Laurentian forest region is that designated the Lower Ottawa territory or agency, including the vacant and the waste lands of the Crown on the northern tributaries of the Lower Ottawa, from the boundary of the St. Maurice territory to the watershed dividing the valley of the Rivière aux Lièvres from that of the Gatineau. It embraces the valleys of the River Assomption, the River du Nord, the Rouge, the Petite Nation, the Blanche, and the du Lièvre, with other smaller tributaries of the Ottawa, the total of the included areas being 11,256 square miles, of which 6,035 square miles are covered by licenses from the Crown to cut timber, and there is much private land.

Lower Ottawa territory.

Area.

Chiefly in pine zone.

These rivers mentioned lie altogether within the pine growing zone, excepting Rivière du Lièvre, the main branch of which for 40 miles, in direct distance down from its source, is in the poplar, birch, spruce and tamarac region, which, sweeping over from Weymontacheuc on the St. Maurice and the Manouan, intersects the du Lièvre at the head of Lake Megomangoos, and continues westward over to and across the east and west branches of the Gatineau in the Upper Ottawa territory adjoining. The predominant pine bearing character of the Ottawa country begins to be apparent in the returns of timber cut in this territory on which dues accrued to the Crown from 1856 to 1881 inclusively, which were squared white pine 106,398 pieces, squared red pine 943 pieces, other woods, principally birch, 38,459. White pine saw logs, 5,735,931 pieces. Spruce saw logs, 383,354, or one to 15 of pine very nearly. Of the square white pine, 95,155 pieces were cut in the first 15 years, and 11,243 in the following 10 years to 1881 inclusive. Of squared red pine, 809 pieces in the 15 years and 134 in the 10 years following. Of other squared timber, 22,125 were cut in the 15 years and 16,334 in the last 10. Of the pine saw logs, 3,374,896 were cut in the 15 years and 2,361,035 in the last 10. Showing a decrease of about 10 per cent. in the average annual cut of pine logs. While of the spruce saw logs, 35,501 only were cut in the 15 years and 347,853 during the 10 years stated, showing an increase to about 14 times the annual average of the 15 years preceding. It is noticeable that the total of pine saw logs from the Lower Ottawa territory during the whole period is about one fourth greater than that from the St. Maurice territory, though the latter has about double the area of the former.

General remark.

Timber from private lands or in previous years to large amount not included hitherto.

The Crown timber revenue from the Lower Ottawa territory from 1856 to 1881 inclusive, including ground rents on timber licenses, &c., amounted, by departmental returns, to $1,093,297. It is to be borne in mind, with respect to the quantities of timber from Crown lands here given for the years mentioned in the foregoing territories, for the purpose of showing the character and capacity of their forests, that, in addition to what is shown, these territories, but especially the St. Maurice and Lower Ottawa, have yielded large quantities of square timber and saw logs cut on private lands during the period stated and for many previous years; and that, apart from what was actually cut on Seigniories, timber and saw logs were occasionally passed as being so, if brought down streams flowing through the Seigniories, though really cut on Crown lands behind. It is also especially to be remarked as important in relation to subjects of forestry, and the future lumber trade of the province of Quebec, that, apart from the old Seigniories, or parishes on and near the St. Lawrence and in its great plain, only one quarter of the areas of the foregoing three sections is arable land fit for settlement, and the remainder can be profitable only as timber forests for ever.

Before proceeding further westward it may be proper to take a glance at the part of the province of Quebec, south of the St. Lawrence, from Gaspé inclusively upwards. The area of which is about 34,200 superficial miles.

Area of Quebec, south of the St. Lawrence, more suitable for cultivation.

Notwithstanding that it is traversed by the Great Shikshak or Notre Dame Range, broken in groups of varied character and elevation, it is well known that fully three quarters of its area, owing to its more favourable geological formation and character of surface, is more or less suitable for successful cultivation.

Even in the district of Gaspé, barley much exceeding in weight and (as found on careful analysis completely made) containing 10 per cent. more saccharine matter than barley grown in the district of Montreal could be cultivated as profitably as wheat in the interior of the province.

Pine in Gaspé.

Pine grows well in the peninsula of Gaspé, including the county of Bonaventure; but, owing to the general prevalence in many parts of a heavy growth of brown birch and maple, and other hardwood trees pine was originally less abundant, and is now scarce, much of it having been cut away; but large brown birch is abundant and the growth of cedar in Gaspé is unequalled in size and quality. I measured one over 15 feet in circumference, and it was straight and without a branch for about 40 feet. Excellent sound cedar is abundant, and is the best wood for building of the fishing boats of the coast, owing to its lightness and durability; and brown birch is increasing in value now that walnut has become scarce.

Cedar and hardwood large and sound.

River Restigouche. Pine much cut away.

Westward the pine on the tributaries of the Restigouche has been very much cut away for square timber. The rivers falling into the St. Lawrence, though long lumbered upon for saw logs, still yield a considerable proportion of pine. As the populous old settlements of the Seigniories on the St. Lawrence, the Yamaska, and the Richelieu, and of the eastern townships and Megantic, and the increasing new settlements behind them, occupy the chief part of the country west of the Chaudière Valley, there is but little timber cut on Crown lands there, and much of what remains will be required for local consumption. In the whole of the part of the province of Quebec south of the St. Lawrence the timber and saw logs cut upon Crown lands, from 1856 to 1881 inclusively are as follows, viz.:

Eastern townships and Megantic.

Crown timber cut in the districts south of the St. Lawrence, 1856 to 1881.

Of square timber, 52,162 pieces of white pine, 3,828 pieces of red pine, and 102,788 pieces of all other woods. Of saw logs, pine, 1,563,353 pieces, and of spruce pine, 6,326,346, of which respectively, of squared white pine during the first 15 years 44,530 pieces and 7,632 during the last ten years; and of other woods 48,151 pieces in the first 15 years and 54,635 pieces during the last ten years. Of pine saw logs 952,030 pieces in the first 15 years and 611,323 pieces in the last ten years. Of spruce saw logs 2,793,894 pieces in the first 15 and in the last 10 years 3,532,452 pieces.

Area under timber licenses.

The extent now under license from the Crown to cut timber in this division of the province is only 7,575 square miles, and the total revenue from timber and saw logs, from 1856 to 1881 inclusively, is $$1,467,974\frac{54}{100}$.

As much of this south division is already settled country, or rapidly becoming so, and the moderate proportion of the pine it contained orginally is largely cut away, it cannot continue long to yield any considerable supply. But as spruce is of quick growth, besides being still abundant, the annual yield of it may be continued for many years with little diminution, and the supply of birch be much increased with the probable increase of demand.

Spruce timber still abundant.

Upper Ottawa Territories.

Reverting to the north side of the St. Lawrence, the Upper Ottawa territory remains to be considered. As the whole of it for 25 years previous to confederation was included in one Crown timber agency, under the same system of management and under one common revenue accounts, till divided between Quebec and Ontario by their old boundary, the Ottawa, on confederation, as two separate agencies, but under my charge as previously and as they have been jointly and severally for upwards of 30 years, it may be appropriate, in relation to forestry as the general subject of this memorandum, to take a general view of the whole as a forest country of chief importance, while carefully distinguishing the yield of timber from each, and the revenue therefrom, as closely as practicable through periods of mixed account and early obscurity that required much labour in investigation for results of little value.

The River Ottawa as surveyed is about 790 miles in length from its principal mouth at Bout de l'Isle below Montreal to the source of its east branch, but the source of its north branch reported by fur traders to be the main stream may, when ascertained by survey, prove the Ottawa to be over 800 miles in length, measuring by its very involved and tortuous course. Nevertheless the source of its east branch is less than 200 miles in direct distance from its mouth. It nearly equals the Rhine in length of course and the area it draws its water from, but the mean volume of water it discharges into the St. Lawrence is about three times the mean outflow of the Rhine as given by D'Aubuisson. There are geographical and meteorological causes which, combined with the universal prevalence of forests and the length of unbroken cold in winter, seem to account for this difference. The area drained by the Ottawa and its tributaries, as far as ascertained and shown in the latest official maps, is about 60,080 superficial miles. Before the surveys of late years it was estimated at 80,000, of which 19,757 are in the Province of Ontario and about 40,334 are in the Province of Quebec. The River Ottawa.

The following are the principal tributaries of the Ottawa and their lengths of course in miles (including sinuosities of their channels), from the head of Lake Temiscaming downwards. On the Quebec or north-east side. The Kippawa 123, M. Dumoine 130, Black River 128, Coulonge 140, Gatineau 340 probably, Du Lièvre 244, North Nation, Rouge 140, North River 77, L'Assumption 117. The last five in the Lower Ottawa territory. On the Ontario side the Blanche, Montreal River 186, Matawan 60, Petewawe 155, Bonnechere 110, Madawaska 255, Mississippi 110, Rideau 116, South Nation 135. The tributaries of the Ottawa above Lake Temiscaming are few, generally small, and their courses mostly unsurveyed and unknown. Its tributaries.

The Upper Ottawa territory of the province of Quebec extends from the eastern watershed of the River Gatineau, dividing its tributary waters from those of the Rivière du Lièvre up to the head of Lake Temiscaming and the line there established at the western boundary of the province of Quebec, having an extreme breadth westward of 200 miles and 200 in depth northward from the mouth to the source of the Gatineau. Its depth thence westward for nearly 200 miles is almost altogether unknown, and till the position of the height of land dividing the Ottawa waters from those of Hudson's Bay is determined by survey throughout that distance the area of the Upper Ottawa territory can only be imperfectly approximated as 29,523 square miles. The area here given is calculated on the last published Departmental map of the provinces, though, as stated in my report to the Department of Crown Lands of 6th May 1880, it has been already discovered that the waters of Hudson's Bay extend far south of the supposed boundary thereon delineated, covering not only a considerable portion of Block A, but also 209 square miles of timber berths granted by the Department; on the other hand it is stated by some who profess to have seen it that there is a large branch, apparently the main stream, that enters Lake Bouchette from the north, up which the narrator, a fur trader, said he had canoed three days, on his way to Mecisean, in the Hudson's Bay territory; it was widely distant, he said, from the east branch which he had also ascended. Of the northern tributaries of the Upper Ottawa mentioned the entire courses of the Kippawa, Dumaine, Black River, and Coulonge, and three-quarters of that of the Gatineau lie within the pine growing zone, and embrace by far the best pine growing forests in the province in extent and in the size and quality of the timber. In the township of Thorne, 20 years ago, I measured a pine tree 18 feet 4 inches in circumference at 5 feet from the ground, and within sight of the Parliament Hill, Ottawa, I measured some about 16 feet in circumference and 180 feet in height, but trees of such girth are scarce. On a lot containing 197 acres, 17,383 pine saw logs were proved to have been cut in four years, or about 88 logs to an acre; and on 21st instant four timber berths, containing together an area of 145 square miles, situated about a hundred miles up Black River, were sold at public auction for $208,100 to experienced saw-mill owners of Ottawa. That is at the rate of of $2 ·24 an acre, lakes and streams included. Besides which the purchasers have to pay the usual annual ground rent of $2 a square mile, and the ordinary Crown dues or price of each log they may cut of 11 or 22 cents according to the size of them. The sale was by order of Chancery on decision of a suit in law (such timber berths were to be had for the asking, free of price, when these were first acquired from the Crown). It will be seen that pine must be abundant to yield a profit on such a purchase, besides the cost of manufacturing it into sawn lumber, and berths as well wooded as these are numerous in the pine growing region of the Ottawa. There are tracts, however, where hardwood predominates, with pine interspersed, which is of the best quality from the richness of the soil and not being crowded. But towards the northern limits of its growth, where it is intermingled with poplar birch and cypress, it diminishes in size and quality. The upper quarter of the course of the Gatineau lies within the broad zone of poplar, birch, cypress, and tamarac (larch) country that extends towards the height of land. The country at the source of the west branch of the Head waters.

Great central summit of surrounding country from which the main rivers diverge.

Gatineau is the great central summit of the high lands, between the waters of the Ottawa and those of Hudson's Bay. This is prominently indicated by the fact that within a distance of 20 miles rise the east branch of the Ottawa, flowing to Lake Temiscaming, the Gatineau flowing south to the Ottawa, the Meciscan branch of the Notaway flowing north to Hudson's Bay, and the St. Maurice flowing east before turning south to the St. Lawrence, and beyond them the Rupert River flowing north and then westward to Hudson's Bay, and the Saguenay flowing east to the Lower St. Lawrence,—all rivers of 300 or 400 miles in length diverging from the high summit region, the elevation of which gives it a temperature too cold for the growth of pine, though tamarac and spruce in parts attain a great size.

River Ottawa, towards its source.

Much of the country at the sources of west branch of the Gatineau is bare rocky brulé. Near the Gatineau, but 25 miles south of its source, is the source of the east branch of the Ottawa (in a lower and more fertile valley), near which there are some pines, then flowing westward in a more fertile valley for 50 miles, through inferior woods, pine begins again to appear, increasing in quantity and quality, though generally scattering among other woods that prevail of an inferior description.

Broad depression in height of land towards Abittibi.

Respecting the height of land for 170 miles west from the source of the Gatineau we have almost no information till approaching the Labyrinth Lake portage to the River Abittibi, where it sinks into the broad plateau of about 900 feet in height above the sea level, which, with in parts detached hills, extends westward by the sources of the Blanche to the north angle of the Montreal River. Here, owing apparently to advantage in climate, due to less elevation above the sea, and actual comparative depression, pine of a fair growth abounds in groves, and continues to appear occasionally northward to one degree beyond the latitude where it is last seen in the high country on the head waters of the Gatineau.

River Quinze or main Ottawa above Lake Temiscaming.

The River Quinze or Main Ottawa enters the head of Lake Temiscaming, near the west boundary of the province of Quebec, 42 miles south of the height of land or north boundary, and 31 miles south of latitude 48° north. The source of its east and possibly main branch at the head of Lake Capemachigama, 32 miles south of the height of land and 21 south of latitude 48° north, is 190 miles in direct distance from the mouth of the Quinze, though 366 by the exceedingly crooked course of the river.

Good pine in Block A.

The superior character of timber and abundance of good pine above mentioned is more or less prevalent in Block A., which occupies 2,141 square miles between the Quinze and the height of land. About 60 miles in direct distance up that river pine becomes gradually scarce and scattered, and white birch, spruce, poplar and fir prevail. Though much more pine than is supposed may as usual be found on more complete exploration, it is evident but little pine will be furnished from the remaining tract of a hundred and thirty (130) miles in length, lying upon and north of the Quinze and between it and the height of land. But ultimately it will yield permanently a very considerable supply of spruce and other wood.

Scarcer above it, but spruce abounds.

Areas licensed and unlicensed.

The area licensed in the Quebec Upper Ottawa territory, under 529 Crown timber licenses, is 19,269 square miles, of unlicensed waste lands 7,773 square miles (estimated), besides private lands. As the Upper Ottawa territory of Ontario, as before mentioned, formed so long part of the same agency as to administration and accounts as that of Quebec, and its trade has been so long linked with that of Quebec as its market, having hitherto furnished about two thirds of the whole supply of square timber which sustains its export trade, it may be proper to take our proposed notice of it here, and then exhibit the product in timber and revenue of each of the Upper Ottawa territories together.

The Upper Ottawa territory of Ontaria.

The Upper Ottawa territory of Ontario includes within its outlines an area of 17,463 square miles, apart from the area of 2,294 square miles on Ottawa waters below it. Its chief rivers—the Blanche, the Montreal River, the Matawan, the Petewawe, the Bonnechere, the Madawaska, the Mississippi, the Rideau—have been already enumerated, and their lengths, of course, stated as tributaries of the Ottawa.

River Blanche.

The Blanche flows through an unusually fertile arable country covered with a fine growth of hard wood trees, with no pine on its course except a few trees at a lake at its source on the height of land, but on the head waters at the Quebec boundary good pine becomes abundant.

The Montreal River.

On the Montreal River good pine originally extended up to the 62nd mile, but even since 1866 fires have done much damage. North of that poplar, birch, and spruce prevail. The country between the Montreal River and Lake Temiscaming is held to be valuable timber land, but at the western watershed bounding this territory pine is absent. Pine is abundant in the country on the west side of the Ottawa down to the Matawan and all below it, back to the rear boundary of the territory and beyond it.

General characters of Upper

The chief part of the Upper Ottawa agency of Ontario, forming about three-quarters of its entire area, is that lying southward of the River Matawan, including the valleys of its south branch, the Amable du Fards, the Petewawe, the Indian River, the Madawaska, the Bonnechere, the Mississippi, and the Rideau, which, like the valleys of the Moira and the Trent in the adjoining agency westward, originally contained the most extensive and richest pine forests in the old provinces of British North America. On the River Bonnechere, for instance, I passed through two large timber berths, equal to a large township in area, generally covered with hardwood trees often 100 feet in height; yet they yielded in the course of 40 years' dues on square pine timber and saw logs, paid into my office, equal to nearly three dollars an acre; and they are still yielding some dues and ground rents, being still of value though much cut up by settlers and lumbering. On the Quebec side there are tracts that long ago yielded as much. On both sides of the Ottawa there are pieces and considerable tracts of unarable land, though rich in the soil, so wooded that should be reserved carefully as forests for ever, under careful management, gleanings, and thinnings utilised, and the surplus young trees transplanted to replace the larger ones taken away as soon as private enterprise, with such encouragement as Government may be able to afford, may see that it would be worth while to do so. Beyond the Ottawa valley and French River north-westward Ontario has but little pine to contribute, it is limited to a belt extending from 30 to 40 miles north from Lake Nippissing and Lake Huron, beyond which recurs a zone of 120 miles in breadth, which extends to Lake Superior, that, with the country behind it, has no pine to contribute.

Upper Ottawa, Ontario.

But from the country on Hudson's Bay waters, claimed by Ontario, great quantities of excellent spruce, tamarac, and yellow birch timber and sawn lumber, will doubtless be brought out by rail, before very many years from what is called the level clay country of the north, which also contains much good land fit for settlement, and there is good coal in the lower valley of Moose River. The country between the northern boundary of the province of Quebec and Hudson's Bay, though it has a good growth of pine for 20 miles north of the Quebec boundary, about the portage to Lake Abittibi has much less timber of value or land fit for cultivation owing to the fact recently discovered that the fine growth of wood seen along its rivers, especially north of Lake Abittibi, often extend less than a mile back, and that the greater part of the country between and behind, is covered by low peat bogs of great depth, the wetness of the climate being highly favorable to the growth of the plant, the decay of the under parts of which as it grows produces the bogs gradually increases their depth. They may become of incalculable value for the enormous supply of fuel stored up in them, which might be furnished at a moderate price in our cities for domestic use, and many manufacturing purposes, and the soil that underlies these bogs being of a retentive and durable kind, will, where it may be uncovered, yield heavy crops of hay and oats, barley or rye, like the lands reclaimed from "Blairs Drummond Moss" in Scotland and others.

Limited range of pine zone, north of Lakes Nipissing and Huron.

Much richer in wood is the territory on the Hudson's Bay waters claimed by Ontario.

Country north of Quebec has less wood owing to peat bogs.

But the supply of timber it can yield at any future time will be much less than what the country claimed by Ontario will yield, especially with Canada Pacific Railway to carry it out in the form of sawn lumber.

Value in future of peat bog regions north of the province of Quebec.

Very little information of any kind is before the public respecting the country east of Lake Abittibi and the valley of the River Hurricanaw, the head waters of which reach down below lat. 48° north to within 10 miles of Lake Victoria on the Ottawa. It would seem very desirable to have an exploratory reconnaissance made of the valley and course of that river. Its waters extend about 20 miles further south than those of the Abittibi where much good pine was found. It seems desirable also to learn something as to its minerals. A copper formation was discovered considerably to the eastward of it by Mr. Richardson of the Geological Department. Profitable mining in that region, if possible, might be of value to the province of Quebec to which it naturally belongs.

Little known country north of provincial boundary.

Cursory explorations of its waters desirable.

It will be seen that the foregoing table gives a more complete exhibit of the yield of timber from the Upper Ottawa territories than I had the means of making for the other territories, owing to its being compiled from the records of my own office, and my transactions as agent for the two Upper Ottawa territories for upwards of 30 years, with the records of my predecessors for 26 preceding years, though imperfect. As the transactions and the revenue of the Crown Timber Office of Ottawa annually, are greater than the totals in the remainder of the two provinces taken together, and extend over a much longer period, and the Ottawa agency was more regularly systematised from the commencement, its records afford a more perfect view of this branch of the public service, especially as regards the effect of injudicious systems of settling lands for settlement.

Advantage of selling land subject to duties on timber, if adopted when recommended.

In illustration of which, I beg to refer to the line of quantities of timber and saw logs cut on private lands (of which proof was given) in the period from 1867 to 1881 at the foot of the foregoing table, by which it will be seen that there passed as private (free of duty) during these 15 years, 244,895 pieces of square timber and 2,679,412 saw logs from the Quebec side of my agency, and 6,815,879 pieces of square timber and 3,380,275 saw logs from the Ontario side of it, and that if they had been subject to duty at the rate of $1\frac{1}{4}$ cents a foot on the square timber, computing them at the minimum rate as averaging 50 cubic feet each, and the saw logs at the old lowest rate of 10 cents each (not $12\frac{1}{2}$ cents, the ordinary average in Quebec) the duty on them accruing to Quebec would have been $\$121{,}000\frac{87}{100}$, and to Ontario $\$722{,}921\frac{50}{100}$, making together $\$1{,}143{,}951\frac{87}{100}$, which I am necessarily in condition to say decidedly was unnecessarily lost to the public. Had the principle of selling public lands at a reduced price, subject to the conditions that the timber cut on them should be paid for at the usual rates of dues to the Crown when it went to market, been adopted when officially suggested, and sustained by detailed demonstrative definite evidence in 1852, or even when again submitted, and its applicability and advantages demonstrated in the 10th clause of my evidence before a committee of the Legislature in 1855, on the management of the public lands, had it been then adopted, not only would the above amount have been saved to the provinces, but also necessarily a nearly similar amount in the other Crown timber agencies, whose timber transactions are, taken together, nearly as great as those of my late agency, but also, in addition thereto, the dues that would have accrued on timber and saw logs cut during the previous 15 years on lots sold between 1852 and 1866, amounting with this addition in all to over $3,000,000. Besides which, there is the large amount which would accrue had the principle been established on timber that must continue in future to be cut on the part of the lands more lately purchased, especially which would cover any reduction in the price of the lands sold.

Loss by its not being adopted.

I am led to express myself so fully and decidedly here, because, as my 36 years' experience has necessarily made me thoroughly acquainted with the matter, I feel it to be my duty to vindicate to the utmost the action taken last spring by the Government of Quebec and the Legislature in passing the enactments of 45 Vict. c. 10. It may be thought that the above estimate of the amount that would have accrued had the sale of Crown lands, subject to payment of the usual dues on timber cut on them, been established 20 or 30 years ago, as it embraces duties on all kinds of timber besides pine, would give an exaggerated view of the profit to the revenue to be expected from the enactments of last spring, which reserves only the pine. But it will be found, on computing dues in the quantities of squared pine timber and pine saw logs given in the annual return of timber from Crown lands in the Departmental Report for 1881, by the increased rates established by Order in Council of 28th November 1880, as since modified, that the dues on pine timber and pine saw logs alone, at the new rates, will amount to several thousand dollars more than the total of dues that accrued on timber and saw logs of all kinds for that season at the previous rates. Notwithstanding a slight decrease on the quantity of pine in some parts of the province, cut from Crown lands, together with a great increase in the proportion of spruce saw logs made, the quantity of pine saw logs and squared pine timber when reduced to a common measure, has been on the whole increasing, though at an uneven rate. Thus, when the number of pieces of squared pine cut in the province as returned for 1881 is cast into saw logs by computing that the tree from which each piece was made would have yielded three saw logs (as the finer trees only are used for making squared timber), and the number so obtained is added to the number of pine saw logs returned for that year, the sum will be found to be over 5 per cent. greater than the yearly average of pine timber and saw logs, from Crown lands deduced from the totals of them as recorded for 15 years past, computed in the same manner.

Increase of pine cut—continued.

As the yield of pine continues to increase, though in a fluctuating manner, it will be many years before the revenue from the pine reserved by the enactment of last spring permanently declines; for as, even when the yield of pine diminishes through scarcity of it, the rate of dues on it may justly be augmented on account of its then necessarily increased value. It is to be observed in favour of the reservation that it is notorious that very many lots of Crown lands, whether subject to the conditions of actual settlement or not, are purchased simply for the purpose of lumbering upon them. Of course the very best timbered lots are selected, where the duties on the timber (the payment of which is in this way evaded) may or rather would, if paid, amount to from four to 12 times the price of the lot.

Nearly all this is lost to the province that seldom secures an actual settler in return; for such pine land is generally unfit for settlement and is exactly of the kind which for the common good of the country should be carefully preserved from the fires of clearing and reserved, and its young timber be allowed to grow up in forest for ever.

Reservation of pine will prevent purchase of lots under pretence of settlement but only for the pine.

The Act reserving the pine will put a simple self-acting stop to all such purchases to the injury of public interest and revenue in future. By analyzing the return of ordinary dues on timber cut on Crown lands, in 1881 it will be found that three quarters of the amount is derived from white and red pine timber and pine saw logs, and the remaining quarter from all other kinds of timber and saw logs, and minor descriptions of wood goods of all kinds. In the foregoing table it is to be observed that square timber and saw logs only are included, and all other wood goods are omitted as unimportant for the object of the foregoing brief table. The dues accrued from them are, however, included, of course, in the following equally brief exhibit of the revenue accrued from Crown timber dues in the upper Ottawa territories of Quebec and Ontario respectively from 1826 to 1881 inclusively, being from the remotest period of which there are any records in the Crown Timber Office, Ottawa.

Not having yet received the usual annual returns of collections of timber dues made at Quebec by the Collector of Crown timber and slide dues for 1882, on clearances transmitted by me, of rafts from my Quebec and Ontario agencies, I am unable to include, completely, in this summary the amount of revenue that accrued from them up to the close of the period they were under my charge; it is only for the last 30 years that they have been exclusively so.

Period I have been in charge of them,

For six previous years there was a collector of Crown timber dues, who was my colleague in the settlement of contestations and head of the Crown Timber Officer. My duties were then limited to the awarding of timber berths to the applicants entitled to them, under regulations, and defining their limits, with the duty of inspecting the collector's accounts and transactions if I saw any cause for doing so.

In October 1852 his duties were added to mine.

and the amount of my time.

Of the above amount of $10,571,746 50/100, $8,846,814 15/100 accrued under my charge and direction, and to complete both of these sums the amount of dues accrued, in 1882 about $684,787 54/100 has to be added, which will increase the total accrued in the Upper Ottawa agency for Quebec and Ontario to $11,256,534 4/100 and the portion of it that accrued under my charge, as Crown timber agent, to $9,531,601 69/100 to which should be added as a chief branch of my official duty the collection since 1864 of $1,527,200 37/100 of slide and boom dues for the Dominion Government, increasing the dues accrued to the three Governments I served to $11,058,802 6/100. I mention the collections of slide dues in the foregoing as giving the opportunity of explaining the advantage of the collection of timber and slide dues being combined. It greatly facilitates and tends much to secure the accurate collection of both. The same timber and the same men are dealt with at the same time. The returns of the timber rangers of their inspections, supported by sworn statements of cullers, afford the means of effectively checking the accuracy of the certificates the lumberers give the deputy slide masters, which through careless error or fraud might be quite erroneous, as to the numbers of saw logs especially, and as to where they came from. On the other hand, the assistance the Dominion officers of Inland Revenue and Customs and their collections of canal dues, are authorised to render, at the request of the Crown timber agent, in preventing the departure of vessels or the passage of barges loaded with lumber through canals is often of the greatest importance in securing the payment of timber dues. On the River Ottawa no boats or barges loaded with lumber are allowed to pass through the canals without permits from the Crown timber agent. Such permits are occasionally withheld for the enforcement of the payment of timber dues, and the detention of the boats (till released by direction of the Crown timber agent) is always promptly effected by the officers of the Dominion.

Upper Ottawa territory. Amount of revenue to the provinces and the Dominion, in timber and slide dues while under my charge. Advantage and economy of combining the collection of timber and slide dues.

Other important duties of the Crown Timber Office, Ottawa; Timber licenses and surveys.

The business and accounts connected with the collection of the timber and slide dues for the three Governments form about two thirds of the duties and labour of the Crown Timber Office, Ottawa; and the preparation and issue, annually, with necessary alterations of the 529 timber licenses in the province of Quebec and the 245 in Ontario which together cover an area of 26,448 superficial miles of the Upper Ottawa territories, with the intricate investigation of obscure conflicting rights in the cases of contestations as to bounds and the issue of instructions for the surveys of them form the remainder, of which the last mentioned form the most difficult of the duties of the office.

Practical and scientific men alike who attended the meetings of the American Forestry Congress, held at Montreal in August last, could not fail to be deeply impressed with the very great, we may say, unexpected, amount of highly interesting instructive, and important information embodied in the articles read, the addresses given and the discussions that took place on the various subjects brought forward. The Forestry Congress.

Even different views, when elicited, gave with advantage the results of greater variety and scope of observation. The valuable timber of our forests is being rapidly destroyed by the commercial demand for it and by desolating fires, and we must now distinctly bear in mind that we have no new fields to fall back on for the white pine that gives our trade its special value. Elsewhere the increasing scarcity of wood for fencing and building, and especially fuel, which has already long been felt, and in some of our oldest settlements is increasing the difficulty of living, and consequently diminishing the value of farms even in situations otherwise favourable.

When we take all this into consideration, together with the consequent ultimate decay of the chief export trade of the port of Quebec, and—what is not to be overlooked—the revenue derived from it, we can hardly over estimate the importance of the objects of the Association, and the obligation we are under to the eminently experienced and talented American and Canadian gentlemen of the Association who have so earnestly devoted their time and attention to the subjects of forest preservation and cultivation, so specially important to the future prosperity of our province of Quebec, obviously adapted by its favourable geographical position, and the unfitness of much of it for other cultivation, to be a timber yielding and timber trading country for ever. Its interesting and highly important objects and proceedings.

For the object of this memorandum it is proper that any remarks I may have to submit should be confined to such parts of what was read or said at the meetings of the Congress as may be more or less applicable to the management of our provincial public forests, and to the profitable re-enforesting by private enterprize of worn out or unarable fields, and the planting of trees of most valuable kinds everywhere where they might be useful or ornamental.

On tree planting.—The able paper by Dr. Hough, the talented Chief of the Forestry Branch of the Department of Agriculture of the United States, advocating the planting of trees along railway lines, and the information it contains on the great and rapidly increasing consumption of small trees for railway ties in the United States, merit the greatest consideration, in view of the like increasing demand for railway ties that must continue increasing for our Canadian railroads. He says 2,200 to 3,000 are used in every mile, sometimes 3,500, and that there are 100,000 miles of railroads in the United States; average duration of a tie is five to eight years, and that 30,000,000 to 50,000,000 of ties will be required for the 100,000 miles each year, which he computes at the rate of 500 ties to an acre, will require 60,000 to 100,000 acres of woods each year to be cut over, to provide which—he says justly, that allowing the trees 30 years on an average to attain the necessary size—there should be 18 to 30, say, 25 acres of woodland to every mile of track either along the road, which in many cases would be desirable to prevent drifts, or where the land could be had at less cost, as near it as economy might dictate, counting in the cost of transport of the wood when cut, if remote. Dr. Hough on tree planting along railways. Railway ties, number required annually in the United States.

As far as 60 years' experience, chiefly in wooded countries, road engineering, or in charge of public forests, may enable me to judge I can endorse Dr. Hough's views and calculations on this subject (and those of the other members of the Association respecting it) which are applicable to tree planting generally, as regards the selection of kinds most suitable to the soil and the object intended, and the treatment of them.

Among the trees recommended for such planting, the black walnut for many obvious reasons was most strongly advocated by several eminent American and Canadian members. Among the latter, the most prominent and practical, was the Hon. Mr. Joly, well known for the energetic interest he takes in everything for the general good, like the present movement, which is the object of the American Forestry Association; he has set the example on a large scale, in commencing the cultivation of the black walnut in the province of Quebec (it is stated that he planted 10,000 walnut trees in one season recently). The diminishing supply of walnut in the United States and its rapid disappearance have greatly increased the price of it in the wood market, and consequent profit in producing it, which is much sooner obtainable from its well known rapidity of growth, which is stated by Mr. Joly is nearly three times as rapid as that of pine, and still more so than that of spruce, and he estimates that an acre planted with black walnut would in 40 years yield $10,000. Recommends black walnut, as does also the Hon. Mr. Joly, who has planted it largely. Its valuable qualities and estimated profit.

When we add that black walnut stands next to mahogany for furniture and oak for structural purposes, that fence posts of it lasts over 25 years, and that from its strength and hardness and great durability it makes superior railway ties, even its fruit is valuable, Its durability, strength, and fruit.

and finally that it makes excellent firewood, belonging to the same family as hickory that burns well green. "Thus," to use the words of George B. Emerson, "it has almost "all the qualities desirable in a tree."

We may add here that the butternut, which is of the same genus as the walnut, though inferior in hardness and colour, resembles it in durability under heat and moisture, and its extensive usefulness for furniture is well known, so also is its rapidity of growth.

The Catalpa Speciosa.

The "Catalpa speciosa" is of much repute in the Northern and Western States. It is found, Dr. Hough says, to be hardy and very durable. Its wood is light (so much the better for engineering) yet strong enough for most purposes of construction. It has been used to advantage in bridge timbers where exposed to the weather. It is a favourite material for fences, is easily worked, and durable as shingles, and is found serviceable as railroad ties. Dr. Warder, in a paper read at the Congress in August last, speaks of their lasting 12 years or twice as long as cedar. Durability is of great importance, it doubles the value of wood for structures exposed to weather, for all practical men know that in rough wood work, in rough calculation, the workmanship costs as much as the timber. Dr. Warder doubted if the Catalpa would grow in Canada. Mr. Robert Burnet, of Picton, latitude 45¾° north, said 100 plants from Illinois were set in 1880 in the spring to test if they would succeed, but it will take years to ascertain the result. Mr. D. C. Burson, of Topeka, sent a paper, which was read, on the Russian mulberry, an exotic introduced into the western prairies by the Mennonites, where it is now coming into great use as a tree to bring returns to the present generation. It grows rapidly, stands transplanting well, and is ornamental. The fruit is very good and plentiful, and the wood is as durable as red cedar and is useful for furniture; the leaves are the best food for silkworms. It grows to a great size and rapidly. Trees sown seven years ago are now 25 feet high and 6 to 8 inches thick. Its fruit is used as a dessert and makes a pleasant light wine. Its very valuable qualities seem to render the ascertaining if it will thrive in this country worthy of special encouragement. A paper on the European larch was read by Mr. David Nichol, of Cataraqui, stating that the American larch, called tamarac, when young can hardly be distinguished from it. The European is quick growing. It brings the quickest and most certain returns to the grower, succeeds well on poor land, and almost in any climate. In Europe it is the best wood for masts and spars. It is very strong and does not warp or shrink, and is much used in shipbuilding. It improves the soil as its leaves add more than the tree takes from it. Its resinous nature makes it better for shingles than pine or cedar. It is large enough in 35 or 40 years for every useful purpose, and in 50 years it is found on an average to attain a diameter of from 30 to 40 inches at 3 feet from the butt. In Europe its larch is very durable. The frigate built from the Duke of Athol's larch plantations was ranked a second time as A 1 from its continued soundness.

Mr. Nichol on European larch.

Canadian larch.

Our timber, unless where grown near the sea, is less durable than timber of the same kind grown in the maritime parts of Europe. Our larch of Canada generally is less durable than the European, but in other respects has the good qualities of the European, such as freedom from knots, strength and solidity, and, even under certain circumstances, durability. (The contractor for the rebuilding of an old military stockade on the Richelieu found the old posts, where of cedar, decayed to a spindle at the surface of the ground as old cedar fence pickets become, but where of larch (l'epinette rouge) they were decayed only one-eighth of an inch in, but all inside of that was as sound as ever). Mr. Nichol says larch should not be planted with other trees, they seem to injure it. In a little hedge row of larches I put one little grey spruce half their height. They were neglected, and grew up to 25 feet in height, but the nearest larch to the spruce turned abruptly 10 feet back from the line, and there resumed its perpendicular growth. The tamarac was originally taller and older than the spruce. Our tamarac (larch) in the Lower St. Lawrence is good and comparatively durable. West of Lake Temiscouata I saw an exceptional one it is true, over 10 feet in girth and 100 in height. The average contents of the square tamarac from the Ottawa is 40 cubic feet to each piece; red pine only 33 feet. As the larch is the best quality of timber we have for many purposes, and is found in the most northerly parts of the province of Quebec at the sources of the Moisie and the Saguenay to attain a large size, and with care can be transplanted young, with great success, it is evident that the otherwise useless underwood of our tamarac swamps could very profitably be employed in converting many of our worn fields, overgrown with thistles, and even whole abandoned lots of land into valuable forests, though inferior in profit to the cultivation of black walnut. The "Pinus sylvestres" or Scotch fir, which is the principal prevalent pine of the north of Asia and Europe, and is much valued by European shipbuilders is stated by Emerson in his Superior value of Lower St. Lawrence larch.

The "Pinus sylvestres," Scotch fir.

"Trees of Massachusett" as being the most valuable of European pines that could be introduced into America. It is not liable to blight or fungus. It bears extreme exposure to cold and storms. It would thrive in Canada where pine cannot possibly grow, and is excellent as a sheltering screen for other trees, and would form a more valuable substitute for our pine, rapidly departing, than our spruce is, owing to its known superior qualities. In Scotland it sells for one half more in price than spruce timber does, though (probably in part from its greater abundance) for little more than half the price of larch. It is more durable and less knotty than spruce, but having spruce we are less immediately in need of it. Very hardy and durable.

The ash tree—on which Mr. Arthur Bryant, of Prinstown, Illinois, read a paper. White ash is the most generally useful tree for all purposes for which strength, elasticity and lightness are requisite, such as for agricultural implements, carriage making, handles of tools, &c., &c. black ash is useful and ornamental for pillars and inside finishing, and it makes durable fence rails. For most of these purposes it is important for home use, though insignificant in our export trade. It is easily transplanted and grows rapidly. It is a tall, straight, and handsome tree. I had one in a field, which, when cut down, measured 112 feet in length; it was 10 feet in girth. General usefulness of white, and even black, ash.

Our white pine, however, though the planting of it and cultivation would not be so soon repaid as that of some other trees, is on account of its great value and the great demand for it for home use and exportation, that we should be most anxious to preserve the growth of even by cultivation. For the purposes of general carpentry and house finishing and cabinet work of various kinds it has no equal, and the extent of the climatic zone in which it thrives, seems to be slowly but steadily contracting, and its power of reproducing its kind diminishing from some natural cyclical law or climatic clause, for it is remarkable, speaking of the valley of the Ottawa, near the northern limit of its growth, even in fertile hardwood lands, where pine of the best quality and largest growth are commonly found, there are often no young pines growing up to replace them, though it be even in what is called the white pine country of old Canada. White pine is long of coming to maturity on account of the great size it attains, but it is quick of growth nevertheless, for where cultivated on good soil and uncrowded by other trees, it increases from half an inch to three quarters of an inch in diameter annually. Some eminent American writers err, in thinking that as a universal rule pine does not thrive on land of limestone formation, for when I first looked on the site of the city of Ottawa and its environs, exclusively of stratified Trenton limestone formation, it was (excepting a partially cleared portion) covered with thick woods in which white pine was predominant after three large rafts of it had been cut within the site of the city and its suburbs. Two or three lofty specimens still remain within a mile of Parliament buildings, about 15 feet in girth and 180 feet in height. White pine; great importance of maintaining the growth of it by preserving, and even planting it.

The reasons are nearly similar for preserving and cultivating our red, originally designated Norway, pine (being nearly the same), but it took 40 years' experience to enable British purchasers to discover that it was inferior in durability to the Norway red pine, and that it was inferior in value to our white pine, which, from the similarity of name, they took to be the same as the white wood of the Baltic, a much inferior wood. The red pine, however, being harder than the white pine is more valuable for flooring, especially when there is much wear, being more durable if not exposed to the weather. It makes better fuel than white pine, as it can be burned while still green. Yet it is much less liable to be killed or injured by being scorched than white pine. Our red or Norway pine.

At an evening meeting at the Queen's Hall, the Hon. Mr. Joly, with great clearness defined what the advancing progress towards the destruction of our forests urgently requires of us in saying that "both the preservation of our existing "forests, and the creation of new forests in regions where they do not exist, are absolutely "necessary" adding that in view of the inevitable emergency, which all must admit to be steadily approaching, it was gratifying to see that the Government and Legislature of the province of Quebec, by the enactments of the last session of the provincial Parliament, alluding to chapters 10, 11, and 13 of 45 Vict., and especially to the last, for the encouragement of timber planting, had taken the lead in initiating the true course of action for successfully meeting that emergency. In so expressing it he most happily, and with truthful force and clearness, put the highly creditable action of the Government and Legislature before the audience; but to do full justice to the amendment of the system of the sale of public lands would from its importance have required too great a departure from the more immediate subjects before the meeting but which may render further explanation necessary. Hon. Mr. Joly on the imperative necessity for action in preservation of our forests.

And his appropriate encomium on the action of the provincial Government and Legislature in the matter.

After briefly recurring to further proceedings of the Congress, the Hon. Mr. Loring, the President of the Forestry Association, concluded a highly interesting address which he gave on the general subject of forestry, with an estimate of the time it will take to exhaust the timber grounds in the several States of the Union; summing up with the conclusion that, in the course of one generation, the present Hon. Mr. Loring's powerful statement of the impending early exhaustion of United States forests and consequent great demand on ours.

forests of the United States will be almost entirely exhausted; which may be considered as usefully instructive to us, as certainly assuring us of the exhausting demand that long before the close of that term will be made on our forests to meet the requirements of the American market. The warning manifest in the facts given by Mr. Loring is timely; and the wisdom of entering without delay on a course of action to meet the emergency as it advances, is obvious, whether it comes sooner or later than estimated.

Arbor day holiday proposed by the Hon. Mr. Joly.

Before closing my remarks on Mr. Joly's address I should have noted his judicious proposal of establishing an arbor day as an annual public holiday as calculated to give permanency to the recollection of the object of it, by linking it to the regular recurrence of a day of enjoyment of healthful recreation. The history of all holidays unquestionably demonstrates the soundness of this conclusion.

Mr. P. White.

Value of timber destroyed by fire.

Mr. P. White, M.P. for Renfrew, Ontario, in a vigorous, clear, and succinct verbal address on the loss to the province from forest fires, estimates the value lost annually by them in the Ottawa District at twenty millions of dollars, meaning, doubtless, the value that the destroyed forest would otherwise have yielded compared with average annual value of timber exported. This estimate may be thought excessive; but when we bear in mind that in addition to the value of the marketable timber, the fire destroys not only the smaller timber that would in future years yield successive cuts of equal value to all that was then marketable, but also in severe cases all the seedlings and seed cones, the germs of any future growth of pine till they are casually carried there after successive generations of the berry, the cherry, the poplar, birch, and spruce. Whereas the thinning out of the larger trees by the lumbermen, if not followed by widespread fires, hastens the growth of the younger trees that are to replace them, and might do so for ever. In speaking of the endeavours of the lumberers to prevent the setting of fires Mr. White justly remarks that the authority of Government is necessary, and, in his stating, in his position as a representative of the lumber trade, that the trade would not object to a special tax to meet the expenses of Governmental supervision, he has judiciously taken an important preliminary step tending to strengthen the hands of the Government in taking action. His suggestion that the period during which the burning of brush by settlers is interdicted should be extended to the months of June, September, and October, deserves serious consideration. Mr. Wright of Massachusetts, in relating his experience of forest fires in the west, said the fires started through the carelessness of settlers did infinitely more damage than the Indian fires. This is generally true, as every man who has lived a backwood's life for years knows well. But of all settlers the pretended settler, whose sole aim is to use the pretence of settlement to enable him to strip a lot or two of a fine growth of timber; he makes a great "slash" by simply cutting down the trees on several acres, say from four to twenty acres, and when it has dried enough to render the tops and foliage of the trees highly combustible he chooses "a fine day for a burn" when there is wind enough to cause the fire to spread well, and then sets fire to it in many places, and this scorched "chopping" with a few round logs laid up in a square form is, when required, sworn to in formal affidavit as so many "acres under improvement" or probably as "cleared and cultivated" "with a dwelling house thereon." This abuse is too well known in its various forms and degrees in the Ottawa country. In one case on the Ontario side of my agency the doing of the settlement duties on 14 lots to secure the timber free of dues had, I was informed on good authority, destroyed the pine on nearly the extent of a township.

Lumbering less destructive.

Destruction of timber by fire.

Hon. Geo. Bryson.

Patrolling fire inspectors recommended.

The Hon. George Bryson of Pontiac, whose position in the Legislature of the province and his almost life long residence in a lumbering country and intimate experience in its trade, and in the commencement of its settlements, (gives) weight to his opinions, concurs with Mr. White in recommending that patrolling fire inspectors be appointed by Government, and in the extension of the period of interdiction of the burning of brush, with the addition that it should include the month of May, as it is then the fires have their beginnings and gradually spreading become more conspicuously destructive as the dry, hot weather of summer advances. These suggestions will be remarked on further, on the conclusion of this memorandum.

Mr. J. K. Ward.

Reservation of part of the lot for timber.

Mr. J. K. Ward, whose long experience in the lumber trade qualifies him well to judge of it, spoke of the great destruction of timber by forest fires, and suggested the importance of establishing a reservation of 10 acres of standing wood in every hundred acre lot by its being sold; subject to that condition the 10 acres to be free of price. His suggestion was made with a view of preserving necessary wood for fuel, fencing, &c. for the inhabitants, in consideration of their welfare. Dr. J. B. Hurlburt in one of the articles read by him suggested a reservation of 25 acres, for such purposes, which would be still better than 10, for the interest of the settlers in future. Such a reservation would be very easily made, but would be practically difficult to maintain. It might be retained unsold by the Crown, but to cover the loss in the price of the lot, the price per acre should be increased one third, for the value of the lot would be soon enhanced by the reservation of the wood in the 25 acres, by limiting the cutting on it annually to its annual average growth under penalty of confiscation of the reserved quarter. It should be reserved in detached clumps unconnected with the boundaries. In the old settlements in the province, where remaining woods were naturally in the rear ends of the lots, a fire getting into one swept over all that were on the line, from their being adjoining each other. Mr. Saunders, of London, Ontario, read a paper on the growing of poplar for the making of paper and charcoal, for which the demand and price of certain kinds of poplar had of late been greatly enhanced, such as the aspen and the white poplar and others. He says the balsam poplar or balm of Gilead will prove almost if not equal in value. It is the most rapid in growth and the easiest to transplant. The very branches or tops if cut or broken off will thrive if planted. I fell from the top of one 50 feet in height, taking the top piece, which broke off with me. I planted it, it is now a thriving tree, over five feet in girth.

Mr. Saunders on poplar.

Mr. B. F. Fernow read an able and exhaustive article on the conditions of forest growth, for which his European experience and education in forestry qualified him. Referring to the threatened difficulty of meeting the enormous demand for railway ties, when the use of iron for that purpose was spoken of and objected to, he said that in his country, where the government owned alike the forests and iron mines, it used iron superstructures to carry the rails instead of wood sleepers extensively, though having ample command of both, from which it is apparent that iron is sufficiently suitable—a fact that is, though remotely, of considerable importance to our country, that has an inexhaustible supply of iron ore, the same means of obviating the difficulty as Prussia. The most important part of the proceedings of the meetings of the Congress, as far as practically concerned the management of the public forests of Canada, was the appointment of a Committee, consisting of Mr. P. White, M.P., Mr. J. K. Ward, Dr. Mohr, the Hon. George Bryson, Professor Hough, and Mr. P. E. Fernow, to memorialize the Governments of the United States and Canada on the necessity of protecting their public forests.

Special committee.

On memorial to the Governments to protect timber forests.

The report of this Committee, presented by the Hon. George Bryson, and adopted by the Congress, recommends :—

Adopted by Forestry Congress.

1st. The reservation of all pine and spruce lands unfit for settlement, for lumbering purposes exclusively.

2nd. The prohibition of the burning of brush by setttlers in the vicinity of fir trees during the months of May, June, September, and October (July and August burning already interdicted in the province of Quebec).

3rd. The division of the timber country into districts, and the appointment of police under a superintendent with magisterial powers, whose duty it shall be to detect and punish offenders, and provide for the extinguishment of fires.

4th. The cost of the maintenance of this protection might partially be met by the imposition of a moderate tax on the parties owning or leasing timber lands.

On this subject I would remark that it has become a practice of the chief lumberers on the Ottawa to enforce every precaution in their power on their people for preventing such fires not only on their own premises, but also by having their rafts or saw logs accompanied by one or two reliable persons, whose duty it is to see that all necessary or other fires are duly extinguished. It is also a common practice when any of their men are discharged from their works to send a reliable person with them to see that all fires that there may be occasion to make are duly extinguished, and that no unnecessary fires be made.

Precautions against fires now used by lumber men.

It would seem most desirable that the reliable men so employed, by and on the responsibility of the lumberers, should be clothed with most ample powers as constables, and that the inspectors should have the necessary powers as magistrates.

I would particularly remark here, with regard to the interdiction of the burning of brush, that a point of importance has been overlooked in suggesting the period when it is interdicted, that is the unsuitableness of fixing one and the same period for the whole province, notwithstanding the great difference there is in the length of the seasons in different parts of it; May and October should be excepted from the interdiction on the eastern extremity of the province of Quebec, otherwise the clearing of land for cultivation in settlements there would in some seasons be rendered impossible or nearly so.

Period of burning should differ where length of season differs.

Should be subject to modification to suit great districts, by Order in Council.

The law enacted on this subject should clothe the Lieutenant-Governor with power to fix the periods in different localities or rather great fire districts by Order in Council.

It seems probable that before very long that a reservation of all commercial timber (or of the ordinary dues thereon) in the same manner as on pine will be necessary to preserve the public forests and revenue, though it is not of immediate importance.

Dr. Hough's encomium on the system now in force in the province of Quebec for the management of the public forests is so well grounded on facts, now that it has been so far completed by the wise legislation of last spring, that there is now little or no grounds left for suggesting any alteration or suggestion of addition beyond such as may appear advantageous in minor practical details, as the working of the system in future may indicate.

Respectfully submitted,

Ottawa, 16th January 1883. (Signed) A. J. Russell.

Sir,

Ottawa, January 20, 1883.

In addition to what I said of the highly important and beneficial character and tendency of the action of the Government and Legislature last spring in the matter, woods and forests, I might, in my report on the subject of the meeting of the Forestry Congress, have with great justice adduced the very high prices now obtained by private individuals in selling timber berths, and the rates they exact from each other as compensation for damages in cases of trespass, as unquestionably justifying the increased rate of dues on timber from Crown lands now in force. See sale of 145 square miles of limits on Black River for $208,000\frac{20}{100}$, equal to $2\frac{24}{100}$ an acre, in the above-mentioned report.

It is worthy of remark that though the increase of price of the timber caused by the increase of the rates of dues would not be wholly at the expense of the foreign consumer, it would be so in proportion to the quantity of the article he was necessarily obliged to take from Canada, owing to his not being able to get it on better terms, or rather on the same terms elsewhere, and the portion of the public revenue arising from the increase of duties paid by foreign consumers would be so much gain obtained, which was not a tax on the people of Canada.

This, to a certain extent, adds to the advantage of selling lands, subject for ever to the ordinary duties in force at the time being levied on timber of all kinds cut on them, going to market and reducing the price of all lands sold to settlers.

As the rates of ordinary dues were increased in future, the reserved revenue from such timber as came from sold lots would increase, and would, being dealt with along with other and greater quantities of timber, at the same time be incomparably easier to collect, and that at much less cost than in the form of the small instalments annually on purchased lots, which, when not exceeding $4·00, do not cover the cost of office labour they occasion.

The reservation of duty on all timber from sold lands would be a source of revenue—of increasing revenue for ever to the province—especially to be valued as obviating the necessity of so much direct taxation, which otherwise would have to be imposed on our population to whom it would be objectionable. The revenue from other timber than pine may not exceed $100,000 annually at present, and the time, though distant, will come when it will exceed that from pine greatly.

The system adopted by Governments in the late regulations with respect to pine, in authorising it to be cut by the purchaser of a lot by giving him a license, is good in maintaining the power of control and exacting returns under penalty for evasion, as in case of trespass; and the levying of the duty will prove an important source of revenue, besides terminating the temptation to purchase the best timbered lots with the view of obtaining a right to the timber for from a quarter to a tenth part of the dues on it that would otherwise be payable.

As we had a system formerly, when it was necessary, of confiscating limits falsely stated to be duly occupied, I once proposed to the then Commissioner applying the same system to lots of land, of transferring the title and lot to the informer proving the non-performance of conditions of actual settlement, &c., as we did in the case of non-occupied licenses; but in the case of the non-occupied lot, what he had paid to be returned to him after deducting expenses of proving the case.

As there is an unprincipled clamour made against the Department cancelling sales in such cases, perhaps it might be well to adopt the system of giving the lot to any one that needed it; the proof to be made good before a court of law if disputed, so as to relieve the Department from the responsibility. Pardon my imperfect writing.

Yours, &c.

E. E. Taché, Esq.,
Assistant Commissioner of Crown Lands,
Quebec.

(Signed) A. J. Russell.

Précis by Dr. Lyons, M.P., of certain Reports, Acts of Parliament of the Dominion, and other Papers which accompanied the Canadian Forest Reports, in so far as they relate to Questions affecting Forests and Cognate Matters.

Law assented to 5th April 1869.

1. There shall continue to be, and be, a department for the management and sale of the public lands and forests, to be called "the Department of Crown Lands;" and the same shall be presided over by "the Commissioner of Crown Lands" for the time being.

The Lieutenant-Governor in Council may from time to time withdraw or withhold from sale and set apart the same to be held as "timber land" such portion or portions of the public lands as after the exploration and inspecting thereof by officers or agents specially charged with the performance of such service may be found to be valuable for its timber, but generally unfit for the purposes of colonisation, whether the same shall comprise whole townships, parts of townships, or tracts of unsurveyed land.

By clause 12 claims to Crown lands are barred, unless same has actually located or admitted a proof sufficient, in the opinion of the Commissioner of Crown Lands, furnished in support thereof before the passing on the 14th June 1853 of the Act 16th of Victoria, c. 159. The Lieutenant-Governor in Council may appropriate any public lands as free grants to actual settlers upon any public roads opened through the said lands in any new settlements, under such regulations as shall be made from time to time by Order in Council; but no such free grant shall exceed 100 acres. The term "public lands" shall be held to apply to lands heretofore designated or known as Crown lands and clergy lands, which designations for the purposes of administration shall still continue.

Department of Crown Lands, Quebec,
August 25, 1869.

1. The duties of agents shall comprise the sale and locating of all public lands offered for sale, the granting of licenses to cut timber thereon, or upon such lands as have been set apart for that purpose, the collection of arrears due, the settlement of conflicting claims, the inspecting of lands, the protection of the public lands within their respective agencies from trespassers and depredators; and such other duties not inconsistent with this Act, as the Commissioner of Crown Lands may from time to time think proper to assign them; and such duties shall be performed under the direction and in conformity with the instructions of the Commissioner. See 9th section, Act 32 Vict. c. 11. of Legislature of the Province of Quebec. Agents are directed to inspect and classify lands under the following heads:—

1st. Lots suitable for agricultural purposes, dividing them into three classes, good, average, inferior.

2nd. Lots valuable for the timber, but generally unfit for cultivation.

3rd. Lots not suitable for agriculture, and the timber only fit for minor purposes, as fuel for sugaries.

4th. Lots entirely unfit for agricultural purposes, and the timber of little or no value.

Woods and Forests.—The Act of Parliament under which the woods and forests of the Crown are organised is cap. 23, Consolidated Statutes of Canada.

The general timber regulations of 13th June 1866 are based on said Act and have the force of law. These regulations, since their promulgation, have been modified by Orders in Council of 17th July 1868, 2nd October 1868, 18th June 1869, and 9th April 1869.

Licenses to cut timber are granted in the form sanctioned by Order in Council of 9th August 1869.

46 Vict. Chap. 9. (Assembly Bill, No. 150.)—An Act to further amend chapter 23 of Consolidated Statutes of Canada, respecting the sale and management of timber on public lands, and the Acts amending the same.

Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Legislature of Quebec, enacts as follows :

1. The Act of this Province 39 Vict. c. 11, is amended, by adding at the end thereof the following sections, which shall be taken and construed as forming part of the said Act.

" 5. The Lieutenant-Governor in Council may, as soon as the necessary information " can be obtained, after the coming into force of this Act, set apart as ' forest land ' all " the ungranted lands of the Crown now held under licenses to cut timber," except such parts of such licensed lands on which no merchantable pine or spruce timber grows and which are fit for settlement; and also such other portions of the ungranted lands of the Crown as the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, on the recommendation of the Commissioner of Crown Lands, may think fit so to set apart; and as soon as the Order or Orders in Council setting apart such forest land shall be published in the " Quebec Official Gazette," and from and after the date of such publication, no land included in the territory so set apart shall be sold or appropriated for settlement purposes, until after the expiration of at least 10 years, and not then until after it is established to the satisfaction of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council that the whole or any portion of such territory may with advantage be opened for settlement. The Order or Orders in Council withdrawing such territory shall likewise be published in the " Quebec Official Gazette." The land so set apart shall be known and designated as a " forest reserve."

" 6. In the renewals of licenses effected after the publication of an Order in Council creating a forest reserve, it shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Crown Lands to exclude any land theretofore under license in the locality and which is not included in the reserve."

2. Whenever any such lands cease to form part of a " forest reserve," and for the purpose of securing to settlers, who may thereafter occupy the same, the timber they may require to facilitate the performance of their settlement duties, section 2 of the said chapter 23 of the Consolidated Statutes of Canada, is amended, by adding after the words " in all," in the sixth line thereof, the following words: red and white pine, spruce, " tamarac, birch, oak, walnut, cedar, butternut, and basswood."

3. After the coming into force of this Act any license issued for the cutting of any timber under the authority of the said chapter 23 of the Consolidated Statutes of Canada and its amendments shall contain a special description of the trees, timber, and lumber which it is permitted to cut thereunder, and they shall be of the kind mentioned in the preceding section and none others.

4. This Act shall come into force on the day of its sanction.

Copy of a Report of a Committee of the Honourable the Executive Council, dated the 23rd August 1883, approved by the Lieutenant-Governor on the 10th September 1883.

(No. 30.)

On land matters.

On the opportunity of setting aside, as forest reserves, certain portions of the territory comprised in the upper and lower Ottawa agencies, conformable to the enactments of the Act 46 Vict. chap. 9.

The Honourable the Commissioner of Crown Lands, in a report dated the 23rd of August instant (1883), sets forth: That from the documents of record in his department, respecting the inspections which have been recently made in the upper and lower Ottawa agencies, by competent bush rangers and others, it is advisable that the enactments of the Act 46 Vict. chap. 9, be now applied to the territory comprised in the upper and lower Ottawa agencies, to be recognised in future as a forest reserve, and to be described as hereunder:

Such forest reserve to comprise the surveyed and unsurveyed vacant land, i.e., bounded to the north by the height of land dividing the waters of Ottawa river and its tributaries, from those flowing into Hudson's Bay, to the west by the boundary line dividing the province of Quebec from that of Ontario, and by the easterly shore line of Lake Temiscamingue and of the Ottawa River including the islands therein situated belonging to this province, to a point opposite the River Mattawin; to the south and south-west by the Ottowa River, as far as the intersection of the line dividing the townships of Esher and Sheen; thence by the northerly line of the 7th range of the townships of Sheen and Chichester; by the northerly line of the townships of Waltham, Mansfield, Litchfield, Thorne, Onslow, Masham, Wakefield, Gore of Templeton, Buckingham, Lochaber, Repon, and that of the seigniory of Petite Nation; to the east by the line dividing the counties of Ottawa and Argenteuil, as far as the northernmost angle of the township of De Salaberry, by the southerly line of Grandison, by the westerly and northerly lines of the township of Wolfe, and by the prolongation of the last named line, to the western-most angle of the township of Doncaster, by the north-westerly limits of the townships of Doncaster, Chertsey, Cathcart, Joliette and Brandon; north-easterly by the line dividing the counties of Maskinongé and Berthier, to the height of land dividing the waters of the l'Assomption and Maskinongé Rivers, from those of the Saint Maurice; and lastly, by the height of land dividing the waters of the Saint Maurice from those of the Ottawa, prolonged to a point where it will intersect the northerly boundary of this province; save and except all lots situate in the following townships, which hereafter may be found (from inspections made by competent and authorised persons), fit for settlement and destitute of merchantable timber, i.e., in the townships of Guigues, &c. [Here follow about 60 defined localities.]

Certified,

45 Vict. Chap. 13.—An Act to encourage the planting of forest trees. [Assented to 27th May 1882.]

Whereas it is expedient to encourage the planting of forest trees; therefore, Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Legislature of Quebec, enacts as follows:

Proprietors, &c. planting their land to certain extent with trees entitled to land order.

1. Whosoever, being the proprietor of, or in possession as proprietor or as usufructuary of any land, shall plant any part of such land, not less than one acre in extent, with forest trees, shall be entitled to receive, in respect of every acre of land so planted, a land order, in the form of the schedule hereunto annexed, which shall authorise him to purchase, to such an amount not exceeding twelve dollars, any of the public lands which may be open for sale within the Crown land agency in which the trees shall have been planted, or should there be no such agency then in the nearest agency, subject to the laws and regulations for the time being in force regulating the sale and disposal of public lands.

Form of such order and privileges thereunder.

Conditions of issue of order.

No order shall be issued until it be satisfactorily shown that the land has been devoted to purposes of planting for at least three years, that the trees are in a vigorous and healthy state, and that the land is securely fenced against both sheep and cattle.

Cultivation of root crops among trees not to prevent land orders being issued.

Provided always, that if root crops are cultivated among the forest trees planted on any land, such land shall not by reason only of such crops being cultivated be deemed to be not devoted only to purposes of planting according to this Act.

Land order is transferable.

2. Every such land order is transferable, and shall be exercised within two years from the date thereof, and if not exercised within such period shall be absolutely null and void, and no renewal thereof shall be granted.

Void after certain lapse of time.

3. No land once planted shall entitle the planter to more than one order in respect of the same.

Only one order to be given for one piece of land planted.

4. The Lieutenant-Governor in Council may from time to time make regulations respecting:

Lieutenant-Governor in Council may make certain regulations.

1. The number and description of trees to be planted in each acre;
2. The number of years during which the trees so planted shall be preserved, and not cut down;
3. The other terms and conditions to be fulfilled by persons claiming a land order.

May appoint arbor day.

And the Lieutenant-Governor in Council may appoint by proclamation a day to be observed as "arbor day" for the planting of forest trees.

Regulations may be changed, &c.

5. Such regulations may be altered or repealed without, however, affecting any right acquired under such regulations.

Land order may be used to purchase lands and how.

6. The Commissioner shall, whenever such land order has been offered him in payment of the purchase money of public lands, mention the same upon the back of such land order, and shall give to the holder of such land order a receipt or certificate, which shall have the same effect as if the purchase money of such land had been paid in cash according to law and the regulations respecting the sale of public lands.

Return of land order when fully exercised.

7. When the land order has been fully exercised it shall be given up to the Commissioner of Crown Lands.

Extent of land to be acquired under Act.

8. No land can be acquired under this Act unless it is of fifty acres in extent, and does not exceed two hundred acres; but if any person is entitled to a land order for less than fifty acres he may pay the balance in money, under the same terms and conditions as other public lands are acquired.

Certain planting be a compliance with Act.

9. The planting of seeds, nuts, or cuttings shall be considered a compliance with the provisions of this Act.

Act in force by proclamation.

10. The present Act shall come into force by proclamation of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council in such parts of the province as shall be fixed in such proclamation or by any other proclamation to be thereafter issued.

SCHEDULE.

In the exercise of the powers in me vested by the Act 45 Vict. chap. 13. I hereby authorise , of , in the district of , to purchase to the amount of dollars any of the public lands in the Crown Lands Agency of , open for sale or selection, without payment in cash therefor, subject, however, to the provisions in the said Act contained.

Dated the day of , 18

(Signature),

Commissioner of Crown Lands.

The increasing care and attention bestowed by the public authorities of the Dominion on the protection of the still existing "timber lands" is fully shown by the enactments just cited, which have been given in full, as they will probably furnish useful examples for enactments in the mother country, when we come to deal practically with the question of home-grown timber. Special attention is invited to the provisions for instituting an "arbor day," on the model of that now existing for some years in the United States, and which has been productive of so much success in practical arboriculture, so many as 26 millions of trees having been planted in the State of Nebraska alone.

The following sections extracted from recent Acts further point in the same direction.

An Act to amend the Acts respecting the sale and management of public lands, received assent on the 27th May 1882, contains the following sections:—

17A. The pine timber upon public lands shall in future be reserved in all sales, grants, location tickets, leases or permits of occupation, and letters patent.

Notwithstanding such reserve, the locatees, being holders or not of letters patent, or their assigns, may, however, cut and use such pine trees as may be necessary for the purpose of building on the said lands; and, by paying the same price as the holders of licenses to cut timber, they may dispose at pleasure of those which they may cut down in the clearing of the land necessary to obtain letters patent.

17B. After the issue of the letters patent it shall be lawful for the Commissioner of Crown Lands to issue to the grantees of such lands or their assigns a license to cut and use for purposes of commerce pine trees measuring not less than 12 inches in diameter at the stump, and forming part of the said reserve, upon condition that they pay to the said Commissioner the usual dues imposed by the regulations upon holders of licenses to cut timber, and that they comply with such other conditions that the Lieutenant-Governor in Council may be pleased to impose upon them.

Further power is granted to the Lieutenant-Governor in Council for making regulations, not inconsistent with the preceding sections 17A and 17B, for all that concerns the preservation or working of the pine so reserved, for determining the cases in which such reserve such not exist, the conditions upon which licenses to cut reserved pine may be issued, and generally for better assuring the execution of the present Act.

Perhaps, however, the most important step yet taken by the Government of the Dominion is that for the delimitation of forest parks in the Act of last year, assented to on 19th April 1884. The Homestead Entry Acts have been found, both in Canada and the United States, to interfere materially with forest operations on a large scale. By clause 4 of the Act of 19th April 1884, the 39th clause of the said Act is repealed, and the following clause substituted for it:—

39. The privilege of pre-emption in connexion with a homestead entry shall be discontinued from and after the first day of January A.D. 1887.

Clause 5 enacts:—

The Governor in Council may from time to time, for the preservation of forest trees on the crests and slopes of the Rocky Mountains, and for the proper maintenance throughout the year of the volume of water in the rivers and streams which have their sources in such mountains and traverse the north-western territories, reserve from sale, lease, or license such portions of land in the north-west territories on, adjacent to, or in the vicinity of the Rocky Mountains as to him appears expedient so to reserve, and may define the limits or boundaries of such reserves; and may set aside and appropriate such lands for a forest park or forest parks as he deems expedient, and may appoint officers for the preservation of such reserves and forest parks.

2. Statements showing such reserves and appropriations with the necessary maps, shall be laid before Parliament within 15 days after the commencement of the session held after such reserves or appropriations have been made.

3. Whoever wilfully cuts down, breaks, barks, roots up, removes or destroys, or causes to be cut down, broken, barked, rooted up, removed or destroyed, any tree, sapling, shrub, underwood, or timber growing in and upon any such reserve or forest park, shall for every such offence incur a penalty not exceeding 100 dollars, and not less than 10 dollars, to be recovered with costs of prosecution in a summary manner before a stipendiary magistrate, commissioner of police, or any two Justices of the Peace, under the provisions of the Act passed in the 32nd and 33rd years of the reign of Her present Majesty, chapter 31, and intituled "An Act respecting the duties of Justices of the "Peace out of Sessions in relation to Summary Convictions and Orders," and in default of immediate payment of the said penalties, and of the costs of prosecution, the offender may be imprisoned for any period of time not exceeding three months. This Act to be read as one with "The Dominion Lands Act, 1883."

Forest Fires.

Wherever forests exist danger from fire, the result of accident, neglect, malice, or natural causes, constitutes a problem of the greatest magnitude. Many square miles of forest in India, Europe, and the Continent of America have been lost owing to this cause. Stringent regulations have been put in operation in all countries, but perhaps it is not too much to say that we are still without perfectly assured means of wholly preventing such calamitous occurrences, in which the sacrifice of human life is not infrequently an additional element to be deplored.

I therefore do not apologise for submitting in full the text of what appears to be a well considered measure for some years in operation in the province of Quebec.

46 Vict. Chap. 10.—An Act to provide means for the more effectual prevention of forest fires.

Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Legislature of Quebec, enacts, as follows:

1. The Lieutenant-Governor in Council may, by proclamation, declare any portion or part of the province of Quebec which is included in any forest region to be a "fire district." Such proclamation shall be published in the Quebec Official Gazette, and, from and after the date of such publication, the territory therein mentioned shall become and be known as a "fire district," within the meaning and for the purpose of this Act. Such territory shall cease to be a "fire district," upon the publication of a proclamation of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council revoking the one creating it.

2. It shall not be lawful for any person to set or cause to be set or started any fire in or near the woods, within any such fire district, between the first day of April and the first day of November in any year, except for the purpose of clearing land, in which case no fire shall be set except between the first of July and the first of September only.

3. Any person who shall set or cause to be set afire contrary to the provisions of the foregoing section, shall, in addition to his liability for all damage, become liable upon conviction to the payment of the penalty mentioned in the Act of this province, 34 Vict. cap. 19. which shall be recoverable in the manner therein laid down of a penalty not exceeding 50 dollars, and in default of the payment of the said fine, with or without delay, to an imprisonment in the common gaol of the district in which the conviction takes place, for a period of not more than three months, unless the said fine and cost, together with the costs of imprisonment and conveyance of the delinquent be not sooner paid.

4. It shall be lawful for the Commissioner of Crown Lands to employ, between the first day of April and the first day of November, for the purpose of enforcing the provisions of this Act such a number of men as he may deem necessary for that end; and in each fire district so established he shall name an officer who shall be known and designated as "Fire Superintendent."

5. The Commissioner of Crown Lands may permit any person holding a license in any territory included in any such fire district, to place at the disposal of the Fire Superintendent, any number he may see fit of his employés for the purpose of aiding in the enforcement of this Act, which employés shall be under the sole and exclusive control and direction of the said Fire Superintendent, and bound to execute his orders. The salaries and expenses of such employés shall be borne by the licensee.

6. All locomotive engines used on any railway which passes through any lands comprised in any such fire district or any part of it, shall, by the company using the same, be provided with and have in use all the most improved and efficient means used to prevent the escape of fire from the furnace or ash-pan of such engines, and the smoke stack of each locomotive so used shall be provided with a bonnet or screen of iron or steel wire netting, the size of the wire used in making the netting to be not less than number nineteen of the Birmingham wire gauge, or three sixty-fourth parts of an inch in diameter, and shall contain in each square inch at least eleven wires each way at right angles to each other, that is in all twenty-two wires to the square inch.

7. It shall be the duty of every engine driver in charge of a locomotive engine passing over any such railway to see that all such appliances as are above mentioned are properly used and applied, so as to prevent the unnecessary escape of fire from any such engine, as far as it is reasonably possible to do so.

8. Any railway company running, or permitting any locomotive engine to be run in violation of the provisions of the preceding sections of this Act, shall be liable to a penalty of one hundred dollars for each offence, to be recovered with costs in any court of competent jurisdiction.

9. All railway companies whose lines pass through any lands comprised in any such fire district or any part thereof, shall be bound under a penalty of one hundred dollars, recoverable in the manner provided in the preceding section, and subject in addition to the liability for all damages caused by fires originating from sparks issuing from their locomotives, to clear off from the sides of their respective roadways all combustible materials, by carefully burning the same or otherwise. And it shall not be necessary in any such action for penalty or damages to prove the name or number of the locomotive, or the name of the engineer or fireman in charge of the same.

10. For the purposes of this Act, all Fire Superintendents, agents for the sale of Crown Lands, employés of the department of Crown Lands, sworn land surveyors, and wood rangers employed by the department of Crown Lands, shall be ex officio justices of the peace; and any justice of the peace, before whom has been proved any contravention of the provisions of this Act, may impose the penalty above set forth.

11. This Act shall come into force on the day of its sanction.

ROBT. D. LYONS.

House of Commons, London, April 6, 1885.

While these pages are passing through the press Dr. Lyons has been favoured with the very interesting and important report on "The Geographical Distribution of the Forest "Trees of Canada, by Robert Bell, M.D., F.G.S.C.E., Assistant Director of the Geological "Survey of Canada, 1882." On the accompanying map the general Northern limits of the principal forest trees of Canada east of the Rocky Mountains are represented. The lines have been laid down chiefly from observations made by the writer during the last 25 years, extending from Newfoundland to the Rocky Mountains, and from the Northern United States to the eastern and western shores of Hudson's Bay. Nearly all the reports of the Geological Survey from 1859 to 1879 are stated to contain more or less information on the distribution of timber trees.

The forest trees east of the Rocky Mountains may be divided into four groups, as regards their geographical distribution within the Dominion :—(1.) A northern group, including the white and black spruces, larch, Banksian pine, balsam fir, aspen, balsam poplar, Canoe birch, willows and alder. These cover the vast territory down to the line of the white pine. (2.) A central group of about 40 species, occupying the belt of country from the white pine line to that of the button-wood. (3.) A southern group, embracing the button-wood, black walnut, the hickories, chestnut, tulip tree, prickly ash, sour gum, sassafras and flowering dog-wood, which are found only in a small area in the southern part of Ontario. (4.) A western group, consisting of the ash-leaved maple, bur-oak, cotton wood, and green ash, which are scattered sparingly over the prairie and wooded regions west of Red River and Lake Winnipeg.

LETTER from the Clerk of the Council to the Colonial Office.

Agricultural Department, Privy Council Office,

5 August 1884.

Sir,

I AM desired by the Lords of the Council to request that you will have the goodness to move the Earl of Derby to call the attention of the Canadian Government to a proposition submitted to their Lordships by Mr. Moreton Frewen on behalf of a deputation on the 25th ultimo.

This proposition was to the effect that, whereas according to the statements made, contagious pleuro-pneumonia has never been introduced into the Western States of America and the sanitary condition of animals therein is generally satisfactory, cattle from Wyoming Territory, Montana, and Dacota might, under certain conditions, safely be imported into Great Britain by the Lake Route through Canada, and landed in this country without being subject to slaughter.

It appears to their Lordships that if this scheme after full consideration should appear to be practicable it could be most conveniently carried into effect by a modification of the arrangements at present in force between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of the Dominion.

Lord Derby is aware that, in order to enable the Privy Council to continue to except Canadian animals from slaughter, when that exception was withdrawn in the case of animals from the United States, the Canadian Government were required to prohibit the importation into Canada of animals from the United States, and an Order of the Canadian Privy Council to that effect is still in force, the only exception being that animals are allowed under certain conditions to pass through Canada in bond from one part of the United States territory to another.

If Mr. Moreton Frewen's proposal should be entertained, the animals admitted under it would practically become Canadian animals so far as this country is concerned, and the consent and co-operation of the Canadian Government would evidently be necessary to the success of the undertaking.

I am, therefore, to request that you will move Lord Derby to ascertain whether the Dominion Government would be disposed to give their favourable consideration to such a proposition, if the Privy Council were so far satisfied with the securities offered as to be of opinion that the admission into Canada of cattle from certain specified districts in the Western States of America was consistent with the maintenance of the existing arrangements under which Canadian animals are admitted into this country without being subject to slaughter at the port of landing.

Enclosure 1, in No. 3.

The Marquis of Lansdowne to the Earl of Derby.

(No. 242.)

Government House, Ottawa, Canada,

My Lord, 27 September 1884.

IN reply to your Lordship's Despatch, No. 123 of 11th August last, enclosing a letter from the Privy Council Office, dated 5th of the same month, on the subject of the importation of cattle into England through the Dominion of Canada, I have the honour to transmit herewith a copy of an approved Report of a Committee of the Privy Council embodying a Report on this subject by the Minister of Agriculture, to whom your Lordship's Despatch under reply was referred.

2. The subject is one which has commanded much public attention and which has been anxiously considered by my Ministers. The feeling which prevails with them, and which faithfully reflects that of the agriculturists of this country, is that no effort should be spared in order to retain for Canada the advantageous conditions under which her cattle are now admitted to British ports. It is felt that if on her side Canada were to show any remissness in protecting her territory against the admission of cattle from districts actually tainted with disease, or themselves insufficiently protected against the admission of animals from districts in which disease is known to exist, the susceptibilities of English agriculturists would be aroused and pressure brought upon the Government to withdraw from the Dominion the immunity which has been conceded to it.

3. The result of the investigations which have recently been instituted by the desire of the Minister of Agriculture has been to satisfy him that although there is no evidence to show that infectious disease at present exists in Wyoming, Montana, and Colorado, pleuro-pneumonia has undoubtedly manifested itself in Illinois, in the neighbourhood of Chicago, the head-quarters of the Western Cattle Trade.

4. I have received a letter from Mr. Pierrepoint Edwards, Her Majesty's Consul at New York, enclosing one from Professor James Law, of Cornell University, in which the latter gentleman says:—"The lung plague has been already smouldering in Illinois "for the past six months, and it is as yet uncertain by what channel it reached that "State, or whether it is still confined to the Jersey herds, to which additions have been "made by purchase in the course of the past year." Professor Law, in the same letter, goes on to say:—"I cannot overlook the fact that the lung plague is now in existence "near the greatest cattle entrepôt of the West (the Chicago stock yards), and has no "longer to oppose the current of the cattle traffic in making a further extension."

5. The

5. The same facts are disclosed in the Paper annexed to the Privy Council Order enclosed with this Despatch. (See the Memorandum by Mr. Loring, and Dr. Salmon's Report.) Pages 7 and 8.

6. In view of this state of things the Dominion Government has come to the conclusion that the moment would be a very inopportune one for a relaxation of the precautions against the admission of disease, and that on the contrary the time has come when more strictly framed regulations should be enforced along the frontier of the Western States. A Memorandum of these Regulations is enclosed herewith. Page 8.

7. I observe that an attempt has been made to represent these precautions as altogether illusory, upon the ground that it is impossible to protect an air-line frontier of the length of that which separates Canada and the Western States, a frontier which it is stated is crossed without restriction both by cattle from ranches adjoining it on either side and by bands of buffalo.

8. It is also stated that Wyoming and the adjoining States are virtually isolated from the Eastern States of the Union, the movement of cattle being from west to east and not east to west, and that, even assuming disease to exist in the neighbourhood of Chicago, it would not follow that risk would arise from the admission of Wyoming and Montana cattle into Canada.

9. As to the first of these contentions, I am assured by the Minister of Agriculture that it is not the case that the territory immediately to the north and south of the frontier line is occupied by cattle ranches, or that there is an unrestricted passage of cattle across it, and that it is untrue that large herds of buffalo frequent these districts, and are in the habit of crossing the frontier. Although the line to be defended is one of great length, I understand that any cattle crossing it for trade purposes do so virtually at two points only, viz., Fort McLeod and Fort Walsh, at each of which a quarantine officer is stationed.

10. The ninety days' quarantine enforced against United States cattle in the eastern provinces of Canada is no doubt not enforced at these points where inspection only is required. In the event, however, of the circumstances appearing to require so stringent a measure, the ninety days' quarantine might and would be at once enforced here, as in the case of cattle entering Old Canada from the United States.

11. It would at first sight appear that there would be nothing to prevent the movement of large bodies of cattle from Wyoming and adjacent States into the Western Canadian ranches, and their immediate transfer into Ontario or elsewhere. I believe, however:—

1. That no movement of cattle takes place from the north-west territories to Old Canada, the whole of the live cattle exported viâ the St. Lawrence being bred in the old provinces. It would therefore seem that even if it be conceded that the western cattle ranches are to some extent exposed, an outbreak of disease in them would not involve a serious risk either to Old Canada or to the British Islands.

2. That if any such movement as that above suggested were to take place it would attract the attention of the local cattle owners, who are already prompt to notify to the authorities any infraction, however slight, of the departmental regulations. In this event the suspected cattle would at once be placed in quarantine before being allowed to proceed to their destination.

12. With regard to the alleged isolation of Wyoming and adjacent States from the States further to the east, it is no doubt the case that the movement of the cattle trade of this region is from west to east, and that few animals pass into these States from those to the east of them. There appear, however, to be good reasons for supposing that some animals for breeding purposes are sent westwards, and in these circumstances the statements contained in Mr. Salmon's Report of 27th August 1884 will no doubt receive your attention.

13. If any State or group of States on whose behalf a desire has been expressed for facilities for traffic through Canada with the British Islands would adopt and enforce effectual quarantine regulations for its own protection the case would be entirely altered. I understand, however, that the Federal Government has no power to enforce such regulations on individual States, and that these have in the particular case under consideration taken no steps for their own protection.

14. So long as this is the case, and while their exists good reason for apprehending that these States have for some time past been exposed to the possibility of contagion, the Government of the Dominion declines to pass through its own territory, and to export from the same ports as those used for the exportation of Canadian cattle, animals coming from these districts.

I have, &c.

CERTIFIED COPY of a REPORT of a Committee of the Honourable the Privy Council for Canada, approved by His Excellency the Governor General in Council, on the 8th September 1884.

THE Committee of the Privy Council have had under consideration a Despatch, dated 11th August 1884, from the Earl of Derby, covering a letter of Mr. Peel of the Agricultural Department of the Imperial Privy Council, on the subject of the importation of cattle from the Western United States through the Dominion of Canada to the United Kingdom.

The Minister of Agriculture to whom the Despatch and Enclosure were referred reports as follows:

1. The proposal submitted to the Lords of the Council by Mr. Moreton Frewen, on behalf of a deputation, on the 25th July last, as stated by Mr. Peel, was to the effect that contagious pleuro-pneumonia had never been introduced into the Western States of America, and that the sanitary condition of animals therein was generally satisfactory. It was therefore urged that cattle from Wyoming Territory, Montana, and Dakota might, under certain conditions, be safely imported into Great Britain by the Lake route through Canada, and landed in the United Kingdom without being subject to slaughter.

2. Mr Peel further remarks that if Mr. Moreton Frewen's proposal should be entertained, the animals admitted under it would practically become Canadian animals, in so far as concerns the United Kingdom, and therefore that the consent and co-operation of the Canadian Government would be necessary for the success of the undertaking.

3. That a careful consideration of these several statements and proposal leads the Minister of Agriculture to the conclusion that it would not be, in the present circumstances, compatible with the safety of Canadian cattle, which are free from contagious disease, to permit the transit through Canada, for exportation from a Canadian port, of cattle from the Western United States, as desired by the deputation above referred to, the safeguarding of Canadian cattle, and the preservation of the advantage now enjoyed to freely ship them to the United Kingdom, being the paramount Canadian interest.

4. The Minister thinks it proper to observe that, to the present time, he has had reason to believe the Western United States were free from contagious disease. There were accounts published in the newspapers, in the spring of this year, to the effect that foot-and-mouth disease was found in Kansas. He did, in consequence, take steps to ascertain the facts, and found from a report of Mr. Sweetapple, veterinary surgeon, made at the request of Professor Andrew Smith, of Toronto, Dominion Veterinary Inspector for the Province of Ontario, upon a personal examination, that the disease in that State among cattle had a different and non-contagious character.

5. The Minister of Agriculture in view, however, of more recent reports respecting the existence of pleuro-pneumonia in the Western United States did, on 23rd August last, cause a Departmental request to be conveyed to Professor Smith to proceed to the reported infected localities for the purpose of inspection, and report for information. And under date of the 30th August last, from Chicago, Professor Smith wrote that he found "contagious pleuro-pneumonia prevails at several points in Illinois. Mr. John Boyd, "of Chestnut Farm, near Elmhurst, has lost or destroyed 15 head in all. In June he "brought two animals to his farm. About 1st July both of them showed signs of "sickness. One died, and the other was destroyed. The post-mortem lesion showed "unmistakeable evidence of the disease (pleuro-pneumonia). The two animals he brought "can be traced to have been in contact, directly or indirectly, with a herd of Jersey's "belonging to Mr. Dye, of Ohio. I have good grounds for believing that Mr. Dye's "herd were affected several months ago."

6. The Minister of Agriculture, in addition to the fact of the existence of pleuro-pneumonia being thus directly reported by a veterinary officer of his own Department, thinks it well to call attention to a Circular Order by Mr. George B. Loring, United States Commissioner of Agriculture at Washington, D.C., which has been very widely published in newspapers of the United States, and a copy of which is hereunto annexed.
Mr. Loring distinctly states that the disease was "introduced (in Illinois) by animals sold "at Virginia, in Cass County, Illinois, in February last, and that these animals have "been widely distributed through the Western States."

7. It further appears, from publications in the United States western newspapers that Dr. Salmon, Chief of the Bureau of (U. S.) Animal Industry, has submitted a Report to the Commissioner of Agriculture in Washington relative to his investigation of pleuro-pneumonia among cattle in Illinois. This Report has also been largely published in the western newspapers, and a copy, taken from the Chicago "Tribune," is hereunto annexed.
He states specifically, under date of 27th August last, that he has found "eight cases in the vicinity of Chicago, two near Sterling, four near Peoria, one near Springfield, two "near Virginia, and one near Jacksonville." Dr. Salmon further states, "I shall soon "direct my attention to other States; Iowa, Missouri, and Kentucky have received "animals

" animals from infected herds." Referring to the probable origin of the disease in Illinois, Dr. Salmon states, " We have not been able to decide which of the animals brought it to " the Virginia sale ; but one that came from Mr. Dye, of Ohio, was sick with inflammation " of the lungs, supposed at the time to have been the result of exposure. This is most " likely the origin of the disease ; and, if the suspicion proves correct, it makes the matter " still more serious. Mr. Dye is the most extensive speculator in Jersey cows in the " country, and has sent cattle into nearly every herd in the West. If his herd is infected " the disease must have spread to nearly every State in the Union. I shall investigate " this matter as soon as possible."

The Minister observes, on this very serious statement of Dr Salmon, that it is with respect to the herd of Mr. Dye that Professor Smith, Inspector for the Canadian Department of Agriculture, states he has " good reasons for believing that Mr. Dye's herd were " affected (with pleuro-pneumonia) several months ago." This fact establishes that the progress of the disease has been from the east to the west.

8. Again, as to the fact of the diagnosis of the disease, Dr. Salmon further states, " I will " say positively that this disease is neither the result of scrofula nor exposure to inclement " weather, or like causes. It is contagious pleuro-pneumonia; and I am just as certain of " it as I am that such a disease exists."

9. The Minister of Agriculture has reason to believe, from the information which he has so far obtained, that there has been no actual outbreak of the disease in Montana, Colorado, or Wyoming. But in view of the fact of there being no means employed to prevent cattle from the infected States of the East, or from the infected State of Illinois in the West, from going into the Territories and State above named, he is of opinion that it would not be prudent to relax any present restriction as respects the importation of cattle into Canada from such Territories and State, or from any part of the United States. On the contrary, he is of opinion that it has become necessary to make still further restrictions with regard to admitting cattle which may be necessary for stock purposes, into the North-West Territory of the Dominion from contiguous parts of the United States and Territories which are as yet free from, while they are threatened with, the danger of contagious disease.

The Committee concur in the Report of the Minister of Agriculture, and they recommend that your Excellency be moved to transmit a copy of this Minute, if approved, to the Right Honourable the Secretary of State for the Colonies, in answer to his Despatch of the 11th August last, and that a copy be also transmitted to the High Commissioner in London.

All of which is respectfully submitted for your Excellency's approval.

Privy Council, Canada.

Pleuro-Pneumonia.

Circular published in the " Chicago Breeders' Gazette," 20th August 1884.

Owing to the existence of diseases supposed to be contagious pleuro-pneumonia, in several herds of Jersey cattle in the State of Illinois, I hereby request the owners of all herds of Jersey cattle, in the United States, into which new animals have been introduced since 1st January, to stop the shipment of cattle until after 1st October. The disease seems to have been introduced by animals sold at Virginia, Cass County, Illinois, in February 1884, and these animals were widely distributed through the Western States. It is hoped, therefore, that persons owning cattle tracing to this sale, and all others having cattle affected with a disease of the lungs, will at once communicate with Dr. E. Salmon, chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry, care of the " Breeders' Gazette," Chicago, and clearly state the condition of their herds and the symptoms of the disease. The attention of owners of cattle and railroad companies is called to Section 7 of the Act to establish a Bureau of Animal Industry, which makes it a misdemeanour, punishable by a fine of not less than 100 $\frac{00}{100}$ dollars, nor more than 5,000 dollars, or by imprisonment not more than one year, or both, for shipping cattle affected with any contagious infection or communicable disease known as pleuro-pneumonia, from one State or territory into another. The cordial co-operation of the State authorities of all positions interested in the welfare of our cattle industries is earnestly desired in order to avert this danger, which now menaces the herds of the country.

Dr. Salmon's Report: Genuine Pleuro-Pneumonia. From "Chicago Tribune," 28 August 1884.

Washington, D. C., 27 August.

Dr. Salmon, Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry, has submitted a Report to the Commissioner of Agriculture relative to his investigation of pleuro-pneumonia among cattle in Illinois. He has found eight cases in the vicinity of Chicago, two near Sterling, four near Peoria, one near Springfield, two near Virginia, and one near Jacksonville. A number of reported cases have not yet been traced; Dr. Salmon further says: "It is impossible for me to get experienced men to assist me without moving them away from my work in New York and Brooklyn, and this I do not want to do until absolutely necessary. Men who have had no experience with pleuro-pneumonia would be useless.

Illinois has good laws, and the State Veterinarian and the Governor will issue a Proclamation on the subject, and direct the isolation of infected herds and the slaughter of diseased animals. I shall soon direct my attention to other States; Iowa, Missouri, and Kentucky have received animals from infected herds. I telegraphed the Governor of Kentucky a few days ago in regard to the animals that went there. We have not been able to decide which of the animals brought it to the Virginia sale, but one that came from Mr. Dye, of Ohio, was sick with inflammation of the lungs, supposed at the time to have been the result of exposure. This is most likely the origin of the disease, and if the suspicion proves correct, it makes the matter still more serious. Mr. Dye is the most extensive speculator in Jersey cows in the country, and has sent cattle into nearly every herd in the West. If his herd is infected, the disease must have been spread to nearly every State in the Union. I shall investigate this matter as soon as possible, and if the infection is traced to Ohio, I shall move all my men that will come. I should consider this a last resort. In the meantime I shall indulge the hope that this will not prove true. I will say positively that this disease is neither the result of scrofula nor exposure to inclement weather, or like causes. It is contagious pleuro-pneumonia, and I am just as certain of it as I am that such a disease exists."

Acting Commissioner Carman has refused the request of an Alabama cattle firm to import a number of Jersey cattle for exhibition at the New Orleans Exposition.

Copy of Note by the Honourable the Minister of Agriculture.

Page 9. The object of the Privy Council Order of 8th September, enclosed herewith, was twofold.

1. To prevent any animals from entering into the province of Manitoba from the east, either for stock or breeding purposes, in view of the danger of contact with diseased animals in Illinois, or others of the States to the east of that point.

The measures thought sufficient, and embodied in the Order referred to, at the point of Emerson were: (1), Inspection; (2), A quarantine of such length of time as would enable any contagious disease to be detected. To carry out these provisions a regularly qualified veterinary surgeon, Mr. D. H. McFadden, at the point of Emerson, was appointed Veterinary Inspector of this department, and the quarantine station, as defined Page 10. in the Order of your Excellency in Council on the 14th instant, was placed in his charge.

2. The second object of the Order in Council of the 8th instant was to regulate the entry of cattle at extreme western points in the districts of Alberta and Assiniboia, near to the Rocky Mountains, for transit through those districts and the province of Manitoba for the Chicago markets; and also to provide for the inspection of any stock cattle which might be taken to the ranches in Canadian territory at that extreme western point. As respects these latter, an inspection at the point of crossing the frontier was considered to be sufficient.

As respects the cattle which pass through the districts and province referred to, going out at the point of Emerson, none of these could by any possibility enter subsequently the provinces of Ontario and Quebec for shipment by the St. Lawrence; for the reason that, having in transit entered United States territory, their admission would be prohibited. And, as respects any attempt to bring such cattle over the Canadian Pacific Railway, and viâ the Lakes, the system of inspection and entries would render that impossible without detection; that is, directly from United States territory. And if such cattle had first been driven to the Canadian ranches before being exported, nothing of that kind could be done during the same season; so practically there would be the protection of the quarantine of a year.

It may be stated that, if for any reason, any cattle were to enter Canadian territory across the long frontier between the points of Emerson and the Rocky Mountains, not intended for the ranches, and such entries could scarcely by any possibility be made, except by the regularly established trails, but for stock purposes in Manitoba or the Territories, there would still be no chance of any such cattle getting to the provinces of Ontario

Ontario and Quebec by way of the Lakes through Canadian territory. There is absolutely no importation from the West to the East, for the reason that stock cattle are much higher in Manitoba and the Territories than in the Eastern Provinces.

The only chance of any movement of that kind would be, when the ranches under the Rocky Mountains begin to send their surplus forward. But as respects such cattle, there is the protection above indicated.

I think the several proceedings to which I have referred are quite sufficient to safeguard Canadian interests at every point, as well with respect to such cattle as may be required for breeding purposes or for stock raising, as with respect to those which it is desired to send to the markets of Chicago from points in the United States and the extreme West.

Respectfully submitted,

ORDER IN COUNCIL.

Government House, Ottawa, Monday, the 8th day of September 1884.

Present:—His Excellency the Governor General in Council.

WHEREAS the disease of pleuro-pneumonia prevails among neat cattle in the Western State of Illinois as well as in other more Eastern of the United States, and there is reason to believe that neat cattle for breeding purposes have been sent from the State of Illinois to more Western States and Territories;

On the recommendation of the Minister of Agriculture, and under the provisions of the Act of the Parliament of Canada, 42 Victoria, chapter 23, intituled, "An Act to provide against infectious or contagious diseases affecting animals" made applicable to the North West Territories by Proclamation in 1883;

His Excellency, by and with the advice of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada, has been pleased to order, and it is hereby ordered, that the importation of neat cattle now permitted from the United States and Territories into the Province of Manitoba and the North West Territory of Canada be, and the same is hereby prohibited, except on the following conditions, namely:

1. At Emerson, in Manitoba, or the points of Fort Walsh and Fort McLeod, in the Provisional Districts of Alberta and Assiniboia, or such other point or points as may be hereafter indicated by the Minister of Agriculture.

2. For stock or breeding purposes, neat cattle which have been brought to the Canadian frontier for importation may be allowed to cross, subject to the regulations hereinafter recited.

3. For transit, from west to east, through the Provisional Districts of Alberta and Assiniboia, and the Province of Manitoba, viâ Emerson or Gretna, to the State of Minnesota, neat cattle may be allowed to cross the Canadian frontier at the points of Fort Walsh and Fort McLeod aforesaid, subject to the regulations hereinafter recited.

4. At Emerson, such cattle coming from the east shall not be allowed to cross the Canadian frontier unless after inspection by a duly-authorised veterinary surgeon, appointed by the Minister of Agriculture, they shall be declared free from contagious disease, and also from well-founded suspicion thereof; and further, such cattle shall be subject to a quarantine of sixty days, or such other period as may appear to the Minister of Agriculture advisable.

5. Any cattle desired to be entered at the points of Fort Walsh and Fort McLeod aforesaid, whether for stock or breeding purposes or for transit, shall be inspected by a duly-authorised veterinary surgeon appointed by the Minister of Agriculture, and shall not be allowed to cross the Canadian frontier unless they are declared by such surgeon to be free from contagious disease, and also from well-founded suspicion thereof.

6. The owner or owners of any such cattle desired to be entered at any of the points aforesaid, shall, on making application for entry, produce a duly-attested certificate, indicating the State or Territory and particular locality from which they may have been brought.

7. The importer of such cattle shall pay a fee, graded on a scale hereto annexed, to the Customs officer or other person duly authorised to act as such, for defraying the expense

expense of such inspection, the cattle not being allowed to cross the Canadian frontier until such fee is paid, that is to say, for—

1 animal	1 dollar.
5 animals and under	50 cents each;
but total fee for over 5 animals not less than $2.50.
10 animals and under	30 cents each;
but total fee for over 10 animals not less than $3.00.
20 animals and under	20 cents each;
but total fee for over 20 animals not less than $4.00.
50 animals and under	12 cents each;
but total fee for over 50 animals not less than $. 6.00.
Over 50 animals	10 cents each.

8. No car which has been loaded with cattle in the United States and crossing the Canadian frontier shall be allowed afterwards to carry Canadian cattle.

9. No car nor trains carrying such United States cattle in transit from west to east between the points above named, shall be allowed to be or remain shunted in close proximity to any Canadian cattle.

10. Every car containing such cattle in transit between the points above mentioned shall be kept, as far as possible, apart from cars or trains containing Canadian cattle or Canadian goods.

11. No car containing such United States cattle in transit between the points above named, shall form any part of a train carrying Canadian cattle.

12. Every car or train carrying cattle in transit from west to east between the points hereinbefore named, shall stop at such fixed place or places as shall be named by the Minister of Agriculture for the purpose of rest, feeding, and watering, and such place or places shall be declared "infected" within the terms of "The Animal Contagious Diseases Act, 1879," being strictly isolated and all communication with them prohibited, except by the officers and men in charge of the trains or in charge of such infected place or places.

13. Every car which has been used for carrying animals from the United States or Territories, in transit through the Districts of Alberta, Assiniboia, or the Province of Manitoba viâ Emerson or Gretna, shall be thoroughly cleansed and disinfected before re-entering the Province of Manitoba, in such manner as shall be ordered by the Minister of Agriculture.

ORDER IN COUNCIL.

Government House, Ottawa, Sunday, 14th day of September 1884.

Present:—His Excellency the Governor General in Council.

WHEREAS the Minister of Agriculture has reported that pursuant to the Regulations contained in the Order in Council, dated 8th September 1884, and published in an Extra of the "Canada Gazette" on the 10th September, it is advisable, in virtue of the provisions of the Act 42 Vict. chapter 23, intituled, "An Act to provide against infectious or contagious diseases affecting animals," to set apart a place to be used for a quarantine station for such neat cattle as may be imported into Manitoba viâ the Port of Emerson,—

His Excellency, on the recommendation of the Minister of Agriculture, has been pleased to order, and it is hereby ordered, that the buildings and property formerly occupied by the British North American Boundary Commission, and lately as a Government Immigrant Station, situated on the Red River, and comprising lots Nos. 31 and 33 in the parish of Ste. Agathe, and being the property of the Government, be and the same are hereby set aside for a Cattle Quarantine Station, and are declared an "infected" place within the meaning of "The Animal Contagious Diseases Act, 1879," and all communication with them prohibited, except such as shall be ordered by the Minister of Agriculture for carrying into effect the Regulations above referred to.

Dr. Andrew Smith to the Minister of Agriculture.

40 and 42, Temperance-street, Toronto,
6 September 1884.

Sir,

According to instructions I proceeded to Chicago on Friday the 29th ultimo to make inquiries as the origin and extent of contagious pleuro-pneumonia, as reported among Jersey cattle in the State of Illinois.

In Chicago I met with Mr. John Boyd, of 199, Lake-street, and of Chestinut Farm, Elmhurst, Illinois, who has a herd of about 40 Jerseys. Mr. Boyd's herd have been always healthy until lately. Mr. Coggeshall and he each bought a cow from G. and W. C. Clark, of Geneva, Illinois, which were received into Mr. Boyd's herd on 4th of June.

About 1st July both cows showed signs of sickness, one of them died on the 20th of July, and the other was destroyed on the 14th of August, and showed unmistakeable signs of contagious pleuro-pneumonia.

Since that time 13 head have been lost, two from death, and 11 destroyed by order of Dr. Paaren, State Veterinarian; and in all cases post-mortem examinations revealed the well-marked and characteristic lesions of the disease.

I met with Dr. Paaren, State Veterinarian for Kansas, who had just returned from Clark's farm, near Sterling, Illinois.

Dr. Paaren informed me he had personal and direct knowledge of the disease in various points, all, however, so far confined to Jerseys, and all cases supposed to originate from one centre.

On Monday, 1st of September, I proceeded to Peoria, Illinois, in company with Dr. Paaren, and on Tuesday we made examinations of the Messrs. Tripp's herd of Jerseys. We found one cow, "Miss Innes," suffering from the disease in an acute form, and had her immediately destroyed, and the autopsy showed extremely well-marked and prominent lesions.

We then examined "Helena Rex," a young cow bought at Epler's sale in February last. "Epler's farm is supposed to be the centre of infection, so far as Illinois is concerned," and this cow, along with two others, were brought immediately thereafter to Messrs. Tripp's farm.

About 1st April a cow that had been in contact with the recent additions to the herd showed signs of lung trouble, and died on 17th April.

The cow "Helena Rex" aborted during the spring, but did not appear to suffer from any pulmonary trouble, and was apparently quite healthy to a casual observer.

Although the ordinary external manifestations of the disease were not very decided, yet careful auscultation and percussion showed some results of lung complaint.

Messrs. Tripp were averse to having this animal destroyed. Finally it was thought desirable to have her destroyed, and the post mortem showed well-marked adhesions of the right lung, a most prominent result of contagious pleuro. This condition clearly and satisfactorily demonstrated to Messrs. Tripp the manner in which this disease primarily originated among their herd. "Helena Rex" was brought from Dyes' farm in Ohio, in December of last year, to Epler's, and I believe was one of the animals that produced contagious pleuro among the Epler herd.

So far the disease in Illinois appears to be confined to Jersey herds; although there was a rumour of a herd of short horns being affected in Peoria County, but Dr. Paaren had no authentic information as to the correctness of the report.

The disease is evidently due to the direct traffic in Jersey cattle from east to west. I am informed by Mr. Butler, veterinary surgeon, of Piqua, Ohio, that he believes the animals that affected Dyes' herd, and some of them were sent on to Epler's (before disease was noticed in Dyes' herd), were purchased at a Jersey sale in New York or Philadelphia.

From inquiries made at the Chicago Stock Yards, I find the traffic from the Eastern States, where contagious pleuro has existed so long, is very limited, but there is a very large traffic in calves from Ohio, Michigan, Western New York, and Pennsylvania.

Breeders of stock fully recognise the danger of the spread of this insidious disease, and some of them are urging active measures for stamping it out.

Dr. Paaren, by order of the Governor of Illinois, has quarantined all herds where disease has appeared, and is slaughtering all affected animals. It is necessary to appraise all animals before being destroyed.

The amount of money in the fund for contagious diseases in Illinois is very small, and not sufficient to compensate owners, and in consequence thereof, I fear the stamping out process, viz., slaughtering all diseased animals, and all animals that have been in contact with the diseased ones, the proper course to pursue will not be carried out with the expedition demanded.

The fault is with the State government, and not with their efficient veterinarian.

National and State interests appear to conflict with each other.

In view of the disease at present being confined to Jersey cattle their transport through the States will be restricted.

As to importation of Jersey cattle from the United States into Canada, I think it would be advisable not to bring any into quarantine for a short time at least. It may not be necessary to pass an Order in Council, as the importers of Jerseys are so few in this country that they could be easily notified of the desirability of not trafficking in Jerseys until the disease is got rid of among these cattle in the States.

If, unfortunately, an animal affected with contagious pleuro got into quarantine, such an assurance might compel the slaughtering of quite a number of other animals.

There are not many owners of Jerseys in Canada that, in the meantime, would like to risk what only might be an imaginary injury to their stock by attempting to import animals from any infected district.

I am, &c.
(signed) Andrew Smith.

Minister of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Convention between Her Majesty and the President of the French Republic for the Exchange of Postal Money Orders between the Dominion of Canada and France.

Signed at London, June 20, 1884.

[Ratifications exchanged at London, September 27, 1884.]

HER Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Empress of India, and the President of the French Republic, being desirous that facilities should exist for the transmission of sums of money between the Dominion of Canada and France by means of postal money orders, have determined upon securing this result by a Convention, and have named as their Plenipotentiaries for this purpose, namely:

Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, the Right Honourable Granville George, Earl Granville, Lord Leveson, a Peer of the United Kingdom, Knight of the Most Noble Order of the Garter, a Member of Her Majesty's Privy Council, Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports, and Constable of Dover Castle, Chancellor of the University of London, Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, &c., &c.;

And the President of the French Republic, M. William Henri Waddington, Ambassador of France to Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Empress of India, Senator, Member of the Institute, &c., &c.;

Who, after having communicated to each other their respective full powers, found in good and due form, have agreed upon the following Articles:—

ARTICLE I.

Remittances of money may be sent by way of the Post Office, from France and Algiers to Canada, as well as from Canada to France and Algiers.

These remittances shall be made by means of orders drawn by offices of "l'Administration des Postes de France"

SA Majesté la Reine du Royaume Uni de la Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande, Impératrice des Indes, et le Président de la République Française, animés du désir de faciliter les envois d'argent entre le Canada et la France à l'aide de mandats postaux, ont résolu de signer dans ce but une Convention, et à cet effet ils ont nommé pour leurs Plénipotentiaires, savoir:

Sa Majesté la Reine du Royaume Uni de la Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande, le Très Honorable Granville George, Comte Granville, Lord Leveson, Pair du Royaume Uni, Chevalier du Très Noble Ordre de la Jarretière, Conseiller de Sa Majesté dans son Conseil Privé, Lord Gardien des Cinque Ports, et Connétable du Château de Douvres, Chancelier de l'Université de Londres, Principal Secrétaire d'État de Sa Majesté pour les Affaires Étrangères, &c., &c.;

Et le Président de la République Française, le Sieur Waddington (William Henri), Ambassadeur de France près Sa Majesté la Reine du Royaume Uni de la Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande, Impératrice des Indes, Sénateur, Membre de l'Institut, &c., &c.;

Lesquels, après s'être communiqué leurs pleins pouvoirs, trouvés en bonne et due forme, sont convenus de ce qui suit:—

ARTICLE I.

Des envois de fonds pourront être faits, par la voie de la poste, tant de la France et de l'Algérie pour le Canada, que du Canada pour la France et l'Algérie.

Ces envois s'effectueront au moyen de mandats tirés par des bureaux de l'Administration des Postes de France sur des upon offices of the Canadian Post Office Department, and vice-versâ.

The maximum of each order is fixed at 250 fr., or 50 dollars.

At any time the Post Office authorities of the two countries may, by mutual agreement, raise this maximum to 500 fr., or 100 dollars.

The right is reserved to each of the two Contracting Parties to declare transferable, by way of endorsement, on its territory, the property of money orders coming from the other country.

ARTICLE II.

There shall be collected for each remittance of money effected under the authority of the preceding Article a charge which shall be determined by the authorities of the country from which such remittance is sent, and which shall be paid by the sender of the remittance.

This charge shall not at any time exceed 1 per cent. of the even sums which shall form the degrees of the scale of charges.

Post Office orders sent from either country, and acquittances given on these orders, shall not, upon any pretext whatever, nor by any right that may be, be submitted to any charge or duty at the expense of the receiver of the money.

ARTICLE III.

The Administration that shall issue the orders shall credit to the Administration that shall pay them a duty of $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. of the total amount of the orders paid.

ARTICLE IV.

The amount of orders shall be deposited by the sender and paid to the receiver in gold coin, or in any other legal money of the same current value.

At all times, in the case that in one or the two countries should circulate a paper money having legal value, but of a value inferior to that of gold, the Administration of this country shall have the right itself to receive and to employ such currency in its dealings with the public, with the condition that account be kept of the difference in value.

ARTICLE V.

The amount of each order shall be expressed in the currency of the country in which the payment is to be made, and no account shall be taken of fractions of a demi-décime (5 centimes) or of a cent.

The bases for the conversion of the currency of the country of origin into the bureaux de l'Administration des Postes Canadiennes, et vice-versâ.

Le maximum de chaque mandat est fixé à 250 fr., ou 50 dollars.

Toutefois, les Administrations des Postes des deux pays pourront, d'un commun accord, élever ce maximum à 500 fr., ou 100 dollars.

Est réservée à chacun des deux Pays Contractants la faculté de déclarer transmissible par voie d'endossement, sur son territoire, la propriété des mandats provenant de l'autre pays.

ARTICLE II.

Il sera perçue, pour chaque envoi de fonds effectué en vertu de l'Article précédent, une taxe qui sera déterminée par l'Administration du pays d'origine, et qui sera à la charge de l'expéditeur des fonds.

Cette taxe ne devra pas, toutefois, dépasser 1 pour cent des sommes rondes qui formeront les degrés de l'échelle de perception.

Les mandats émis de part et d'autre, et les acquits donnés sur ces mandats ne pourront, sous aucun prétexte et à quelque titre que ce soit, être soumis à une taxe ou à un droit quelconque, à la charge des destinataires des fonds.

ARTICLE III.

L'Administration qui délivrera les mandats tiendra compte à l'Administration qui les paiera d'un droit de $\frac{1}{2}$ pour cent du montant total des mandats payés.

ARTICLE IV.

Le montant des mandats sera versé par les déposants et payé aux bénéficiaires en monnaie d'or ou en toute autre monnaie légale de même valeur courante.

Toutefois, au cas où dans l'un des deux pays circulerait un papier-monnaie ayant cours légal, mais d'une valeur inférieure à celle de l'or, l'Administration de ce pays aurait la faculté de le recevoir et de l'employer elle-même, dans ses rapports avec le public, sous réserve de tenir compte de la différence de cours.

ARTICLE V.

Le montant de chaque mandat sera exprimé en monnaie du pays où le paiement devra avoir lieu, et ne devra pas comporter de fraction de demi-décime (5 centimes) ou de cent.

Les bases de la conversion de la monnaie du pays d'origine en monnaie du pays de currency of the country of destination shall be fixed by the authorities of the country of origin.

ARTICLE VI.

The postal authorities of France and of Canada shall draw up, at periods upon which they shall fix by mutual agreement, accounts, on which shall be recapitulated the sums paid by their respective bureaux; and these accounts, after having been taxed and checked by both parties, shall be paid in gold currency of the crediting country, by the authorities of the country which shall be found indebted, at a time upon which the two Administrations shall agree.

In this way the smallest credit will be converted into the same currency as the greatest, according to a scale of exchange which shall be fixed upon by mutual agreement of the two Administrations.

In the event of the non-payment of the balance of an account within the time agreed upon, the amount of this balance shall be charged with interest from the day of the expiration of the said time until the day of the remittance of the sum due. This interest shall be calculated at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, and shall be charged to the debit of the Administration in arrears in the following account.

ARTICLE VII.

The sums for which orders are issued shall be guaranteed to the senders until the time that they are regularly paid to the receivers or to their orders.

Sums of money taken by the Post Office authorities of either country in exchange for orders of which the amounts shall not have been claimed by the proper parties within the time fixed by the Laws and Regulations of the country of origin shall definitely accrue to the Administration which has issued such orders.

ARTICLE VIII.

The two Administrations shall determine, each so far as concerns itself, the offices authorized to issue and to pay orders. They shall regulate, by mutual agreement, the form and the mode of transmission of orders, the form and the times for settling accounts, and all other matters of detail and of order necessary to assure the carrying out of the present Convention.

It is understood that the dispositions made under the authority of the present Article may be modified by mutual agreement of both Administrations whenever it may be considered necessary.

destination seront fixées par l'Administration du pays d'origine.

ARTICLE VI.

L'Administration des Postes de France et l'Administration des Postes du Canada dresseront, aux époques qui seront fixées par elles, d'un commun accord, des comptes sur lesquels seront récapitulées les sommes payées par leurs bureaux respectifs, et ces comptes, après avoir été débattus et arrêtés contradictoirement, seront soldés en monnaie d'or du pays créancier par l'Administration qui sera reconnue redevable envers l'autre, dans le délai dont les deux Administrations conviendront.

A cet effet, la créance la plus faible sera convertie en même monnaie que la créance la plus forte, d'après le taux d'un change qui sera fixé, d'un commun accord, entre les deux Administrations.

En cas de non-paiement du solde d'un compte dans le délai convenu, le montant de ce solde sera productif d'intérêts à dater du jour de l'expiration du dit délai jusqu'au jour de l'envoi de la somme due. Ces intérêts seront calculés à raison de 5 pour cent l'an, et seront portés au débit de l'Administration retardataire sur le compte suivant.

ARTICLE VII.

Les sommes converties en mandats de poste seront garanties aux déposants jusqu'au moment où elles auront été régulièrement payées aux destinataires ou aux mandataires de ceux-ci.

Les sommes encaissées par chacune des Administrations en échange des mandats dont le montant n'aura pas été réclamé par les ayants droit dans les délais fixés par les Lois et Règlements du pays d'origine, seront définitivement acquises à l'Administration qui aura délivré ces mandats.

ARTICLE VIII.

Les deux Administrations désigneront, chacune pour ce qui la concerne, les bureaux autorisés à délivrer et à payer les mandats. Elles régleront, d'un commun accord, la forme et le mode de transmission des mandats, la forme et les époques de règlement des comptes, et toutes autres mesures de détail et d'ordre nécessaires pour assurer l'exécution de la présente Convention.

Il est entendu que les dispositions prises en vertu du présent Article pourront être modifiées, d'un commun accord, par les deux Administrations lorsqu'elles le jugeront nécessaire.

ARTICLE IX.

The authorities of either country shall have the right, under extraordinary circumstances which may be of a nature to justify the measure, to suspend temporarily the international money order service, upon condition of giving immediate notice thereof, by telegraph if necessary, to the authorities of the other country.

ARTICLE X.

The present Convention shall go into force upon a day to be agreed upon by the Post Office authorities of the two countries, after proclamation thereof shall have been made according to the laws peculiar to both countries.

It shall remain in force from year to year, until one of the Contracting Parties shall have announced to the other, at least a year in advance, its intention to terminate the Convention.

During such last year the Convention shall continue to have its full and entire working powers, without prejudice to the liquidation and settling of accounts after the expiration of the said term.

ARTICLE XI.

The present Convention shall be ratified, and the ratifications thereof shall be exchanged at London as soon as possible.

In witness whereof the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed the present Convention, and have affixed thereto their seals.

Done in duplicate at London, the twentieth day of June, 1884.

(L.S.) GRANVILLE.

(L.S.) WADDINGTON.

ARTICLE IX.

Chacune des deux Administrations pourra, dans des circonstances extraordinaires qui seraient de nature à justifier la mesure suspendre temporairement le service dues mandats internationaux à condition d'en donner immédiatement avis, au besoin par le télégraphe, à l'autre Administration.

ARTICLE X.

La présente Convention sera mise à exécution à partir du jour dont conviendront les Administrations des Postes des deux pays, après que la promulgation en aura été faite d'après les lois particulières à chacun des deux États.

Elle demeurera obligatoire d'année en année jusqu'à ce que l'une des Parties Contractantes ait annoncé à l'autre, mais un an à l'avance, son intention d'en faire cesser les effets.

Pendant cette dernière année, la Convention continuera d'avoir sa pleine et entière exécution, sans préjudice de la liquidation et du solde des comptes, après l'expiration du dit terme.

ARTICLE XI.

La présente Convention sera ratifiée et les ratifications en seront échangées à Londres aussitôt que faire se pourra.

En foi de quoi les Plénipotentiaires respectifs ont signé la présente Convention, et y ont apposé leurs sceaux.

Fait en double à Londres, le vingt Juin, 1884.
